of costs were not taxed but were settled out of Court by execution of a deed, will not justify a Court in re-opening accounts settled on which the bond is based, unless sufficient grounds of suspicion exist, or the bills are primâ facie shewn to be extortionate Lambert v. Still, (1894) 1 Ch. 73 (1893), followed Lawless v Mansfield, 1 Drury and Warren 557 (1811), distinguished and explained. Sec 16 of the Contract Act only presumes undue influence by a person in a position to dominate the will of another, when the contract appears on the face of it to be unconscionable. To prove "good faith" of a transaction in which one party stands in a fiduciary relationship to the other, it is certainly not necessary to prove that all the accounts on which the contract is based are correct. Under the practice obtaining in the Original Side of the High Court, taxation of bills of solicitors is deemed to be optional with the client and bills of costs are not infrequently adjusted without taxation. The case of Monohur Doss v Romanath Low, I L. R. 3 Cal. 473 (1878), was decided on the special circumstances of that case and does not lay down any general rule of law. An attorney may be bound under certain circumstances to advise his client to take independent advice It is not his business to see that the attorney selected by his client fulfils his duties to his client and is not guilty of any remissness or negligence If he sends his client to another attorney and is ready to comply with all reasonable demands for information, he cannot be expected to do more, or to be responsible for another's omissions If the parties to a promissory note agree that on the promisor executing a bond for the amount due in favour of a third person, the promisee would cancel the note, this arrangement would be a perfectly valid contract, whether the third party paid any money to the promisee or not Although a negotiable instrument can only be assigned by endorsement, that does not prevent any arrangement not to negotiate the note but to put an end to it. It is only the Judges and other officers specially mentioned in sec 36 of the Legal Practitioners' Act who can frame and publish a list of touts and they can only frame and publish such a list when it has been proved to their satisfaction by evidence taken and heard by themselves that the person whom they propose to include in the list habitually acts as a tout. A District Judge has no power to delegate to the Munsif the special statutory powers conferred upon him by that section. When a Munsif has reason to suspect that any person is acting as a tout he should inform the District Judge of his suspicions giving him the names of witnesses and leaving it to him to take and hear evidence. On the re-opening of the High Court to day, the constitution of the Benches will be as follows :—

APPEALS FROM THE PRESIDENCY GROUP will be heard by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Geidt.

CRIMINAL APPEALS AND REVISIONAL CASES by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Rampini and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sharfuddin.

PATNA GROUP OF APPEALS —The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Brett and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

BURDWAN GROUP —The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mitra and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Caspersz.

RAJSHAHYE GROUP.—The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Stephen and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Holmwood

ORIGINAL SIDE —The Hon'ble Justices Harington, Chitty and Fletcher will sit singly.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEALS will be heard from next Monday, the 18th instant.

WE VERY MUCH REGRET TO LEARN THAT MR. JUSTICE Mookerjee will not be able to resume his duties on the reopening of the Court owing to ill-health. We wish the learned Judge a speedy recovery.

IN THE CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE BILL WHICH HAS been recently introduced in the Council of the Governor-General of India matters of form and ordinary practice have been relegated to rules capable of alteration by each High Court subject to certain checks and only those provisions have been retained in the body of the Code regarding which some degree of permanence and uniformity is desirable. The amendments have been made with a view to lay down general rules of procedure rather than to provide in detail for every possible contingency. Without expressing any opinion as to the merits of the amendments, we feel no hesitation in saying that the scheme is a very commendable one and we thoroughly agree with the observations of the learned committee that excessive elaboration of details of procedure tends to cramp the action of the Court and to encourage technicalities. Amendments have also been made to meet case-law only on points on which there is a conflict of authority.

THE GENERAL CHARACTER OF SOME OF THE PRINCIPAL amendments may be summarised as follows :—(1) Curtailment of the multiciplity of suits, (2) Increased facilities for the service of process, (3) Improvement of the system of pleadings in the mofussil, (4) Provision for the admission not only of documents but also of facts, (5) Power of Court to compel the production of documents, (6) Power of Court to pronounce judgment after the death of a party and before substitution, (7) Facilities for checking the delay that now results from the objectionable practice of leaving for determination in execution questions which should be decided by the decree, (8) Embodiment in the Code of the provisions in the Transfer of Property Act relating to the execution in mortgage suits, (9) Provisions giving greater assistance to the Courts in the framing of decrees, and (10) Conferment of power to appoint Receivers on subordinate Courts.

IT HAS BEEN PROPOSED TO VEST THE POWER OF making rules to the High Courts, subject to the control of the Local Government and in the case of the Calcutta High Court of the Government of India. In exercising this power the Courts should have the assistance of representatives of the various branches of the legal profession. It has accordingly been provided that in the case of chartered High Courts and Chief Courts, rules can only be made after those Courts have taken the opinion of a Rule Committee on which there will be representatives of the Bar, of Vakeels or Pleaders, and in Presidency towns, of Attorneys. In the case of other High Courts power has been given to establish such Rule Committees as the Governor-General in Council may determine.

REFERRING TO MATTERS OF DETAIL WE FIND THAT "Mesne profits" of property have been defined, to be "those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom etc., etc." It appears that so far as this portion of the definition is concerned, it is the same as before. We think, that the definition should be made more comprehensive. As it stands at present the nature of the plaintiff's possession before dispossession is not taken into consideration. But that this is a most essential element will appear from the case of Surja Pershad v. Reid (6 C. W. N. 409: S. C. 29 Cal. 622). For instance if a cultivator who ordinarily grows crops himself is dispossessed, it is hardly reasonable that he should get only a money rent as compensation if the person who dispossessed him actually used to receive rent or would have to receive the same. We think the definition should be made comprehensive enough to include such cases.

IN THE CASE OF Sheo Ram Tewari v. Takur Prasad, reported at p. 562 of the current volume of the I. L. R. Allahabad Series, the question was raised whether a decree passed by a Civil Court on a Sunday was operative. It was contended that the decree having been made on Sunday, a dies non, it was altogether void of any effect. But His Lordship Griffin, J, held that the decree was not but the Court in passing the decree on a Sunday only committed an irregularity which is covered by the provisions of sec. 578, C. P. C. In this case it should be noted that the proceedings in the course of which the decree was made were held on the Sunday with the consent of the parties.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE CASE OF Dost Mahammad Khan v. Mani Ram, reported at p. 537 of the current volume of the I. L. R. Allahabad Series, in which a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court overruled the decision in the case of The Collector of Moradabad v. Muhammad Diam Khan, I. L. R. 2 All. 196. The facts of the case were shortly these:—One R executed a mortgage in favour of C purporting to hypothecate the whole of a certain house. Subsequently C brought a mortgage suit to realise the amount of the mortgage, but having ascertained that the mortgagor was only entitled to mortgage a $\frac{7}{18}$ share of the house, he confined his claim to that share and obtained a decree for sale. M, a sister of R, the mortgagor, then brought a suit against her brother R in forma pauperis to have the mortgage set aside so far as regards her share in the mortgaged house, and obtained a decree which directed that the Court-fee should be recovered from the Defendant R. In execution of this decree the $\frac{7}{18}$ share of the house was sold and purchased by D. The mortgagee then applied for the sale of the mortgaged property. D. raised the objection that the property having been purchased by him in execution of a decree in a pauper suit for the realisation of the Court-fee payable to Government, the same could not be sold again. It was contended that under sec. 411, C. P. C, the Court-fee payable to the Government was a first charge upon the property and the sale having taken place to satisfy the Court-fee there could not be a second sale.

THE FULL BENCH HELD THAT THE AMOUNT OF the Court-fee was a first charge upon such property which the Defendant R had at the time of the decree in the pauper suit. At that time the $\frac{7}{18}$th share was hypothecated to the mortgagee by R so that R's interest in the property was only an equity of redemption, or in other words he possessed the property subject to the mortgage. This property that is the equity of redemption was sold for the satisfaction of the Court-fee, therefore the property after purchase by D remained subject to the mortgage. Their Lordships also pointed out that in certain cases the Government could claim for the amount of the Court-fee a first charge on the property in preference to all other creditors But such is the case where the property on which the Court-fee is chargeable is won by the suit. This is only fair. For, had the Plaintiff not been allowed to sue as a pauper, the property would not have been recovered at all.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH.—Ex parte Tilonko v. Secretary of State for the Colonies. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, JUSTICES PHILLIMORE and WALTON. 14th October 1907.

Colonial Prisoner's Removal Act, 1884—Natal Native Chief—Sedition—Deportation.

This was an ex parte application for a certiorari. Petitioner seeking a rule nisi. The order complained of was made on the 3rd May last by the Secretary of State purporting to be in consonance with the powers conferred under the above Act. The Petitioner was ordered thereby to be removed from Natal for sedition to the Island of St. Helena. It was conceded that the order for removal would be lawful if made upon the ground of expediency to ensure safe custody, but it was urged on Petitioner's behalf that from a Blue-book recently issued it appeared that the order was really made not for that purpose but owing to a report having been circulated among the Natal natives that there was impending the early release of prisoners locally confined and that this was to be done under orders of the Imperial Government.

The Court considered that from the Blue-book and materials before them the conclusion to be drawn was quite the contrary. The Home Government was pressed by the Natal Government to deal with the matter on the ground that disorder was likely to result in case of delay, and deportation was necessary to prevent disorder. It was upon the urgency of the matter that the Home Government were not prepared to refuse the safe-guard of deportation. The Home Government had acted within their jurisdiction.

Mr. E. G. Jelleicoe for the Petitioner.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re Winter—German Opera, Limited. Before MR. JUSTICE WARRINGTON. 2nd July 1907.

Bankruptcy—Preferential Payments Act, 1888—Opera singer—Servant—Salary—Wages.

The question arose under the compulsory winding up order of the above company. The contract was in German. The Official Receiver as Liquidator of the company, applied for the Court's directions whether he ought to treat as preferential the claims of artists who had performed for the company in its business of theatrical managers, 4 months prior to the commencement of the winding up. For the defence the argument was that the engagement was a purely transitory one for a month, with a defined and fixed payment for each performance, and the company had no control regarding the manner of the performance rendered. This control was the test of "servant." The payment was not receipt of any thing in the shape of a wage or salary.

The learned Judge referred to the terms of the Act in question and those of the contract, and arrived at the conclusion that an artist was under that contract a "servant," and was paid a salary or wages in respect of services rendered. The liquidator was therefore entitled to treat the claim as preferential under the Act.

Mr. Martelli opposed on the part of Creditors.

Mr. Hart for the Liquidator.

THE LYTTLETON TIMES COMPANY, LTD.
v.
WARNERS, LTD.,

Contract—Common intention if can be bisected—Printing press—Nuisance.

The parties had entered into an agreement believing that a proposition to enlarge a building so that the bed rooms would be free from the noise or any inconvenience which a printing machine to be carried on the ground floor was practicable. Each party when entering into this contract had entertained doubts as to the wisdom of combining in the same building an engine house and printing machinery with hotel bed-rooms. They discussed about the risk of noise and of vibration, but their doubts were removed by the representation of the architect a Mr. Luttrell as to his ability to neutralize such risk The agreement contained no guarantee or any stipulation whatever to indemnify. These facts were found by the Newzealand Courts Warners Limited finding when the building was erected that there was considerable noise and vibration felt in the bed rooms he had erected, brought this action for an injunction and damages against the Lyttleton Times Company.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR in giving judgment observed :—"The question at the root of the difficulties in the case, was, ought the fact that Lyttleton Times Ltd. was the grantor and the Plaintiffs the grantee of lease to dominate the decision of the case. Mr. Luttrell's suggestion which was agreed upon by the parties was that the premises of the Lyttleton Times Company which adjoined the other should be so rebuilt as to provide Plaintiffs as tenants with the bed rooms on the upper floors." And, inter alia, His Lordship said : "Mr. Levett and Mr. Pollock argued the case on behalf of the Respondents (Plaintiffs) as though the common intention was that the Plaintiffs should have reasonably quiet bed rooms. It was so, but that was only one half of the common intention. The other half was that the Defendants should keep on printing. One could not bisect the intention and enforce one half of it when the effect of doing so would be to frustrate the other half. If it could be shown that the Defendant Company or their servants had erected the building or established or worked their machinery or plant improperly, no doubt there would have been a cause of action. But that was not found by Mr. Justice Denniston nor by the majority of the Court of Appeal nor was it in reality the case made by the Plaintiffs. It was rather put on the ground that a duty lay on the Defendant Company to prove affirmatively that the building could not have been so constructed as to avert a nuisance and that they had failed in that duty. Their Lordships did not think that in this case the burden of proof was on Defendants, and shared what appeared to have been the opinion of most of the Judges in Newzealand that negligent or improper construction and working had not been established."

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.	KARSONDAS DHARAMSEY,
LORD ATKINSON.	Petitioner,
SIR ARTHUR WILSON.	GUNGABAI, widow of Gorhandas
1907.	Soonderdas, and others,
19th July.	Respondents.

Special leave—Appeal prefered out of time—Sufficient cause—Limitation Act, sec. 5.

This was an application for special leave to appeal under the following circumstances:—

In April 1901 a suit was brought by Gorhandas Soonderdas abovenamed for a declaration that a trust-deed executed by his father and his grandfather, Muljee Jetha, was inoperative, and that the property remained in the settlors notwithstanding the execution of the deed of settlement. The Petitioner is the brother's son of that Plaintiff; being the son of Dharamsey who was the brother of the Plaintiff, Gorhandas.

The decision in that suit which was in the Original Side of the High Court was delivered by Mr. Justice Russell, dated 10th April 1901, was in Plaintiff's favour deciding that the property passed under the Will of Muljee Jetha

During the whole pendency of that suit, Petitioner was a minor. He was represented in that suit by Bai Ramcoverbai, his step mother, and by his maternal grandfather, Khimjee Parshotum, who were two of the executors of the Will of his father, and were parties Defendants to the suit in that capacity, and who were appointed guardians ad litem on the said Plaintiff's application.

Petitioner's complaint in his petition here and before the High Court was that he was not and could not be properly represented by them, inasmuch as the position necessary to be taken up on his behalf, viz, that the family was joint in family, food, worships and estate throughout, thus involving the contention that the Will of the said Dharamsey, his father, was invalid and inoperative was in conflict with the interests and position of the said executrix and executor.

On the 1st September 1905, Petitioner having come of age applied to a Bench of the High Court of Bombay to admit an appeal presented on his behalf against the said decision of Mr. Justice Russell on the 4th November 1905. The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Batty, decided that in the exercise of their discretion under sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act the appeal ought not to be permitted after the prescribed period. They overruled the Petitioner's objection that the guardians had not acted with propriety in not appealing from the said decree of Mr. Justice Russell. The Court pointed out that the guardians at the trial of the case, had gone the length of briefing counsel from Calcutta, and had taken counsel's opinion as to advisability of appealing; one counsel had said, "the case is fraught with so many difficulties and intricate questions of law that it is impossible to say with any certainty that the appeal will be successful:" another wrote: "In my opinion this is a case in which there should be an appeal. There are many points in the case which in my opinion the learned judge has been in error in deciding in the way he has done:" a third counsel had said that there should be an appeal pointing out that the result if the guardians were unsuccessful would probably be in an adverse order for costs. Upon this point of costs the Chief Justice in refusing to admit Petitioner's memorandum of appeal said: "I do not place much stress upon that circumstance but I find in the case of Moneypenny v. Derring, 4 DeGex and Jones, p. 175, an order as to costs on the understanding that it was made for the purpose of preventing further litigation was regarded as a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining whether or not a decree adverse to the infant should be attached subsequently." Petitioner then applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council on 18th April 1907 that was refused by the same Judges. In refusing such leave the Court inter alia said:—

"It is true that in Ram Narain Joshi v. Parmeswar Narain, L R. 30 I. A. 20, the Privy Council did consider whether the power of admitting an appeal beyond time might have been exercised But that in no way concludes the present case for it does not appear from the report either in Law Reports or in I. L. R. 30 Cal. 309, that the appeal to the Privy Council was preceded by leave obtained from the High Court under Chap. 45, C. P. C."

In the present application Mr. Upjohn, K C., Mr. Younger, K. C., and Mr. Turner for the Petitioner.

Mr Upjohn went fully into the facts of the case, referred to the opinions of counsel, to sec 5, Limitation Act and to L. R. 30 I. A. 20 submitting that sufficient cause was shown for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed period, and that Petitioner had not been properly represented.

Mr. DeGruyther opposing was not called upon.

Application was refused with costs.

KANULLAH, Petitioner,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Court, duty of, to give effect to a final judgment of the Civil Court—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 476—Proceeding under, to be stopped, when the judgment on which it is based is reversed by the Appellate Court—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 193.

Where in a suit against one K on a registered bond, alleged to have been executed by him, K denied the execution of the bond but the Munsif, holding that the bond was genuine, decreed the suit and directed his prosecution under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. C., and on appeal by K, the judgment of the Munsif was reversed by the Subordinate Judge who held that the bond was not genuine and K had not executed it, Held—That the result of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge must be taken to be that the order for the prosecution of K under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., was not maintainable as the basis of that order had gone.

That when a copy of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was filed in the Criminal Court in which the case against K was pending, it was the duty of that Court to withhold its hands and not to have proceeded with the case.

That the order of the Criminal Court convicting K under sec. 193, I. P. C., and sentencing him to imprisonment, which order was affirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, ought to be set aside by the High Court, although K did not move the High Court to quash the proceedings against him as soon as the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was pronounced.

This was a rule issued on the 24th June 1907, calling on the District Magistrate of Backergunge why the order passed by Mr. W. L. Scott, the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Patuakhali, on the 28th March 1907, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 193 of the I. P. C., which order was, on appeal, affirmed by Mr. J. D. Cargill, the Sessions Judge of Backergunge, on the 1st May 1907, should not be set aside.

The facts of the case material to this report appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Petitioner.

Mr. Douglas White for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

Shamserennessa instituted a suit against Kunullah, the Petitioner before us, in the Court of the Munsif of Patuakhali, for recovery of a sum of money due on a registered bond executed by Kunullah. Kunullah denied the execution of the bond. The Munsif, however, came to the conclusion that the bond was genuine, decreed the suit and directed under sec. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that Kunullah should be tried of an offence under sec. 193, I. P. C., for giving false evidence in respect to the execution of the bond. Kunullah appealed from the decision of the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge of Backergunge held, on appeal, that the bond was not genuine and that Kunullah had not executed it. The evidence of Kunullah given before the Munsif was not, therefore, false and the result of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge must be taken to be that the order for the prosecution of the Petitioner under sec. 476, C. Cr. P., was not maintainable as the basis of that order had gone. In the meantime and before the decision of the Subordinate Judge was pronounced, proceedings in the Criminal Court had been taken but when the Subordinate Judge pronounced his judgment, which was on the 7th December 1906, the case was still pending in the Court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate. We are informed that a copy of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was filed in the proceeding before the Sub-divisional Magistrate but the Sub-divisional Magistrate gave no weight to it and, on the 28th March 1907, convicted the accused under sec. 193, I. P. C, and sentenced him to undergo simple imprisonment for six months. On appeal from the conviction and sentence passed by the Sub-divisional Magistrate, the learned Sessions Judge of Backergunge held that the conviction was right and that the sentence was a proper one.

The judgments of both the Sub-divisional Magistrate and the Sessions Judge were passed mainly, if not wholly, on a comparison of the thumb impressions.

On an application by the accused, the Petitioner before us, we issued a rule to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside. We are of opinion, after hearing the learned vakil for the Petitioner and the Deputy Legal Remembrancer for the Crown, that the conviction and sentence should be set aside. It would be disastrous to the administration of justice in this country if a final judgment of a Civil Court could be practically set aside by a judgment of a Criminal Court. The judgment between the parties as regards the genuineness of the bond would be res judicata in all subsequent proceedings between the parties. If the Civil Court held that the bond was not genuine, the Criminal Court ought to have withheld its hand and ought not to have proceeded with the case. It might be that the accused should have, as soon as the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was pronounced, come to this Court and asked for revocation of the order under sec. 476, C. Cr. P.; but that would not affect our jurisdiction in setting aside the order passed by the Criminal Court in a proceeding based on an order under sec. 476, C. Cr. P., which ought to have been set aside as soon as the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was known. We, therefore, direct that both on the merits of the case as well as on the ground that the proceedings in the Criminal Court ought not to have been allowed to proceed, the conviction and sentence should be set aside.

MACLEAN, C. J.,

KALI CHARAN LAL,
Petitioner,
v.
BASUDEO NARAIN
SINGH, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 195—Sanction to prosecute, when to be granted.

Sanction to prosecute is not usually granted unless there is a very reasonable chance of a conviction following.

A sanction to prosecute under sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure ought to be granted with great circumspection and care. If granted it places in the hands of the person obtaining it a very powerful weapon which the unscrupulous might use for purposes of oppression or blackmail.

This is a rule issued on the 23rd April 1907, calling upon the District Magistrate of Shahabad to show cause why the order passed by M. Smither, Esq., Sessions Judge of Shahabad, on the 12th March 1907, granting sanction to the opposite party to prosecute the Petitioner for an offence under sec. 193 of the I. P. C., should not be set aside.

The material facts appear from the judgment.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Sarat Chandra Lahiry for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—I think this rule must be made absolute. It is a rule obtained by the Petitioner who is a Sub-Inspector of Police against the grant of sanction by the Sessions Judge of Sahabad to prosecute him under sec. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the alleged offence of having falsely recorded that the first information of some alleged offence was given to him at 9 P.M. in the evening of a certain day. The trying Magistrate refused this sanction and I think very properly refused it, but the Sessions Judge has granted it. It is a rule of this Court that sanction to prosecute is not usually granted unless there is a very reasonable chance of a conviction following. In this case, I think the chance of conviction would be very small. It is impossible to see what motive the Petitioner could have had for making the alleged false entry. No motive is suggested. In these circumstances, I do not think that the sanction ought to have been granted. In my opinion a sanction to prosecute under sec. 195 ought to be granted with great circumspection and care. If granted, it places in the hands of the person obtaining it a very powerful weapon, which the unscrupulous might use for the purposes of oppression or blackmail. The rule is made absolute.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER
No. 173 OF 1906.

RAMPINI, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.

UPENDRA CHANDRA
SINGH, Petitioner, Appellant,
v.
SAKHI CHAND, Opposite Party, Respondent.

Execution—Mesne profits, application for assessment of—Dismissal for default—Fresh application—Limitation.

UPENDRA CHANDRA SINGH v. SAKHI CHAND.

Where more than 30 days after an application for ascertainment of mesne profits was dismissed for default, a fresh application was made for that purpose,

Held—That the application was not barred.

There is no substantial distinction between an order striking off an application and one dismissing it for default.

This was an appeal preferred on the 2nd of May 1906, against an order of F. S. Hamilton, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Bhagulpore, dated the 2nd of February 1906, reversing that of Babu Nanda Lal Dey, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 4th of May 1905.

The facts of the case as set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court are as follows :—

The Appellant had obtained a decree and when he applied for mesne profits the judgment-debtor, Respondent, objected :—

(1) That the decrees of the Appellate Courts were silent on the subject of mesne profits and that no assessment of them could be made,

(2). That the application was barred by time.

The learned Subordinate Judge set forth the various orders passed in the suit and found that there was no direction for mesne profits, and that therefore he could not assess them.

As regards the second question, he found that it had been held that an application for the assessment of mesne profits was a continuation of the original suit. The decree-holder ought therefore to have renewed his application within thirty days from the date of the rejection of his former application for default. The present application was, therefore, time-barred.

On appeal the District Judge held as follows :—

"On the first point, I am unable to agree with him, as I can find nothing in the orders of the Appellate Courts that indicates that the portion of the original decree that related to mesne profits was ever reversed.

"On the second point, the Appellant's pleader urges that the decision in Ram Kishore Ghose v. Gopi Kantha Sahu (1) is on all fours with the present case

"In this view I agree. It is very plainly stated in the judgment of the Honorable Judges that the practice has always been to treat applications to determine mesne profits as applications for execution of the decree and that the striking off of such applications does not finally decide them or prevent the decree-holder from making a further application for the determination of mesne profits. I cannot agree in the distinction drawn by the Subordinate Judge between dismissal for default and striking off.

"The ruling referred to seems to me to apply more exactly to this case than the authorities quoted by the learned Subordinate Judge and the pleader for the Respondent. I therefore allow the appeal with costs Pleaders' fee Rs. 16. The case is remanded for assessment of the amount of mesne profits."

Babus Basanta Coomar Bose, Joy Gopal Ghosh and Sailendra Nath Palit for the Appellant.

Babu Ashutosh Mukherjee for the Respondent.

(1) I. L. R. 28 Cal. 242 (1900).

UPENDRA CHANDRA SINGH v. SAKHI CHAND.

This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 2nd February 1906.

The facts of the case are these:—The opposite party, Respondent, obtained a decree for wasilut against the present Appellant. The present Appellant had made a claim to certain property under sec. 335, C. P. C., and had got possession of the property. The present Respondent had therefore to sue for possession and prove possession against the present Appellant. He did so and obtained an order for wasilut: so that he was entitled to wasilut from the date of delivery of possession in the sec. 335 case up to the date of recovery of possession in his suit. There was an appeal to the District Judge; but before the District Judge there was no discussion as to the question of wasilut. The appeal there was only as to the boundaries of the plots of which the present Respondent was to recover possession. Now, the present Respondent has applied for execution of his decree for wasilut; and the contention of the Appellant is that the lower Appellate Court's decree does not give him wasilut. It is further urged that when the present Respondent did apply for wasilut he did not prosecute his application with diligence, and it was dismissed for default on the 25th January 1904; so that the present application of the 13th April 1904 is barred by limitation. The learned District Judge has overruled both these contentions and ordered that execution should proceed.

The judgment-debtor in the wasilut decree again appeals and urges that the District Judge is wrong.

We think, however, that there is no reason to interfere with the decision of the learned District Judge. It is clear that the present Respondent did obtain a decree for wasilut and that decree was never interfered with nor was its correctness ever impugned. The lower Appellate Court, through inadvertence, did not specially refer to the question of wasilut: but it is evident, beyond question, that the decree for wasilut was never meant to be interfered with. We think, therefore, that the Respondent is entitled to execute his decree for wasilut.

Then, it is urged that as the application for ascertainment of mesne profits was dismissed on the 25th January 1904 and he did not apply for a fresh ascertainment of mesne profits till the 13th April 1904, his application is barred by limitation, because, it is urged, he was bound to apply within 30 days of the order of dismissal of the application, dated the 25th January 1904. The learned District Judge, has, however, pointed out that the facts of the case of Ram Kishore Ghose v. Gopi Kantha Saha (1) are on all fours with those of the present case; and he says:—"It is very plainly stated in the judgment of the Honorable Judges that the practice has always been to treat applications to determine mesne profits as applications for execution of the decree and that the striking off of such cases does not finally decide them or prevent the decree-holder from making a further application for the determination of mesne profits. I cannot agree in the distinction drawn by the Subordinate Judge between dismissal for default and striking off."

We see no reason to dissent from this view: nor do we consider that there is any substantial distinction between an order striking off an application and one dismissing it for default.

We therefore dismiss this appeal with costs: the hearing fee is assessed at five gold mohurs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 586 OF 1904.

GHOSE, C. J. CASPERSZ, J. 1906. 28, July.	SHOROSHIBALA DEBI, Petitioner, Appellant, v. ANANDAMOYEE DEBI and others, Respondents.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 50—Citation on minor—Minor represented by applicant as guardian—Proceeding defective—Revocation, application for—Applicant acting in concert with another.

Where an applicant for probate of a will took out citation upon a minor who was represented by the applicant herself as guardian,

Held—That the proceedings to obtain the grant were defective in substance and the grant should be revoked.

The fact that the Petitioner for revocation of probate was acting in concert with somebody else could not take away the right which she otherwise possessed of applying for revocation.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of December 1904, against the decree of W. B. Brown, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 22nd of September 1904.

The appeal arose out of an application for revocation of probate under sec. 50 of the Probate Act on the ground of want of citation.

Babus Tara Kishore Chowdhury, Jadu Nath Kanjilal and Gobind Chandra Dey Roy for the Appellant.

Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Braja Lal Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of an application presented by one Soroshibala Debi for revocation of probate of the Will said to have been left by her father, one Gopi Mohan Roy Chowdhury. The Will purports to bear date the 20th February 1897. Upon the death of Gopi Mohan, which took place on the 7th March 1897, an application was made for probate of the Will by Anandmoyee and Bhubaneswari, the two widows of Gopi Mohan, on the 3rd February 1898. Soroshibala, the Petitioner in this case, was a minor at that time, and though citation seems to have been issued, and was issued, apparently at the instance of the applicants for probate, it was upon her as represented by her mother Bhubaneswari, and the application not being opposed by anybody, the Will was not proved in solemn form, but what may be said to be in common form, and probate was granted on the 7th March 1898. Soroshibala has since been married, and she has attained her majority; and the petition that she presented in the Court below on the 11th March 1904 was under sec.

SHOROSHIBALA DEBI v. ANANDAMOYEE DEBI.

50 of the Probate and Administration Act, and upon the grounds, first, that the proceedings to obtain the grant were defective in substance, in that she was not cited as she ought to have been, and, secondly, that the Will propounded by Anandmoyee and Bhubaneswari was a forged document. The learned Judge of the Court below confined his inquiry to a single point, that point being whether the application of Soroshibala was a genuine one and whether, in the probate proceedings, her interests were set aside by fraud and collusion. Evidence was necessarily confined to this point, and to this point only, and the learned Judge, being of opinion that there was no reason to suppose that the interests of Soroshibala were set aside by fraud and collusion on the part of her mother, and that the application presented by her was but the outcome of a concert between Bhubaneswari, the Petitioner and her husband Ramtanu, and was indeed inspired by Bhubaneswari herself, held that the petition could not be granted. In this view of the matter, the learned Judge has dismissed the application. We are, however, unable to agree with that officer in the view that he has adopted, and the course that he has pursued in dealing with the matter of the application which was presented to him. The first question that he had to apply his mind to was whether the proceedings to obtain the grant were defective in substance. One of the illustrations to sec 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, by way of explanation of what 'just cause' is, runs thus:—"The grant was made without citing parties who ought to have been cited;" and the question that here arises is whether the citation that was taken out in the name of Soroshibala was a proper citation; for, if it was not, it is obvious that there was really no citation. As already mentioned, the citation was taken out in the name of Bhubaneswari, who was one of the applicants for probate of the Will. Under the law, citation is taken out against such parties as are interested in contesting the application for probate, such parties being, as it were, Defendants to the proceeding in the matter of the grant of probate. And looking at the matter from this point of view, it seems to be obvious that the Petitioner Bhubaneswari could not represent both her interest and the interest of Soroshibala, then a minor. The proper course for the Petitioner in that case to pursue was to have somebody appointed by the Court to act as guardian of Soroshibala, or to take out citation against her represented by her next friend, or an officer of the Court, who could have no interest adverse to Soroshibala herself. It has however been contended by the learned vakil for the Respondent, that at the time that the application was made by Bhubaneswari for probate of the Will of her husband, Soroshi had but a contingent interest in the estate left by her father, the persons then interested being Bhubaneswari and her co-wife Anandmoyee, and it could not be said that her (Bhubaneswari's) interest and the interest of Soroshibala were antagonistic to each other and that, therefore, Bhubaneswari could well represent the interest of Soroshibala in the probate proceeding. We are, however, unable to accept this view of the matter, for though Soroshibala had a contingent interest, yet it must be taken that she had an interest, however, contingent it might be, and when the Will in question declares or gives Bhubaneswari and her co-wife the power to adopt, the moment such adoption is made, Soroshi would be entirely cut off. Looking at the matter from this point of view, it can hardly be said that the interest of Bhubaneswari was not adverse to, or it was the same as that of Soroshibala. Upon these considerations, we are of opinion that the citation that was taken out in the name of Sorsohibala was really no citation at all and the proceedings were defective from this point of view. As to the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge that the petition presented by Soroshibala was inspired by Bhubaneshwari and that Soroshibala, her husband and Bhubaneswari were 'acting hand in glove together,' all that we need say is that, assuming that it is so, if she has a right in herself to present the petition that she presented in the Court below, and if she is entitled to have the proceedings set aside, the mere circumstance that she was inspired by somebody else, or that she was acting in concert with somebody else, could not take away the right which she otherwise possessed. Upon these considerations, we are of opinion that the order of the learned Judge refusing the application of Soroshibala must be set aside, and that the grant of probate should be revoked. We order accordingly: each party will bear his own costs in both the Courts.

We desire to add that the view that we have expressed is supported by the observations of this Court in the case of Walter Rebells v. Maria Rebells (1).

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 106—Suit between rival proprietors—Scope of suit—Question of possession or title—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sec. 22—Substitution of executor in place of supposed legal representative—New Defendant.

In a suit under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, certain lands were alleged to have been erroneously recorded as part of mouzah P. and it was prayed that the record-of-rights be amended and the disputed lands entered as part of Plaintiff's own mouzah R. from the record of which the same had been omitted. The suit was instituted more than two months after the final publication of the record-of-rights for mouzah R. but within two months of the final publication of the record-of-rights for mouzah P.,

Held—That the suit was not time-barred.

In such a suit the Revenue-Officer, and in case the suit is transferred to the Civil Court, the Civil Court is confined to the question of possession and cannot be asked to adjudicate upon the title of rival proprietors.

The suit was originally instituted against the person whose name was entered in the record-of-rights. But it appeared that this person was the widow of the deceased proprietor and her name was entered as representing the estate of her deceased husband, Held—That the executors to the estate of the deceased proprietor who were substituted as Defendants were not new Defendants within sec. 22, Limitation Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of December 1905, against the decree of S. S. Skinner, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Zillah Cuttack, dated the 2nd of September 1905, reversing the decision Moulvi Abdul Barry, Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated the 31st of March 1904.

The suits out of which these appeals arose were instituted under sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, and transferred by the Revenue-Officer to the Civil Court. Plaintiff complained that certain lands belonging to his Mouzah Ramchunderpur had been erroneously recorded in the record-of-rights as forming part of Mouzahs Pursottam Sahi and Debata Sahi, a lady named Lakhmi Rani being recorded as the proprietress of the said mouzahs. Accordingly Plaintiff instituted these suits against Lakhmi Rani as the Defendant. Lakhmi Rani's name was subsequently removed from the record and those of the executors of the estate of her deceased husband substituted in its place. The suits were decreed in the Original Court, but on appeal the District Judge reversed the decision of that Court and second appeals were preferred by the Plaintiff in the High Court.

WOODROFFE, J.—These two suits are brought under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Plaintiff is not asking for possession nor can it be given him. What he asks for is that the record-of-rights be amended upon declaration of his title to lands which belong to his Mouzah Ramchunderpur but which have been entered in the record as parts of Mouzahs Pursottampur and Debata Sahi. The District Judge is wrong in holding that these are not suits for the correction of entries. The cases were headed under sec. 106 brought before the Revenue-Officer and by him and under that section transferred to the Civil Court. The first paragraph of the plaints states that the suits have been brought "for getting lands alleged to belong to Ramchunderpur removed from the record-of-rights of Pursottampur and Debata Sahi respectively. On the merits it has been found by the first Court that both possession and title were with the Plaintiff and that the lands in dispute form part of the Plaintiff's mouzah and the record should be amended accordingly. On this point the District Judge reversed the finding of the first Court as he held that the identity of the Bhauria numbers of the Survey of 1268 with the Khasra numbers mentioned in the plaint had not been established. In so holding he has dismissed the suit on the ground that a fact was not proved which it was unnecessary to prove. No doubt it was for the Plaintiff to show that the Khasra numbers in the plaint covered his lands but it does not appear to have been in contest that the Khasra numbers in the record covered the disputed land. The only point to be proved there was whether the disputed land appertained to Ramchunderpur and this was shown by reference to the Bhauria or Survey numbers. The enquiry by the Amin would have been wholly useless unless the identity of the Khasra numbers in the record and the disputed land was assumed and no objection was taken to the admissibility of the evidence given on the report. The appeal therefore must be reheard unless the suit is, as the Respondents contend, barred. The Subordinate Judge held that the suits were in time under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a point to which I will refer later. In the lower Appellate Court a fresh objection was taken on the ground of limitation, and it was held that Art. 120 applied. The grounds upon which the District Judge proceeded were that the suit was not one for the correction of the record under sec. 106 and that the Plaintiff had himself stated that his cause of action arose on the 22nd December 1892. In so stating an erroneous view was taken of his rights and of the nature of the suit. In a suit (such as this is) under sec. 106 the cause of action can only arise on the date of the final publication of the record-of-rights. The suit is not governed by Art. 120 which applies to suits for which no special provision is made but by the special provisions of sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This part of the finding of the lower Appellate Court has hardly been attempted to be supported before us. The question which has been argued is whether assuming that sec. 106 applies, the suits have been brought within the two months mentioned in that section. It is said that the suits are barred as not having been instituted within two months of the publication of the record-of-rights of Ramchunderpur (28th November 1900). I however agree with the conclusions and reasonings of the Subordinate Judge that the final publication mentioned in sec. 106 must be taken in this case to be final publication of the record-of-rights of the land itself which was done on the 19th December 1900 and 11th February 1901 when the record-of-rights of the Defendant's mouzahs were published containing the disputed land.

As the Judge in my opinion rightly remarks, until the record-of-rights including the disputed land was published how could the Plaintiff know whose name was recorded and whom to sue. Sec. 106 requires that there should be a dispute and for this two parties are necessary. It is said that the Plaintiff knew from before the publication of the Defendant's record, that the dispute was with him. But the dispute must be as to something in the record and this did not arise until a record was made including the Plaintiff's lands in the Defendant's mouzahs.

Next it is said that the name of the party against whom the original suit was brought and whose name was on the record (Lakmi Rani) was expunged and that the executors whose names were substituted are new Defendants within the meaning of sec. 22 of the Limitation

MOHUNT PADMALAV RAMANUJA DAS v. LUKMI RANI.

Act. I do not think that this is so. The Plaintiff might I think proceed either against the person whose name was recorded or any other person representing the same interest as the former person. I think it must be taken that Lakmi Rani's name was entered in the record as representing the estate of her deceased husband and that the executors do so in succession to her. They are not in my opinion new Defendants. The suits are therefore in time having been instituted within the period of two months of the publication of the record.

Lastly, it is said that the suit should fail because the Plaintiff has sued the wrong party. It is argued that the only person against whom he might proceed was the person whose name was recorded, viz., Lakmi Rani. But I do not think that is so, for if Lakmi Rani formerly represented the estate, he might and indeed should sue those who now in succession to her now do so.

There must therefore be a remand. The only question is as to the point to be remanded. Upon the facts in this case and for the reasons stated by my learned brother in the judgment he is about to deliver, I think that the only question which should be remanded is whether the Plaintiff is in possession of the disputed land in which case only he is entitled to have the record corrected in accordance with such possession. The costs will abide the result of the suit. Though Lakmi Rani and the executors have been made parties, their appearance here appears to have been quite unnecessary as the interests of the estate have been represented by the Manager under the Court of Wards. I would therefore allow only one set of costs for the Respondents.

COXE, J.—With regard to the question whether the District Judge's decision on the facts is final and the question whether the suits are barred by sec. 22 of the Limitation Act, I agree fully with the observations of Mr. Justice Woodroffe. But as to the limitation of two months prescribed by sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, I agree with some hesitation. That section, as it stood when these suits were instituted, permitted the institution of a suit, within two months of the date of the final publication of the record, for the decision of disputes regarding entries in, or omissions from, the said record. Sec. 103A, sub sec. (3) provides for the publication of separate records for separate areas, apparently with the object of ensuring that a person aggrieved by an entry in a particular record should be compelled to sue within two months of publication of that record. In one of the present suits the Plaintiff sued for the transfer of the disputed lands from the village of Pursottampur to that of Ramchunderpur, by which he must be taken to have meant that certain entries should be expunged from the record of Pursottampur and inserted in the record of Ramchunderpur with the modification that his own name should be substituted in the place of the Defendants as the landlord of the land.

Now no doubt the suits so far as they seek omissions in the records of Pursottampur and Debata Sahi are not barred. As regards the village of Debata Sahi, no question of limitation appears to arise. But as regards the prayer for the entry in the record of Ramchunderpur of certain particulars now contained in the record of Pursottampur, I think it is open to considerable doubt if the suit is in time. It is argued that, the land being one and the same, limitation should run from the date of the publication of the last entry affecting the land. But on the other hand, it may be said with some show of reason that, as the suit is not, and could not be, a suit for the recovery of land, or even for a declaration of a right to land, but only a suit for the correction of a record, the identity of the land can make no difference. Again it is argued that it takes two to make a quarrel, and that the publication of the record of Ramchunderpur, with the land omitted, could raise no "dispute" before the record of Pursottampur in which the land was definitely assigned to that village was published. To this, it has been answered by the learned pleader for the Respondents that, if a "dispute" cannot be raised by a mere omission, then in that case if Pursottampur had been a contiguous village, not within the settled area, no "dispute" could ever have arisen, and the Plaintiff would have obtained no right of suit under sec. 106. It is argued that it cannot have been intended to limit the operation of the section in this way, and that it must have been intended that an omission should by itself, justify a suit.

I think therefore that it is open to some doubt whether the Pursottampur suit, so far as it seeks the insertion of entries in the Ramchunderpur record, is in time. But the point is one of little practical importance. The Plaintiff may certainly sue for the exclusion of entries from the Pursottampur record, and the decision of that prayer will have the force of a decree. On the other hand, if he is barred by the lapse of time from suing to have these entries added to the Ramchunderpur record, the result is that the dispute regarding the omissions in the Ramchunderpur record must be taken to have failed. Those omissions therefore must be regarded as undisputed omissions, and consequently their only effect is to give rise to certain presumptions of correctness which, if the Plaintiff is successful, the decree with respect to the Pursottampur record will at once rebut. In these circumstances I certainly do not think that I should be justified in dissenting from Mr Justice Woodroffe's conclusions and accordingly I agree that the suits are not barred by the limitation of two months prescribed by sec. 106.

The decision of the three points mentioned above in favour of the Plaintiff, would ordinarily necessitate a remand. But in framing the order for remand the question has arisen as to whether in a suit under sec. 106, the Plaintiff can plead his title, or whether the Court is confined to the question of possession. Moreover we were at first informed that the question of possession had been decided with respect to Pursottampur and Debata Sahi by awards under the Bengal Survey Act, 1875, and as an award under that Act carries the force of an order of a Civil Court declaring the possession of the parties, the further question arose whether, in the event of the suit having to be decided according to possession, the Plaintiff could be permitted to plead his possession in the teeth of the survey awards. The parties have accordingly been heard again on these points, and the record has been further examined. It is now clear for reasons that I will state later, that there is no bar to the consideration and decision of the question of possession, and all that remains to be decided is whether the Plaintiff is confined to proof of possession or can go further and ask the Court to adjudicate upon his title.

I am of opinion that he is confined to proof of possession. Sec. 106 provides that a suit may be instituted for the decision of any dispute, regarding any entry, which a Revenue-Officer has made in a record-of-rights. Now the disputed entries in these suits are, firstly, the entries which show that the disputed lands, the plot number of which are stated in the plaint, lie in the village of Pursottampur and Debata Sahi, and, secondly, those which show that the landlord of those lands and the tenant there on is the Defendant. And of these two sets of entries, those which show the Defendant to be the landlord are far the most important. It would be of little avail to the Plaintiff to prove that the lands lay in Ramchunderpur if the Defendant remained recorded as the landlord. How the landlord of any plot is to be ascertained, is therefore the first thing to decide. According to sec. 101 the record-of-rights is to be prepared in accordance with rules made in that behalf by the Local Government. Rule 8 of Chap. VI of the rules so made, prescribes that the record shall be contained in the khewat and khatian and Rule 9 deals with the preparation of the khewat, which is to show the character and extent of proprietary interests. It is to be first drawn up with reference to the registers kept by the Collector under the Bengal Land Registration Act, 1876, registers which, it may be observed, are prepared according to possession and possession alone, as a reference to secs. 29, 32, 38, 52, 55, 59 of the Act will show. And as the record writing proceeds the khewat is to be altered in accordance with the facts of possession, alterations are to be notified to the Collector, in order that he may correct his registers which, as I have said are based exclusively on possession, and have no concern with title unaccompanied by possession.

Moreover the preparation of the record-of-rights is usually preceded by a survey under the Bengal Survey Act, 1875, for the purposes of marking out the villages which are subsequently to be cadastrally surveyed and settled, and of settling all boundary disputes. It is in these proceedings that the names of the proprietors are first ascertained, and they have to be conducted with regard solely to the facts of possession, as a reference to sec. 41 of the Act will show.

Moreover, to look at the matter from different standpoint, it is evident that in proceedings under the Tenancy Act no disputes of title between rival proprietors, considered merely as proprietors, can legitimately arise. The Act deals with the relations of landlords and tenants, and it is no part of its purposes to regulate disputes between rival proprietors, except in so far as such disputes affect their relations with their tenants. And the practical effect of sec.

MOHUNT PADMALAV RAMANUJA DAS v. LUKMI RANI.

60 of the Act is to render it unnecessary to go into questions of title in order to ascertain who is the landlord of any tanant. It is necessary only to ascertain who is the registered proprietor; and the registered proprietor, as has been pointed out above, is the proprietor in possession, be the title with whom it may.

These considerations demonstrate, and indeed the learned pleader for the Appellant concedes, that in framing a record-of-rights under sec. 103A of the Act, the Revenue-Officer must record the proprietors according to possession. But it is contended that when the record has been finally published, and disputes have arisen about its correctness with respect to the interests of proprietors, the Revenue-Officer is no longer confined to the question of possession, but may go into questions of title and may decide who, by reason of his title, irrespective of his possession, should be regarded as the true landlord.

For this view there is undoubtedly much to be said. In the first place the wording of the section is very comprehensive. It authorises the Revenue-Officer to decide any dispute regarding any entry. But I think it is reasonable to suppose that these words are confined to disputes, which may legitimately arise from incorrect entries. If the entries have been made in strict accordance with rules of Government, which have the force of law, and show all that a record-of-rights is required to show, I do not think that the section authorises an objector to plead that, although the record has been properly prepared and gives a correct view of the landlords and tenants actually on the land; yet it ought to be altered and prepared otherwise than in accordance with the rules, because it is incorrect for the purpose of ascertaining the legal titles of the proprietors, a purpose which is not one of the purposes either of the Tenancy Act or of a settlement under it.

Secondly, it is pointed out that sec. 109A gives a right of appeal to a Special Judge, and of second appeal to the High Court, and it is argued that, if suits under sec. 106 were confined to questions of possession, there would be no more need of this appellate machinery, than there is in cases under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. This argument however is two edged for, as has been pointed out by the learned pleader for the Respondent, if Revenue-Officers may decide pure questions of title between rival proprietors, it is strange that, in cases of high value, the first appeal should lie to the Special Judge, and that there should be no appeal on the facts to the High Court. But the true answer to the argument is that suits between rival proprietors form but an insignificant fraction of the suits, with which sec. 106 deals. Almost all the suits brought under this section are suits between tenant and tenant, or between landlord and tenant, and relate to entries to which the rule quoted above for the preparation of the khewat has no application. For such suits the appellate machinery described in sec. 109A is clearly necessary, and this fact seems to me to render it unsafe to draw any inference from the fact, that that machinery is unsuitable for the rare and exceptional cases of which the present suits are examples.

Thirdly, we have been referred to the Board's Instructions. These have not the force of law, but none the less, deserve great respect as indicating the view of the most experienced Revenue-Officers of the scope of the law which they are accustomed to administer. In Rule 2 of Chap. 9 of Part III of the Survey and Settlement Manual it is stated that disputes under sec. 106 may be regarding possession on regarding right or title; and further on, it is said that suits to obtain possession may be accepted. But here too, it is possible that the experienced authors of these rules were not adverting to disputes between proprietors, but were thinking of the suits, which probably form an overwhelming majority of suits brought under sec. 106, namely, suits between tenant and tenant, or between landlord and tenant, in which questions other than that of possession may legitimately arise. This explanation will not apply to the concluding words of Rule 11, Chap. 5, Part II of the Manual, and with regard to those words I can only say with all respect, that I am unable to agree that they are a correct statement of the law.

As has been said, it is conceded that the Revenue-Officer in dealing with the rights of proprietors, is confined to the question of possession when he is farming the record. If then the entries are accurate according to the method by which the record must necessarily be prepared, and show merely the facts of possession, and neither show nor are intended to show with whom the title to the land rests; it seems to me that they cannot reasonably be held to give rise to a cause of action for a suit to declare that though originally they were correctly prepared, they are inaccurate from another point of view, and do not show what they were never intended to show. The result is that in my opinion, the Revenue-Officer in deciding disputes between rival proprietors under sec. 106, is confined to the question of possession, and I feel no doubt that a Civil Court to which a suit is transferred under the proviso to that section, cannot have any wider jurisdiction than the transferring Revenue-Officer himself could exercise.

It is necessary, in conclusion, to deal with a point that has been argued on behalf of the Respondent to the effect, that the question of possession has already been finally decided. The survey award to which a reference has already been made was found on examination, to relate to the land claimed by the Plaintiff within the village of Sasantima. The suit relating to that village has been dismissed. With respect to the villages of Pursottampur and Debata Sahi a decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer, dated the 6th October 1893, about a year after the survey proceedings, is put forward. It is argued that as the Assistant Settlement Officer was empowered to act under Survey Act, this decision must be regarded as a survey award. This however by no means follows. The usual course, I believe, is that the area to be settled is first surveyed under the Survey Act, the villages demarcated and the proprietors ascertained. Thereafter the cadastral survey of the lands, village by village, and the preparation of the record-of-rights under the Tenancy Act is taken in hand. Because the same officers may be employed throughout, it does not follow that in the second stage of the proceedings they are exercising the powers which were suitable to the first. I feel no doubt that the Assistant Settlement Officer's order, whatever, it may be, is not an award under the Survey Act. What precisely it is, it is by no means easy to say, but to take it at its highest value it can only be one of two things. That is to say, it may be either the summary disposal of an objection under the Tenancy Act as it then stood, or, if it is taken to be the decision of a dispute under the Civil Procedure Code, it can only be regarded as a dismissal of the Plaintiffs suit in default under sec. 157 of the Code. In neither case, can it be regarded as precluding the Plaintiffs from now proving that he is in possession of the disputed land.

Accordingly, I would set aside the decision of the District Judge, and remand the cases for decision of the question whether the Plaintiff is in possession of the disputed land, as the Special Judge has found. If the learned District Judge finds that the Plaintiff is in possession, he should direct the entry of his name as landlord in the records under sec. 107, sub-sec. (2). Otherwise the suits should be dismissed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 2251 OF 1907.

BRETT, J.
MOOKERJEE, J.
1907.
Heard,
22, August.
Judgment,
29, August.

MUSSTT. UMATUL MEHDI, Petitioner,
v.
MUSSTT. KULSOOM, Opposite Party.

Land Registration Act (VI of 1876, B. C.), sec. 55—Land Registration dispute—Reference to Civil Court—Conditions to be satisfied before making reference—"Possession," meaning of—Mahomedan Law—Dower—Widow's right to hold property till dower paid—High Court—Revision.

Before the Collector can order the name of an Applicant to be registered as proprietor of an estate or any interest therein under the provisions of the Land Registration Act, he must satisfy himself that the possession of the estate exists in the applicant as alleged or that a succession or transfer has taken place as alleged and that the applicant has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer, but not otherwise. The determination of the question of possession alone is sufficient when the applicant claims to have assumed charge as joint proprietor on behalf of his co sharers or as manager. When, however, the applicant claims to be proprietor by succession or transfer, the Collector has to satisfy himself on two points, namely, that the succession or transfer has taken place and that the applicant is in possession accordingly. If the succession or transfer is proved but possession is found against the applicant, his name cannot be registered, or conversely, if possession alone is proved, but the succession or transfer is not established, i.e., if the possession proved is not attributable to the title set up the application for registration must be refused.

The first duty of a Collector in a case of dispute is to determine whether any person is in possession of the disputed interest. If possession is found to be with any person, the Collector has no jurisdiction summarily to oust him. He can determine the question of the right to possession or refer it to the Civil Court only when upon investigation no one is proved to be in possession.

Possession in sec. 55, Land Registration Act, does not mean lawful possession, but actual possession which includes possession by receipt of rent, the possession of the tenant being in a sense the possession of the landlord.

When a Mahomedan widow has obtained possession of the undistributed property of her deceased husband lawfully and without force or fraud, she is primâ facie entitled, as against the other heirs of her husband to retain possession until her dower-debt or any portion of it which is due and unpaid is paid.

The jurisdiction which the Civil Court acquires upon a reference to it under sec. 55 of the Land Registration Act is that of a Civil and not of a Revenue Court and its decision is subject to revision by the High Court.

The ordinary rule is that where an aggrieved party has other remedy available, e.g., by regular suit, the High Court is unwilling to interfere in revision, but even if there be such remedy the High Court may interfere in exceptional cases.

This was a rule granted on the 18th of July 1907, against an order of Babu Atul Chandra Batabyal, Officiating Additional Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 29th of June 1907.

The material facts are fully set out in the judgment.

Mr. Jackson, Mr. Chaudhuri, and Moulvi S. M. Tahir for the Petitioner.

Mr. O'Kinealy (Advocate-General), Mr. S. Ahmed, Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda and Moulvi Mahomed Mustafa Khan for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The order which we are called upon to revise in the present rule was made by the Subordinate Judge of Patna under sec. 59 of the Bengal Land Registration Act of 1876. The circumstances under which the order in question was made are not in controversy before this Court and may be briefly outlined. One Nawab Sabdar Hossain Khan, a wealthy zemindar of Husnabad, in the District of Monghyr, died on the 7th August 1905. He left considerable landed properties in the Districts of Monghyr, Gya and Patna. The Petitioner who alleges that she was the daughter of the maternal uncle of Sabdar Hossain was married to him and the parties lived as husband and wife till the death of the former. Upon the death of her husband she took possession of his estates, the bulk of which was situated in the Districts of Monghyr and Gya. On the 15th November 1905, the present opposite party, Mussammat Kulsum, who claims to be the sister of the father of Sabdar Hossain, applied for registration of her name in the Collectorate in respect of the properties situated in the district of Patna upon the allegation that as Sabdar Hossain was governed by the Shia law, the Petitioner, his childless widow, was not entitled to the estate and that she as sister of the father of the deceased had succeeded to the properties by right of inheritance. On the 9th January 1906, the widow Umatool Mehdi preferred objection on the ground that she was entitled to the estate by right of inheritance as the daughter of the maternal uncle of Sabdar Hossain and that in any event she was entitled to retain possession of the properties till her dower which was alleged to have been fixed at a sum of 5 lacs of rupees and 25 gold mohurs, was satisfied out of the profits. The Deputy Collector heard the parties at considerable length and on the 17th February 1906 made an order of reference to the Civil Court under sec. 55 of the Land Registration Act. The widow applied to the superior revenue authorities but the Collector, the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue successively declined to interfere. The case was then taken up by the Subordinate Judge of Patna and he held what is described as a summary enquiry into the question of the right to possession in respect of the interest in the estate in dispute but which in substance is as full an investigation into the question of title and possession as can take place in a regular suit. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion upon the evidence that the widow was in possession of the properties by receipt of rent from the lessees; that she was not entitled to the estate by right of inheritance; that the dower-debt claimed by her did not entitle her to take or keep possession of the properties; that the legal possession in the disputed properties must be taken to be in Musumutt Kulsum and that consequently the objection of the widow must be disallowed and possession delivered to the rightful heiress. The widow now seeks to have this order discharged and upon her application the rule under consideration was issued. The learned counsel who appears in support of the rule has contended that the proceedings before the Subordinate Judge are vitiated by two defects, namely, first, that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to determine the matters in controversy as there was no valid reference to him by the Collector under sec 55 of the Land Registration Act, and, secondly, that the Subordinate Judge has acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction, if he had any, and he ought to have held that not only the actual possession of the properties but also the right to retain possession of them till the satisfaction of the dower-debt, was in the Petitioner. It has been argued on the other hand by the learned Advocate-General, first, that as the Subordinate Judge exercised a special statutory jurisdiction in aid and at the instance of the Revenue Courts, this Court has no jurisdiction to revise his orders and, secondly, that the Subordinate Judge was correct in his conclusion that the widow had no right to retain possession, temporary or otherwise of the disputed properties in satisfaction of her claim for dower. To determine which of these contentions ought to prevail, it is necessary to refer for a moment to the leading provisions of the Land Registration Act applicable to the matter before us.

Sec. 42 provides that every person

succeeding to the proprietary right in or management of estates shall apply to the Collector for registration of his name and the character and extent of his interest as such proprietor or manager." Sec. 48 provides for notice to possible objectors. Sec. 52 lays down the mode and scope of enquiry by the Collector. It provides that he has to ascertain the truth of the alleged possession of, succession to or transfer of the estate or interest therein in respect of which registration is sought. Before the Collector can order the name of the applicant to be registered as proprietor of the estate or of any interest therein, he must satisfy himself that the possession exists or that the alleged succession or transfer has taken place and that the applicant has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer but not otherwise. This clearly contemplates two different classes of cases. The determination of the question of possession alone is sufficient when the applicant claims to have assumed charge as joint proprietor on behalf of his co-sharers or as manager; in such a case, the Collector need satisfy himself only on the one point of the possession of the applicant. When, however, the applicant claims to be proprietor by succession or transfer the Collector has to satisfy himself on two points, namely, that the succession or transfer has taken place and that the applicant is in possession accordingly. In this latter case, therefore, the applicant cannot succeed unless both the elements are established. If the succession or transfer is proved, but possession is found against the applicant, his name cannot be registered, or conversely, if possession alone is proved, but the succession or transfer is not established, that is if the possession proved is not attributable to the title set up; the application for registration must be refused. Sec. 55 next deals with cases of dispute as to possession, succession, or acquisition by transfer. This section provides that if there is a dispute as to the possession, succession, or acquisition by transfer by the applicant of the extent of interest in respect of which he has applied to be registered, the Collector must, in the first instance, try to satisfy himself, whether any person is in possession of the interest in dispute. If it is not proved to the satisfaction of the Collector that any person is in possession of the interest in dispute, the Collector may adopt one of two courses. He may either himself determine summarily the right to possession, deliver possession accordingly, and make the necessary entry in the register, or, if, in his opinion, the dispute is of a character which is properly determinable by a Civil Court, he shall refer the matter in dispute to the principal Civil Court of the district, for determination. It is obvious, therefore, that the first duty of the Collector in the case of dispute is to determine whether any person is in possession of the disputed interest. If possession is found to be with any person, the Collector has no jurisdiction summarily to oust him. This is manifest from the alteration which was made in sec. 55 of the Land Registration Act by sec. 1 of Act V of 1878. Under sec. 55 as it stood in Act VII of 1876 in its unamended form, the Collector was entitled to determine summarily the right to possession, if the possession of the applicant in accordance with his application was not proved to his satisfaction. Under such a provision of the law, it might be open to the Collector to determine summarily the right to possession and deliver possession accordingly, so as to oust the third person. In the present amended form of sec. 55, however, the Collector is entitled to determine summarily the right to possession or make reference to the Civil Court for the same purpose, only if no one is proved to be in possession of the interest in dispute. The essential pre-requisite for a reference to the Civil Court by the Collector is, therefore, an investigation by him into the question of possession and a conclusion that no body is proved to his satisfaction to be in possession. In the case before us, there was no such investigation by the Collector. The order of reference which he made shows on the face of it, that he did not direct his attention to the question, whether any person was in possession of the interest in dispute. It follows, therefore, that the reference was irregular and in contravention of the provisions of sec. 55. We may add that sec. 58 lays down the procedure when a reference has to be made under sec. 55 and one of the heads upon which the Collector has to furnish information to the Civil Court is, "the circumstances of the case, as far as they are before the Court; and the reasons which have led him to make the reference." It is not enough, for the Collector to repeat the language of sec. 55 and to say that in his opinion the dispute ought to be properly determined by a Civil Court. He must state that it is not proved to his satisfaction that any person is in possession of the interest in dispute.

Sec. 59 next defines the procedure before the Civil Court on receipt of reference. The Civil Court is to determine summarily the right to possession in respect of the interest in dispute, subject to a regular suit, and to deliver possession accordingly. Sec. 62 provides that the summary decision of the Court under sec. 59 shall have no other effect than that of settling the actual possession, but for such purposes, it shall be final and not subject to any appeal or order for review.

Upon a review of these provisions of the Land Registration Act, the following conclusion appears to us to be reasonably plain. When a person alleges that he has by succession, as in the present case, acquired an interest in an estate and is in possession of such interest, and on this basis, seeks registration of his name, if his claim is disputed by any other person who sets up a conflicting claim in respect of the same interest, the Collector must enter into the question of possession. If he finds that possession is with the applicant and that the title set up is also proved, he may enter his name in the register. If, however, it is not proved to his satisfaction that any person is in possession of the disputed interest, he may either determine summarily the right to possession and deliver possession accordingly or he may make a reference to the Civil Court which may determine summarily the right to possession and deliver possession accordingly. The learned Advocate-General contended that in sec. 55, the term

'possession' means 'lawful possession'; in other words, that if the title of a person is established, the possession under sec. 55 must be assumed to be in him in the eye of law, even though the actual possession may be with some one else. He further contended that it is not merely open to the Collector, but it is his duty to determine, in every case, the right to possession and to place the rightful owner in possession, so as to oust the person who is actually in occupation. This contention, however, is contrary to the provisions of sec. 52 which as we have stated already, show clearly that the Collector must not only satisfy himself that the alleged succession or transfer has taken place but also that the applicant has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer. If, as is contended by the learned Advocate-General, whenever it is found that A has succeeded to the estate of B or has obtained it by a transfer, it follows, as a matter of law, that A has acquired possession thereof, it would be wholly unnecessary for the Legislature to provide in sec. 52, as it has done, that the Collector must satisfy himself as to both the elements, namely, succession or transfer and the acquisition of possession in accordance with such succession or transfer. Sec. 52 shows plainly that unless both the elements are established, the Collector cannot order the name of the applicant to be registered. Reliance was, however, placed by the learned Advocate-General upon the case of Bushby v. Dixon (1), in which it was ruled by the Court of King's Bench that where a freehold land in the occupation of tenant for years, passes by descent, the heir is immediately seised in fact, and this is not altered by the occupier paying rent by mistake to another. Mr. Justice Bayley stated that where there is no one in possession at the death of the ancestor, there must be an actual entry by the heir to give him the seisin in fact; but when there is a tenant, his possession becomes that of the heir, immediately on the death of the ancestor; the subsequent misconduct of the tenant in paying rent to another person or the mistake of the heir as to his right, cannot be to alter the nature of the seisin which he had before. This decision, founded on the ancient learning of the seisin may be treated as good law and was in fact relied upon by Lord Selborne in Lyell v. Kennedy (2). But it has no application to the present case. It may be conceded that under the Land Registration Act, a person who claims to have acquired an interest in an estate by succession or transfer and to be in possession by virtue of such title, is not entitled to be registered merely upon proof of possession. He must show that his possession is not wrongful and is attributable to the title which he sets up. But it does not follow, conversely, that, if he proves his title merely, but not his possession, he is entitled to have his name registered. As a wrongdoer in possession is not entitled to claim registration, so the rightful owner, if out of possession, is not entitled to claim registration merely on the ground that the legal possession is in him. To hold otherwise, would be to ignore the clear distinction between possession and right to possession which is recognised in secs. 52 and 55. In the case before us, it has been found that the Petitioner, the widow, is in possession of the estate by receipt of rent from the lessees. It is not quite accurate to describe this as constructive possession. In the case of zemindaries where the proprietor can be in possession only by receipt of rent, he is in actual possession of his interest, if he is in receipt of rent. The zemindar's possession of the right to collect rent from the tenants in occupation is actual possession of a tangible property, Sarbananda Bose Mozumder v. Pransankar Rai Chowdhury (3), Sib Narain Singh v. Brij Mohon Thakur (4). When a person has proprietary interest in land and as such is entitled to receive rent, he is in possession of his interest if he is in receipt of rent, while his tenant who is in actual occupation has possession which, in a sense, is the possession of the landlord or superior proprietor. [See the observation of Lord Davey in Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (5)]. If, therefore, a proprietor finds that the rent receivable by him is intercepted by some other person, he is dispossessed of his interest in the land. He loses possession, because the only mode of enjoyment by which that possession can be held, ceases to be available by the act of the trespasser. If this principle be applied to the facts found by the Subordinate Judge in this case, what is the position? There can be no possible controversy that the widow is in possession of the proprietary interest in the disputed properties. The question, therefore, arises whether her possession is lawful. It may be observed that she sets up what is primâ facie a good title to possession. She alleges that she is entitled to a large sum of money as dower. According to her case, the amount is 5 lacs of rupees and 25 gold mohurs. According to the finding of the Subordinate Judge, it is at least Rs. 41,000 and one gold mohur. Whatever the precise amount may be, as to which a determination is not necessary for our present purposes, she contends that she is entitled to remain in possession till the dower-debt has been satisfied. There is a considerable body of high authority in support of this view. [See the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ameeroonnissa v. Mooradoonnissa (6) and Musstt. Beebee Bachun v. Shk. Hamid Hossein (7)]. According to these cases, when a widow is in possession of the undistributed property of her deceased husband, having obtained such possession lawfully and without force or fraud, and her dower or any portion of it, is due and unpaid, she is entitled, as against the other heirs of her husband, to retain such possession until her dower debt is paid. But she must account for all profits received by her, and she cannot, in her capacity as creditor, transfer, sell, or mortgage the property, so as to affect their shares. It may be conceded that there has been some divergence of judicial opinion upon this point, as is indicated by the decisions of the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in Amanatunnissa v. Bashiran-nissa (8) and Mahammad Karimullah Khan v. Amani Begam (9). There is no foundation, however, for any suggestion that the widow has taken possession of the estate by force or fraud. Her possession is primâ facie lawful. If, therefore, she is in fact in possession as found by the Subordinate Judge, if such possession was not obtained by force or fraud, if she came into possession peaceably, and if the possession can be attributed to a claim of title primâ facie well-founded in law, it is not easy to perceive upon what ostensible ground it can be suggested that she is not in such possession of the property, as the Revenue Courts will recognise for purposes of registration. It could never have been intended that either the Revenue Courts or the Civil Court on a reference by the Revenue Court, should enter into a minute examination of the authorities upon a difficult question of Mahomedan law; and while professing to decide summarily the right to possession, practically come to a decision upon the question of title, as elaborate and exhaustive as in a regular suit. We must consequently hold that the order of reference made by the Collector in this case was in itself irregular and that the Subordinate Judge upon the reference has exercised his jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity when he found upon the facts that the widow is in possession of the disputed property, as proprietor, by receipt of rent, that she is entitled to a large sum of money from the estate of her husband on account of her dower and that she peaceably entered into possession upon the death of her husband and claims to hold possession not as a wrongdoer but upon an assertion of title which is primâ facie supported by Judicial decisions of the highest authority, he ought not to have made an order the effect of which is to determine the question of title and to oust her from possession.

The only other point to which a reference is necessary is the question of this Court's power to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge. It was contended by the learned Advocate-General that the order in question is made in the exercise of a special statutory jurisdiction and is consequently not an order in a "case" in which this Court can exercise its revisional powers under sec. 622, C. P. C. In our opinion there is no foundation for this contention. No doubt, the Civil Court acquires jurisdiction by virtue of the reference made by the Revenue Court; but once the Civil Court has got seisin of the case, it exercises its powers as a Civil Court. It determines the question referred to it and delivers possession accordingly. It does not make report to the Revenue Court to enable the latter to pass the final orders. Its decision must be taken to be the decision of an ordinary Civil Court, to which it is competent for it to give effect. The mere fact that the exercise of its jurisdiction is initiated by a reference from the Revenue Court does not make the exercise of jurisdiction by it equivalent to an exercise of jurisdiction by the Revenue Court; nor can we legitimately attribute to the proceedings before it the character of a proceeding before a Revenue Court. This is borne out by the provisions of sec. 62 which expressly bars an appeal and a review. Such a restriction would not have been necessary, unless the order of the Civil Court was one which without such bar would be appealable or open to review under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this view of the matter, this Court has clearly jurisdiction to interfere either under sec. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure or under sec. 15 of the Charter Act. There can be no question therefore as to the competency of this Court to interfere in the exercise of its revisional powers. It was suggested, however, that as the Petitioner has her remedy by a regular suit, this Court ought not to interfere. No doubt the ordinary rule is that where an aggrieved party has other remedy available, this Court is unwilling to interfere, but it is unquestionable, that even if there be such remedy, this Court may interfere in exceptional cases [Debi Das v. Ejaz Husain (10)] and upon the facts of the present case, we are satisfied that the exercise of our revisional powers is justified.

The result, therefore, is that this rule must be made absolute; the order of the Subordinate Judge will be discharged and the Petitioner will be maintained in possession pending the decision of the question of title in controversy between the parties in a regular suit as contemplated by the Land Registration Act. We further direct the Subordinate Judge to certify accordingly to the Collector under sec. 63 of the Land Registration Act.

The Petitioner is entitled to the costs of this rule, we assess the hearing fee at 10 gold mohurs.

N. G. Rule made absolute.

ORIGINAL SIDE.—Mr. Justice Stephen, Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Chitty will sit singly.

The Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, Vol. VIII, Part I, New Series, is of more than ordinary interest. It opens with a short biographical sketch of Lord Macnaghten. We have often in these columns drawn attention to the outspoken Privy Council judgments of this great judge whose eminent fairness and strong sense of justice has made his name universally respected in this country. The same issue of the journal contains a short memoir of the late Lord Davey from the pen of Lord Macnaghten. Besides these there are a number of articles and editorial notes both instructive and interesting.

IN THE DEFINITION OF res judicata IN THE CIVIL Procedure Code Amendment Bill the words "another suit" have been substituted for the words "former suit." But the words "subsequent suit" and "subsequently raised" in the same paragraph have been retained; these words, it need hardly be said, were used as being correlated to the earlier words "former suit;" it seems doubtful whether the advantage secured by substituting the word "another" for the word "former" will not be neutralised by the retention of the words "subsequent" in the section. The purposes of the amendment will perhaps be better carried out if the words "already decided" be inserted after the words "another suit," and the words "pending suit" substituted for the words "subsequent suit" and the words "is pending trial" or similar words substituted for the words "has been subsequently raised."

CL. 24 GIVES THE HIGH COURT OR THE DISTRICT Court power to transfer or withdraw any suit or appeal pending before it or any Subordinate Court. The High Court and the District Court have concurrent powers in this respect. We think that there should be a provision to the effect that "no application for transfer or withdrawal of a case shall be entertained by a District Judge when a similar application has been pending before or disposed of by the High Court."

CL 47 OF THE BILL CORRESPONDS TO SEC. 244 OF THE present Code. Cls. (a) and (b) of sec. 244 have been omitted and consequently questions regarding the amount of mesne profits should not, according to the Bill, be determined in execution. We think that this will entail hardship in certain cases, for it would certainly not be desirable to put parties to the expense which is often incurred in an enquiry for the determination of mesne profits when the decrees for recovery of possession are liable to reversal by superior Courts. We will revert to this question later on when dealing generally with the procedure-suits in which preliminary decrees liable to reversal on appeal have to be passed.

FOR THE PURPOSES OF CL. 47 (SEC. 244, C. P. C.) a Plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a Defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed are parties to the suit. This explanation is intended to put an end to a conflict of judicial decisions (see 6 C. W. N. 10: s. c. 30 Cal. 134; 6 C. W. N. 327: s. c. 29 Cal. 696; 23 All. 346; 23 Mad. 61). But the clause is silent as to whether a party sued or suing in a representative character is a party when he raises a question relating to his personal capacity. We think that this question ought to be set at rest. There seems to be a conflict of decisions on this point: (See Bhajahari Pal v. Ram Lal Das, 6 C. W. N. 63; observations of Parsons, J., in Murigeya v. Hayat Saheb, 23 Bom. 237; and Beg Raj Marwari v. Kundali Debya). It is doubtful whether the definition of "legal representatives" in cl. 2 will throw any light on this point.

CL. 58 AND THE CORRESPONDING SECTION OF THE Code, viz., sec. 342, C. P. C, provide the periods of imprisonment for debts. According to the case of Sujan Bibi v. Sagar Mandal, 5 C. W. N. 145, sec. 342 does not empower a Judge to fix a term of imprisonment at his discretion within the maximum. We think that in this respect the law should be amended and judges ought to be invested with powers to fix terms of imprisonment. Under the present law the Court must pass an order of imprisonment for the full period of six weeks or six months according as the amount of debt is fifty rupees or more. It seems to us only fit and proper that the judges should be given a discretion to pass orders for the detention of the debtor for any period they think fit not exceeding the limit of time fixed by law.

THE FOLLOWING NOTE OF A PUNJAB FULL BENCH decision regarding "back-fees" appears in the recent number of The Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation. We are completely in accord with the opinion expressed by the learned editors regarding the impropriety of making professional fees contingent on the success of a suit.

A full bench—consisting of nine judges—of the Chief Court of the Punjab have recently had before them the question—highly important from a professional point of view—whether a legal practitioner may make his remuneration in a case contingent on the success of the case, or to use the common phrase take a "back-fee"—that is, a fee which is to be paid back in whole or in part if the case fails. In England the traditions of the Bar have long proscribed such an agreement, and sec. 11 of the Solicitors Act, 1870, expressly prohibits it as between client and solicitor. In nearly all parts of India also—in Madras, in Allahabad, in Calcutta, and in Bombay—such agreements are not permitted; but the case has been otherwise in the Punjab, where the practice has largely prevailed, owing to a decision some thirty years back of Sir M. Plowden, a judge of high authority in the Province. In this opinion there was nothing against public policy in a stipulation that a pleader should be paid an additional sum by his client on condition of his conducting the case to a successful issue: it was calculated, he thought, to secure to the client a decree of zeal and diligence on the part of his pleader in conducting the case which the client would not otherwise get. There is certainly something in this. But it is from this very stimulus to zeal which the back-fee gives that its dangers arise. It tempts legal practitioners to resort—as experience has proved—to improper means, in order to win cases: more than that, it leads to gambling in litigation, to those speculative actions with which Indian Courts are by no means unfamiliar. It is therefore satisfactory to find that the Punjab Court, with two dissentients only out of nine, have condemned the practice. There is nothing of course inherently disgraceful in it, but in the interests of the profession, in the maintenance of a high standard of honour, it is, well—undesirable.

IN THE SEPTEMBER ISSUE OF THE CURRENT VOLUME of I. L. R. Bombay Series the case of Chhagan v. Lakshman deserves some special notice. There a mortgagee of Lakshman obtained a money-decree against him. This decree was transferred to Chhagan who applied for execution of the money-decree by attachment and sale of the mortgaged property In appeal to the High Court the question arose whether the transferee of the decree is bound by the restriction imposed upon the mortgagee, transferor of the decrees, by sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. Mr. Justice Chandravarkar held that the transferee could not be in a better position as regards the execution of the decree than the transferor. His Lordship observed, "the mortgagee who obtained the money-decree held it subject to the condition or obligation prescribed by sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, that, if he seeks execution of it against the mortgaged property, he can only attach it but he cannot bring it to sale except by instituting a suit under sec. 67. It is true that the present appellant, being a transferee of the money-decree only and not of the mortgage, cannot himself institute such a suit. There is no hardship involved in that because in the first place the appellant (transferee) must be regarded as having obtained the assignment with knowledge of the obligation imposed on his assignor, and, secondly, he might have stipulated with his assignor while taking the assignment that he should institute such a suit for him."

IT MIGHT BE URGED IN SUPPORT OF THE JUDGMENT that if the transferee of the decree be held not bound by the restrictions imposed by sec. 99 on the mortgagee who transferred the decree, the provisions of that section might be evaded by the mortgagee who has got a decree against the mortgagor for the satisfaction of any claim by transferring the decree to a third person. Besides sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code makes it obligatory that the assignee of a decree, if he is permitted by the Court to execute it, must get it executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application was made by the decree-holder.

FROM A REVIEW OF THE LUNACY COMMISSIONERS' Report, recently issued, it would appear that lunacy in England and Wales is undergoing a steady increase. The number of lunatics under care on 1st January 1907 was 123,988 or 2,009 more than on 1st January 1906. The increase for the past few years over each preceding one has been 2,150, 2,630 and 3,235 respectively; and the annual average increase for the last 10 years 2,462, for the last five 2,655. The total number of certified insane persons in England and Wales stood to the estimated population in proportion of one in 282, whilst the actual numerical increase was 1·64 per cent. Taking the decennial period, the increase in the whole population during the decade was 12·1 per cent. while that of certified lunatics 24·8. The records first began to be kept on 1st January 1859 and the number of certified insane under care on that date was 136,672. The number on 1st January 1907 was 123,988. This shows the alarming rate of increase of 237·2 per cent. during the period. The population during the same period has, however, increased only 77·5 per cent.

EXPERTS BELIEVE THAT THIS INCREASE IS TO BE attributed more to the care taken of degenerates in modern times and want of any restraint on their marrying freely and procreating children than to drunkenness. It is suggested by lunacy experts that "people should not be allowed to get married unless they can produce a certificate of good health." Dr. Reid Rentoul says that breeding from degenerates has never yet paid a nation and never will pay. He observes: —

> The existing conditions compel thinking men and women to agree to this—that the preservation of the supposed rights of individual idiots, imbeciles, epileptics, lunatics, feeble-minded, and habitual criminals, in order that they may beget offspring, is but of very secondary importance when considered in connection with the future welfare, the mental and physical strength of our nation.

THE RIGHT HON. LORD MACNAGHTEN.

(From the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation.)

Lord Macnaghten was born in 1830, and belongs to a Scottish family which settled in Ulster in the sixteenth century, and of which several members have attained to distinction. He is a nephew of the Sir William Macnaghten whose tragical death outside the walls of Cabul on the Christmas Day of 1841 was one of the prominent incidents of the first Afghan War. He shares with the present Lord Chancellor the honour of being a University First Class man and a University "Blue." In 1852 he was bracketed Senior Classic with two other Trinity men, and obtained the second classical medal, the first having fallen to his lifelong friend Benson, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury. At the same time he was rowing for two successive years in the Cambridge "Eight," first as bow, and afterwards as storke. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1857, practised as a Chancery barrister, was made a Q. C. in 1880, and became a leading counsel in the Court of the Master of the Rolls, then a Chancery judge. The year in which he took silk was also the year of his election to the House of Commons. He represented his native county, Antrim, from 1880 to 1885, and the northern division of that county from 1885 to 1887. In the latter year he leapt at a bound from practice at the Bar to the position of Lord of Appeal and for the last thirty (sic) years he has adorned, dignified, and strengthened the highest Court of appeal. Lord Macnaghten's judgments are not only good law but good literature. There is racy humour in them, in addition to their learning and their sound, solid, subtle reasoning, and they are permeated by a flavour of fine scholarship, which gives them brilliancy and distinction, and makes them excellent reading. Since 1895 Lord Macnaghten has been chairman of the Legal Council of Education.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL. Christopher and Roney v. White and others. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COZENS-HARDY and FLETCHER MOULTON. 27th February 1907.

Solicitor's costs—Agreement—Company "going to allotment"—Payment by cheque—Voidable allotment—Solicitor failing to use reasonable care—Gross negligence.

This appeal deals with two questions, one arising on the claim and the other on the counter claim. The claim was brought by Messrs. Christopher and Roney, Solicitors, to recover a lump sum, as agreed upon, £623 for work done and money expended by them as solicitors. The Defendants had promoted a limited liability company called the Western Canada Pulp and Paper Company. Plaintiffs alleged an agreement to pay them 500 guineas and out of pocket expense. This was to be paid immediately "on the Company going to allotment." It was alleged that the Company went to allotment on 12th May 1905. The Defendants deny liability on the ground that there was only on abortive allotment and they counter-claimed for damages owing to loss of promotion profits caused by the negligence of Plaintiffs' advice as Solicitors. The evidence showed that at time of allotment the minimum subscriptions had not been received in coin. Cheques by which they had been paid had not been cashed and Defendants referred, in support of this being no payment within the Companies Act, to Mears v. Western Canada Pulp and Paper Company, 1905, 2 Ch 352. Plaintiffs relied on evidence of common practice of payment by cheques. Mr. Justice Grantham held that there had been a good allotment. The jury found for Plaintiffs and they got judgment on claim and counter-claim. In this appeal by Defendants on both claims the Court held, "the company did go to allotment but it did so in such a manner as to be ineffectual in point of law; at best it was a voidable allotment one capable of being undone and in fact very shortly afterwards legal proceedings were taken which rendered it void." The Court came to the conclusion that what had taken place could not be described as an allotment. The Company never had any living existence and so the condition had not been fulfilled but had failed. The verdict must be set aside and judgment must be entered for Defendants.

Then on the counter-claim the Court was of opinion that Defendants were right in complaining of the rejection and admission of evidence by the learned Judge, Counsel was also right in complaining of certain passages in the summing up as being misdirections or at all events infelicitous expressions. He asked the jury more than once whether they thought the Plaintiffs had been guilty of negligence so as to be liable not only to lose their fees but also to pay damages. Such a question was open to the comment that it seemed to suggest an imperfect and misleading standard for considering whether there had been a failure to use due diligence. The learned Judge had also used the terms "gross negligence" or "crassa negligentia"; in modern practice it was not customary to use those epithets. Solicitors being persons who were skilled for the performance of certain duties, must be held to be guilty of gross negligence or crassa negligentia if they failed to use reasonable care in the exercise of such skill. The real standard was whether reasonable care was used or not. There certainly was here a want of reasonable care or skill such as might be demanded of a solicitor. The verdict was unsatisfactory.

CHANCERY COURT.—The Attorney-General v. The Mersey Railway Company. Before MR. JUSTICE WARINGTON. 8th March 1906.

Business incidental to or consequential upon a Railway Company's undertaking—Omnibus business— Ultra vires.

The question to be determined in this litigation resolved itself into whether there was a sufficient analogy between Tramway Companies and Railway Companies, so that the Court should follow the principles laid down in London County Council v. Attorney-General, (1902) A. C. 165. The Mersey Railway Company owned and worked a railway from Liverpool to Birkenhead and had started recently an omnibus service in connection therewith and from one of their railway stations to a point at the west-end of Birkenhead carrying ordinary passengers to and fro. This route ran parallel to the Birkenhead Corporation's tram lines and the competition thus was opposed to the interests of the Birkenhead rate-payers. The Corporation now sought to have it declared that it was beyond the powers of the Mersey Railway Company, to carry an on omnibus proprietary business. The Company contended that what they were doing was incidental to their undertaking. That they had no special powers was admitted.

The learned Judge referring to the abovementioned decision in the case of The London County Council, where it was held that a Tramway Company could not carry on the business of an omnibus proprietor, held that, it equally applied to a railway and that the business of an omnibus proprietor as carried on by the Defendants was not incidental to or consequential upon their undertaking and so was ultra vires. Injunction granted to restrain them from so doing.

DIVISIONAL COURT, KING'S BENCH.—Davis v. Petrie. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and MR. JUSTICES KENNEDY and RIDLEY. 9th June 1905.

Bankruptcy Act, 1883, secs. 43, 49—Payment made with notice of an act of bankruptcy—Payment to trustee under deed of assignment—Whether good discharge.

The bankrupt was one Watson, a builder. On 5th June 1903 Watson had executed an assignment of all his property to one Afford, on trust for Watson's creditors. Alleging that to be the act of bankruptcy, a petition was filed and a receiving order was made against him two months after, and he was adjudicated a bankrupt. This action against Defendant was to recover £21 for work done for him by the bankrupt, the Plaintiff was the trustee in bankruptcy of Watson. The defence was that that amount was paid by cheque, dated 12th June 1903, drawn in favour of the said Afford. The question for the County Court Judge was to determine whether such payment was a good discharge, in the event of the assignment to Afford being rendered void within 3 months of its date, under the 49 section of the above Act. The County Court Judge upon the authorities decided in favour of the Defendant. The Divisional Court was of opinion that none of the authorities supported the view that a payment made with notice of an act of bankruptcy was protected. Afford was only an assignee subject to all equities. Sec. 49 the Judge thought protected payment to the trustee under the deed but anyhow payments to the bankrupt were not protected, if at the time of payment the person paying had notice of the act of bankruptcy. It would render sec. 43 of no effect if it were held otherwise in the case of a payment to a trustee under a deed like this. Of course there were cases where on equitable principles it had been held that independently of sec. 49 of the Act, if the bankrupt was bound to make over chattels that transaction would be protected because of his duty to fulfil his obligations. Held that the payment to Afford was not a good discharge.

DIVORCE COURT.—Beer v. Beer. Before the PRESIDENT. 15th March 1906.

Restitution of conjugal rights—Refusal to wife's solicitor "usual order" for costs—Solicitor's duty to enquire.

This was a wife's suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The husband proved that the wife was of drunken habits, that she came within the words of the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879, and the Licensing Act, 1902. The husband thereupon prayed for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. The Court held that the husband had succeeded in establishing that he had just cause for withdrawing from co-habiting and refusing to return to his wife, but that a sufficient case of legal cruelty was not made out. The wife's petition was therefore dismissed as also was the husband's cross-application.

The learned President delivered a considered judgment as to the wife's costs. He referred to his own decision in Ash v. Ash, (1893) P. 222 The principle cases upon the subject were Robertson v. Robertson (6 P. D. 119), Flower v. Flower (3 P. & D. 132) and said so long as a solicitor "reasonably" incurred the costs of a suit, the husband must secure them, as otherwise no married woman could be able to employ a solicitor to defend herself. The Court, therefore, should not be too acute or astute in finding that a wife's solicitor had no such reasonable grounds, especially when one considered that a solicitor could not know as much about a case at its inception as the Court knew at the end of the trial. On the other hand it was the duty of the Court to see that the suit was not instituted against the husband in circumstances which would necessarily put him to great expense and cause great hardship, which would ultimately recoil on the wife. The learned President then referred to certain letters of the husband's solicitor to the wife and other matters which were known to the wife's solicitor. His knowledge that the wife was often intoxicated. The fact that he never interviewed the medical man who had attended the wife. And the conclusion the learned President arrived at was that this was an extremely unreasonable piece of litigation. A case in which it must have been known that the husband's allegations were true, such a suit should not have been launched without much stronger materials than the wife's solicitor had. The only question really in dispute was as to the amount of the wife's allowance. The learned Judge would therefore exercise his discretion and refuse to give the wife "her usual order" for costs.

DIVORCE COURT.—Petition of Regina Pollock Née Gordon. Before the PRESIDENT. 30th July 1907.

Formal marriage for emancipation from parental control—Want of co-habitation—Nullity.

This was an application for nullity of marriage. The parties were cousins and both domiciled Russians. They were both under age. The Petitioner wanted to study law in Paris. Her cousin told her that her parents would not consent, she had better go through a betrothal form with him and that would emancipate her from her parents' control. Believing this she went through a marriage ceremony with him at the Shoreditch Registry Office, London. False declarations were made. No ring was used, and no co-habitation had taken place. This was in April 1906. She was vergo intacto although they went to Paris together and studied law living as brother and sister. These facts were admitted and Szapira v. Leiberman, Times, December 8th to 19th, 1899, and Ford v. Stier, 1891, p. 1, were referred to.

The President decided that he was satisfied on the facts, proved that Petitioner was entitled to a decree for nullity with costs.

LORD ROBERTSON. LORD ATKINSON. LORD COLLINS. SIR ARTHUR WILSON. SIR ALFRED WILLS. 1907. 31, July.	MUSST. MANJHARI KOER, Appellant, v. MUSST. JANKI KOER and ors., Respondents.

Special leave—Maintenance allowance—Value below Rs. 10,000—Question of general importance.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal of Musst. Manjhari Koer, the widow of Jagarnath Pershad.

Jagarnath Pershad was the son of Babu Bundi Lal. The latter had three brothers Binda Lal, Harbans Lal and Banarsi Lal.

Jagarnath Pershad died prior to 1870 and disputes having arisen on his death they were referred to arbitration. An award was made by which Petitioner was granted Rs. 600 a year for maintenance by the surviving brothers of Babu Bundi Lal.

This she received till the death of Binda Lal in or about 1898.

In default of further payment Petitioner instituted suit to recover Rs. 1,800 for arrears from 1306 to 1309 F. with interest thereon.

The Subordinate Judge decided that the award was binding, but that as Petitioner had subsequently inherited property from her father yielding Rs. 12,000 a year she was not in law entitled to maintenance. Upon her appeal the District Judge of Chupra held the award binding, and as the large estate she had inherited from her father was heavily burdened with debts, her circumstances required that she should receive the amount awarded to her by the award for maintenance. Upon 2nd appeal the High Court held that she had sufficient means for her wants, and could not claim maintenance, and so restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Petitioner's leave to appeal was refused on the ground that she had not substantiated that the subject-matter of dispute was of the value of Rs. 10,000.

Mr. DeGruyther for the Petitioner now submitted that the arrears of Rs. 600 per annum plus the amount she would recover in future was far above the appealable amount, that the question whether a Hindu widow loses her right to maintenance by the subsequent acquisition of property sufficient for her wants is a question of law of general importance and that there has been a miscarriage of justice inasmuch as the fact that the claim is based on an award and not on an ordinary allowance for maintenance has not received due consideration. Moreover the finding of the District Judge that the allowance was necessary for her needs was a finding of fact and could not be questioned on 2nd appeal.

Leave granted by local Court in a case not fit—Respondent's application to cancel leave where judgment plainly right.

The following passage in La cité de Montreal v. Les Ecclésiastegues du Sémenaire de St. Salpice de Montreal (14 Ap. Cas. at p. 662) followed. "A case may be of a substantial character, may involve matter of great public interest and may raise an important question of law, and yet the judgment from which leave to appeal is sought may appear to be plainly right, or at least unattended with sufficient doubt to justify their Lordships in advising His Majesty to grant leave to appeal."

The appeal related to the Canada Temperence Act of 1888 (51 Vict., C. 34). The Respondent acting under it laid an information before 2 justices and secured a warrant, to search an hotel at Kentville for intoxicating liquor. The Appellant was the keeper of that hotel. The warrant issued led to the discovery of quantities of intoxicating liquor, which were produced before the justices. Appellant was also summoned to answer an information for so breaking the said law. He was convicted and fined and the stuff declared forfeited to His Majesty and their destruction ordered. Appellant took out a writ of certiorari to remove into the Novascotia Court the rocord of search warrant and the order made as above. The Supreme Court dismissed the application, but granted leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The Respondent urged that such leave should be set aside. Their Lordships allowed the application to stand over to the hearing and now in their judgment referring to the passage above given from 14 App. Cas. state: "Without venturing to predicate of those appeals, any of the propositions in the earlier part of the sentence, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the last part was directly applicable to them. The chief ground was that with respect to the search warrant certain cases had decided that such a warrant could only issue as ancillary to a prosecution already commenced. It was undoubtedly true that certain cases had so decided, but in the following year the legislature had amended the Act under which the search warrants in those cases had been issued by striking out the words on which the Courts had founded their opinion, that the commencement of a prosecution was a condition precedent to the issue of a search warrant; and it was under the amended Act that the proceedings now in dispute took place. Without therefore enquiring further into the reasons which had been urged against the granting of special leave in these cases, their Lordships were content to rest their decision on the authority above cited. These were not cases in which they would have been disposed to grant special leave to appeal.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CASPERZ and CHITTY, JJ CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1079 OF 1907. JAINAIT MULLICK AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 27th September 1907.

Appellate judgment not according to law—Appellate judgment must be independent.

Seventeen persons were ordered to find security to be of good behaviour; 7 of them for two years and 10 others for one year. These latter appealed to the District Magistrate who dismissed their appeal fter recording a judgment in which the case of each of the Appellants was not individually considered. The Appellants moved the High Court for revision on the ground inter alia that the appellate judgment was not in accordance with law. The case of the other seven went up to the Sessions Judge who confirmed the order of the lower Court.

Their Lordships observed :—

"The appellate judgment of the learned District Magistrate is not in compliance with the law and the authorities on the subject. He was dealing with the case of seventeen persons and the evidence of 70 witnesses for the prosecution and 54 for the defence. This mass of evidence he disposes of in a very, what we may call, stereotyped manner. The name of not one of the accused and the name of not a single witness appears in the judgment of the learned District Magistrate. We have not the slightest doubt, as he mentions in his explanation, that he made notes for his guidance with regard to each of the accused as to what the witnesses against him said, and what the witnesses in favour of him said, and that before writing the judgment he considered the evidence against each man. But this cannot be considered sufficient. It must appear on the face of the judgment that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration and reasons should be given, as far as necessary, to show that the Appellate Court has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused, &c, &c."

We are unable to accept the explanation that the appellate judgment may be read in connection with, and as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance. The appellate judgment must be quite independent and stands by itself.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CASPERSZ and CHITTY, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No 1025 OF 1907. SOBHNATH SINGH AND OTHERS, v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 24th September 1907.

Sec. 350, Criminal Procedure Code—Trial de novo —Prejudice to the accused when there was no fresh examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses.

The trial of the Petitioners on a charge of rioting commenced before a Sub-Deputy Magistrate and when the trial was nearly finished the Sub-Deputy Magistrate was transferred and the case was sent to an Honorary Magistrate for trial by the District Magistrate. The accused asked for a de novo trial under sec. 350, Cr. P. C. Then what happened was this: the witnesses for the prosecution were summoned but the prosecution Muktear declined to examine them, whereupon the Muktear for the defence without making any objection cross-examined them.

The trial resulted in the conviction of the accused under sec. 147, I. P. C., and they were sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The accused obtained this rule for setting aside the conviction and sentence on the ground inter alia that the trial was not in accordance with law.

We think the provisions of sec. 350, Cr. P. C., were not duly complied with. It is impossible to say that the accused have not been materially prejudiced by the procedure adopted, for it is evident that the Honorary Magistrate has arrived at conclusions on the evidence the whole of which was not recorded by himself.

Under the circumstances we are obliged to set aside the convictions and sentences and we direct that the Petitioners be re-tried by some other competent Magistrate in the district to be nominated by the District Magistrate.

Notification, Rules, &c.

The Revised Rules under the Bengal Tenancy Act were published in the Calcutta Gazette, dated 6th November 1907; Part I, pages 1819 to 1847.

The following Rule has been inserted in Vol. I of the High Court's General Rules and Circular Orders, criminal, immediately under the heading "Return of Exhibits" :—

When an entry in a public register, or in a private account book, or other bulky record, not being itself an entry in respect of which an offence has been committed, or is alleged to have been committed, is produced in evidence, and made an exhibit in the case, and the retention of such register, account book, or record would cause inconvenience to the public, or the person producing the same, such register, book, or record shall not be retained by the Court but shall be returned to the person by whom it has been produced. Before returning the register, book, or record, the Court shall mark, for the purpose of indentification, such entry or entries as have been exhibited in evidence, and shall cause a certified copy of the entry or entries to be filed with the record of the case. The person to whom the register, book, or record is returned shall be bound to produce the same before the Court when required to do so, and may be required to enter into a bond to that effect. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 451 OF 1905.

WOODROFFE, J.
COXE, J.
1, August.

BISHENDUT TEWARI and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
NANDAN PERSHAD DUBAY, and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

*Limitation Act (XV of 1877), secs. 5, 12—Appeal filed out of time—*Bonâ fide mistake of pleader in calculation—Application for admission granted ex parte by a Division Court—Application for discharge of order by Respondent—Delay—Costs incurred by Appellant.

Where an application for the admission of an appeal which was filed out of time by two days was heard ex parte before a Division Bench and admitted,

Held—That though the order was not conclusive on the Respondents and they are entitled to object to the admission of the appeal at a later stage the order of the Division Bench admitting the appeal should not be discharged when no facts which were not before that Bench are urged on behalf of the Respondents.

Held, further, that on the facts of the present case, the order admitting the appeal should not be discharged inter alia because the Respondents' application was made after the records had been printed and costs incurred by the Appellants, although the Respondents appeared to have become aware of the filing of the appeal out of time shortly after it was filed.

Per WOODROFFE, J.—Each case must be decided on its own facts. In this case besides the delay on the part of the Respondents in bringing their objections before the Court, there was a bonâ fide mistake of calculation on the part of the Appellants' pleader which led to the delay in filing the appeal.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of November 1905, against the decree of Babu Annada Prosad Bagchi, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Gya, dated the 22nd of May 1905.

A preliminary objection was taken by the Respondents that the appeal was time-barred. The facts material to this contention were the following :—

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge was delivered on the 22nd May 1905. The Appellants applied for copies of the judgment and decree on the 24th May 1905. The decree however was not signed till the 27th May. Copy of the judgment was ready for delivery on the 31st May and the copy of the decree, on the 1st June 1905. The High Court closed for the long vacation on Friday the 1st of September 1905. The Court re-opened on Monday the 13th November 1905. The appeal was filed on the 13th November 1905, by Babu Bishen Pershad, Vakil. In two affidavits filed respectively by one of the Appellants and the vakil, it was explained that before the long vacation commenced, the former had called on Babu Bishen Pershad and asked to be informed if the appeal could be filed after the vacation, as, if it could, the Appellants would find it convenient to raise the necessary funds during the vacation, that the Vakil, Babu Bishen Pershad, assured him that it could be filed on the 13th November. He had, he stated, overlooked the fact that the decree was signed some days after the application for copies was made and was thus under the impression that he could exclude the whole of the time from the 24th May to the 1st day of June. He further stated that his attention was drawn to the mistake in calculation committed by him by the vakil for the Respondent, Babu Kshetra Mohun Sen, on the 15th November 1905. That thereafter having satisfied himself about his mistake he applied to the Court for the admission of the appeal under sec. 5 of Limitation Act and the Court (Pratt and Geidt, JJ.) on the 23rd November passed an order admitting the appeal. The terms of this order are set out in the judgment of Woodroffe, J. On the 1st August 1907, the appeal came on for hearing and the above objection was taken.

Moulvi Shamsul Huda and Babu Amulya Chandra Banerjee for the Appellants.

Moulvi Sultan Ahmed (with him Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Kshetra Mohun Sen) for the Respondents took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. It was filed out of time and was therefore barred under Art. 156, Limitation Act. The mistake of the pleader in calculating the period of limitation could not be held a bonâ fide mistake sufficient to justify the Court to give to the Appellants indulgence under sec. 5 of the Act. The Statute of Limitation is a statute of repose, and the Respondents having got a "vested interest" after the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in their favour were entitled to greater protection than the Appellants, see Gopal Lahiri v. Solomon (2), Jag Lal v. Har Naryan Singh (3), In re Helsby (5), International Financial Society v. City of Moscow Gas Co. (4), In re Coles and Ravenshear (1).

Moulvi Shamsul Huda.—Contra.

Mr. S. Ahmed.—In reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE CORUT was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken that this appeal is time-barred.

The Appellant contends that, under the provisions of sec. 12 of the Limitation Act, he is entitled to a deduction of 14 days on account of the time expended in obtaining copies of the judgment and decree.

I think, however, it is quite clear that he is not entitled to a deduction of this time inasmuch as the applications for a copy of the judgment and of the decree were made on the same day, i.e., the 24th May 1905. Copy of the judgment was obtained on the 31st May 1905 and copy of the decree on the 1st June 1905. Therefore the time to be deducted would be the longer of those periods.

This also appears to be the view of the learned Judges who admitted this appeal. On that occasion two affidavits were filed, one by the Appellant and the other by his pleader and the Court was asked to allow the appeal to be admitted and registered as if it had been filed in time. The order of the Court passed on that application was as follows: "We are satisfied on the affidavit of Babu Bishen Pershad, Vakil, that the delay in filing the appeal was due to an excusable mistake on his part and not to any laches on the part of the Appellant. We think sufficient cause has been shown for allowing the appeal to be admitted and for filing it out of time. We order accordingly." This order which was dated the 23rd November 1905 was made ex parte and is therefore not conclusive on the Respondent who now objects that the appeal is barred.

At the same time, I should not be disposed, under the circumstances, to interfere with the order which my learned brothers passed on this appeal unless clear grounds were made out for an interference which would in effect amount to a reversal of their decision. No facts, I may say here, have been placed before us which were not before them As against the admission of the appeal, reference has been made by learned Counsel who appears for the Respondent to the decision of the Appeal Court in the matter of In re Coles and Ravenshear (1). However, it appears from the judgment given in that case that the Master of the Rolls and Cozens-Hardy, L. J., would have approved of a rule different from that which they laid down, were it not that they considered that they were constrained to the conclusion that the appeal was barred by the state of the authorities which were binding upon them. Reference has also been made to two Indian cases Gopal Chandra Lahiri v. Solomon (2) and Jag Lal v. Har Naryan Singh (3).

I think, however, that each case must be decided upon its own facts. In the present case, the appeal is out of time by only two days and the fact that it is out of time for this short period is due to what is undoubtedly a bonâ fide mistake made by the pleader for the Appellant. What happened was that in making the usual calculation for fixing the period of limitation in filing the appeal, he overlooked the circumstance that the application for copy had been made before, and not after the decree had been signed. There is no material before us nor has any affidavit been filed by the Respondent to show that there was any intentional desire to delay on the part of the Appellant. Further, this objection has been taken unnecessarily late and after the Appellant has incurred costs. It appears from paragraph 7 of Babu Bishen Pershad's affidavit that on the 15th November and possibly before that date, the pleader for the Respondent was aware that the appeal had been filed out of time. On the 23rd November 1905 the order was made ex parte admitting the appeal. On the 15th February 1906 the Respondent filed a vakalatnamah. On the 26th April 1906, he filed his list of papers. The paper-book of the Appellant was prepared and costs were incurred. From November 1905 until to-day, that is nearly two years, nothing was done for the purpose of enforcing this objection.

I think myself that the objection might have been enforced by an application made to this Court directly the Respondent became aware of the ex parte order asking that that order should be discharged. If the application had been successful it would have saved unnecessary costs. As I have said, each case must be decided on its own facts. There is authority of this Court for the admission of this appeal. Though the order was made ex parte and is not conclusive on the Respondent, having regard to the facts of this case and to the circumstance that the decision in favour of the admission of the appeal was given on those very facts, I would not, even if I were disposed to do so, dissent from it. I am, therefore of opinion that the objection should be overruled and that this appeal should be heard upon the merits.

COXE, J.—I agree that the appeal should be heard. If this were an application for an admission of an appeal, I think it would be somewhat difficult to grant it, having regard to the judgment of James, L J, in International Financial Society v. City of Moscow Gas Co. (4), which has been quoted and followed in the ruling cited by my learned brother. But this is not an application for an admission of the appeal. The appeal was admitted almost two years ago by two learned Judges of this Court after consideration of all the facts which have been laid before us to-day. Since then, the record has been printed and costs incurred. After all this has been done and all this time has been allowed to elapse, it would be unduly hard on the Appellant to reject the appeal summarily because it was originally presented two days late.

[The appeal was then heard on the merits and judgment was delivered on the 6th August 1907 dismissing the appeal with costs.]

N. G. Objection overruled.

v.
RADHA KISHORE BHATTACHERJEE, Defendant, Respondent.

Pleader and client—Agency—Relation between co-mortgagors one of whom a pleader, if fiduciary—Accountability—Settled accounts—Suit to falsify—Specific averment of errors necessary—Changing suit for accounts into suit to falsify settled accounts—Procedure in account suits.

A person does not become the agent of another merely because he gives him advice in matters of business. The essence of the matter is that the principal authorises the agent to represent or act for the principal in bringing or aid in bringing him in contractual relation with a third person, that is to say there must be a recognition of the derivative authority of the agent.

A solicitor who has been employed as such in a transaction for investment of money may be liable for negligence in lending money on insufficient security. But the liability varies with the extent of the part he is employed to take in the transaction.

DOOBY v. WATSON (4) referred to.

Plaintiff jointly with one R, a pleader, advanced money on what turned out to be insufficient security. It was, however, found that the Plaintiff knew and approved of the security at the date of investment, Procedure in account suits indicated, and that adopted in the present case condemned.

In a suit for account if liability to account is denied by the Defendant, the question of accountability is to be tried first. It is only after an adverse decision against the Defendant upon this question that he may be called upon to render an account.

HARRI NATH RAI v. KRISHNA KUMAR BAKSHI (14) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 5th of July 1904, against the decree of Babu Aswini Kumar Guha, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Patna, dated the 29th of March 1904

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Banerjee and Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babus Ram Chandra Mozumdar and Karunamoy Roy for the Respondent.

The circumstances which led to the litigation out of which the present appeal arises, were minutely investigated in the Court below and have been discussed before us at great length. They are by no means very complicated and may be briefly outlined.

The Plaintiff, Mohesh Chandra Bose, who is the Appellant before this Court, is an engineer by profession and in 1879 retired from the service of the Government. The Defendant, Radha Kishore Bhattacharya, who is the Respondent before this Court, is a member of the legal profession and for many years has been one of the leading practitioners in the District Court of Patna. For several years prior to the year 1894, the Plaintiff and the Defendant were on terms of closest intimacy; and it appears that the Plaintiff used to avail himself of the advice and experience of the Defendant in making investments of his money. On the 23rd June 1888, a mortgage was executed in favour of the Plaintiff and of Srimati Kusum Kumari Debi, the wife of the Defendant, by one Radha Krishna Lal Sund. The sum secured by the mortgage was Rs. 25,000, half of which belonged to the Plaintiff and half to the Defendant. On the 26th and 29th June following, two supplemental bonds were executed the effect of which was to furnish additional security for the sum advanced. In 1890, the mortgagor was sued and on the 17th March of that year a decree was obtained against him for over Rs. 36,000. On the 2nd March 1894, the Plaintiff executed a power-of-attorney in favour of the Defendant and two other persons by which they were authorised to execute the decree, to manage the properties which had already been purchased in execution proceedings taken on the footing of that decree and generally to manage and look after his affairs. It is alleged on behalf of the Plaintiff that the Defendant has enforced the decree under the authority conferred on him by this power-of-attorney and that various properties have been acquired by him for his own benefit and for the benefit of the Plaintiff. It is an admitted fact that in spite of all these proceedings, the whole debt due under the mortgage has not been realised and that, in substance, the transaction has proved to be an unprofitable bargain. The Plaintiff asserts that this is due mainly to the fact that the mortgagor had not a good title to the properties covered by the security bonds and he attributes this to the negligence, if not the fraud, of the Defendant, who, according to him, was employed as a pleader to make this investment on behalf of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff consequently asks for an account from the Defendant; but although he charges the Defendant with wilful neglect and default he does not expressly ask for damages on that account.

The Defendant resisted the claim substantially on the ground that he was not an agent of the Plaintiff, that he was not entrusted with the money of the Plaintiff to make an investment on his behalf, that they were in truth joint mortgagees and that although the Plaintiff may have asked and obtained his advice, he did not rely upon it but acted upon the result of his own enquiry and information. The Defendant further alleged that he was not liable to render any account, that the Plaintiff had already inspected whatever accounts existed and that if the Defendant was ever liable to be called upon to render an account, such account had been rendered.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found upon the evidence that the parties did not stand in the relation of principal and agent. He has also held that the Defendant did submit accounts to the Plaintiff which were examined and inspected by the latter. As regards the charges of fraud, misconduct and wilful neglect in connection with the loan transaction as also the execution proceedings, the Subordinate Judge has found that they were utterly groundless.

The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and on his behalf the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on four grounds, namely, first, that the Defendant was the agent of the Plaintiff in respect of the mortgage transaction; secondly, that the Defendant was the agent of the Plaintiff in respect of the execution proceedings; thirdly, that the Defendant was liable for the loss which had resulted from his negligence if not fraud; and, fourthly, that he was liable to render an account of whatever property had come into his hands in the course of the execution proceedings. It has been argued on the other hand on behalf of the Defendant-Respondent, first, that he was not the agent of the Plaintiff in respect of the mortgage transaction; secondly, that he was the agent of the Plaintiff under the power-of-attorney of 1894 and liable to account for all sums and properties received thereunder but that such account had been rendered. In reply it was contended on behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant, first, that the accounts which are alleged to have been rendered are not settled accounts and, secondly, that even if they are settled accounts, they ought to be re-opened on the grounds of errors.

We have carefully considered the arguments addressed to us on both sides and examined the evidence, and have come to the conclusion that there is no foundation for any of the contentions advanced on behalf of the Appellant.

As regards the position of the parties in relation to the mortgage transaction, there cannot be the remotest doubt that the Defendant was not the agent of the Plaintiff. The case for the Plaintiff was that he made over Rs 12,500 to the Defendant to be invested upon good security. In our opinion this case has entirely failed. The evidence shows that early in 1888 the Plaintiff had received back money from one of his debtors and was in possession of a large sum which he was anxious to invest. He appears to have communicated his wish to the Defendant and asked for his help in the matter. On the 21st June 1888, the Defendant wrote to Jadunath a common friend of the parties, and asked him to inform the Plaintiff that the transaction with Radha Kishen had been settled and that the Plaintiff, if he desired to make an investment, should immediately come with money to Bankipur. The Plaintiff alleges that this was the first intimation he received of the intended mortgage by Radha Kishen. We are satisfied that this is untrue. The evidence makes it abundantly clear that there must have been previous correspondence between the parties on the subject and we think it is beyond doubt that the Plaintiff must have been in Bankipur previously to the end of June to negociate this loan. We have it upon the testimony of Moulvi Khoda Bux, Moulvi Ahia and Durbari Lal that the Plaintiff was in Bankipur about a month before the mortgage bond was executed and that he made enquiries as to the sufficiency of the security offered. We see no reason to distrust this testimony. We are further unable to accept the statement of the Plaintiff that when he went with the money to Bankipur, he placed it in the hands of the Defendant to make the investment and to select the security for him. An examination of the evidence shows that the Plaintiff must have been present when the bond was executed and the money was paid to the debtor or his creditor. We are unable to accept his allegation that he was ignorant of the language in which the bond was written as he himself is obliged to admit that he passed an examination in Hindustani. Upon a careful examination of the whole evidence we are satisfied beyond any doubt that although the Plaintiff may have asked for, and obtained the advice of the Defendant, he did not rely upon it, he made his own inquiry and did not treat the Defendant as his agent or solicitor employed to make the investment on his behalf. It is impossible under these circumstances to say that the Defendant is liable to the Plaintiff for the loss which has resulted from the insufficiency of the security. It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine the functions of an agent; it is enough to hold that a person does not become an agent on behalf of another merely because he gives him advice in matters of business. As is said by Chancellor Kent in his Commentaries, Vol II, 612, agency is founded upon a contract, either express or implied, by which one of the parties confides to the other the management of some business to be transacted in his name or on his account and by which the other assumes to do the business and to render an account of it.' The essence of the matter is that the principal authorities the agent to represent or act for him in bringing, or to aid in bringing, the principal into contractual relation with a third person. The element which differentiates an agent from a person in the position of the Defendant is the recognition of the derivative authority of the agent. We are unable to hold, as we have already stated that the Defendant was authorised by the Plaintiff to act on his behalf in relation to the mortgage transaction We may further observe that even if some reliance was placed by the Plaintiff on the Defendant, that would not necessarily make the Defendant liable to the Plaintiff for loss incurred by reason of the insufficiency of the security. It is neither alleged nor proved that there was any deceit on the part of the Defendant and in the absence of deceit it is impossible to fix liability on him. This view is supported by the decision in the case of Dartnall v. Howard (1). In that case it was pointed out by Chief Justice Abbot that the mere fact that Plaintiff employed the Defendant in laying out or investing a sum of money and that the Defendant undertook and promised to perform and fulfil that duty and that injury resulted by reason of the insufficient security is not sufficient to make the Defendant liable. The learned Chief Justice observed: "can we say that it is the absolute duty of any person so employed without payment and without remuneration, can we under the circumstance say that it is his absolute duty not to take a security of an insufficient nature? The only duty that is imposed under such retainer and employment as is here mentioned is a duty to act faithfully and honestly and not to be guilty of any gross or corrupt neglect in the discharge of that which he undertakes to do so; but a man may when acting most faithfully and honestly happen to take insufficient security without gross or culpable negligence on his part: he may have been misled, he may have been deceived, he may have taken such care as an ordinary man would take without regard to the subject-matter entrusted to him and yet doing all that, his endeavours may have failed and it may so happen the security may without his knowledge and against his will, have turned out to be insufficient." In the present instance the Plaintiff himself invested in the mortgage transaction an equal amount with the Defendant and there is no foundation for the suggestion that there was either gross negligence or deceit on his part. It was assumed in the argument addressed to us on behalf of the Appellant that if it could be established that the Defendant had taken part in the mortgage transaction on behalf of the Plaintiff and that loss had resulted to the Plaintiff from the transaction the Defendant would be liable. This, however, is clearly unfounded. It is not disputed that a solicitor who has been employed as such in a transaction for investment of money may be liable for negligence in lending money on insufficient security. [Craig v. Watson (2) and Pretty v. Fawke (3)]. But it does not follow that the liability of a solicitor does not vary with the extent of the part he is employed to take in the transaction. As was pointed out by Mr. Justice Kekewich in Dooby v. Watson (4) a solicitor in a mortgage transaction may be employed either (1) to invest in a particular mortgage, or (2) to find securities to be approved by the client and then invest the money, or (3) to find securities and invest the money, the client taking little or no part in the business. No relation of trustee and cestui que trust exists between the parties in the first two events and the liability is evidently quite different in the third case from that in the other two. The case of the Plaintiff as laid in the plaint and as sought to be made out in the Court below was that the Defendant acted as legal adviser and that his liability fell within the last of the three classes just mentioned. That case, however, has clearly failed. The Plaintiff is consequently not entitled to make the Defendant liable upon that footing. The classification stated by Mr. Justice Kekewich is well established and based on intelligible grounds See Mare v. Lewis (5), Power v. Power (6) and Hamilton v. Lane (7). In the first of these cases, the Plaintiff gave a sum of money to a firm of solicitor to invest upon freehold security; they found a security and invested the money upon it. The security turned out valueless. It was ruled by Vice-Chancellor Chatterton that the giving of the money to the solicitor for the purpose of general investment did not in itself create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust so as to make the solicitor liable as trustee for a deficiency in the security and as this was a single isolated transaction, an action for an account as between principal and agent could not be maintained as against the solicitor. In the second case, it was ruled by the same learned Judge that where there is not merely an agency between the parties but a superadded fiduciary relation, the remedy of the principal who is then also the cestui que trust is not one arising merely from contract, or duty springing from such contract where a common law liability would alone exist, but is one to be dealt with on the equitable relation of trustee and cestui que trust. The third case was one which fell within the third of the "three classes mentioned by Mr. Justice Kekewich in Dooby v. Watson (4); but it is important as showing that the decision would be different if the Plaintiff is shown to have known and approved of the investment. In the case before us, the evidence proves that even though the Plaintiff may have obtained the advice of the Defendant, he knew and approved of the security, and consequently cannot make the Defendant responsible. On these grounds we must hold that so far as the mortgage transaction is concerned, the Plaintiff cannot successfully call upon the Defendant to recoup him any loss which he may have sustained by reason of the insufficiency of the security.

As regards the liability of the Defendant under the power-of-attorney executed in his favour on the 2nd March 1894, it has not been denied by his learned vakil that he was liable to render an account; but he took up the position that accounts had been rendered and had been accepted by the Plaintiff. In our opinion this contention is amply sustained by the evidence on the record. It appears that after the execution proceedings had been taken out and after the Plaintiff had discovered that they were more or less infructuous and were sure to involve him in loss, he became anxious to obtain an account from the Defendant. On the 28th October 1895 the Defendant offered to render an account to the Plaintiff and shortly after repeated the offer. In December 1899, the Plaintiff proposed arbitration and in May of the following year he named two persons Khetra and Sham who, he suggested, might be empowered to settle the accounts. After prolonged correspondence, the whole of which has not been produced but the substance of which may fairly be gathered from the portion on the record, in July 1900 the parties agreed that Shama Charan Laha was to be invited to look through the accounts. The oral evidence proves conclusively that about September and October 1900 the Plaintiff, with the assistance of Shama Charan examined the whole of the accounts which in his opinion showed that he had received Rs. 700 in excess of what he was entitled to get. He appears to have given out this fact and when the Plaintiff heard of it, he at once enquired of Shama Charan whether according to him the Plaintiff had overdrawn to the extent of Rs. 700 only. Shama Charan replied on the 10th November 1900 and expressed his surprise and astonishment that the Plaintiff should have given out that Shama Charan had found out on adjustment of accounts that Plaintiff had overdrawn to the extent of Rs. 700 only. He further stated that the Plaintiff had himself gone through the account books and had found the accounts furnished to him correct except as to a few terms which he desired to submit for the consideration of the Defendant. The Defendant thereupon wrote to the Plaintiff and asked him to explain how he had found out from the accounts that he had overdrawn to the extent of Rs. 700 only. On the 15th November 1900, the Plaintiff replied and gave an abstract of the accounts stating that the accounts as audited by Shama Charan showed that the Plaintiff had received in excess Rs. 700. The Defendant does not appear to have accepted the view of the Plaintiff that the latter had overdrawn to the extent of Rs. 700 only, and his position throughout has been that the Plaintiff had overdrawn to a much larger extent. The Plaintiff, however, was apparently satisfied with the examination of the accounts and was content to accept the position that he had overdrawn to the extent of Rs. 700 only. There was further correspondence between the parties in 1901 but there is no tangible suggestion in any of the letters that the Plaintiff wanted to resile from the position he had taken up on the 15th November 1900; and it was not till the Plaintiff gave the Defendant notice of this suit, that he indicated in any way that he was not prepared to accept the accounts which had been submitted to him in October 1900 and had been minutely examined by him for many days with the assistance of the clerk of the Defendant. Under these circumstances, it is contended by the Defendant that there has been a settled account between the parties and that the Plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this action. In our opinion, this contention is well-founded. It is well-settled that the requisites for making an account settled, depend on the circumstances of each case and the mode of dealing between the parties. But although acquiescence in accounts furnished may not, by itself, amount to settlement [Clancarty v. Latouche (8)], where accounts have been delivered with opportunity for inspection, where they have been duly examined and no exception has been taken, and when they have been acquiesced in, they cannot be opened unless upon distinct and specific averment of errors properly proved [Parkinson v. Hanbury (9)]. The principle applicable to cases of this description was laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in McKellar v. Wallace (10). "Parties having accounts between them may meet and agree to settle those accounts by the ascertainment of the exact balance; and if they mean to ascertain the exact balance, it may be necessary for that purpose and probably is necessary in most cases, that vouchers should be produced and that all the information which is possessed on one side and the other should be furnished in the settlement of those accounts; and if it afterwards turns out that there are errors in the account, it is a sufficient ground for opening the account and for setting it right in a Court of Equity. If on the other hand, persons meet and agree not to ascertain the exact balance but agree to take a gross sum as the balance, a sum, which one is willing to pay, and the other is content to receive as the result of those accounts, it is obvious that the production of vouchers is entirely out of the question and errors in the account are so also; for the very object of the parties is to avoid the necessity for producing those vouchers upon the assumption that there are or may be errors in the accounts so settled. Therefore it is either an account stated and settled in the formal sense of that expression, or it is case of settlement by compromise. In either case it may be vitiated by fraud; in either case it is good for nothing if, either from the collusion of the parties, upon the circumstances under which the settlement takes place, it is proved in a Court of Equity that the transaction was not so fairly and so fully understood between the parties either from the confusion in which it was involved or from the misrepresentations made on the one side or the other, as it ought to have been, and that injustice has been done to either side." It is not very material for our present purpose to examine whether in this case the settlement of account was of the first or the second kind; because it is quite clear that it cannot be re-opened except on the ground of errors or on the ground of fraud, mistake or collusion none of which was alleged by the Plaintiff in the Court below. He has on the other hand acquiesced in the accounts ever since November 1900. It is shown that the accounts which were delivered to him at that time were thoroughly examined and that every opportunity was given to him for investigation. Under these circumstances, it is impossible for him to proceed on the assumption that no accounts have ever been rendered. It was suggested however in reply by the learned vakil for the Appellant that an examination of the accounts on the record shows that there are errors. We are unable to hold that the Plaintiff is entitled to take up this position at the present stage of the case. It cannot be disputed that if a settled account is impeached for errors, particular errors must be stated and proved and that the same rule holds even when the account is settled "errors excepted." [Parkinson v. Hanbury (9), Kinsman v. Barker (11)]. As observed by Lord Chelmsford in the former of these cases, "where a party seeks to open a settled account, there must be some direct, distinct and specific averment of errors to entitle the party to open the account." Having regard to the circumstances of the present case, it was specially necessary for the Plaintiff to state in his plaint the particular items of the account which he challenged. The accounts have been spread over so many years and they were so thoroughly examined by the Plaintiff that even if any errors were shown the Court would not be inclined to re-open the accounts in their entirety, the utmost which the Court might have done would have been, not to give leave to surcharge and falsify generally but only to rectify particular items. [Two Good v. Swanston (12), Maund v. Allies (13).]. The Plaintiff, however, has done nothing of the kind here. He commenced the action on the assumption that no accounts had been rendered: in fact, he ignored the settled accounts. The case proceeded in the Court of first instance upon the question of the liability of the Defendant to render an account and the appeal has been argued before us precisely on the same footing. The learned vakil for the Appellant in his reply suggested for the first time that the case might be tried upon the assumption that there was settled account between the parties which ought to be re-opened on the ground of errors. To allow the Plaintiff to change his case at this stage of the proceedings would be obviously unfair to the Defendant. If the Plaintiff had taken up in the Court below the position which he now seeks to adopt, the Defendant would have obtained an opportunity to explain the accounts and we are by no means satisfied that if such a case had been set up on behalf of the Plaintiff, the Defendant might not have satisfactorily explained what are now alleged to be errors in the accounts. In our opinion the Plaintiff is not entitled to convert the suit into one for re-opening the accounts on the ground of errors contained therein. We must consequently hold that the accounts which were rendered to the Plaintiff in November 1900, which were examined by him in detail, which according to him showed that he had overdrawn to the extent of Rs. 700 and which have been subsequently acquiesced in by him, furnish a complete answer to the claim for accounts put forward in the present litigation.

We desire to point out that the mode in which this litigation has been conducted has led to a great deal of waste of time. Where a person seeks an account from another alleged by him to be his agent the first question to be decided is the factum of the agency. If that question is decided in favour of the Plaintiff, the next question to be tried is whether the Defendant as agent is liable to be to call upon to account. If he answers that accounts have been settled between him and his principal that question ought to be tried next. If the accounts have not been settled, they have then to be taken. In suits of this description if liability to account is denied, that is the fundamental question to be tried first. It is only after an adverse decision upon this question against the Defendant that he may be called upon to render an account. If this procedure had been followed as laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Harri Nath Rai v. Krishna Kumar Bakshi (14) a great many irrelevant questions put to the witnesses in examination-in-chief and in cross-examination, might have been avoided.

In the view we take of the matter the claim of the Plaintiff is entirely unfounded and has been rightly dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. The appeal consequently fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 178 OF 1907.

MOOKERJEE, J.
CASPERSZ, J.
1907.
Heard, 13 and 14, August.
Judgment, 26, August.

BIDHATA RAI, Plaintiff, Appellant,

v.

RAM CHARITER RAI and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Partition suit—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17—Fixed fee or ad valorem fee.

(14) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 147 (1886).

BIDHATA RAI v. RAM CHARITER RAI.

A suit for partition of joint property is governed by Sch. II, Art. 17, cl. vi of the Court Fees Act and the plaint is properly stamped, if a Court-fee of ten rupees is paid upon it. A mere denial on the part of the Defendant as to Plaintiff's title and possession does not convert the suit into one for declaration of title and recovery of possession; the Plaintiff is entitled to maintain a suit for partition, if his possession to some part of the joint property is admitted or established, but if it is established that he is not in possession at all of any portion of the joint property, that there has been a complete ouster, he must sue for recovery of possession and partition and pay ad valorem Court-fees upon a plaint appropriately framed for the purpose.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of May 1907, against the decree of M. Smither, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Shahabad, dated the 19th of March 1907 and the 2nd of April 1907.

The facts fully appear from the judgment.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Kulwant Sahay for the Appellant.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee and Raghu Nath Singh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

On the 31st March 1905, the Plaintiff commenced the action, out of which the present appeal arises, for partition of properties moveable and immoveable, which he alleged, were jointly owned and possessed by a joint Hindu family of which he and the Defendants were the members. A Court-fee of Rs. 10 was paid upon the plaint, and the suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad. It was subsequently transferred by the District Judge to his own file and some evidence was taken by him, but again it was retransferred to the file of the Subordinate Judge, before whom the remainder of the evidence was adduced by the parties without any objection. After the close of the case, however, the Defendants objected that the District Judge had no power to retransfer the case to the Subordinate Judge, and that the latter, consequently, had no jurisdiction to hear it. The Subordinate Judge overruled this objection, and made the usual preliminary decree for partition. The Defendants then appealed to this Court, and repeated their objection as to jurisdiction. This objection was allowed to prevail [Ramcharittar Ray v. Bidhata Ray (1)]. The decree of the Subordinate Judge was set aside and the case was sent back to the District Judge for trial. Before the District Judge, two new issues were framed at the instance of the Defendants, namely, first: Is the Court-fee paid by the Plaintiff sufficient? and, secondly, Is Plaintiff in possession of the properties in suit, if not, is the claim for partition tenable? Subsequently, the parties agreed that the evidence taken by the Subordinate Judge should be received, as if it had been adduced at the hearing before the District Judge. Some additional evidence also was adduced. The learned District Judge then held, that only a small part of the property in suit was admittedly joint property; that the remainder was denied to be joint property, and that there was no proof, that the Plaintiff was in possession of the whole of the disputed properties. In this view of the matter, he held, that partition could be decreed only in respect of the undisputed properties; that in respect of the disputed properties, the Plaintiff must ask for declaration of title, recovery of possession and partition, and that consequently, ad valorem Court-fees must be paid on the plaint. The Plaintiff was then called upon to pay additional Court-fees, and to pay fees for the appointment of a Commissioner. Upon his failure to do so within the time specified the suit was dismissed with costs.

(1) 10 C. W. N. 902 (1906).

BIDHATA RAI v. RAM CHARITER RAI.

The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court, and on his behalf, the decision of the District Judge has been challenged on two grounds, namely, first, that adequate Court-fees were paid on the plaint, and, secondly, that if the Court-fees were inadequate, the question ought not to have been allowed to be raised at that late stage of the litigation.

In support of the first contention reliance was placed by the learned vakil for the Appellant upon the cases of Ragendro Loll v. Shama Churn (2), Kirty Churn v. Aunath Nath (3). and Mohendra Chandra v. Ashutosh (4). These cases are founded on the principle, that a suit for partition of joint property is not a suit for recovery of possession and is governed, not by sec. 7, sub-sec. (iv), cl. (b) nor by sec. 7, sub-sec. (v) of the Court Fees Act, but by Art. 17, cl. (iii) or cl. (vi) of Sch. II of that Act.

The learned vakil for the Respondents on the other hand contended, that a suit for partition is in substance, a suit to enforce the right to share in any property, on the ground that it is joint family property, which is governed by sec. 7, sub-sec. (iv), cl. (b). In support of this view, he relied upon the case of Reference under the Court Fees Act (5).

It may be conceded, that if the matter were res integra, there might be room for considerable discussion. But after a careful examination of the arguments addressed to us on both sides, we are not prepared to dissent from the rule embodied in the cases cited on behalf of the Appellant; nor are we prepared to disturb what has been the uniform practice of our Courts ever since the Court Fees Act of 1870 was passed. As observed by the learned Judges who decided the case of Ragindro Loll v. Shama Churn (2) the effect of a suit for partition is not recovery of possession, but to alter the form of enjoyment of joint property by the co-owner. Strictly speaking, the value of such a suit is the value of the convenience of the change of the form of enjoyment, if indeed such relief is capable of any valuation. A similar view was taken by Sir Richard Garth in Kirty Churn v. Aunath Nath (3) where the learned Chief Justice stated that a co owner, who is already in possession of his share, obtains, by partition, a divided instead of an undivided share; it is impossible for a Plaintiff to put a market value upon this change in the nature of his property. The view thus indicated was adopted by Petheram, C. J., and Norris, J., in Mohendra Chandra v. Ashutosh (4).

In that case, as here, there was a dispute between the parties as to what constituted the joint family properties. The title of the Plaintiff to share in many of the properties included in the plaint was denied by the Defendants. It was ruled, that the suit was maintainable upon payment of a Court-fee of ten rupees and it was pointed out, that for the purposes of the stamp duty, the cause of action alleged in the plaint and that alone must be looked at. If the only relief sought is the partition of property, which the Plaintiff says is family property, and of which he says, he is in possession jointly with others, because the possession of one member is the possession of all, the suit is for partition, and the plaint has to be stamped, as in a partition suit.

This view appears to us to be based upon a reasonable construction of the provisions of the Court Fees Act. The contrary view maintained by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Reference under the Court Fees Act (5) does not appear to us to be founded on principle or supported by the language of sec 7, sub-sec. (iv), cl. (b) of the Court Fees Act which is applicable to a suit to enforce the right to share in any property on the ground that it is joint family property. This clause seems to refer to a suit for joint possession and not to a suit for partition. Nor are we prepared to accept the construction placed upon that provision in Velu v. Kumara Velu (6). Besides, if reliance is placed upon sec. 7, sub-sec. (iv), cl. (b), the difficulty is not removed, because partition may be claimed of joint property which is not necessarily joint family property. On these grounds, we must hold that a suit for partition of joint property is governed by Sch II, Art. 17, cl. (vi) of the Court Fees Act, and the plaint is properly stamped, if a Court-fee of ten rupees is paid upon it.

The question next arises, whether this rule is affected if the Defendant raises any question of title. Such a question may be raised in one of two ways; the Defendant may deny, that some of the properties in respect of which partition is claimed, are joint properties, or the Defendant may question the extent of the share of the Plaintiff in some or all of the properties. If a question of title is raised, it is not denied that the Court is competent to adjudicate upon it, but it is contended on behalf of the Respondents, that this alters the nature of the suit, that the effect of the denial is to convert the suit into one for declaration of title and recovery of possession and that, consequently, Court-fees must be paid ad valorem on the plaint. The argument in substance is, that the scope of the suit is to be determined not upon the plaint but upon what may be the eventual allegations of the Defendant, with the result, that a dispute as to title raised not bonâ fide but merely as a sham, intended to delay and embarrass the Plaintiff, converts the suit into one for declaration of title and recovery of possession. In our opinion, there is no substance in this contention. The Plaintiff is entitled to maintain a suit for partition, if his possession to some part of the joint property is admitted or established. It is essential, that he should be in actual or constructive possession of the properties, and whether he has such possession or not, is to be determined in view of the principle, that the possession of one co-owner is primâ facie the possession of all the co-owners, and his possession must be presumed to be in conformity with his right and title as co-owner. If it is established, that, he is not in possession at all of any portion of the joint property, that there has been a complete ouster, he must sue for recovery of possession and partition and pay ad valorem Court-fees upon a plaint appropriately framed for the purpose. This follows from the principle, that partition signifies the transformation of joint possession into separate possession If, however, the possession of the Plaintiff is admitted or established over what forms part of the joint estate, the suit does not cease to be one for partition, merely because the Defendant denies the title of the Plaintiff to a share of the estate or to specific lands of the estate, and asserts a hostile title and adverse possession therein.

The true distinction between the two classes of cases, is that, in the one class, the Plaintiff really prays for ejectment, in the other he claims a division of lands, of part of which he is in actual occupation, and over the remainder of which he is in constructive possession through his co-owners. This distinction is amply borne out by the cases of Bolton v. Bolton (7), Slade v. Barlow (8), Potter v. Waller (9), Giffard v. Williams (10) and is identical with that taken in the cases of Balvant v. Nana (11) and Waliullah v. Durga Prasad (12). No doubt, the difference between the jurisdictions of Courts of common-law and Courts of Equity in England does not obtain in this country, by reason of which a party out of possession cannot ordinarily get a disputed question of legal title litigated in a Court of Equity. But there is no foundation for the contention, that mere denial of the title of the Plaintiff converts a suit for partition into a suit for possession. If the contrary view were maintained, it would obviously lead to endless confusion. There might be numerous Defendants in a suit for partition, and they might not all be agreed as to the title and possession of the Plaintiff. The Court in this view would have to hold a preliminary investigation of the properties as to which the title of the Plaintiff was admitted or established. The Court would also have to determine the properties of which the Plaintiff was in possession; and if the Plaintiff was called upon to pay ad valorem Court-fees upon the other properties, a determination of their value might not improbably become necessary. In this way, the majority of the questions in controversy between the parties would have to be tried out before the Court could determine the preliminary question, whether adequate Court-fees had been paid upon the plaint.

Upon reason and principle, therefore, we are not prepared to dissent from the view taken in the case of Mohendra v. Ashutosh (4). The fundamental rule is that partition is not a substitute for ejectment, because partition implies an existing joint possession and enjoyment, to be converted into possession in severalty. [Claph v. Bromagham (13), Florence v. Hopkins (14)]. When, therefore, the Plaintiff has possession of what is a portion of the joint estate, a denial of the extent of that estate or of the quantum Plaintiff's interest therein, does not convert the suit into one for recovery of possession of land.

If these principles are applied to the case before us, what is the position of the parties? The Plaintiff is admittedly in possession of what is joint property; that he is a co-parcener with the Defendants is conceded but it is denied that all the properties alleged by him to be joint properties have really that character. In our opinion, the suit as framed is one for partition, and the plaint was correctly stamped.

It may be observed that the interpretation to which we adhere is consistent with what has been the practice of our Courts for a long series of years. To adapt to this case the language employed by Sir Richard Garth in Kishori Lal Roy v. Sharat Chandra Mozumdar (15), where a somewhat similar question was raised, suits for partition are of constant occurrence the Government must have been well aware of the construction which has been put by the Courts upon the Court Fees Act, and if, being aware of it, they have desisted all this time, from any legislative action to change the practice, that seems a strong reason for believing that they considered the practice to be in accordance with the intentions of the Legislature. This principle is specially applicable, where the subject of interpretation is a matter of every day occurrence. When we find, that for thirty years, if not longer, a law which imposes a heavy tax upon litigation has received a particular interpretation in favour of the suitor, and a course of practice has prevailed for years in accordance with that interpretation, any Court of Justice ought to be very slow to change that interpretation or course of practice to the prejudice of the suitor, unless it sees clear and weighty reasons to the contrary. To such a case, the maxim fittingly applies, optima enim est legis interpres consuetudo, or in the words of Lord Coke, that exposition shall be preferred which is "approved by constant and continual use and experience." [See the observation of Lord Brougham in Dunber v. Roxburghe (16)]. The first contention urged on behalf of the Appellant must consequently prevail.

In view of the opinion we have expressed on the first question, it is not necessary to consider the second point taken on behalf of the Appellant, namely, that the Court below had no jurisdiction after remand to raise a question as to the deficiency of Court fees paid on the plaint. There has been some divergence of judicial utterance as to the stage up to which an objection as to the deficiency of Court-fees may be taken. It was held by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Valambalammal v. Vythilinga (17), that where in a second appeal, it is discovered that by mistake insufficient Court-fees had been paid, on the plaint and on the memorandum of appeal in the lower Courts, it is competent for the High Court to direct payment of such deficiency within a time to be fixed. The contrary view appears to have been taken by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in Wilayat Ali v. Umar Daraz Ali (18) while in Mahadei v. Ram Kishen Das (19), the Court was equally divided in opinion upon this point. Apart from the general question, however, of the effect of sec. 28 of the Court Fees Act, we are satisfied from the proceedings in the present suit, that when the order of remand was made by this Court on the last occasion, it was not the intention, that the Defendants should be at liberty to raise in bar a plea of this description. No doubt an objection as to the insufficiency of Court-fees had been taken in the written statement of the Defendants, but no issue was directed to the question, and the objection was apparently not even mentioned during the trial. The Subordinate Judge gave the Plaintiff a decree on the merits. The Defendants appealed to this Court, and paid a Court-fees of ten rupees only on their memorandum of appeal. No objection was then taken that the Court-fees paid on the plaint was insufficient; indeed such objection, if valid, could not have been entertained unless and until those Appellants had paid additional Court-fees on their own memorandum. In these circumstances, when this Court made an order for retrial of the suit, it would be unreasonable to hold that it was intended to leave open such a point with respect to which a new issue had to be raised. In our opinion, the learned District Judge ought not to have raised this point after remand at the instance of the Defendants.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed, and the decree of dismissal made by the District Judge reversed. The case is remanded to him, in order that he may hear the arguments of both sides upon the whole evidence on the record as it stands (inclusive of the materials which were before the Subordinate Judge at the first trial) and then decide the case on the merits.

As regards the costs of this appeal, there can be no manner of doubt, that the Appellant has been harassed by the Defendants by every possible objection of an unsubstantial character. The Appellant will, therefore, have the costs of this appeal. He will also have five gold mohurs as costs of the hearing before the District Judge on the 19th March 1907. The order made by this Court on the last occasion, as regards the costs antecedent to the remand will stand. Under sec. 13 of the Court Fees Act, the Appellant will be granted a certificate for refund of the Court-fees paid on the memorandum of appeal to this Court.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 31 OF 1906.

GHOSE, C. J.
CASPERSZ, J.
1906.
2, July.

GOBINDA CHUNDER GUPTA, Decree-holder, Appellant,

BENODE CHUNDER DUTT and ors, Applicants, Respondents.

Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 111—Construction of Will—Bequest to daughter—Absolute estate.

Where in a Will a legacy was given in the following words :—" On my death, my daughter, Surjamoni, who has got sons, and who is a resident of . . . . . shall possess as owner and possessor of all the rights of gift, sale, etc., in respect of all my property moveable and immoveable, and on the death of my aforesaid daughter, the sons born of her womb will equally own all my property,"

Held, upon a construction of the Will, that it was the intention of the testator to give to Surjamoni an absolute estate.

This was an appeal preferred on the 24th of January 1906, against an order of P. E. Cammiade, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Sylhet, dated the 1st of November 1905, affirming that of Babu Jamini Kanta Banerjee, Munsif of Moulviebazar, 1st Court, dated the 17th of May 1905.

The question which was raised in this appeal was as to whether upon a construction of the Will the testator gave an absolute estate to his daughter, Surjamoni. In the following portion of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that question has been discussed and the main provisions of the Will will also appear therefrom :—

"In paragraph (1) of the Will, the testator has stated 'on my death, my daughter, Surjamoni, who has sons, and who resides at Mouza Dattagram, Pargana Alinagar, will hold possession as malik and possessor of all rights of gift, sale, etc., in respect of all my property moveable and immoveable ; and in the event of the death of my daughter aforesaid, the sons born of her womb will become owners of all my property, taking in equal shares.' The words that I have translated as 'in the event of the death of' is—'অভাবে' in the text. 'অভাবে' strictly means 'in the absence of' or 'failing,' and if this paragraph of the Will were strictly construed, there is no doubt that the testator's bequest to the Respondents, would be invalid, because he would have conferred a full proprietary title to the property on his daughter, Surjamoni. But all authorities and rulings on Hindu testamentary documents agree that the intention of the testator has to be gathered from the whole of such documents and from attendant circumstances, and not merely from any single portion of the documents. We must, therefore, look at the whole of the Will for guidance.

"In paragraph (3) of the Will, the testator directs that his daughter, Surjamoni, is to maintain another daughter Kunjamoni, and goes on to say that should Surjamoni die before Kunjamoni, her sons are to continue to maintain Kunjamoni. The testator advisedly says in this paragraph 'should Surjamoni die before Kunjamoni, which God forbid.' From this, it will clearly appear that Surjamoni's demise contemplated in the first paragraph was not contemplated by the testator as an event likely to happen in his lifetime. In this paragraph also, he uses the word অভাব to mean death. It should be noted that the testator was seriously ill at the time of the execution of the Will, as the preliminary paragraph of the Will states. The Will was made when the testator evidently felt that his end was drawing near. As a matter of fact, however, he appears to have lived for two years after the execution of the Will. Nevertheless, the testator's intention at the time of the execution of the Will is what we have to discover; and from the preliminary paragraph it appears that the testator executed the Will in contemplation of his approaching demise.

"In paragraph (2) again the testator imposes upon Surjamoni, the duty of having his sradh ceremony performed; and he also directs her to pay, out of the estate, a sum of Rs. 100 to another daughter. No mention is here made of Surjamoni's death, or of her son's performing the duty or paying the legacy, in the event of her dying before the testator.

"From this, it will clearly appear that the testator did not contemplate Surjamoni's dying before him, and that the word অভাব in the 2nd paragraph refers to her subsequent death.

"This point having been settled, we must now enquire whether the testator intended by the Will, to convey full proprietary rights in the property to Surjamoni or not. It is true that in the second paragraph, the Will purports to convey to Surjamoni, the power to dispose of the property by 'gift, sale, etc.,' but at the same time, the testator says that Surjamoni is to 'possess' the property, whereas he says that after her death, the sons born of her womb are to 'own' it. It has several times been ruled with regard to Wills in which similar statements occur with reference to bequest to widows, that the estate bequeathed to the widow, was only a widow's estate and not a full proprietary title. In the present case however the beneficiary is not the widow, but a daughter There is no necessity for me in the present case to enquire into the applicability of those rulings in the present case, although it appears to me that the arguments applicable in those cases, apply with almost equal force here. It is sufficient for my present purpose to say that if the intention of the testator is what we have to look for in the Will, there can be no hesitation in finding that the testator intended that his property should pass to Surjamoni's sons. Any words in the text of the Will that appear to make against such a construction must be left out of consideration. The use of the terms 'possess' and 'own,' with regard to the manner of enjoyment of the property by Surjamoni and her sons, respectively, conclusively prove to my mind what the testator's intention was."

Babus Tara Kishore Chowdhury and Gobind Chandra Dey Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The question raised in this appeal is one of construction of the provisions of the Will left by one Rup Chand. The Will bears date the year 1305 corresponding to 1898. In the first paragraph of the Will, the testator said as follows:—"On my death, my daughter Surjamoni who has got sons and who is a resident of Mouzah Duttagram Pergana Alinagore shall passess as owner and possessor of all the rights of gift, sale, etc, in respect of all my property moveable and immoveable and, on the death of my aforesaid daughter, the sons born of her womb will equally own all my property." It is this paragraph upon the construction of which the case really turns. There are, however, other paragraphs in the same Will which bear more or less upon the matter of construction; for instance, where the testator provided for the maintenance of another daughter of his, it being directed that Surjamoni, the daughter referred to in the first paragraph, should maintain her and that on her (Surjamoni's) death, her sons would similarly maintain her, and also where provision was made for the sradh of the testator. Surjamoni obtained possession of the estate left by Rup Chand and contracted debt for the purpose of his sradh; and, for this debt, the creditor brought a suit and obtained a decree after her (Surjamoni's) death, against the Defendants, her sons, as legal representatives of the deceased, the direction in the decree being that the decretal amount should be realised from the assets of the deceased. Subsequently, when in execution of this decree, the decree-holder sought to sell a portion of the property left by Rup Chand, the sons of Surjamoni objected upon the ground that their mother had only a life-interest in the property, and that the absolute estate was in them and that, therefore, it could not be sold. Thereupon, the question arose between the parties under sec. 244, C. P. C., as to whether the property attached by the decree-holder could be sold in execution of the decree in question, having regard to the provisions of the Will to which reference has already been made.

The Will, we may here mention, was executed after the Hindu Wills Act was passed, and one of the questions that have been discussed before us is whether we should not give effect to the provisions of sec. 111 of the Indian Succession Act which is made applicable to Hindus by the Hindu Wills Act in the matter of the question of title that has been raised between the parties. The true question, however, that arises for our consideration is what may have been the true intention of the testator in making this Will; whether it was his intention to give to his daughter Surjamoni an absolute estate; for, if such was his intention, there can be no doubt that in execution of the decree obtained by the decree-holder, he is entitled to sell the property which has been attached for the satisfaction of his claim. It will be observed that the concluding words of the first paragraph to which reference has already been made are to the effect that, upon the death of the said daughter, the vernacular used being অভাবে, persons would be the owners of his estate in equal shares. A question has been raised whether this uncertain event had reference to any time, during the life of the testator or to any time after his death. The Will seems not to have been drawn up by any trained lawyer, and it is rather difficult to gather what may be the exact time that the testator had in contemplation when writing the words to which we have just referred. If there is any ambiguity as to this matter, sec. 111 of the Indian Succession Act would settle the question. That section runs as follows:—"When a legacy is given if a specified uncertain event shall happen and no time is mentioned in the Will for the occurrence of that event, the legacy cannot take effect unless such event happens before the period when the fund bequeathed is payable or distributable;" and one of the illustrations given to that section is—"A legacy is bequeathed to A and, in case of his death, to B. If A survives the testator, the legacy to B does not take effect." Now in the present case, if Surjamoni had died during the lifetime of Rup Chand, the legacy to his daughter's sons would certainly take effect; but it would not take effect if she died (as it so happened) after the death of Rup Chand But as already stated, the true question we have to determine is not, whether the sons of Surjamoni took the legacy under the Will, but whether it was the intention of the testator to give to Surjamoni an absolute estate. We are of opinion, upon consideration of the several paragraphs of the Will in question, that it was his intention to give such an estate. And though there is a reference to the interest which Surjamoni's sons would obtain upon her death, yet we are of opinion that this was not intended to contract, as it were, the character of the estate which in the first portion of the document is unquestionably given to her. In this view of the matter, we are of opinion that the decree-holder who is the Appellant before us is entitled to seize and sell the property which was sought to be sold in satisfaction of his decree against the legal representatives of Surjamoni. The result is that this appeal is allowed. Each party will bear his own costs in this Court, but the Respondent will pay to the Appellant his costs in the lower Courts.

S. C. S. Appeal allowed.

REV. No. 970 OF 1906.

MITRA, J. HOLMWOOD, J. 1906. 15, October.	SAKANBARI DEBI, Petitioner, v. ADAITYA GANGULI, Opposite Party.

Registration Act (III of 1877), sec. 82—Prosecution under—Time for ordering prosecution—Denial of execution of a document—Refusal to register—Appeal from the refusal—Limitation.

On the Petitioner denying the execution of a document in favour of A, before the Sub-Registrar, that officer refused to register the document. Thereupon A lodged a complaint against the Petitioner for cheating under sec 417, I. P. C, which was dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., on the 26th March 1906. On the 27th April 1906, A appealed to the Special Sub-Registrar, who rejected the appeal for not having been preferred within the prescribed period of 30 days from the Sub-Registrar's refusal to register but at the same time submitted a report to the District Registrar which ultimately led to an enquiry with the result that a proceeding was drawn up against the Petitioner under sec. 82 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), SAKANBARI DEBI v. APAITYA GANGULI.

Held—That under the circumstances the Petitioner should not be prosecuted under sec. 82 of the Registration Act.

That the presentation of an appeal to the Special Registrar after the time limited therefor, against the refusal of the Sub Registrar to register a document on denial of execution, does not give any locus standi for the institution of a proceeding for inquiry as to the execution of the document.

This was a rule granted on the 27th of August 1906, against the proceedings under sec. 82 of the Registration Act pending against the Petitioner before the Joint Magistrate of Midnapur.

The facts of the case material to the report are briefly these:—

On the 5th of March 1906 two documents, dated 21st November 1905 and the 2nd March 1906, purporting to have been executed by the Petitioner in favour of Addaita Ganguli and Titurani in respect of 18 cottas and 1 bigha and 16½ cottas of land respectively were presented for registration before the Sub-Registrar of Pingla by the said Addaita and Tituram.

The Petitioner admitted the execution of the document in favour of Tituram but denied the execution of the document alleged to have been executed in favour of Addaita and the registration of the latter document was accordingly refused by the Rural Sub-Registrar of Pingla.

Thereupon on the 26th March 1906, Addaita lodged a complaint before Mr. Monmotha Krishna Deb, Joint Magistrate of Midnapur, charging the Petitioner with cheating under sec. 417, I. P. C., but the complaint was dismissed by the Joint Magistrate on the 26th March 1906.

On the 27th April Addaita Ganguli applied to the Special Sub-Registrar of Midnapur who is authorized by the Local Government under sec. 7 of the Registration Act to exercise and perform in addition to his own powers and duties all the powers and duties of the Registrar to whom he is subordinate to establish his right to have the document registered.

The Special Sub-Registrar refused the application for not having been made within 30 days after the making of the order of refusal by the Sub-Registrar of Pingla but on the same day he submitted the following report to the District Registrar.

"The accompanying deed is a deed of sale alleged to have been executed by Sakambari Debi of Nedhua in favour of Addaita Ch. Ganguli of Nedhua in Thana Sabang on the 6th Aughran 1312. The deed was presented by Addaita Ch. Ganguli on the 5th March 1906 before the Sub-Registrar of Sabang for registration. Sakambari Debi, the alleged executant, appeared before the Sub Registrar and denied the execution of the deed. The Sub Registrar, therefore, refused the registration of the deed on the 5th March 1906 and reported the matter to the District Registrar under sec. 73 of the Registration Act. No appeal was preferred within the prescribed time from the date of order of refusal. As the registration of the document was refused on the ground of denial of execution, I think a judicial enquiry is necessary under Circular No. 11 of 1893; one of the Deputy

NOTES.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMWOOD PRESIDES AT THE FIFTH Calcutta Criminal Sessions which will hold its sittings from date.

WE REPRODUCE BELOW A SHORT MEMOIR OF THE LATE Lord Davey from the pen of Lord Macnaghten and published in the pages of the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation.

THE QUESTION WHETHER AN OWNER of PROPERTY can make a valid enforceable contract binding himself not to dispose of his property by will and to permit his possessions to descend according to the law of intestate succession arose for decision in a recent American case (Jones v. Abbott, 81 North Eastes Reports 791). It was held in that case that such a contract is valid according to law and is legally enforceable. The legal consequence of such a contract would be that if the owner after making the contract, makes a will by which he disposes of his property, the dispositions would be null and void.

CL. 55 (2) OF THE NEW CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE Bill is intended to cover the cases of certain persons or classes of persons whose summary arrest might, as in the case of certain railway servants, be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public. This we find stated in the notes of the Committee appended to the Bill. But in the clause itself it is the Local Government which is authorised to declare with regard to what persons or classes of persons arrest under the ordinary procedure may be attended with danger. We think the Legislature should after consultation with the Local Governments embody in the Bill the name of the several classes of persons answering to the above description. The Local Government may however be empowered with the previous sanction of the Government of India to declare any other person or classes of persons to whom the same privilege may be extended.

ACCORDING TO CL. 60 OF THE BILL, AMONGST OTHER properties such personal ornaments of women as, in accordance with religious usage should not be parted with cannot be attached in execution of a decree for money. But according to religious usages amulets or articles of a similar nature are worn by men also which they are loth to part with from religious scruples and these may also be exempted from attachment. It will, no doubt, be always open to the Court to consider in any case whether an article is being used bonâ fide as a personal ornament or amulet of the above description and to refuse relief whenever it is made out that an attempt is being made to evade legal process under cover of this provision.

ACCORDING TO CL. 59 WHERE A JUDGMENT-DEBTOR has been committed to the civil prison the committing Court may release him on the ground of his suffering from any serious illness. We think that powers should be given to the Court to excuse a person from being sent to jail on a similar ground. When an application is made for the arrest of a debtor and the Court issues notice on the latter to show cause why he should not be arrested he may be allowed to prove illness or advanced age or failing health as a ground for being excused.

A BILL TO AMEND AND SUPPLEMENT THE BENGAL Tenancy Act will shortly be introduced in the Legislative Council of the Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal and Assam. From the Bill as published in the Eastern Bengal and Assam Government Gazette, we find that the changes recently made in the Tenancy Act by the Bengal Legislative Council by the Bengal Act I of 1907 have been bodily adopted by the Legislative Council of East Bengal.

ON A COMPARISON OF THE BILL WITH THE BENGAL Act I of 1907, we find that only such superfluous matter as the definition of Calcutta has been left out in the Eastern Bengal and Assam Bill. While commenting on the Bill before the Bengal Council, we fully discussed its provisions and suggested certain additions and alterations some of which were adopted. Some of the suggestions which were not given effect to and which we think might with advantage be adopted we would not at all press before the Eastern Bengal Council. Uniformity in the statutory law of both the Provinces, specially in the law of land-tenures is of far greater importance than improvement in the substance or wording of any particular provision or provisions. We would therefore suggest to the non-official members that they should not try to improve on the Bill. The Bill as drafted should be passed into law without any alteration whatever. The confusion that is likely to arise in the rights and liabilities and in the interpretation of the law in case of any difference in the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the adjoining provinces has more than once been pointed out by us in these columns. The Eastern Bengal and Assam Government has done wisely in reproducing verbatim the Bengal Act I of 1907.

BUT WE CANNOT HELP OBSERVING THAT MEASURES OF this kind demonstrate conclusively that the Partition of Bengal has unnecessarily duplicated the legislative machinery for one and the same Province. If the function of the second Legislature be only to copy the measures that are passed in the Bengal Council no reasonable grounds can be advanced for the necessity of a second Legislature. Judging by the work done or contemplated by the new Legislature such as the Court of Wards Amendment Act, or the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Bill, it cannot but be said that a Legislature at Dacca is a mere surplusage.

WE MAY ALSO BE PARDONED FOR POINTING OUT THAT the Bill in question also lends support to our suggestion that so long as the Partition lasts it is preferable that measures which affect both Bengals should be brought up before the Legislative Council of the Government of India; for it is both a waste of time and energy to get the same measure passed through two local Councils. Further, in the case of any discrepancy in the laws in the adjoining provinces arising from legislation by two Legislatures, the Courts will find it difficult to reconcile them and the Supreme Council will surely have to intervene to restore uniformity in the laws affecting the same people. So looking at the anomaly of a second Legislature from this point of view as well it is not possible to justify its existence.

THE LATE LORD DAVEY.

[Contributed by THE RIGHT HON. LORD MACNAGHTEN, G.C.M.G.]

Even now, after the lapse of some months, it is difficult to measure the loss which the highest Courts of this realm and the whole domain of English law have suffered by the death of Lord Davey. It was not given to him to fulfil the promise of his earlier days and to reach that position which at one time we all thought he was destined to attain. But at least he is secure in the reputation of a consummate advocate, a great master of equity, and a courteous, patient, and most learned judge.

Lord Davey's professional career began and ended within the limits of my own, so that of men now living few, if any, have had better opportunities of judging of his ability and work. It is no little satisfaction to me, if I may be forgiven for speaking of myself, to be permitted to offer a tribute of admiration and affection to the memory of so old a friend and so valued a colleague.

I met Horace Davey first in the chambers of the late Vice-Chancellor Wickens, where I had been a year or two before. I recollect being told by my master and his that at last he had found a pupil of whose success he felt assured. His confidence was certainly not misplaced. In a very short time Horace Davey gained a commanding practice behind the Bar. But it was not until he took silk—a step on which he ventured with strange misgiving and much hesitation—that he outstripped all his companions in the race.

Not long after Davey became a Q.C. I well remember being in Court one day when a case was at hearing which created a great stir at the time. The famous question of Lord St. Leonards' missing will was in debate. It was only as an onlooker and an idler that I was there. The Court was crowded. The front row was crammed with leading counsels from the Court of Probate, the Common Law Courts, and the Equity Bar. There had been a good deal of talk going on for some time and no little repetition. The judges were getting impatient. Everybody was beginning to feel rather bored when Davey rose to address the Court. He was so self-composed, his language was so well chosen, his argument so lucid and concise, that the attention of every one present was riveted at once. I have always thought it was one of the best things I ever heard done. From that time onwards, until he became a judge more than twenty years later, there was no case of importance in the Court of Chancery in which he was not retained. In the House of Lords and the Privy Council his services were no less in request. He was never dull or tedious. He always knew his case thoroughly. Nothing came amiss to him. Nothing was too small for his attention. Nothing was too great for his powers. He seemed as much at home in arguing a point of practice as he was in explaining a complicated invention or illustrating and applying one of the great principles of equity or dealing with the mysteries of ecclesiastical law or some constitutional question before the Privy Council or the Committee of Privileges?

During the short time he sat in the Court of Appeal the reputation of that tribunal, high as it was, was largely increased. And no one knows better than one of his colleagues how much he added to the strength of the House of Lords and the Privy Council, or what weight of authority was lost and what wealth of learning perished when the grave closed over the most accomplished lawyer of his day.—Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD ROBERTSON. LORD COLLINS. SIR ARTHUR WILSON. 1907. 29, October.	BABU MAHOMED EWAZ ALI KHAN, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. MAHESHAR PERSHAD and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Privy Council—Special leave, petition for—Final order of a Revenue Court, if appealable—Commissioner or Board of Revenue, if final Court.

This was an application for special leave to appeal under the following circumstances.

The Petitioner, Mahomed Ewaz Ali Khan, is the talukdar of Mahona in Oudh which includes a village called Gadaria Dih.

At regular settlement Respondents' predecessors had claimed an under-proprietary right in that village This ended in a lease being granted by the Financial Commissioner on 6th January 1889 for 30 years.

On expiry of the 30 years Petitioner issued notice under Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886) of ejectment. Respondents then brought a suit in the rent Court for cancellation of the notice. Finally by order of Board of Revenue of 22nd July 1899, the notice was cancelled and Petitioner remitted to Civil Court for determination of rights of Respondents. Petitioner then instituted a suit in the Civil Court and was successful in that suit and it was declared that Respondents had no under-proprietary interest in the village. But those Courts did not determine whether the lease was for 30 years or a perpetual one, the rent alone being fixed for the term of 30 years.

Respondents had appealed to His Majesty in Council from such decrees against them and their appeal was pending.

On obtaining the said decree from the Court of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, Petitioner issued a fresh notice of ejectment which was again contested by the Respondents in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur, which Court on the 9th May 1906 made a decree cancelling the said notice on the ground that the Respondents were perpetual lessees of the said village; and the said decree was confirmed on appeal by the Court of the Commissioner of Fyzabad by decree made on the 13th August 1906.

Against the said decree of the Court of the Commissioner of Fyzabad Petitioner appealed to the Board of Revenue, for the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh and the said Board on the 2nd January 1907 dismissed Petitioner's appeal on the ground that the Appellate Order by the said Commissioner was final and not open to appeal under sec. 116 of Act XXII of 1886 as amended by sec. 49 of Act XX of 1890.

As the questions involved in the appeal were questions of law and the value of the subject-matter of the suit is over Rs. 10,000, Petitioner on the 22nd January 1907 applied to the said Commissioner for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the said decree dated the 13th August 1906 and on the 25th May 1907 leave to appeal was refused by an order in terms following:—"As there has been an appeal to the Board of Revenue in this case this Court is clearly not a Court of Final Appellate Jurisdiction under sec. 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The application therefore is dismissed with costs."

Mr. DeGruyther for the Appellant contended that under the circumstances and considering that the Respondents had an appeal pending as regards this same property he had a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon opposed on the ground that the Petitioner had applied to the wrong Court, not to the Court of Final Appellate Jurisdiction. Leave was granted on a deposit of £150. It was understood that this appeal will be heard at the same time as the appeal pending between the same parties.

C. W. A. Leave granted.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CASPERSZ and CHITTY, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1035 OF 1907. JAJNARAM AND 6 OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR at the prosecution of BHOLARAM KOCH, Opposite Party. 30th September 1907.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 239—Joint trial of several persons not accused of the same offence—Transaction—Subsequent.

The facts are briefly these:—

The complainant, Bhola Koch, was sleeping with his young wife Bibhi Kochini in his house on the night of the 20th April last. In the latter part of the night the Petitioner No. 1 Jajnaram, a neighbour, broke into the house, seized Bibhi and pressed her down. She raised an alarm and her husband awoke and seized Jajnaram. The neighbours, who came afterwards, tied Jajnaram to a post inside the house. Information was then sent to the thana. In the meantime the six other Petitioners came to the house of the complainant, rescued Jajnaram, assaulted the complainant, seized him and dragged him to the house of Jajnaram where he was kept confined. The Police after investigation sent up Jajnaram for trial under sec. 456, I. P. C., and all the 7 Petitioners including Jajnaram under secs. 224, 225, 342 and 147, I. P. C. These 7 men were jointly tried, Jajnaram on charges under secs. 224 and 342, I. P. C., and the others under secs. 225 and 147, I. P. C., and were convicted. They preferred an appeal to the Sessions Judge which was dismissed. This rule was issued to set aside the conviction on the ground inter alia that the trial was illegal because there was misjoinder of the different accused on different charges.

Their Lordships observed:—

"The precise irregularity complained of is that the first Petitioner Jajnaram Koch could not be tried on the charge under sec. 342 along with the other Petitioners as against them no such charge was preferred. That charge related to the confinement of the complainant, Bhola, after the rescue of the first Petitioner had been completed and the common object of the unlawful assembly had borne its fruit, that is to say, the confinement of Bhola was a subsequent transaction for which the first Petitioner ought to have been separately tried.

We are reluctant to order a retrial considering the length the proceedings have already gone in the Courts below. But we must administer the Code as we find it. Sec. 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not warrant the joint trial of the seven Petitioners in the present case."

Mr. S. Roy (with Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal) for the Petitioner.

Rule made absolute and a retrial of all the Petitioners under secs. 224, 225 and 147, I. P. C., and a separate trial of the Petitioner No. 1 under sec. 342, I. P. C., ordered.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MACLEAN, C. J., and GEIDT, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 639 OF 1906. KALI KUMAR MUKERJI, Defendant, Appellant v. BRAHMA BANDA MUKERJI AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 13th November 1907.

Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), sec. 331—Resistance or obstruction—Partition Act (IV of 1893), sec. 4.

In a previous suit in which judgment was ultimately given by the High Court, the present Plaintiff established his right to ⅓ share of the property and was held entitled to possession of that after partition. Having obtained that decree, he proceeded to execute it by having a commissioner appointed to partition the property so that he might obtain possession of his one-third. The Commissioner was resisted and obstructed by the present Appellant who was not a party to the previous suit. Consequently proceedings were taken under sec. 331, C. P. C., and the claim was registered as a suit between the decree-holders as Plaintiffs and Kali Kumar as Defendant.

The defence inter alia was that sec. 331, C. P. C., did not apply to the case. The Defendant offered to buy the share that the Plaintiffs might be found to have in the properties in suit.

The Munsif decreed the suit and ordered that Kali Kumar should purchase Plaintiffs' ⅓ share of the dwelling-house and tank as Plaintiffs were outsiders. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court set aside the latter portion of the order. The Defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held—That the words in sec. 331 "if the resistance or obstruction" refers back to the words in sec. 328, namely, "resistance or obstruction to the execution of a decree for possession."

Under the decree of the High Court, the Plaintiff was held entitled to possession, but he could not get possession until his share had been ascertained by partition, and to do that the Commissioner was appointed with the object of the Plaintiff obtaining possession under the decree. The Appellant resisted and obstructed him in that.

Held—That was a resistance and obstruction to the execution of the decree for possession.

Gopala v. Fernandes (I. L. R. 16 Mad. 127) referred to.

Held further—That the privilege conferred by sec. 4 of the Partition Act can be rendered available when the suit is for partition and not otherwise.

SAKANBARI DEBI v. ADAITYA GANGULI.

Magistrates of Sadar may be asked to enquire into the matter."

Accordingly Babu Satish Chandra Mukherjee held an enquiry and submitted a report, the concluding portion of which ran as follows:—

"I do not think that a case against Addaita would stand and as the petition of complaint against Sakambari has been dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. Code, we may drop the enquiry here and leave the parties to fight out their cause in the Civil Court if they like. Submitted to District Magistrate for orders."

On receipt of the report Mr. Weston, the District Registrar, on the 7th of June 1906, ordered the said report to be put up with the record of the case under sec. 417, I. P. C. Subsequently on the 19th June 1906 he passed the following order:—

"The record seen. The fact of dismissal of the case for cheating is not of any relevance here, I sanction the prosecution of Sakambari for denying execution before the Special Sub-Registrar, to draw proceeding."

Babu Atulya Churn Bose for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause against the Rule.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Midnapur to show cause why the proceedings complained of in the petition pending before the Joint Magistrate of that place should not be set aside.

The main ground on which we issued the rule was that the proceedings as regards the registration of the document, the execution of which was denied by the Petitioner, Sakambari, terminated, if not; with the holder of the document failing to appeal, at least, with the dismissal of the complaint under sec. 417 of the Indian Penal Code. The presentation of an appeal subsequently after the time limited therefor was not only useless but gave no locus standi for the institution of a proceeding for enquiry as to the execution of the deed. The case seems to be a peculiar one and we do not think, having regard to the circumstances stated above, that the Petitioner should be prosecuted under sec. 82 of the Registration Act. We accordingly make the Rule absolute.

We should note that the District Magistrate has submitted no explanation and no cause has been shown.

ANNADA KUMAR ROY v. INDRA BHUSAN MUKHOPADHYA.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of November 1905, against the decree of Babu Hari Nath Roy, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Dacca, dated the 9th of June 1095, reversing that of Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee, Munsif, 1st Court of Manikgunge, dated the 21st of March 1904.

The Appellant instituted the present suit to recover a half share of the estate of one Gungadhar Roy, deceased, alleging that he was one of the reversionary heirs of the deceased upon the death of Gangadhar's widow, Brahmamoyi Debya. The lower Appellate Court found that he was the great-grandson of the great-grandson of Ram Bhadra Roy, the great-grandfather of Gangadhar and therefore a sakulya agnate of the deceased. The Respondent Indra Bhusar in defence alleged, and it was found by the lower Appellate Court, that his father Girish was the sister's son of Gangadhar, and Brahmamoyi during her lifetime made a gift of the disputed property to Girish, that Girish being the then nearest reversioner expectant to Gangadhar acquired an absolute estate in the said property and on his death was succeeded by the Respondent.

The lower Appellate Court reversing the decision of the learned Munsif dismissed the Plaintiff's suit. Hence this second appeal by the Plaintiff.

Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Sarat Chandra Dutt for the Appellant.

Babu Jnanendra Nath Sarkar for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—I think the point of law raised upon this appeal, namely, if a Hindu widow transfers her interest to the then reversioner, the reversioner can hold the property against the person who is the reversioner when the widow dies, is concluded by authority which is binding upon us. It is sufficient to refer to the case of Gunga Pershad Kur v. Shumbhoo Nath Burmun (1) which was affirmed on appeal, and the Full Bench case of Nobo Kishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (2).

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Commissioners but not signed by them as contracting parties, and further the document was not sealed with the common seal of the Commissioners, Held—That the lease was not binding on the Commissioners.

This was an appeal preferred on the 31st of August 1905, against the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 13th of June 1905.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Caspersz and Babu Kali Kissen Sen for the Appellant.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Siba Prosonna Bhattacharjee for the Respondent.

This is an appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, second Court, Alipore, dated the 13th June 1905.

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the South Barrackpur Municipality against the Defendant, Amulya Nath Chatterjee, to set aside a permanent mourasi mokurari lease granted on the 22nd March 1902 by the latter to the former in respect of 35 bighas, 15 cottahs of land. The Municipality had to pay a salami of Rs. 357-8 to the Defendant; and the rent reserved was one rupee per bigha per month. The Municipality in this suit prayed for cancellation of this lease, but the suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge.

The Municipality now appeal; and on their behalf it is contended, first, that the lease entered into by them with the Defendant was ultra vires; secondly, that it binds the executing persons, but not the rate-payers whom they represent; thirdly, that it is a contract entered into in fraud of the Bengal Municipal Act; fourthly, that it was not duly executed; fifthly, that it was illegal, because the Commissioners had no power to enter into any such contract without budgetting for it and obtaining the sanction of the higher authorities; sixthly, that the Defendant had no permanent right to convey to the Municipality, but only a temporary right; and, seventhly, that the higher authorities refused to sanction the expenses incurred in the transaction and declared all such expenses to have been illegally incurred and the transaction void.

In our opinion the first of these grounds of appeal cannot be sustained. The lease was taken by the Municipality for the purpose of using the land to which it related as a trenching-ground; and it does not appear to us that to enter into such a lease is beyond the powers of the Municipality. The lease, therefore, was not invalid on this ground, and does not seem to us to be one which binds only the executing parties and not the Municipal Commissioners who represent the rate-prayers. Then, we have not been shown any clause in the Municipal Act which prohibits the execution of such a lease.

The fourth contention of the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Appellant is that the lease has not been duly executed in accordance with the provisions of sec. 37 of the Municipal Act. That section lays down that "the Commissioners may enter into and perform any contract necessary for the purposes of this Act." But it goes on to say:—"Every contract made on behalf of the Commissioners of a Municipality in respect of any sum exceeding five hundred rupees, or which shall involve a value exceeding five hundred rupees, shall, be sanctioned by the Commissioners at a meeting and shall be in writing and signed by at least two Commissioners, one of whom shall be the Chairman or Vice-Chairman, and shall be sealed with the common seal of the Commissioners." And the section winds up by saying:—"Unless so executed such contract shall not be binding on the Commissioners."

Now, there can be no doubt that the execution of the present contract was sanctioned by the Commissioners at a meeting, and that it involves a value exceeding Rs. 500. The amount of the salami, the payment of which was stipulated for in the lease, was Rs. 357-8 as. The amount of the rent agreed to be paid for the 35 bighas, 15 cottahs was Rs. 229 per annum. So that even one year's value of this contract constituted a value exceeding Rs. 500; and therefore the contract comes within the provisions of sec. 37 of the Act. That being so, it must be admitted, as it is admitted by the Respondent, that the kabuliyat executed on behalf of the Municipality was not duly executed in accordance with the provisions of sec. 37, because it was signed only by the Chairman; and although two of the Commissioners witnessed it, they did not sign it as contracting parties. Furthermore, it was not sealed with the common seal of the Commissioners. Hence, it would seem that, under the last clause of sec. 37, the contract is not binding on the Commissioners.

The learned pleader for the Defendant-Respondent, however, contends that the provisions of sec. 37 do not apply to leases or counterparts of leases, but merely to contracts executed on behalf of the Municipality for the execution of Municipal works; and he urges that, under sec. 34 "the Commissioners at a meeting may purchase or take on lease any land for the purposes of this Act, and may sell, let, exchange or otherwise dispose of, any land not required for such purposes;" and that, therefore, such a lease or counterpart of a lease, executed under sec. 34, does not require to be executed with all the formalities prescribed by sec. 37. We think, however, that this is not the case. Sec. 34, in our opinion, must be read along with sec. 37. Sec. 34 refers, no doubt, to certain classes of contract; and then sec. 37 applies to all contracts, of whatever nature; and provides that if these contracts involve a value exceeding Rs. 500, they shall be executed in accordance with the terms of that section.

That being the view we take, we must hold that the lease in this case was not duly executed and is, therefore, not binding on the Commissioners.

We do not, however, find it necessary to rest our decision upon this ground only. There are other grounds on which the contract must be set aside.

We may here allude, however, to the further contention of the pleader for the Respondent, which is to the effect that whether the lease was valid or not, it was ratified by the Commissioners' subsequent conduct. It is, no doubt, the case that the Commissioners, after executing the contract, endeavoured to enter into possession of the land which formed the subject of it. They sub-let a few cottahs of it. They let a portion of it for the throwing of the carcasses of animals, and used another portion as a burying-ground. But, as soon as they did so, they were resisted by the tenants of the land; and they were ejected from some of the land by two tenants suing them. So that it appears that circumstances occurred, after they took possession of the land which justified the Municipality in praying for the cancellation of the lease.

The next contention of the Appellant is that the Municipality had no power to enter into this lease without having the expenditure provided for by budget and sanctioned by the superior authorities. We need only say that there is no provision in the Act to this effect; nor do we think the lease is invalid for this reason.

The sixth contention of the learned Counsel for the Appellant is that the Defendant had only a temporary right in the land, and no power, therefore, to convey a permanent right to his client. We think that this plea also is a good one. It is quite clear from the terms of the lease that the lessor, the Defendant, purported to convey to the Plaintiff a permanent mourasi mokurari lease of the land. Then the lease goes on to say: "From this day becoming possessor of the land, you shall continue to enjoy and possess the land peaceably by making Mether depôt, trenching ground, preparing bricks and excavating tanks, settling tenants on the said land and using it in any other way you like." Finally, the lease concludes by saying that the lessor grants "this permanent mourasi mokurari pottah, counterpart of the kabuliyat" for the land. Now, it is evident that the Defendant had no such right to convey to the Plaintiff. His title-deed is produced, (see page 79 of the paper-book) and this shows, that what he purchased from Bepin Behary Chatterjee on the 15th October 1901, was a mourasi mokurari ganti jama, which was, apparently, of an agricultural nature, and what he had apparently (which is shown by the proclamation of sale) was only an occupancy right. Then, it further appears from the evidence that the land was not only of an agricultural nature, but was in the occupancy of tenants; and as already observed, as soon as the Plaintiff endeavoured to take possession of the land and make use of it for the purposes of throwing carcasses, and as a burying-ground, two of the tenants, at least, resisted the Plaintiffs, brought suits against them, and obtained decrees for ejectment. The Defendant had, therefore, no right to convey to the Plaintiff khas possession of the land, as he did in the passage of the lease already cited, (see page 8 of the paper-book). In these circumstances, as the Defendant purported to convey to the Plaintiff a permanent lease of the land (and khas possession thereof which he evidently had no right, and must have known he had no right to do), and as the rent, moreover, was very excessive, it may well be held that the Defendant has been guilty of fraud. He must have known that there were tenants on the land, and he should not have given the Plaintiff khas possession, or the right to use it in any way he liked. When he did so, he certainly was guilty of fraud. Furthermore, the zemindar of the land has served notice on the Plaintiff forbidding the use of the land as a trenching ground and pointing out that the Defendant had no permanent right to convey to the Plaintiff which is further apparent from the fact established by the evidence that the rent of the land had recently been increased. That being so, the action of the Defendant was fraudulent, and the lease should be cancelled on this ground.

The learned pleader for the Respondent urges that no such plea was raised in the plaint nor was fraud of this nature alleged. But in para. 11 of the plaint it has been expressly pleaded that the Defendant had really no permanent right and therefore could not grant such right to the Corporation, and that his representation that he had a permanent right, was fraudulent. Then, in para. 12 it is said "that the Commissioners of the South Barrackpur Municipality have subsequently in the course of the current year enquired into the facts relating to the said lease, and have come to know of fraud in the matter." Further, in para. 14 (a) the Plaintiff prays "that the said lease be cancelled and declared illegal, fraudulent and inoperative." And in cl. (c) of the same paragraph it is prayed "that the Defendant be directed to refund to the said Corporation the moneys paid under the said lease and the sums expended from the Municipal fund in connection with the said land, and that a decree for the recovery of the total amount of Rs. 762-10 be passed against the Defendant." Then, in the particulars of the Plaintiff's pecuniary claim the expenses incurred in defending Suits Nos. 772 and 774 of 1902 in the Court of the 2nd Munsif of Sealdah, instituted by Bepin Behary Das and Upendra Nath Das, that is, the tenants who sued the Plaintiff, for ejectment which expenses amount to Rs. 50-11-3, have been claimed. The Plaintiffs further claim Rs. 139-3-6 paid to Bepin Behary Das and Upendra Nath Das in satisfaction of the decrees in the abovementioned suits. The Plaintiffs altogether claim Rs. 250 9-6 on this account. The fact, then, of the Plaintiffs having been ejected from the land demised to them by the Defendant has been expressly brought to the notice of the latter in the present suit; and as the plea of fraud has been thus raised in the plaint and as, moreover, the second issue framed by the Subordinate Judge is, "was the Defendant guilty of any fraudulent act, if not, is the lease liable to be cancelled?" we do not think we are debarred from decreeing this appeal on this ground. We accordingly do so, as prayed, setting aside the decree of the lower Court. This order will carry costs in both the Courts.

RULE No. 2437 OF 1907.

MOOKERJEE, J.
CASPERSZ, J.
1907.
Heard,
19, August.
Judgment,
26, August.

RAM NARAIN ROUTH and ors., Petitioners,
v.
LAL DAS ROUTH and ors., Opposite Parties.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 171—Right of depositor to obtain possession—Procedure—Application or suit.

Where a deposit is made under sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the depositor can, as against the judgment-debtor, obtain delivery of possession of the holding, advertised for sale, by application to the execution Court: but by such application the depositor is not entitled to invite the execution Court to oust a stranger to the proceeding. If he is met by a stranger, his remedy is by a regular suit for recovery of possession.

This was a rule granted on the 1st of August 1907, against an order of Babu Surendra Nath Mookerjee, Munsif of Patna, dated the 20th of May 1907, refusing the application of the Petitioners under sec. 171, Bengal Tenancy Act, to be placed in possession of the holding.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Lakhsmi Narain Singh for the Petitioners.

No one for the Opposite Parties.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This rule raises an important question on the construction of sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The circumstances leading up to the application to this Court are not in controversy. The Petitioners allege that one Babu Raj Narain brought a suit for rent against some of the opposite party in respect of a holding over a portion of which the Petitioners held a zurpeshgi lease under a deed executed on the 21st July 1900. The landlord obtained a decree, and took out execution and the holding was advertised for sale. The Petitioners with a view to protect their interest, which would be voidable upon sale, deposited the decretal amount, on the 20th June 1906, in accordance with the provisions of sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They then made an application to the execution Court on the 10th May 1907 and prayed that they might be placed in possession of such portion of the holding as was not covered by their zurpeshgi. On the 20th May 1907, the Munsif held that the applicants could not obtain a summary order for possession and that their remedy was by a regular suit for recovery of possession. It is this order which we are invited to revise on the ground that the Petitioners were entitled to be placed in possession of the holding under cl. (c) of sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the Court below has refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. The question, therefore, which calls for decision is whether, when a deposit is made under sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the depositor is entitled upon application to the execution Court, to be placed in possession of the holding advertised for sale.

Sec. 171 provides that when a tenure or holding has been advertised for sale under Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, any person who has in the tenure or holding an interest which would be voidable upon the sale, may pay into Court the amount requisite to prevent the sale; the amount so paid is to be deemed a debt which carries interest and is secured by a mortgage of the tenure or holding; and such mortgage takes priority of every other charge on the tenure or holding other than a charge for arrears of rent. The section then lays down that the person who has made the deposit "shall be entitled to possession of the tenure or holding as mortgagee of the tenant, and to retain possession of it as such until the debt, with the interest due thereon, has been discharged." The provisions of the section, however, do not affect any other remedy to which the depositor may be entitled; in other words, the remedy is in addition to and not in substitution for any other remedy open to the depositor.

It is argued by the learned vakil for the Petitioners that the applicants are entitled to an order for delivery of possession of the tenure advertised for sale merely upon an application to the execution Court. It must be observed, however, that the section does not expressly provide that the depositor is so entitled to be placed in possession upon application to the execution Court. To determine whether the interpretation sought to be put upon the section on behalf of the Petitioners is well-founded, it is necessary to refer for a moment to the history of the legislation on the subject. Sec. 171 of Bengal Tenancy Act replaces sec. 62 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869 which, in its turn, took the place of sec. 6 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1865. The provisions in the Acts of 1865 and 1869 were practically identical and were to the following effect: "If the sum due under the decree together with interest up to the date of payment and all costs be paid into Court at any time before the sale commences whether by the defaulting holder of the under-tenure or any one on his behalf or any one interested in the protection of the under-tenure, such sale shall not take place; and the provisions of sec. 13 of Regulation VIII of 1819 for the recovery of the sums paid by a person other than the defaulting holder of the under-tenure to stay the sale of the under-tenure, shall be applicable to all similar payments made under this section." Under this section (sec. 62 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court in Umbika Debia v. Pranhuree Doss (1), that an under-tenant who has saved his superior tenure from sale by depositing the amount of rent due, not only has the security of the tenure which he preserves and of which he can obtain possession on application to the Collector, but he has also a right to recover, by an ordinary suit the amount deposited by him as a loan.

Statutory effect is now given to this view by sub-sec. 2 of sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It must be observed, however, that sub-sec. 1 of sec. 171 introduces important variations into the provisions of sec. 62 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 which made the provisions of sec. 13 of the Putni Regulation applicable. Cl. 4 of sec. 13 of the Putni Regulation, to which reference is made, provided that if an under-tenant of the second-decree makes a deposit in order to stay the sale of the superior tenure and if he is not himself in arrears, the deposit shall be considered as a loan to the porprietor of the tenure preserved from sale and the tenure so preserved shall be security for the advance and the depositor shall be entitled, on applying for the same, to obtain immediate possession of the tenure of the defaulter, in order to recover the amount so advanced, from any profits belonging thereto. Apart from the fundamental distinction that, under sec. 13 of the Putni Regulation a deposit can be made only by an undertenant, whereas under the Acts of 1865, 1869 and 1885 a deposit can be made by any person interested in the tenure or holding, it is worthy of notice that cl. 4 of sec. 13 of Regulation VIII of 1819 expressly provides that the depositor shall be entitled upon application to obtain immediate possession of the tenure of the defaulter. In Act VIII of 1885, however, where the language was recast, the provision is that the depositor shall be entitled to possession of the tenure or holding as a mortgagee of the tenant. It is impossible to say that this alteration in language was not intentional. In our opinion, the effect of this change is to make it no longer obligatory upon the execution Court to place the depositor in possession of the tenure or holding saved from sale, and it appears to us that there is an intelligible reason for this variation.

Under sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the deposit may be made by any person who has an interest which would be voidable on the sale. It is not inconceivable that a question may arise as to whether the depositor really has an interest in the tenure or holding, and, if so whether the interest is of a description which would be voidable upon the sale. Such question may be raised by a person other than the decree-holder or the defaulter judgment-debtor. For instance, the tenant against whom the decree for rent has been obtained, may have previously placed somebody else in possession of the holding under a lawful agreement, as for instance, under a lease or a usufructuary mortgage so that when a deposit is made under sec. 171 by some other person who claims an interest in the tenure, the person who has derived his title from the defaulter may question the right of the depositor. If he does so, a dispute might arise as between two persons neither of whom is a party to the execution proceedings. It is hardly conceivable that a question of this character could be investigated by the execution Court and a summary order made for delivery of possession as against a person who is not a party to the rent decree, who claims to hold possession of the property under a primâ facie good title from the tenant, and who denies the existence or validity of the interest claimed by the depositor. In such circumstances, the execution Court could not very well place the depositor in possession with the result that the other claimant is ousted from occupation.

Our attention was however invited to the decision of this Court in the case of Umatul Fatimah v. Nemie Chandra Banerjee (2) where a Division Bench appears to have held that there is nothing in sec. 171, sub-sec. (1), cl. (c) to indicate that it is necessary that a person who has paid money under this section, should bring a separate regular suit to obtain possession. The learned Judges assumed the intention of the Legislature to have been that on payment of the sum, the depositor should make an application to the Court to be placed in possession of the tenure, and observed that the contrary view, namely, that such a person should be bound to bring a regular suit to obtain possession, would in fact defeat the object of the section itself. No reasons are assigned in support of this view and the attention of the learned Judges does not appear to have been drawn to the material difference in language between the provisions of sec. 171 and of sec. 62 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869, by which cl. 4 of sec. 13 of the Putni Regulation was made applicable. In our opinion, the view indicated in the case cited, is expressed too broadly. We are prepared to hold that as against the judgment-debtor, the depositor can obtain delivery of possession by application to the execution Court: but that by such application the depositor is not entitled to invite the execution Court to oust a stranger to the proceeding. If he is met by such a stranger, his remedy is by a regular suit for recovery of possession, and in such a suit the person in possession who is sought to be ousted may take any appropriate defence and may put the depositor to the proof of his alleged title. In other words, as soon as a person has made a deposit under sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if he makes an application to the execution Court, he is entitled to delivery of possession as against the judgment-debtor who is a party to the proceeding. But if, when the writ for delivery is attempted to be executed, the depositor is met by some other person who is in possession, such third party cannot be summarily ousted. The judgment-debtor is a party to the proceeding; he has admittedly made default and by reason of his failure to satisfy the decree obtained against him, the holding is advertised for sale. When the deposit is made by a person who claims an interest in the tenancy voidable upon the sale, it is open to the judgment-debtor to challenge his title, if he so chooses. But if he does not take any objection and allows the deposit to be made, with the result that the tenure or holding is saved from sale, he cannot subsequently resist an application for delivery of possession. It would be meaningless to drive the depositor in such a case to a regular suit for recovery of possession. This course would not only entail unnecessary delay which is likely to defeat the statutory object of this provision of the law; it would also foster an unreasonable multiplicity of suits. When, however, the depositor is met by a third person who is not a party to the proceeding, other considerations arise. The Legislature could not have contemplated, as is plainly indicated by the alteration in the language to which we have already adverted, that a stranger should be summarily evicted at the instance of a person who has made the deposit and whose title he had no opportunity to challenge by an appropriate proceeding.

(2) Civil Rule No. 3124 of 1903 decided by Harington and Brett, JJ., on the 15th June 1904.

RAM NARAIN ROUTH v. LAL DAS ROUTH.

On the whole, therefore, the conclusion seems to us to be reasonable that although the depositor under sec. 171 is entitled upon application to the execution Court to obtain delivery of possession as against the judgment-debtor who is a party to the proceedings, he is not entitled to an order for delivery as against a person who is a stranger to the proceeding; against such a person his remedy is by a regular suit.

In the case before us, it is admitted in the petition on which the rule was issued, that a portion of the holding is in the possession of the judgment-debtors (opposite party 1 to 3) and that other portions are in the possession of opposite parties 4 and 5, who are no parties to the decree or to the execution proceedings. The Court below, however, has not made any distinction between the different sets of opposite parties and has declined to entertain the application for delivery of possession on the broad ground that under sec. 171 the depositor is not entitled to possession upon application to the execution Court. As we have already explained, this view cannot be entirely supported.

The result, therefore, is that the rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below is discharged in part. As against the judgment-debtors, opposite parties who were parties to the decree for rent and to the execution proceedings, the rule is made absolute and possession will be delivered to the Petitioners as against them. As against opposite parties 4 and 5 who were not parties to the decree for rent or to the execution proceedings the rule is discharged. As no appearance has been entered on behalf of any of the opposite parties we make no order for costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 421 OF 1906.

RAMPINI, C J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1907. 26, July.	PITAMBAR GAIN AND ANR., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. UDDHAB MONDAL, Defendant, Respondent.

Registration Act (III of 1877), sec. 17 (d)—Petition of compromise containing a recital of a previous oral agreement for lease—Stamp —Registration—Evidence.

Where a petition of compromise merely contained a recital of a previous oral agreement for lease,

Held—That it did not require registration or stamp.

It was evidence of an oral agreement but not an agreement in itself.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd of March 1906, against the decree of Babu P. C. Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 17th of January 1906, reversing that of Babu Bunwari Lal Gossami, Munsif of Khulna, dated the 19th of April 1905.

The Plaintiffs-Appellants brought this suit for the enforcement of an agreement for the delivery of a potta, &c., on the following allegations:

That the two Defendants had instituted a Suit No. 311 of 1900 against the Plaintiffs who were in possession for khas possession. That during the pendency of the suit, an agreement (oral) was concluded between the parties on the 4th

February 1901 to the effect that in case the Plaintiffs settled the suit amicably by a solenamah acknowledging the Defendant's title to the land, the latter would grant a jamai settlement of the land to the Plaintiffs, and after a decree should be passed ascertain the area by measurement, fix a rent according to the rate at which the tenants of the Plaintiff's class held land in the neighbourhood, and that the parties would duly exchange pottas and kabuliyats, &c.

The only defence which is material to this report was that the agreement was an agreement for lease and had been embodied in the solenamah petition which however had not been registered and would therefore be no evidence of the lease.

The material portion of the petition of compromise is set out in the judgment.

The Munsif decreed the suit, but the Subordinate Judge gave effect to the Defendant's pleas mentioned above, and dismissed the suit.

This second appeal was then preferred by the Plaintiffs.

Dr. Priya Nath Sen for the Appellants

Babu Sarat Chandra Ghose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In our opinion the Subordinate Judge was wrong in saying that the petition of compromise in this case was an agreement to lease and required to be properly stamped and registered. He says :—"I find that the petition is clearly an agreement to lease, as the Plaintiffs, who are the Defendants in that case, proposed certain terms, which were accepted and meant to be acted upon by the Defendant."

We have examined the petition of compromise; but we find no terms mentioned in it. The third paragraph says: "The Plaintiffs have consented to let out the disputed land to us. After this suit is decreed, pottah and kabuliyat will be exchanged between the parties. Filing this solenamah with the consent of the Plaintiffs, we pray that the suit may be ordered to be disposed of in pursuance of this compromise." That being so, this petition is not an agreement, but merely contains a recital of a previous oral agreement. It is evidence of an oral agreement but not an agreement in itself and therefore does not require either a stamp or registration. Moreover, it was admitted in the first Court without a stamp: so that it should not have been rejected by the lower Appellate Court because it was not stamped.

We, therefore, decree this appeal and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court to be decided on the merits.

The costs will abide the result.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Karunamoy Bose for Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Appellants.

Babu Ganesh Dutt Singh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The present appeal arises out of a suit brought by the present Respondents for contribution against the present Appellants. The case of the Plaintiffs-Respondents was that they and the Appellants were joint thicadars of a certain village, that on the 11th April 1898 their landlords obtained a decree against them and the Defendants for recovery of rent due for the thica for the years 1302 to 1305, and that the Plaintiff finding their land attached in execution of the decree had to pay the full amount of the decree in 3 instalments totalling Rs. 579-4 0 in the months of June to August 1899. They claimed to be entitled to recover from the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 who held an eight anna share of the thica a proportionate share of the rent which they had paid on their behalf.

The Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in their defence did not deny that a decree had been obtained against them and the Plaintiffs by their landlords and that the Plaintiffs had paid up the full amount of the decree: but they pleaded that on two previous occasions the landlords had obtained decrees for rent due for the thica against them jointly with the Plaintiffs and that on those two occasions they had paid off the full decretal amount and the Plaintiffs had paid nothing. They alleged that on the 17th December 1895 they had paid Rs. 855 which was the full rental of the thica up to the year 1297 and that on the 19th July 1897 they had paid up the sum of Rs. 577-13-0 which was the balance of the rent due upon the thica for the years 1298 to 1301. The Plaintiffs' had not subsequently repaid to them any of the money which they had on these two occasions paid on the Plaintiffs' behalf. The suit in which the decree was obtained and which the Plaintiffs paid off was for the rent for the years 1302 to 1305.

The Court of first instance on taking into consideration the plea of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 came to the conclusion that they were entitled to set off against the claim of the Plaintiffs only a proportionate amount of the rent which the Defendants had paid on the 19th July 1897, the reason being that the amount was paid within three years before the date on which the payment was made by the Plaintiffs. So far as the payment made on the 17th December 1895 was concerned, the Munsif held that the Defendants' claim to set off any portion of it against the claim of the Plaintiffs in the present suit was barred by limitation. The Munsif accordingly gave the Plaintiffs a decree for the balance.

(1) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 340 (1880).

GAJADHAR MAHTO v. RAGHUBAR GOPE.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court has disallowed the amount which the Defendants had been allowed to set off by the Munsif and has given the Plaintiffs a decree for the whole amount of their claim.

The Defendants have appealed. The only question before us is whether in a case of this sort any question of limitation really arises. In our opinion no question of limitation arises on the facts. It does not appear to have been denied in the Court of first instance that the Defendants had satisfied the two decrees for rent in 1895 and 1897 and the sums which they then paid included money which the Plaintiffs as co-sharers were bound under the law to pay. It was not alleged or proved that the sums due on behalf of the Plaintiffs had afterwards been repaid to the Defendants by the Plaintiffs. The sums which the Defendants had on previous occasions paid on behalf of the Plaintiffs remained therefore as an outstanding debt due from the Plaintiffs to them. It is true that at the time when the Plaintiffs made payment in satisfaction of the decree in 1899 the remedy of the Defendants at law to recover from the Plaintiffs the sums which they had previously paid was barred by limitation. But though the remedy might have been barred the right to the debt was not extinguished, see Mohesh Lal v. Busant Kumari (1). When afterwards the Plaintiffs were in consequence of the decree obtained against them and the Defendants by their landlords and in consequence of the attachment of the property of the Plaintiffs in satisfaction of that decree compelled to pay on their own behalf as well as on behalf of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 the amount due under the decree, the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were entitled to appropriate the sum which was paid by the Plaintiffs on their behalf as money paid in discharge of the outstanding debt which was due from the Plaintiffs to them. We find that the debt due to the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 from the Plaintiffs on account of the previous payments was Rs. 358 and that the amount which the Plaintiffs would have been entitled to recover from the Defendants as contribution for the amount paid by them to discharge the arrears of rent in 1899 amounted to Rs. 289. In fact, therefore, the Defendants at the time of payment were entitled to a sum in excess of that which the Plaintiffs paid for them. Under these circumstances we hold that the Plaintiffs have no right to claim contribution from the Defendants in the present suit.

In our opinion the view which the lower Appellate Court has taken is not correct, and we therefore set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and decree the appeal with costs. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of December 1905, against the decree of Babu Ambica Charan Dutta, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Backergunge, dated the 21st of September 1905, reversing the decree of Babu Bimal Chandra Chatterjee, Munsif of Backergunge, 7th Court, dated the 13th of June 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Mr. G. Sircar for the Appellants.

Dr. Priya Nath Sen and Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought to eject the Defendants from certain land, after a declaration of the Plaintiffs' right thereto.

The Defendant No. 1 is the tenant of the land. The Defendant No. 2 is the shebait of the idol to whom the land belongs.

The Plaintiffs' predecessor in title, Nilu, had a karsha tenancy of the land. In 1262, he paid a bonus of Rs. 51 to the former shebait, Tarini, the predecessor of the Defendant No. 2 and obtained a permanent lease of the land. The rent payable under the lease was the same as under the karsha pottah. On the death of Tarini, the Defendant No. 2 succeeded as shebait to the property. He accepted rent from the Plaintiff or his predecessor for upwards of 30 years. He recently entered on occupation of the land with the assistance of the Defendant No. 1, and gave the Plaintiff notice to quit, and so determined his karsha right.

NITYA GOPAL SEN PODDAR v. MANI CHANDRA CHAKRABUTTY.

The Plaintiff now seeks for khas possession.

The lower Court has held that the permanent lease granted to Nilu in 1262 was void for want of legal necessity. He has accordingly dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff appeals on the following grounds; (1) that the lease of 1262 was not void but voidable; (2) that the Defendants are barred by limitation from questioning the validity of this lease; and (3) that the Plaintiff has a title by more than 50 years' adverse possession under this lease.

There can be no question as to the want of substance in the first of these pleas. A permanent lease of debutter property is undoubtedly void, if not executed for legal necessity. The Judge has found as a fact that there was no legal necessity for the grant of the permanent lease and this would seem to settle this point. In support of the contention that the Plaintiff has been in adverse possession of the land under the permanent lease for more than 50 years and hence, that the Defendant No. 2's title has been extinguished, and that the Plaintiff has thereby acquired a valid title, the Appellant's pleader relies on the cases of Shama Charan Nandi v. Abhiram Goswami (1), Ram Kanai Ghosh v Hari Narayan Singh Deo (2), Mahomed v. Ganapati (3), Nil Money Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (4) and Duttagiri v. Duttatraya (5), the principle underlying all of these cases apparently being that if a permanent lease of debutter and trust property is granted to a lessee who holds under such lease to the knowledge of the lessor's successor, the successor must sue within 12 years, or be barred by limitation.

On the other hand, the Respondent's pleader relies on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Beni Pershad Koeri v. Dudhnath Roy (6), in which it has been held that the possession of a tenant for life is not rendered adverse within the meaning of Act XV of 1877 by a notice from the tenant that he claims to be holding on a perpetual or hereditary tenure. This has been followed in Srinivasa Ayyar v. Muthusami Pillai (7), in which it has been laid down that a tenant repudiating the title under which he entered becomes liable to immediate eviction at the option of the landlord, but until the landlord indicates that he intends to exercise his option, the tenancy subsists. The cases of Seshamma Shettati v. Chickaya Hegade (8) and Rama Swami Naik v. Thayammal (9) have been decided on the same principle. The learned pleader points out that the cases relied on by the Appellant are cases in which the lessees entered under the permanent leases they set up, and would be in the position of trespassers if the leases they held under were invalid, whereas in the case of Beni Pershad v. Dudhnath (6) and the cases in which it has been followed, the lessee was a tenant from before and therefore he could not by setting up a right different from that under which he entered the land acquire a title by adverse possession against his lessor or the latter's successor. In the present case, the Plaintiff's predecessor, Nilu, was a karsha tenant. He paid a bonus to the Defendant No. 2's predecessor, Tarini, and obtained from him an invalid and void permanent lease. He continued paying rent at the same rate as before. The Defendant No. 2 took rent from him no doubt for a long series of years, but seeing that Nilu was a tenant from before, his or the Plaintiff's possession cannot be regarded as adverse to the Defendant No. 2, nor can the latter's acceptance of the rent from the Plaintiff either operate as an admission of the Plaintiff's having a permanent right in the land or cause an extinction of his own title. We agree with these contentions of the learned pleader for the Respondent. We consider that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is right and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

RULE NO. 1830 OF 1907.

BRETT, J.
COXE, J.

Heard, 1 and 2, July.
Judgment, 3, July.

MUSSTT. SATO KOER, Objector, Petitioner,
v.
GOPAL SAHU and anr., Applicants, Opposite Party.

Act XIX of 1841—Jurisdiction—Hindu Law—Joint family—Practice—Ex parte order.

The provisions of Act XIX of 1841 do not apply to the case of a family governed by the Mitakshara Law inasmuch as in the case of the death of a member the property passes not by way of succession but by survivorship.

Before it can be held that a Court has jurisdiction under Act XIX of 1841, it must be found that the provisions of law have been strictly complied with.

Case in which it was held that Act XIX of 1841 could not be applied under any circumstance.

No order can be passed against a person without allowing him to be heard and to adduce evidence in his defence.

This was a rule granted on the 13th of June 1907, against an order of L. Palit, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Gya, dated the 5th of June 1907, allowing the application of the opposite parties made under Act XIX of 1841 and declaring them to be entitled to possession of the properties left by the deceased Narain Ram.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Surendra Nath Ghosal for the Petitioner.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee and Jogesh Chandra Dey for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:

The present Petitioner is the widow of one Narain Ram who died on the 4th April 1907 leaving her as his widow, she being his second wife, and a daughter by his first wife.

On the 20th April 1907 Gopal Sahu and Sahadeb Ram, brothers of Narain Ram, put in application under Act XIX of 1841 alleging that they were members of a joint Hindu family under the Mitakshara law with Narain Ram, that on his death all the joint property devolved by survivorship on them as members of the joint family, that the widow had no right to the property, and that the property was in danger of being wasted by her collusion with her relations. They therefore prayed for an order declaring their title to the property and directing that possession of the same should be delivered to them on their furnishing security in the sum of Rs. 5,000. They also asked for an order that an inventory should be taken. An inventory was taken by the order of the District Judge by his Nazir and a citation under sec. 4 of the Act was issued to the widow.

The widow appeared and denied the right of the applicants to the property left by her husband. She alleged that it descended by inheritance to her and her husband's daughter, that her husband was not a member of a joint Hindu family with his brothers and that he had separated from them some 20 years before his death.

The main point in dispute between the parties therefore was whether Ram Narain at the time of his death was a member of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law with his two brothers. The District Judge, however, refused to allow the widow to adduce evidence on this point and declined himself to go fully into the question whether there was a separation of the three brothers or not because that would have amounted on his part to trying the regular suit which might afterwards be brought by one or other of the parties, and it would also frustrate the object of the Act which demands a speedy and summary decision.

On the written application of the brothers and some income-tax returns which they put in and without examining the brothers or any witnesses on their behalf the District Judge on the 5th June 1907 passed an order declaring the applicants to be entitled to possession of the property left by the deceased.

On the 13th June last the present Petitioner applied to this Court and obtained a rule on the opposite party to show cause why the order passed by the District Judge purporting to be one under Act XIX of 1841 should not be set aside.

In support of the rule it has been contended that the District Judge in passing the order which he has passed has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law and has acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity. In the first place it has been argued that the provisions of Act XIX of 1841 cannot apply to the case of a family governed by the Mitakshara law. Sec. 1 of the Act provides that whenever a person dies, leaving property, moveable or immoveable it shall be lawful for any person claiming a right by succession thereto or any portion thereof, to make application to the Judge of the Court of the District where any part of the property is found or situate for relief, either after actual possession by another person or when forcible means of seizing possession are apprehended. It is argued that on the death of a member of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law the other members take the property left by the deceased by survivorship and not by succession. There is in fact no passing of the property from the deceased to any body else; there is only an accession to the property of the survivors and no succession by inheritance. It is pointed out that in the present case if there could be held to be any succession at all it would be succession by the widow and daughter as heirs who would have succeeded by inheritance. In our opinion this contention is sound and in the present case the Act cannot be taken to have any application.

Further, we think that this was not a case in which under any circumstances the Act should have been applied, and in support of this view we would refer to the case of Jasoda Kunwar v. Baboo Gouree Byjnath Pershad (1) which was decided so long ago as 1866 and in which the learned Judges expressed opinions on a case almost identical with the present with which we entirely agree. We hold that the present case was not one in which the District Judge should have taken any action under Act XIX of 1841, but should have left the parties to seek their remedy by a proper suit for establishment of their title. It was not a case, as contemplated by the Act, in which the widow had taken possession upon any pretended claim of right or by force or fraud.

Further, we may observe that there is no finding arrived at by the District Judge that the applicants would have been materially prejudiced by being compelled to bring a regular suit to establish their title.

The learned Judges who decided the case of Jasoda Kunwar v. Baboo Gouree Byjnath Pershad (1) were, however, of opinion that they were unable to interfere in that case as they could not hold that the Judge had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law after the widow had appeared and had submitted to the jurisdiction. We may, however, observe that Act XIX of 1841 empowers a District Judge to interfere with the ordinary rights of parties by means of a summary procedure, and that the view which has always been adopted by this Court with reference to other similar Acts or provisions of Acts of a similar nature must be taken to apply to proceedings taken under its provisions, that is to say, that before it can be held that a Court has jurisdiction it must be found that the provisions of law have been strictly complied with. In the present case we find that the applicants were not examined in support of their application as we think is clearly contemplated by the provisions of sec. 3 of the Act, nor were any witnesses examined to support their case. The present Petitioner also was not allowed to examine her witnesses to disprove the most important allegation in the application, namely, that Narain Ram was joint with his brothers when he had died—a finding on that allegation in favour of the applicants being essential to give the Court jurisdiction to pass the order on the application It is an elementary principle of law that no order can be passed against a person without allowing him to be heard and to adduce evidence in his defence. The reasons which the District Judge has given for refusing to examine the witnesses for the Petitioner in the present case do not in our opinion appear to be sufficient to warrant a departure from this principle. In our opinion, therefore, the District Judge has acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction, supposing him to have had jurisdiction to hear the present application, illegally and with material irregularity and the Petitioner was prejudiced thereby. His order therefore as it stands cannot be maintained. We think that this is not a case which under any circumstances we ought to send back to the District Judge in order that he may record the evidence which the Petitioner desired to produce. We think the proper course to follow is to make the rule absolute and to set aside the order of the District Judge.

We may further observe that in the cases of Fulchand and Soboranchand v. Musstt. Kismesh Koer (2) and Abdul Rahiman v. Kutti Ahmatl (3) the learned Judges appear to have had no hesitation in interfering on the ground that the provisions of Act XIX of 1841 had not been strictly complied with. We are of opinion therefore that in the present case we have full jurisdiction in revision to set aside the order of the District Judge.

The result, therefore, is that we make the rule absolute and set aside that order. We assess the hearing fee at 5 gold mohurs.

PANCHU GHOSH, Accused, Petitioner,
v.
KHODEL SARKAR, Complainant, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 203 and 257 and 437—Jurisdiction of District Magistrate under sec. 437—Order directing that the accused should not be proceeded against and the processes against him be withdrawn—Legality of—District Magistrate's power to revise such order.

Where on the acquittal of a co-accused, the other accused against whom process of arrest had been issued, surrendered before the Deputy Magistrate who tried the co-accused and that officer passed an order directing that the accused should not be proceeded against and that the warrant and other processes issued against him be withdrawn, Held—That this order of the Deputy Magistrate was bad in law and should be set aside. The proper course for him was to send notice to the complainant requiring him to proceed with the case and then dispose of the case according to law.

Held further—That the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction under sec. 437, Cr. P. C., to set aside the order and direct a retrial of the accused, as it was not an order dismissing a complaint or discharging the accused.

This was a rule issued on the 7th of June 1907, calling on J. A. Ezechiel, Esq., the District Magistrate of Nuddia, to show cause why the order passed by him on the 14th of May 1907, directing that the case under secs. 143 and 426 of the I. P. C. against the above Petitioner, against whom the warrants and other processes were withdrawn by the order of H. Van Gricken, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Krishnaghur, dated the 28th of March 1907, must proceed according to law and that he must appear to take his trial, should not be set aside.

Facts material to the report are briefly these :—

On the 8th of August 1906, on the complaint of one Khosdel Sarkar summonses under sec. 426, I. P. C, were issued against Sri Nath Halder and the Petitioner by Babu S. K. Mukherjee, Deputy Magistrate of Krishnaghur.

The case was transferred by the District Magistrate to the file of the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. H. Van Gricken, on the application of the complainant.

Sri Nath Halder appeared before Mr. H. Van Gricken, the trying Magistrate, but the Petitioner did not appear, and the Deputy Magistrate after a protracted trial disbelieved the entire story of the complainant and acquitted Sri Nath Halder by his judgment, dated 19th December 1906.

After this order of acquittal the Petitioner against whom a warrant had been issued and against whose property an order of attachment was made under sec. 88, Cr. P. Code, appeared before the trying Magistrate on 28th March 1907 and applied for withdrawal of warrant and also of the order of attachment on the ground that the other accused had been acquitted and the whole story of the complainant had been disbelieved and the Magistrate passed the following order :—

"From the evidence in the case I don't think the accused, Panchu Ghosh, should be proceeded against. The warrant and other processes are withdrawn."

Thereupon the complainant moved the District Magistrate of Nuddia to have the order of the Deputy Magistrate set aside, and the District Magistrate, purporting to act under sec. 437, Cr. P. Code and without giving any notice to the Petitioner, set aside the said order of the Deputy Magistrate with the following remarks :—

"This second class Magistrate had no power to stay proceedings under sec. 249, Cr. P. Code, or any other section. The case must therefore proceed against Panchu according to law, and he must appear to take his trial. The finding as regards Sri Nath Halder does not affect Panchu."

Against this order of the District Magistrate, the Petitioner obtained the present rule.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Charu Chandra Bhattacharjee for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

There has been considerable irregularity in the proceedings in this case. On the complaint of one Khosdel Sarkar, two persons Sri Nath Halder and Panchu Ghosh were summoned. Sri Nath appeared and, on a trial before the Deputy Magistrate, he was acquitted on the 19th December 1906. In the meantime, process for arrest was issued against Panchu. He subsequently surrendered and the Deputy Magistrate, on the 28th March

PANCHU GHOSH v. KHOSDEL SARKAR.

1907, passed an order to the following effect:—"From the evidence in the case, I do not think the accused Panchu Ghosh should be proceeded against. The warrant and other processes are withdrawn." It does not appear under what section of the Code this order was made. It was certainly not an order under sec. 203, C Cr. P., because the case had already gone beyond the stage of sec. 203, C. Cr. P. Processes had already been issued against both the accused. It was not also an order of acquittal because no order of acquittal under sec. 245, C. Cr. P., could be passed unless evidence was taken. No opportunity was given to the complainant to attend and give evidence. The judgment in favour of Sri Nath could not be evidence in favour of or against Panchu.

The District Magistrate by his order, dated the 14th May 1907, set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate and directed a retrial. As the order of the Deputy Magistrate was not one either under sec. 203 of the Code of dismissal of the complaint or an order of discharge of the accused, the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction under sec. 437 of the Code to make an order for retrial. He should have referred the case to this Court. That order is, therefore, set aside.

The order of the Deputy Magistrate, dated the 28th March 1907, should also be set aside. The proper course for the Deputy Magistrate was to send notice to the complainant and direct him to proceed with the case. He could not make any order in the case without notice to the complainant because the case had not been disposed of under sec. 247 of the Code. He should have proceeded regularly and passed orders according to law. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate or any other Magistrate to whom the case may be transferred by the District Magistrate should proceed according to law after giving notice to the complainant. We order accordingly.

An order prohibiting the use of a grave-yard is not such an order as can be made under sec. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

This was a reference by H. W. C. Carnduff, Esq., Sessions Judge of Patna, recommending that an order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Dinapore, dated the 21st of November 1906, be set aside. Material portions of the letter of reference are set out below.

"On the 22nd November last one Sheo Saran Lal presented a petition to the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Dinapore alleging that a Mahomedan grave-yard, which had existed in Mouzah Samsara "from time immemorial," had become "very objectionable from a sanitary point of view," that night-soil and refuse were freely deposited on it, that it was used as a public latrine, and that the pigs of Dusadhs and Domes frequented it in large numbers. In these circumstances the Petitioner prayed that the grave-yard should be closed and offered to provide another site for the burial of Mahomedan dead in some more suitable place. He at the same time complained of a totally different matter, namely, the unauthorised extension of the old grave-yard so as to encroach upon his land, named 36 persons (including the present Petitioners) as having caused this encroachment in the course of the last eight years, and stated that a civil suit on the subject had been lately instituted by him.

"On this somewhat confusing petition the Sub-divisional Magistrate issued a conditional order under sec. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requiring the 36 persons named in connection with the alleged encroachment to "close the grave-yard" or show cause why they should not be called upon to do so: and eventually on the 21st December, he made the order absolute entirely on the strength of a so-called petition of compromise filed on behalf of Sheo Saran and Najaf Ali, one of the thirty-six.

"It seems to me that this order is wholly bad. In the first place, the conditional order ought not to have been addressed to the encroachers, but to the Dusadhs, Domes and others who were responsible for the nuisance of the grave-yard. In the second place, the agreement on which alone the order absolute was based, bound no one but Sheo Saran and Najaf Ali and certainly did not bind the present Petitioners. Thirdly, had an effective agreement to relinquish the grave-yard in favour of a new had been arrived at, the necessity for action under sec. 133 must, ipso facto, have disappeared, and the Magistrate ought to have discharged the conditional order instead of making it absolute. And, fourthly, an order closing a grave-yard is not, I submit, such an order as can be made under the section referred to.

"As regards the last of these grounds it seems to me that the ruling in Indra Nath Banerjee v. Queen-Empress (1) is in point and supports my contention; and I need not do more than refer to the concluding paragraph of the judgment of Hill and Wilkins, JJ. I would, however, also point out that on Sheo Saran Lal's own showing there was no urgency in the matter, and I venture to question as the Punjab Chief Court seems to have done in Mir Imam Abdulaziz v. Queen-Empress (2) the applicability of sec. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure where it is not shown that imminent danger to the public is involved.

"For these reasons I recommend that the Sub-divisional Magistrate's order of the 21st December 1906 be set aside. The cause shown by the Magistrate, which is submitted with the record, does not, in my opinion, meet the chief objections raised by the Petitioners."

SHEO SARAN LAL v. LAL MOHAMAD LAL.

Judge of Patna asking us to set aside an order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Dinapore, dated the 21st of November 1906. The order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate was made under sec. 133, Cr. P. C, prohibiting the use of a burial ground by Mahomedans, and according to a petition of compromise presented by some of the second party he directed that another ground might be used for burial purposes.

We do not see how the present case can come under sec. 133 of the Code. It is not a case of the removal of nuisance from a public place as has been contended for by the learned vakil for the first party. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge in the reasons given by him and we accordingly direct that the order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Dinapore, dated the 21st November last, be set aside.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III, B. C. of 1899), secs. 408, 419 and 575—Bustee improvement—Failure to make road as in standard plan of bustee—Bustee ceasing to be so.

After huts have been removed from a bustee land, the land ceases to be a bustee land and the provisions of sec. 408 of the Calcutta Municipal Act can then no longer have any operation on the owner.

This was a rule granted on the 5th of July 1907, against an order of Babu Amrita Lal Mukherjee, Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 26th of June 1907, convicting the Petitioner under sec. $\frac{419}{575}$ of the Municipal Act and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 5 a day for three days.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

One Abinash Chandra Ganguli, proprietor of the premises Nos. 82 and 83, Ripon Street, which was bustee land before the year 1904, was served with a notice, on the 29th November 1904, under sec. 408 of the Calcutta Municipal Act for making certain improvements according to the standard plan kept in the office of the Municipal Corporation. He failed to comply with the notice and was prosecuted on the 24th December 1905 and fined Rs. 10 In the meantime and before the conviction, the proprietor had removed all the huts on the land and on an application being made by him for the erection of a building, sanction was given and the proprietor raised a two-storied masonry building on the 10th day of May 1907.

Many months after the first conviction the proprietor was served again with a summons from the Municipal Magistrate to appear to answer to a complaint made against him by the Corporation of Calcutta under sec. 575 of the Calcutta Municipal Act for failing to comply with the said notice, dated 29th November 1904, under sec. 408 to carry out the improvements in the bustee at Nos. 82 and 83, Ripon Street, as specificed in Sch. NOTES

A QUESTION OF CONSIDERABLE IMPORTANCE WAS recently raised before the Criminal Bench of the High Court then composed of Geidt and Sharfuddin, JJ. Several criminal appeals were presented in the office of the Criminal Appellate Side of the High Court on the 11th November last and were returned to the vakils concerned as time-barred. It appears that the 60 days allowed by the Limitation Act for presenting such appeals expired during the long vacation which came to a close on the 9th of November last. (Vide Notification printed at p. 289, Notes portion, 11 C. W. N.). The following day, the 10th of November, was a Sunday and it was argued before the Bench that under sec. 5, Limitation Act, the appeals had been preferred within time. It was submitted that the terms of the Notification make no distinction between civil and criminal appeals, that the vacation judges are appointed for attending to all urgent matters, whether civil or criminal, though it is no doubt the case that criminal cases, affecting as they do the liberty of persons, are generally treated as more urgent. The "vacation judges" did not, it was argued, constitute the ordinary Criminal Appellate Bench and the Court was closed for all ordinary criminal business as effectually as for ordinary civil business. Their Lordships however ruled that the appeals were time-barred.

IT MAY BE SAID THAT THE OFFICE OF THE CRIMINAL Appellate Side was open during several days of the vacation when the appeals if presented might have been received there. But the same may be said to be the case with Civil appeals. The office on the Civil Appellate Side remained open for several days after the long vacation commenced, and parties had the option to present appeals either during such time or on the re-opening of Court. It is also a matter of ordinary practice, that civil appeals may be presented during the long vacation when the office on the Civil Appellate Side is open to receive them and yet such appeals are not thrown out if presented on the re-opening day merely on the ground that the period of limitation expired on one of the days on which the office was open. We certainly do not find anything in the provisions of the Limitation Act, or in the terms of the High Court Notification to justify a contrary practice in respect of Criminal Appeals. Their Lordships evidently relied on the practice prevailing in the offices on the Criminal Appellate Side of treating the Vacation Bench as the Ordinary Criminal Appellate Bench of the High Court. But if this practice is contrary to the law as laid down in sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, it should be altered and brought into conformity with the law.

ACCORDING TO SEC. 316 OF THE PRESENT CODE OF Civil Procedure the title to immoveable property vests in the purchaser from the date of the confirmation of sale and not from the date of sale. This has created serious difficulties when the question to be decided is which of two successive auction-purchasers should have priority when the later purchaser has had his sale confirmed first. In deciding such questions of priority the Courts have been constrained to overlook the provisions of the section and act upon general principles of equity. The section really can have no intelligible application to such cases. This rule has therefore been altered by cl. 65 of the present Bill which provides that the title to such property vests from the time when it is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute.

THE ALTERATION HOWEVER WILL BE OPEN TO OTHER objections. This is evident from the fact that if the debtor's title is extinguished on the day of sale he will not be entitled to recover any arrears of rent or profits from it nor will he be bound to pay up arrears of rent or profits that may be due from him from that day. The purchaser on the other hand, whose title begins from the date of sale, will find it very difficult, if not impossible, to realise rents or profits before obtaining possession. The result will be that the property will be in arrears and will be liable to be sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rents or other dues by third parties by the time the sale is confirmed and possession delivered to the purchaser. Auction-purchases at present are found in the majority of cases to be risky and speculative transactions. It may be fairly assumed that the suggested alteration will make them even more so. Probably the difficulties will be met by introducing a clause making it obligatory on a judgment-debtor, when a sale has been set aside, to indemnify the purchaser for all just payments made by him and the Court of execution should be given summary powers to award such indemnity to the auction-purchaser.

CL. 36, SUB CL. (3) PROVIDES THAT NO APPEAL SHALL lie on a matter of costs only where by law such costs are left to the discretion of the Court, except by leave of the Appellate Court obtained on an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal. This provision requiring a party to obtain leave seems superfluous when it is provided in the rules that every appeal may be heard by the Appellate Court for admission before notice is sent out to the Respondent (Rule No. 11, Order No. XII, which is a rule similar to sec. 551 of the present Code). When there is this provision for a preliminary hearing, it seems to be wholly unnecessary that special leave should be sought and a separate application made for purposes of such appeals.

THE PROVISION IN THE BILL HAS NO DOUBT BEEN borrowed from the Judicature Act of 1873. But English decisions show that no leave is required in cases where the judge has failed to exercise "judicial discretion." This is evident from the recent case of Edmund v. Martell. We publish below the comments on this case in the columns of the English Law Journal of the 2nd November last.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal on Monday in Edmund v. Martell is only the last of a series of cases in which it has been held that the discretion of the Judge to deprive a successful party of his costs must be exercised judicially. In view of the previous cases in which the disallowance of costs has been reviewed by the Court of Appeal, it is rather surprising that the point should have been raised that sec. 49 of the Judicature Act, 1873, absolutely precludes an appeal without leave on a question of costs. No leave is required when the Judge has not exercised a 'judicial' discretion or when no materials exist for the exercise of his discretion. Thus it has been held that misconduct which has no relation to any issue between the parties is no ground for depriving a successful party of his costs; nor can he be visited with this penalty because he has raised what the Judge considers a shabby defence—e.g. the Gaming Acts—or because he refuses to let the Judge decide what should be done as a matter of fairness, irrespective of his legal rights. In Edmund v. Martell Mr. Justice Sutton disallowed the Defendant's costs on the ground that before making certain alterations to the premises of which she was tenant (which he held she was entitled to make) she ought to have communicated with her landlord. This, said the Court of Appeal, was disallowing the costs because the Judge thought that the successful party might have acted with more consideration, and no power exists to disallow costs on such a ground.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE relating to revision as embodied in sec. 622 are not substantially altered. But having regard to the conflict of authorities as to the interpretation of this section it is desirable that the conflict should be set at rest. Some judges are of opinion that gross and palpable errors of law do come under sec. 622 whereas others think that they do not. The Privy Council case of Amir Hassan, 11 Cal. 6, has been differently interpreted in different Courts. The views expressed in the following cases amongst others deserve consideration. (Mohunt Bhagwan v. Khettar Moni, 1 C. W. N. 617; Mathura Nath v. Umesh Chandra, 1 C. W. N. 626; Raghu Nath v. Chattrapat, 1 C. W. N 633; Enat Mondal v. Baloram Dey, 3 C. W. N. 581).

IT IS A WELL ESTABLISHED PRACTICE IN ENGLAND that the executive Government never interferes with the judiciary and the judiciary on the other hand hold themselves scrupulously aloof from all possible political influence in the discharge of their duties on the Bench. The following account of Lord Ellenborough's protest against the combination of executive and judicial functions written by a K. C. M. P. and published in the Law Times is both interesting and instructive. The conclusion of the writer also seems to suggest that in times of political trouble it is the duty of the judiciary to keep the placid stream of justice unpolluted by political bias.

The remarks of Lord O'Brien, the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, in the Irish King's Bench Division, on Tuesday last week, with respect to the attitude of the executive Government in not instituting proceedings against persons who by speeches incited to "cattle driving," and a reference to his own line of action, when Attorney-General, in ordering prosecutions, which elicited from the Irish Attorney-General the disclaimer of having "shirked" his duty, constitute a somewhat regrettable departure from the salutary practice by which judges hold themselves precluded from interference with the executive, more specially in matters relating to the administration of criminal law, in cases in which by virtue of their judicial position they may be called on to stand indifferent between the subject and the Crown. When, in 1806, on the formation of the Ministry of All the Talents, Lord Ellenborough, as Chief Justice of England, consented to be a member of the Cabinet, the anomalous character of his position as a Minister of the Crown and a judge was the subject of controversy between him and Mr. Perceval, a former Attorney-General, who was subsequently Prime Minister. Lord Ellenborough stated that he had made it a condition precedent to his entering the Cabinet that in all matters relating to the administration of the criminal law, or in any way, however indirectly, bearing on the policy of criminal prosecutions, he was to take no part whatever in consultations, of which he was not even to be informed. The union, however, of judicial and executive functions, subject even to this reservation, was regarded as open to such serious inconvenience that the precedent in the case of Lord Ellenborough has never since been followed. The cases are few in which a member of the judiciary has adopted the rôle of a critic of the Government, which is responsible for the peace of the country, with reference to the prosecution of alleged offenders. In 1798, indeed, a Chief Justice of Ireland came into collision with the Government of the day in the interest, not of the restriction of liberty, but of its defence. In 1798 Wolfe Tone, an Irishman, took part in a French invasion of Ireland. The French ship of war in which he sailed was captured, and Wolfe Tone was brought to trial in Dublin before a court-martial. He was thereupon sentenced to be hanged; he held, however, no commission as an English officer, his only commission being one from the French Republic. On the morning when his execution was about to take place, application was made to Lord Kilwarden, the Lord Chief Justice of the Irish Court of King's Bench, for a writ of habeas corpus.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

PUTTANNA v. RAMAKRISHNA, I. L R. 30 Mad. 195. Specific Relief Act, sec. 42—Declaratory suit.

On the death of the last male owner leaving a widow, the presumptive reversioner brought a suit for a declaration that the alleged Will of the last male owner is invalid and does not bind his reversionary interest. Held, that such a suit is maintainable under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

DURGOZI v. FAKEER SAHIB, I. L. R, 30 Mad. 197. Mahomedan Law—Sale of minor's property by mother.

The sale by the mother, though made by her as de facto guardian of the minor—the parties being Mahomedans—is not binding on the minor. There is no rule of Mahomedan law which precludes Mahomedans from claiming the benefit of the principle of equity embodied in sec. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Art. 127 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act is no bar to a suit brought by a person for partition of joint family property in his natural family after his adoption in another family is found to be invalid.

KARUPPAN v. KANDASAMI, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 207. Attached property, wrong done to—Remedy—Transfer of Property Act, sec. 91 (f)—Right to redeem, of attaching creditor.

The right given in sec. 91 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act is not one given to attaching judgment creditors by the Code of Civil Procedure. Where certain crops which had been attached were wrongfully carried away by a third person the remedy of the creditor is to move the executing Court and not to bring a separate suit.

RAMINEEDI v. LAKKOJI, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 210. Limitation Act, Sch. II, Art. 178.

Where an execution sale is set aside and the decree-holder obtains refund of the money deposited by him, time runs from the date of refund for making a fresh application for execution.

MAVULA v. MAVULA, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 212. Civil Procedure Code, sec. 586.

Where in a suit for contribution the debt became due by virtue of the payment of the co-sharer, sec. 586, C. P. C., will apply. In determining whether second appeals lie in execution proceedings of suits of a Small Cause Court nature the test is not the amount claimed in execution but in suit.

APPAYA v. KUNHATI, I. L. R 30 Mad. 214. Civil Procedure Code, sec. 310A.

The words "whose immoveable property has been sold" in sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, should be so construed as to include cases where a party acquires an interest in the property, such as would otherwise entitle him to apply under the section where the interest has been acquired after the sale and before the expiration of the thirty days.

KURELLA v. POLISETTI, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 217. Jurisdiction—Application for execution of Small Cause Court decree.

Where a Small Cause Court is abolished after passing a decree, the Court in which the decree is to be executed is the Court in which the suit had to be brought at the date of the suit if no Court of Small Causes had been in existence.

ALRAJA NAIDU, IN THE MATTER OF, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 222—Witness—Prosecution—Defamatory words.

It is against public policy that a person should be liable to prosecution for having used defamatory language in answer to questions put by a Court to a witness.

MUTHIA v. EMPEROR, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 225. Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 215, 436.

Sec. 215, Criminal Procedure Code, refers only to commitment actually made. It is open to the High Court to consider whether the Sessions Judge has or has not exercised a proper judicial discretion under sec. 436, Criminal Procedure Code, in setting aside a Magistrate's order of discharge; though the High Court has this power it will only exercise it where it is manifest that the Session Judge's order is improper.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH — Warren v. The London Road Car Company. Before MR. JUSTICE DARLING. 24th October 1907.

Solicitor—Preparation of brief—Solicitor's responsibility—Costs, order against solicitor for.

In this case which now came on upon the application of the Defendants, that the Appellant's solicitor, Mr. F. C. Appleton of Portugal Street, should be ordered to pay Defendant's costs for the reason that the facts reflected the gravest discredit upon him as an officer of the Court, Mr. Justice Darling in delivering judgment said :—

"The real question which led to the litigation was whether the Plaintiff had been hurt or not. He (the learned Judge) held there was no evidence of negligence and the jury agreed with him. Before acceding to this application he must see that the delinquency was thoroughly brought home to Mr. Appleton. The case was taken up absolutely on speculation. If Mr. Appleton believed that the Plaintiff was a man of some substance it was remarkable that he did not ask him for some money. The Police report said no one was injured and there was no suggestion in Plaintiff's proof that the Plaintiff was injured and yet Mr. Appleton went on with the action. The brief stated that the Plaintiff complained of being hurt at the time. Mr. Frazer (the clerk) put that in the brief but he did not know where he got it. Into the proof of Plaintiff as set out in the brief he put a statement of which there was no evidence whatever that the Plaintiff was pinched between his van and the horse trough. The excuse made by the clerk—and this threw a flood of light on the way in which some people get up briefs—was that if it was not true the witness would not say it. There was nothing to bring this home to Mr. Appleton but the brief was handed to Counsel with his name upon it and the gravest injustice would follow if briefs were prepared in this way. This action was brought on the flimsiest evidence and with an exagge-tion and falsification of the proofs and if he was at Mr. Appleton knew of it he would have tion in ordering him to pay the Defendant's costs. Even in regard to him the case was one of the gravest suspicion. As however he was not certain that Mr. Appleton was cognisant of the reprehensible conduct of his clerks he could not make the order asked for. The application would therefore be dismissed but without costs as the Defendants in bringing the application before the Court had performed a great public service."

Mr. A. J. Simon for the Defendants in support of Application.

KING'S BENCH.—Re Arthur Morris. Before MR. JUSTICES PHILLIMORE and WALTON. 29th October 1907.

Intoxicated juryman—Affidavit by solicitor or juror required.

A writ of certiorari was sought for by a rule nisi upon the Justices of Monmouthshire to show cause why that writ should not issue in the case of Arthur Morris It was said upon the affidavit that while he, Morris, was acting as a juryman he was under the influence of liquor. Immediately after the verdict (the prisoner under trial being found guilty of misdemeanour) another case was being tried when it was discovered that Arthur Morris was asleep. An officer of the Court had to shake him and it was without doubt that he was under the influence of liquor. In that case consequently the jury was discharged In the previous case too it was seen that the juryman was resting his head on his hands and was not taking much notice of what was going on. The cases of R. v. Murphy (L R. 2 P. C. 535) and R. v. Woodfall (5 Burr. 2661) were cited and the case of R v. Rothwell heard in August 1895, where when it was discovered after a man had been convicted and sentenced that a son had taken the place of his father, the latter being the qualified juryman the matter was brought to the Court's notice. The Court in refusing the rule nisi said in Rothwell's case the rule nisi was discharged on the ground that the objection ought to have been made at the time. The solicitor here was the prisoner's solicitor. While there was a chance of acquittal he took no exception to the man though he had noticed his behaviour. That was the time to call the attention of the presiding Judge. All the solicitor's affidavit says was that the man did not speak at the time, not that owing to his condition he could not speak. It was difficult to say that in this case there was not a verdict of 12 men. There were not sufficient materials before the Court. The application may be renewed. If it was to succeed there ought to be an affidavit of the circumstances made by a juryman. It was not sufficient to have the affidavit of a solicitor acting upon information given by a member of the jury.

Mr. Bosanquet in support of the Application.

ADMIRALTY COURT. The Welsh Girl. Before MR. JUSTICE BARGRAVE DEANE. 11th April 1906.

Dispute between owner and underwriters—Conflict between decision of United States Court and English Court—Valuation in policy.

The Welsh Girl was sunk and totally lost. This was owing to a collision with the steamship Commonwealth. In the policy she was valued at £1,350, but the owners insured her with the Dee Ship-Owners Mutual Insurance Club at only £1,000. Her owners were therefore her underwriters for £350. The owners of the Commonwealth having denied that their ship ran down The Welsh Girl, the said Insurance Club paid £1,000 to the owners of The Welsh Girl. Their allegation was that they did so on the understanding that the owners of The Welsh Girl would surrender to them any rights they recovered against the wrong-doers. The Insurance Club being convinced upon evidence they gathered, that the owners of the Commonwealth were the wrong-doers, issued a writ against them in the name of the owners of The Welsh Girl and thereafter the owners of the Commonwealth admitted liability. The Registrar assessed the value of The Welsh Girl at £1,000, with freight and interest, the amount was made up to £1,348, recoverable from the owner of the Commonwealth. The question now was of this amount paid into Court how much the Insurance Club was entitled to and how much the owners of The Welsh Girl. The former claim the £1,000 they had paid and the remainder under the said agreement to surrender all rights. The latter on the basis of the valuation of The Welsh Girl at £1,350 said that they ought to receive $\frac{350}{1350}$ while the Insurance Club should have $\frac{1000}{1350}$ or £740 odd. They denied the fact of any surrender agreement. Costs to be borne proportionately to the total amount recovered. The learned Judge held that the alleged surrender agreement had not been made out It must be remembered that once the value of the ship was fixed in the policy, neither owner nor underwriter had any right to depart from it. He held that the owners of The Welsh Girl were right in the proposed way of dealing with the money paid into Court. There was a conflict of authority between the United States decision (Zevingston v. Maryland, 130 Fed. Rep. 747) and of the English Court decision (North Eastern Insurance v. Armstrong, L. R. 5 Q. B. 333). Upon such conflict the learned Judge preferred to follow the English Courts.

PROBATE COURT. Wallis v. Brown and others. Before MR. JUSTICE BARGRAVE DEANE. 18th April 1907.

Probate—Triple murder—Will of murdered woman —Judge acting on medical evidence of wife having survived husband and sister.

Probate was claimed of the Will of Mrs. Maria Catherine Brown. There was only a formal defence. Mr. Brown a congregational minister suddenly went mad, and on 30th July 1906 murdered his wife and her elder sister Miss Mary Rider Elliott. The crime was known as the Wanborne triple tragedy, Mr. Brown having immediately after committed suicide The question was whether Mrs. Brown had survived her said sister and husband. Dr. Crossman gave evidence that from the position of the bodies he was in no doubt that she had survived both her husband and her sister.

The learned Judge acting on that evidence made the grant cum testamento annexo and declared that she had survived her sister and her husband.

Mr. Norton, K. C., and Mr. Grazebrook for the Applicants

Mr. Bayford for the executors of husband's Will.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD ROBERTSON. LORD COLLINS SIR ARTHUR WILSON. 1907. 29, October.	SHEIKH ALI HUSAIN, Defendant, Appellant, v. MAKHAN LAL, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Appeal struck off for default—Application for restoration.

In this case Appellant applied to have his appeal restored

The facts disclosed that Appellant had mortgaged his village Khandanian without possession to the Respondent in 1899 for an advance of Rs. 6,500 and afterwards a further charge was given for Rs 600.

Respondent commenced this suit for possession as "mortgagee of Khandanian" The Sub-Judge of Biswan dismissed the suit for possession but gave a decree for sale of property on default of payment of Rs. 996 which he found was due. Upon the Respondent's appeal that decision was reversed in November 1904 by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and Plaintiff was awarded a decree for possession.

Appellant was allowed in due course to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The order was dated 10th June 1905.

On 5th June 1907 the Registrar of the Privy Council wrote to Appellant's London Solicitors Messrs. Dawning Handcock & Co., that he did not see his way to granting Appellant any indulgence, that the record had arrived in England on the 22nd August 1906 and unless effectual steps were taken before the 14th June 1907, the appeals would be dismissed. On the 6th June 1907 Appellant's said solicitors wrote to Appellant to that purport and effect. Appellant now submitted that long before he could have received that letter, the 14th June had gone past. That he took steps immediately to despatch Rs. 4,000 to his solicitors through the Bank of Allahabad, but he was informed by the officials of the local Court that on 2nd July 1907 his appeal was struck off.

He now prayed for its restoration upon the ground that from February 1907 plague had been raging, in his town, and had nearly depopulated it. That his wife, a child, in all 13 members of his household had died of it.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon supported the application to restore the appeal under such circumstances, as also another appeal of the Petitioner against other Respondents which was in a suit concerning a mouzah known as Baragaon.

Mr. Ross opposed in the one case.
Mr. DeGruyther in the other.

After hearing the arguments Lord Robertson intimated that the applications would be refused with costs.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION Before CASPERSZ and CHITTY, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1022 OF 1907. IN THE MATTER OF GOURHARI SADHU KHAN, Petitioner. 31st October 1907.

Rule nisi for further enquiry—Failure to serve rule on accused—Proper order.

The Petitioner, Gourhari Sadhu Khan, obtained a rule upon the District Magistrate to show cause why his complaint against one Amar Kristo Dutta which was dismissed by the Joint Magistrate should not be heard according to law. This rule was at first issued only upon the District Magistrate, but subsequently the High Court directed a fresh rule to issue calling upon the District Magistrate as well as the accused, Amar Kristo Dutta, to show cause why the complaint should not be heard according to law. Efforts were made to serve a notice of the rule upon the accused, but it was not served as according to the District Magistrate's report the accused could not be traced.

Their Lordships observed :—

"In the circumstances we think the proper order to pass will be that the rule be discharged with liberty to the Petitioner Gourhari Sadhu Khan to make a fresh application to the Court when the whereabouts of the accused Amar Kristo Dutta have been ascertained. The present rule is discharged."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 555 OF 1905. KUNJ LAL MARWARI, Plaintiff, Appellant v. LACHMAN PROSAD SINGH AND OTHERS, Defendants No. 2 to 5, Respondents. 11th November 1907.

Sec. 583, Civil Procedure Code—Restitution—Trespasser.

Kunj Lal Marwari brought a suit for recovery of land against one Rampal Singh. A Receiver was appointed pending the suit who reported that he could not get peaceful possession as Lachman Prosad Singh and others claimed the land as tenants The Plaintiff thereupon added the said Lachman Prosad and others as Defendants No. 2 to 5 to the suit but the plaint was not amended nor any allegations made or reliefs claimed against them in the plaint. No issue was raised as to the status of the added Defendants but the Subordinate Judge who heard the case found that they had no title to the land and gave the Plaintiff a decree for khas possession against all the Defendants. The Defendants appealed to the High Court. The appeal of Defendant No. 1 was compromised but the appeal of Defendants 2 to 5 were decreed on the ground that there was no cause of action against them and Plaintiff adduced evidence to prove that he and not the Defendants 2 to 5 were in possession. The decree of the Subordinate Judge was set aside so far as Defendants No. 2 to 5 were concerned and the suit against them dismissed. Pending that appeal the Plaintiff executed the decree of the first Court and took delivery of khas possession. After the decree of the High Court the Defendants 2 to 5 applied for restitution under sec. 583, Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge directed that they should be restored to possession by ousting the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff filed the above appeal against that order and it was contended on his behalf (1) that Defendants 2 to 5 having been found by the Subordinate Judge in the original suit to have no title to the land they could not get back possession and at best they were trespassers and could not get the benefit of sec. 583, C. P. C. (2) Evidence ought to have been taken who was in actual possession on the date of delivery of possession. It was argued for the Respondent (1) that rightly or wrongly the Defendants 2 to 5 were in possession as tenants and khas possession was taken against them in execution of the decree of the first Court which was subsequently set aside and they are entitled to get back their previous possession. Sec. 583 contemplates that status quo ante should be restored. Assuming Defendants 2 to 5 were trespassers when khas possession was taken against them they are entitled to be restored to possession. (2) The petition under sec. 583 and the Nazir's report thereon prove that Defendants 2 to 5 were in possession on the date of delivery of possession and Sub-Judge relied on them.

Held—Under sec. 583, C. P. C, a trespasser should be restored to possession if he had been dispossessed in execution of a wrong decree which was subsequently set aside. The Court below must find on the evidence, that may be adduced, whether Defendants No. 2 to 5 were in actual possession of the disputed land either as tenant or as trespasser on the date the Plaintiff took delivery of possession in execution of the decree of the first Court and if they are found to have been in such possession they should be restored to their previous possession.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 307 OF 1906. MAKHODA DEBI AND ANOTHER, Appellants v. UMESH CHUNDER BANERJI AND OTHERS, Respondents. 12th Novmber 1907.

Ghatwali tenure—Mortgage—Mortgage deed describing the tenure as jaigir*—Decree on mortgage—Decree absolute—Mortgagor subsequently acquiring mokurari lease—Mortgagee purchaser—Transfer by mortgagor—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 43—Mortgagee purchaser and subsequent purchaser, contest between.*

The land covered by this litigation was a portion of ghatwali land which was in the possession of Defendant No. 4 as a ghatwal. In 1898, he mortgaged the land to the Defendant Nos. 2 and 3 alleging that it was jaigir land. There was nothing in the mortgage deed which would indicate that the mortgagor had no alienable interest in the land. It was not described in the deed as ghatwali. The mortgagees instituted their suit on the mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree on the 17th August 1901 and a final decree for sale on the 15th March 1902. In the meantime, the mortgagor entered into a contract of sale with the Plaintiffs; but no sale took place until the 30th April 1902. The contract of sale had not the effect of conveying the property. At the time of the mortgage, the mortgagor had no other right than that of a ghatwali tenure-holder; but on the 30th September 1901, the mortgagor obtained a mokurari right from the Burdwan Raj, the land having been resumed in the meantime and settled with the Raj. The mortgagee Defendants purchased the property on the 22nd May 1902 and succeeded in obtaining possession. The Plaintiffs brought this action for possession of the land covered by the mortgage and purchased by the mortgagee Defendants.

The Defendant No. 1 was a tenant on the land and he pleaded the right of the mortgagee Defendants in a suit which was instituted for rent against him by the Plaintiffs.

The first Court came to the conclusion that the mortgagee Defendants had right to possess the land by virtue of the mortgage, the mortgage decree and the sale thereunder. The lower Appellate Court, while holding that the mortgage was good and that the decree and the sale were neither fraudulent nor collusive came to the conclusion that the Plaintiffs were entitled to the reliefs claimed on two grounds; first, that it was not made out that the land covered by the plaint was identical with the land purchased by the mortgagee Defendants and, second, that under sec. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, those Defendants had not the right to resist the Plaintiffs. The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Held—That as the mortgagee Defendants had the right, they having obtained a final decree for sale before the purchase by the Plaintiffs, that right can not be defeated by the application of the rule laid down by sec. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act. It was a legal right created by a decree which cannot be disturbed and the mere fact that the Plaintiffs purchased subsequently would not, unless the mortgage and the decree were fraudulent, defeat the right of the mortgagee Defendants.

The rule of law which underlies sec. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is that as between the transferor and the transferee the transferor cannot plead subsequent title to the land transferred, if he had induced the transferee to pay money for the transfer. The principle is an extension of the well-known rule of estoppel.

Held also—That as the question of identity was not distinctly raised in the pleadings, it should not have been given effect to.

Mutwallis, suit against—All mutwallis to be made parties—Infant mutwalli not properly represented, effect of.

The suits were brought to realise arrears of rent. The rent was created by a putni pottah. The interest under that putni pottah subsequently became vested in the two Defendants as mutwallis. One of these mutwallis was a minor He was a Defendant. Guardian ad litem was appointed on his behalf for the purposes of the suit. It was found that the summons was not properly served upon him. An objection was taken at the hearing that the minor Defendant was a necessary party to the suit and that he was not properly represented before the Court. The Plaintiffs did not ask the Court to allow the suit to stand over for a short time to enable a guardian to be properly appointed.

The suit was dismissed by the first Court but was decreed by the Appellate Court. On appeal to the High Court, Held—That both the mutwallis are necessary parties and as they were not brought on the record, the Plaintiffs' suit must fail.

Possession, suit for—Diluvion—Onus of proof—Survey Map—Presumption.

The Plaintiff sued for a declaration of his talukdari right in and possession of certain land which he alleged was a part of his Mouzah Brahmachari. His case was that the land in question diluviated while it was in his possession, and had in part reformed adjacently to the Defendants' two mouzahs, and was in part represented by a kole, occupied by the Defendants and he alleged that the Defendants had dispossessed him both of the reformed land and the kole. To this the Appellants-Defendants pleaded that the Plaintiff's predecessor in title were never in possession of the land in question and that they enjoyed adverse possession thereof for more than 12 years. The Sub-Judge decreed the suit in the Plaintiff's favour as regards two of the plots of the land claimed on the ground that the Plaintiff's title before diluvion must be presumed from facts and the Defendants failed to prove possession of the land for 12 years before suit. The District Judge set aside this part of his decree on the ground that it was for the Plaintiff to prove possession within 12 years before suit and that this he had failed to do. The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The evidence of diluvion was supplied solely by a Survey Map of 1854, in which the boundary of the Plaintiff's mouzah was shown as crossing the river Hoora Sagar and following the course of the opposite bank in such a way as to enclose the space occupied by the two plots in question. The lower Court presumed that the two plots were in the possession of the Plaintiff at the time of the survey in such a way that they would still be in his possession when they become capable of being possessed.

Held—That the Plaintiff should lay a foundation for his case by proving that he was in possession of the land from which he was dispossessed in order to satisfy the requirements of the first two propositions laid down by Wilson, J., in Mono Mohun Ghose v. Mathura Mohun Roy (I. L. R. 7 Cal. 225).

Held further—The survey map cannot be taken as showing that the site of the river was ever dry land. The lower Court is wrong in presuming that there was ever such a possession of land as was found to have existed in the Plaintiff's predecessor in title.

been convicted under sec. 574 on the 20th December 1905. The proprietor was tried by the learned Municipal Magistrate, who, by his order dated 26th June 1907, convicted him under secs. 408 and 575 of the said Act and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 5 a day for 3 days.

Against the order the said proprietor moved the Hon'ble High Court and obtained a rule against the Municipal Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside on the ground of, first, that the prosecution was barred by limitation and, second, that the land having been taken out of the category of bustee land, the proprietor was not bound to make streets in accordance with the bustee plan.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri with Babu Jatindra Nath Ghose for the Accused, Abinash Chandra Ganguli.

Mr. Stokes with Babu Debendra Chunder Mullik for the Corporation.

The Petitioner is the proprietor of premises Nos. 82 and 83, Ripon Street, which was bustee land before the year 1904. On the 29th November 1904, a notice under sec. 408 of the Calcutta Municipal Act was served on him for making certain improvements according to the standard plan kept in the office of the Municipal Corporation. The Petitioner failed to comply with the notice and he was prosecuted and convicted on the 24th December 1905 and fined Rs. 10. In the meantime and before the conviction, the Petitioner had removed all the huts on the land and, on an application made by him for the erection of a building, sanction was given; but it is said that the sanction was clogged with the condition that a certain road should be made. The road is shown in the standard plan as E. E. After the removal of the huts and the erection of the building in accordance with the plan submitted by the Petitioner, the land ceased to be bustee land under sec. 419 of the Act which says that, after the huts are removed, the land shall cease to be bustee land, and it is found by the Municipal Magistrate and it is also stated in his explanation to this Court that the land has ceased to be bustee land. The provisions, therefore, of sec. 408 of the Act ceased to have any operation and the Petitioner could not, after the land ceased to be bustee land, be convicted under that section read with sec. 575 of the Act. The provisions of sec. 414 as to streets and passages also ceased to have any operation against the Petitioner.

It appears to us that there could be no conviction of the Petitioner under any of the sections of the Act, far less under sec. 408, for his not making the road according to the standard plan when the land had ceased to be bustee land. The Municipal Magistrate has convicted the Petitioner and sentenced him to pay a fine of five rupees for 3 days on account of his continual refusal to comply with the notice under sec. 408 of the Act. But under the circumstances stated above, there was no offence, far less a continuing offence, committed by the Petitioner.

The learned Counsel for the Corporation has relied on the proviso of sec. 419; and that is also the law which the Magistrate in his judgment and also in his explanation has relied on. The proviso, however, does not empower the Corporation to prosecute a person who was the owner of a bustee but who has ceased to be the owner of the land as a bustee under sec. 408. It does not appear, that the proviso compels the owner of a bustee to make a road according to the road indicated in a standard plan after the land has ceased to be bustee land. It only says, supposing it refers to roads indicated in the plan, that they shall continue to be private streets and shall be subject to the provisions of sec. 416, sub-sec. (2) Neither this proviso nor any other section of the Act authorizes the Corporation to bring a criminal action under the Act against the proprietor of a bustee. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the conviction and sentence must be set aside.

It is not necessary for us to express any opinion on the question of limitation raised by the rule.

The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Messrs. G. N. Dutt, Attorney for the Accused.

BAJRANGI SINGH (since deceased, and now represented by Drigpal Singh and Gulab Singh) and anr., Appellants, Plaintiffs,

v.

MANOKARNIKA BAKHSH SINGH, Respondent, Defendant.

Hindu Law—Widow's estate—Alienation of husband's estate without legal necessity—Consent of reversioners—Consent ex post facto—Bhale Sultan Chattri tribe of Oudh—Custom excluding daughter and her issues from inheritance—Proof—General custom—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 48.

In the absence of legal necessity a Hindu widow can alienate property to which she has succeeded on the death of her husband with the consent of the nearest reversioners for the time being. Ordinarily the consent of the whole body constituting the next reversioner should be obtained, though there may be cases in which special circumstances may render the strict enforcement of this rule impossible.

The consent of the reversioners is effective even when given after the execution of the deed of transfer.

Held—That the evidence adduced in this case proved the existence amongst the Bhale Sultan Chattris in Oudh of a general custom excluding daughters and their issue from inheritance.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, dated the 6th March 1900, which affirmed a decree of the Court of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated the 23rd January 1899.

The property in dispute is an estate comprising the villages of Karnai, Pindara, Rampur, Surpur, Mansahpur, Misirpur and Rambagar, and shares amounting to 5 annas 4 pie in each of the villages of Kishundaspur and Math Sarastigir, all being situate in the District of Sultanpur. The Appellants claimed to recover possession of the said estate as next heirs to one Seetla Bux, who died prior to the annexation of Oudh, leaving him surviving a widow, Daryao Kunwar, and two daughters, Janga Kunwar and Jagrani Kunwar. The widow succeeded to possession of the estate, and died on the 6th August 1892; and the main question raised on the present appeal was whether the Appellants on her death became entitled to the immediate possession of the said estate to the exclusion of the daughters and their issue. The Respondent was the son of the said Jagrani Kunwar, who married one Maheshar Bux Singh.

Daryao Kunwar had during her lifetime executed several conveyances of portions of the estate. On the 21st October 1872, she sold the said village of Surpur to Maheshar Bux for Rs. 1,000. On the same date she sold the villages of Misirpur and Mansahpur to the same person for Rs. 900 and Rs. 1,000 respectively. On the 24th July 1875, she sold the remaining portion of the estate to Maheshar Bux for Rs. 9,000. In pursuance of these sale-deeds the purchaser was placed in possession and his name duly recorded in the revenue registers.

The following pedigree which was set out in the plaint is material to explain the litigation which then arose and the pleadings in the present case:—

(8) I. L. R. 25 Bom. 129 (1900).

BAJRANGI SINGH v. MANOKARNIKA BAKHSH SINGH.

In 1873 Matadin, the father of the Appellants, instituted a suit against Daryao Kunwar to obtain a declaration that the said sale-deeds, dated the 21st October 1872, should be cancelled and set aside. On appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner by judgment and decree, dated the 6th May 1874, his suit was dismissed.

A suit of a similar nature by Janga Kunwar, one of the daughters of Seetla Bux, was also dismissed on the 25th August 1876.

Subsequently on the 4th May 1877, some of the possible reversioners to the estate including Baijnath, the father of Mahpal Singh, executed a deed by which they expressly ratified and confirmed the said deeds of sale executed by Daryao Kunwar, and on the 29th January 1878, a similar deed was executed by Janga Kunwar and Matadin Singh, the father of the Appellants, Bajrangi and Jagdamba.

After the death of Daryao Kunwar, on the 6th August 1892, no dispute arose. Maheshar Bux however died on the 23rd April 1893, and the usual quarrel then occurred as to possession and the alteration of names in the Collector's register. By order made on the 28th June 1893 the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur directed the name of the Respondent, Maheshar Bux's son, to be entered in the Revenue Records, and placed him in possession of the estate in dispute. In consequence of the said order, Mahpal Singh and Jagdamba Bux Singh, on the 17th February 1894, instituted the present suit in the Court of the District Judge of Rae Bareli. By order, dated the 30th July 1895, Bajrangi Singh was added as Plaintiff; and Mahpal Singh having died pendente lite, the suit was continued by Jagdamba Bux Singh and Bajrangi Singh alone, who were substituted on the record as representatives of Mahpal Singh.

The Plaintiffs made title to the property as the next heirs to Seetla Bux Singh on the death of Daryao Kunwar. The sale-deeds executed by the said lady in favour of Maheshar Bux Singh it is pleaded were not executed under circumstances which would bind the reversioners. It was further contended that daughters and their issue were excluded from succession by the custom of the Bhale Sultan tribe, to which the parties belonged.

The Defendant denied the pedigree propounded by the Plaintiffs and it was also denied that they were the next heirs to the estate. It was alleged that the succession was governed by the ordinary Hindu law, and not by custom. It was pleaded that Daryao Kunwar had an absolute estate in all the property in suit except one house, and that the suit was barred by limitation. As to the moveable property, the Defendant set up a title by Will, executed by Daryao Kunwar on the 18th November 1887. It was lastly contended that the sale-deeds executed by Daryao Kunwar were binding on the Plaintiff, not only because of the circumstances under which they were executed, but also in consequence of the affirmance of the said deeds by the deeds executed by Baijnath and Matadin on the 4th May 1877, and 29th January 1878.

On the 13th February 1896, the District Judge recorded a preliminary judgment, by which he decided that the Plaintiffs were not barred from suing by the said deeds executed by Baijnath and Matadin: and after recording further evidence, final judgment was delivered, on the 23rd January 1899.

The questions for determination were:—

(a) Whether on the pedigree the Plaintiffs were the next reversioners?

(b) Whether a custom excluding daughters and their issue from succession was proved?

(c) Whether the sale-deeds executed by Daryao Kunwar were binding on the Plaintiffs?

(d) Whether the suit was barred by limitation?

On these points the final judgment of the District Judge decided (a) that the Plaintiffs were not the nearest heirs, (b) that the custom was not proved, and (c) that the sale-deeds were not binding as having been executed under legal necessity, and (d) that the suit was not barred by limitation. On these findings, a decree was made dismissing the suit with costs.

From the said decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, and on the 6th March 1900, the said Court delivered judgment, and decided (a), that the Plaintiffs were on the pedigree the nearest male heirs of Seetla Baksh Singh (b), that the custom excluding daughters and their issue was sufficiently proved, and (c), that the conveyances executed by Daryao Kunwar in favour of Maheshar Baksh Singh having been ratified and confirmed by Baijnath and Matadin were binding on the Plaintiffs. In accordance with these findings, a decree was made affirming the decree of the District Judge and dismissing the appeal with costs.

Mr. DeGruyther for the Respondent conceded at the outset that he would not dispute that Plaintiffs were the next reversioners.

Mr. Ross for the Appellants referred to Sumbhoolall v. Collector of Surat (10) as to restrictions on widow's power of alienation, Bahadur Singh v. Mohar Singh (11), Mayne, 7th Edn., p. 855, 6th Edn., pp. 637-8; Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (12), Lekraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh (13), Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (14). As to value of wajib-ul-arz.

Mr. DeGruyther went into evidence to show that the custom excluding daughters was not made out. Has a Hindu widow power to alienate the absolute estate? She can in such a case pass the estate. In 1856 it was considered settled law, Rany Srimuty Dibeg v. Rany Koond Luta (15). It depends in the concurrence of heirs, Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narrainapah (1); alienation may be made with consent of heirs, Raj Lukhee Dabea v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry (2): may be validated by consent of reversioners, Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari

Mr. Ross replied. Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (4) is a case of ratification not of consent at the time of alienation. [SIR ARTHUR WILSON referred to sec. 48 of that Act as to existence of custom.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR ANDREW SCOBLE.—Sitla Bakhsh Singh, a Hindu of the tribe of Bhale Sultan Chhattris, resident in Sultanpur, died some time before the annexation of Oudh, leaving him surviving, a widow named Daryao Kunwar, and two daughters, Janga Kunwar and Jagrani Kunwar. He was absolute owner of an estate known as Pindara Karnai and other property, which at his death passed to his widow and, at her death, would have passed to his daughters, but for a custom of the tribe excluding daughters and their issue from succession. The widow died on the 6th of August 1892, having previously sold the whole of the estate to her son-in-law, Maheshar Bakhsh Singh, the husband of her daughter Jagrani Kunwar, and mutation of names in the Revenue Registers was effected in his favour. After the death of Maheshar, which occurred on the 3rd of April 1893, the name of his son, Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh, the present Respondent, was entered in the Government Records as proprietor of the estate; and the present Appellants (with one Mahpal Singh, who died while the case was pending) brought the suit now under appeal, claiming that, by reason of the custom of the Bhale Sultan Chhattris, they were the next heirs in reversion to the estate of Sitla Bakhsh.

In the Courts below, and before their Lordships two main questions were raised. First, whether the custom had been proved; and, secondly, whether certain deeds confirming the sales by the widow to Maheshar, executed by the then nearest reversioners, and disclaiming all title to the property in dispute, were binding on their descendants, the Appellants, who were the nearest reversioners at the time when the succession opened, at the widow's death. In the Courts in India, the District Judge held the custom not proved and the deeds not binding; the Judicial Commissioner came to the exactly opposite conclusion on both points. The conflict of opinion in the Courts in India upon the question of custom has made it necessary for their Lordships to examine carefully the evidence in this case, in order to ascertain whether the alleged custom has been satisfactorily proved. In making this examination, their Lordships have been materially assisted by the elaborate analysis of the evidence made by both the learned Judges below, and by the learned Counsel who argued the appeal. They will briefly state the grounds on which they consider the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner on this point must prevail.

BAJRANGI SINGH v. MANOKARNIKA BAKHSH SINGH.

The Bhale Sultan clan appear to have derived their name, some three centuries ago, from their warlike exploits in the service of the Emperors of Delhi. They are now settled in considerable numbers in the district of Sultanpur in Oudh, in several villages in which they constitute the bulk of the population. In the language of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (secs. 48) they form a "considerable class of persons." The evidence in support of the custom was mainly oral, and no document was produced of an earlier date than the British annexation. Thirty-five witnesses were examined on behalf of the Appellants. They were all members of the Bhale Sultan clan, mostly men of mature age and of good position. They all gave evidence that in their clan it was the custom that daughters and their issue were excluded from succession to the separated estate of their father, and put forward thirty-nine instances in which this exclusion had taken place. The Judicial Commissioner held that twenty of these instances had been satisfactorily proved. For the Respondent no evidence was given in contradiction of these instances, though ample time was allowed for the production of such testimony had it been available; but six witnesses were called, one of whom had signed a wajib-ul-arz in which the custom was set up, and two gave evidence in support of the custom.

In corroboration of the oral evidence, a number of village administration papers (wajib-ul-arz) were produced, of which seven were admitted by both Courts to be relevant, as relating to Bhale Sultan villages. In all these the rule is stated that a daughter and her issue do not alal-umum (that is, as a general rule) obtain the share. One of them is attested by 44 Zemindars and Lambardars of the village, another by 49, others by 8 or 10. The dates of these documents are not given, but they were all officially recorded prior to the institution of this suit, and quite independently of the parties thereto.

One other piece of evidence remains to be noticed. It has been stated that Sitla Bakhsh left two daughters, Janga Kunwar and Jagrani Kunwar. In 1876, Janga Kunwar filed a suit against her mother Daryao Kunwar and her brother-in-law Maheshar Bakhsh for a declaratory decree that she was entitled to succeed to half her father's estate; and in answer to her claim, the vakil for the Defendants put forward the plea that "among Bhale Sultans a daugther never succeeded to the inheritance of her father." The Court came to no decision on the point, but disposed of the suit on another ground, reserving Janga Kunwar's right to put forward her claim on the death of her mother. The fact, however, that this defence was raised shows that the existence of the custom was present to the mind of Daryao Kunwar at the date of the transactions to which their Lordships will now proceed to refer.

Although Daryao Kunwar appears to have been willing to invoke the custom as a defence against the claim of her unmarried daughter, she was at the same time endeavouring to defeat the operation of the custom in regard to her married daughter, Jagrani Kunwar, and her husband, Maheshar Bakhsh Sing, the father of the present Respondent. During the period from 21st October 1872 to 24th July 1875, she executed five deeds of sale, by which she purported to transfer, for valuable consideration, successive portions of her husband's property to Maheshar Singh. The District Judge has found that these deeds were executed without "legal necessity"; and it is certain that the preliminary consent of her husband's reversionary heirs was not obtained. One of these heirs, Matadin Singh, the father of the Appellants, Jagdamba Singh and Bajrangi Singh, brought a suit in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur in 1873 to set aside three of the deeds; but on appeal this suit was dismissed on a technical ground by the Judicial Commissioner on the 6th May 1874. Janga Kunwar's suit, already referred to, was dismissed on the 25th August 1876. Having thus succeeded, for the time being, in the Courts, Daryao Kunwar entered into negotiations with the persons who were at that time admittedly the nearest reversionary heirs to her husband's estate, and obtained from them two documents, called deeds of relinquishment, one dated the 4th May 1877 and the other dated the 29th January 1878. The first of these was signed by five persons, four of whom died without issue in Daryao Kunwar's lifetime, and the fifth, Baijnath Singh, is the father of the Plaintiff Mahpal Singh, who died while this suit was pending in the Court of the District Judge, and who is now represented by the Appellants. The second was signed by Janga Kunwar, Matadin Singh (the father of the present Appellants), and Hanuman Singh, who is still living, but is not a party to this suit. In these documents, which are identical in terms, after enumerating the sales by Daryao Kunwar to Maheshar Singh, the executants go on to say:—

"We all have given our full consent to all those sale-deeds which the Thakurain has executed in favour of the Babu, and will ever remain so satisfied. And after the death of the Thakurain we shall bring no claim against the Babu on account of the moveable and immoveable property owned by her; hence we have executed this deed of agreement so that it may serve as an authority, and be of use in time of need."

"It was not disputed," says the Judicial Commissioner in his judgment, "that the executants of these deeds received consideration for ratifying the transfers and agreeing not to dispute their validity. Indeed it was said that they were paid to execute the deeds." Upon these facts, the Judicial Commissioner found that the transfers to Maheshar Singh were valid, and dismissed the appeal.

The restrictions imposed by the Hindu law upon the widow's power to alienate her deceased husband's estate have frequently been the subject of consideration by this Committee.

"For religious or charitable purposes, or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes. To support an alienation for the last she must show necessity. On the other hand it may be taken as established that an alienation by her which would not otherwise be legitimate may become so if made with the consent of her husband's kindred." [Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narrainapah (1)].

"The kindred in such case," their Lordships

observe in a later case, "must generally be understood to be all those who are likely to be nterested in disputing the transaction. At all events, there should be such a concurrence of the members of the family as suffices to raise a presumption that the transaction was a fair one, and one justified by Hindu law." [Raj Lukhee Dabea v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry (2)].

Upon the practical application of this general principle there has been much discussion in the High Courts in India. A Full Bench of the High Court at Allahabad, in the case of Ramphal Rai v. Tula Kuari (3) considered that :—

"The plain principle deducible from these rulings of the Privy Council is that in order to validate an alienation by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's estate for purposes other than those sanctioned by the Hindu law, it must have the consent of all those among his kindred who can reasonably be regarded as having an interest in questioning transaction."

And they accordingly held that the consent of the heir presumptive to an alienation by a widow was not sufficient to defeat the rights of a more remote reversioner, and that an assignment by the widow to the heir presumptive had no greater effect in her favour than it would have had if he had been a stranger. "We think," say the learned Judges,

"that the spir of the Hindu law is to keep the right of succession to the deceased husband's estate open until the widow's death, free of any control by her, except in such cases as she has a power to adopt; and that no reversioner possesses such a present vested interest as enables him to combine with her in defeating his co-reversioners. In other words, her right and theirs have one common basis, that of survivorship to the widow, and it is incapable of anticipation."

The High Court of Calcutta has taken different view, based upon a long current of authority in that Court, albeit two of the learned Judges—Garth, C. J., and Pigot, J.—considered that the principles on which the decision was founded were open to great objection. In the case of Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (4), a Full Bench held that under the Hindu law current in Bengal—

"transfer or conveyance by a widow upon the ostensible ground of legal necessity, such transfer or conveyance being assented to by the person who at the time is the next reversioner, will conclude another person not a party thereto, who is the actual reversioner upon the death of the widow, from asserting his title to the property."

The ground of the decision is thus shortly stated by Garth, C. J. :—

"If it is once established as a matter of law that a widow may relinquish her estate in favour of her husband's heir for the time being, it seems impossible to prevent any alienation which the widow and the next heir may agree to make.

And more fully by Mitra, J. :—

"Whatever conflict there may be upon the question whether a Hindu may sell the whole inheritance without any legal necessity, merely with the consent of the next male heir, there is no conflict in the decisions, since the case of Jadamoncy was decided in the late Supreme Court of Calcutta, upon the question whether the relinquishment by a Hindu widow of her estate to the next male heir of her husband is valid or not. Such relinquishment by the widow has been held for a long series of years to be valid. . . . But if the widow is competent to relinquish her estate to the next male heir of her husband, it follows as a logical consequence, that she can alienate it merely with his consent without any legal necessity."

In a subsequent case [Radha Shyam v. Joy Ram Senapati (5)] the same High Court held that the consent must be of the whole body of persons constituting the next reversion.

The Calcutta decision, of course, is not binding upon other High Courts, but it has been followed in Madras. In the case of Marudamuthu Nadan v. Srinivasa Pillai (6), decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 1898, Subramania Ayyar, J., says:—

"I think it unnecessary to go into the question whether the Hindu law, according to the texts or the commentaries, lends support to the doctrine that a female holding a qualified estate can validly surrender such an estate so as to entitle the then immediate reversioner to enter upon the inheritance and to hold it absolutely as if the succession had opened by the natural or civil death of the qualified owner. Though there has been no course of decisions on the point in this Presidency as in Bengal, yet instances have occurred which show that parties have acted upon the view that such surrenders are valid in these parts as well. This appears even from some of the cases which have come before the Court. Since there is nothing in the doctrine itself which makes it less suited to the community in this Presidency than to the community in Bengal, it is not surprising that the Calcutta rulings have in practice been followed in this Presidency also. In such circumstances the rule, as stated by the Judicial Committee in Behari Lal v. Madho Lal (7), should, I think, be taken to be equally applicable to this Presidency too, subject, no doubt, to the restriction pointed out by their Lordships, viz., that the surrender should be absolute and complete, and that the whole limited estate should be withdrawn, a restriction that would guard against the injurious results which would follow if the rule were not so qualified."

The question was also considered by the High Court of Bombay in 1901 in the case of Vinayak v. Govind (8). In the course of his judgment Jenkins, C. J., says (at p. 133):—

"There can be no question that, apart from legal necessity, a widow can validly alienate land that has devolved upon her from her husband with the consent of the reversioner. The basis on which this rests is a matter of controversy. The High Court of Calcutta on the whole appears to favour the view that the consent derives its effect from the power supposed to reside in a widow of accelerating by the surrender of her own interest, the interests of the reversioners. It is impossible not to feel some difficulty as to this doctrine. . . . . The other view is that the consent of the persons interested to oppose the transaction evidences its propriety, if not its actual necessity. This has a parallel in the law relating to a widow's adoption under certain circumstances, and it finds support in the texts . . . . This view has too, in a measure, the sanction of the Privy Council."

And he quotes the cases in Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narrainapah (1) and Raj Lukhee Dabea v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry (2), which have been already referred to. "Turning then to Bombay," he goes on to say, "the High Court here appears to have accepted this view rather than that which finds favour in Calcutta. In the same case Ranade, J., observes (at p. 139):—

"The Bengal theory that the widow's interest was a life interest, and that her surrender or release of that interest to the next reversioner accelerates his obtaining the full title has never met with much acceptance on this side of India. Our leading case—[Varjivan Rangji v. Ghelji Gokaldas (9)]—lays down that the consent must be of all the kindred, but that does not mean that every single member who is a kindred must actually join in the conveyance."

And the conclusion to which he comes is that, in order to validate an alienation by a widow otherwise than from legal necessity,

"The consent of the reversioners must be of such kindred the absence of whose opposition raises a presumption that the alienation was a fair and proper one."

The principle being thus admitted by the High Courts in India, the question of the quantum of consent necessary only remains. The High Court of Allahabad, indeed, does not recognize the validity of surrenders in favour, or alienations with the consent, of presumptive reversioners, so as to defeat the title of the actual reversioner at the time of the widow's death. But this restriction is at variance with the principle itself, and is not in accordance with the practice in other parts of India in which the Mitakshara law prevails. Their Lordships have not been referred to any cases in the Province of Oudh in which this restriction has been acted upon; and though they would be unwilling to extend the widow's power of alienation beyond its present limits, they cannot adopt the further limitation which the Allahabad High Court has sought to establish. They agree with the High Court of Calcutta [Radha Shyam v. Joy Ram (5)] that ordinarily the consent of the whole body of persons constituting the next reversion should be obtained, though there may be cases in which special circumstances may render the strict enforcement of this rule impossible.

Applying this rule to the case now under consideration, the Judicial Commissioner has found that "of the reversionary heirs who executed the deeds, Hanuman Singh and Sheo Dayal Singh were four degrees removed, and Sheo Bakhsh Singh, Sheo Narain Singh, Baijnath Singh, and Matadin Singh were five degrees removed from Jai Singh, the common ancestor of themselves and Sitla Bakhsh Singh. There do not appear to have been any other reversionary heirs alive at the time of the transfers superior in degree to Hanuman Singh and Sheo Dayal Singh, or equal in degree to Sheo Bakhsh Singh, Sheo Narain Singh, Baijnath Singh and Matadin Singh, or indeed any other reversionary heirs at all in the line of Jai Singh Rai." Their Lordships agree with the Judicial Commissioner that the consent of these persons was sufficient, and that it is immaterial that it was given after the execution of the deeds. Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori aequiparatur. The Appellants who claim through Matadin Singh and Baijnath Singh must be held bound by the consent of their fathers.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed and the decree of the Judicial Commissioner, dated the 6th March 1900, confirmed. The Appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

Solicitors: Messrs. Barrow, Rogers and Neville for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Watkins and Lempriere for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 169 OF 1905.

BRETT, J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1907. Heard, 4 and 5, June. Judgment, 20, June.	MAHAMED ISHAQ and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. SHEIKH AKRAMUL HUQ and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Mahomedan Law—Wife's death in husband's lifetime—Deferred dower—Right accrues to heirs of wife after her death—Cause of action not joint—Suit by one of heirs—Other heirs, necessary parties—Joinder of an heir after time—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sec. 22—Joint covenant—Right of action when joint and when several.

When a Mahomedan wife who has not been divorced by her husband dies during the husband's lifetime, the right to sue for her deferred dower accrues for the first time to her heirs.

The cause of action is not a joint one and any of the heirs may sue the husband separately for his or her share.

But in such a suit the presence of all the heirs is necessary in order effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the claims of the several heirs.

Where in a suit by one such heir, one of the remaining heirs was not made a party Defendant till after the period of limitation applicable to the suit had expired,

Held—That sec. 22 of the Limitation Act was no bar to the suit, as no relief was sought against the latter and her presence was only required for the effectual and complete adjudication of the claims of the several heirs.

Semble—Even if the interest of the heirs of the deceased was a joint interest as the Defendant, the husband, was himself one of the heirs, the cause of action must be taken to have been split up.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The question whether a contract is joint or several or joint and several is a question of intention to be determined by considering not only the language but also the interests and relations of the parties.

If it is the intention of the parties that the obligation is to be indivisible there is a joint right which is vested in several persons and which must be enforced by them jointly.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of February 1905, against the decision of T. W. Richardson, Esq., District Judge of Patna, dated the 4th of January 1905, reversing the decision of Babu Purno Chandra Roy, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 8th of July 1904.

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of Mookerjee, J.

Moulvies Syed Shamsul Huda and Mahommed Mustafa Khan for the Appellants.

Moulvi Mahommed Ishfaq for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

BRETT, J.—The facts of the present case have been set out at length in the judgment of my learned colleague, which I have read, and it is not necessary for me to burden my judgment with a repetition of them. The main question which has come before us for determination in this appeal is whether the Plaintiff No. 1 and after his death his heirs and representatives as heirs of Musst. Bashiran, their grandmother, and Plaintiff No. 2 as assignee of the original Plaintiff No. 1, are entitled to sue separately to recover the share to which they claim to be entitled under the Mahomedan law of that share in the deferred dowers of Musst. Zainab which on her death devolved on Musst. Bashiran, her grandmother. The suit is brought against Defendant No. 1, the husband of Musst. Zainab, and all the other persons who as heirs of Musst. Zainab are entitled to share in the dower have been brought on the record as pro formâ Defendants. One of them however, Musst. Mahmudan, was not brought on the record till the 1st June 1904, Musst. Zainab died on the 8th September 1900, and Musst. Bashiran died on the 5th January 1901.

The case of Defendant No. 1, the husband, was that the Plaintiff could not bring the suit without making all the persons who were entitled to any share of the deferred dower parties, that the suit so far as Musst. Mahmudan was concerned was barred by Art. 104, Sch. II of the Limitation Act at the time when she was brought on the record as more than 3 years had then elapsed from the death of Musst. Zainab, and therefore that the whole suit was barred under the provision of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act.

The Court of first instance held that the omission to make Musst. Mahmudan a party within the period of limitation was not fatal to the case as the claim was not against her but against Defendant No. 1 only, that no relief was sought against her and that she and the Defendants other than the Defendant No. 1 were pro formâ Defendants only.

Finding this point and the others raised in the issues in favour of the Plaintiff the Subordinate Judge gave the Plaintiff a decree for the full relief claimed.

On appeal the District Judge has come to a different conclusion on the point noted above and has reversed the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge and has dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit. The Plaintiffs have appealed.

The District Judge held that there was only one cause of action against Defendant No. 1 for the dower due by him to his deceased wife, Musst. Zainab, and that the claim being founded on a single cause of action all the heirs are necessary parties to a suit for the enforcement of the claim. In support of this view he relied on the cases of Ahinsa v. Abdul (1) and Kandhiya v. Chander (2), as also on the cases of Ram Sebuk v. Ram Lall Koondoo (3), Ramdoyal v. Junmenjoy Coondoo (4), Durga Charan Sarkar v. Jotindra Mohan Tagore (5).

Though he confirmed the findings of the Subordinate Judge on the other points in issue between the parties he decreed the appeal because he thought that the suit ought to have been dismissed because Musst. Mahmudan was not made a party in time.

The arguments in support of this appeal have been confined to attacking this finding of the District Judge and after consideration of the facts and the arguments advanced on both sides, I am of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge is not correct.

In the first place I am unable to agree with the District Judge in holding that the claim is founded on a single cause of action and therefore I hold that the cases on which he relies cannot be taken as authorities for determining the present case. No doubt if the cause of action were one and indivisible the remarks of the Judges of the Madras High Court in Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Saheb (1) would apply and the cause of action could not be divided against the Defendant the obligee, without his privity. But in this case he is himself one of the persons entitled with the Plaintiffs and the other Defendants to a share in the dower as one of the heirs of his deceased wife and so far as he is concerned he could hardly join in a joint cause of action with the others against himself. Clearly in a case like the present the cause of action must be divisible.

The agreement to pay dower is certainly not one which in the present case gave a cause of action to the wife which cause of action passed to her heirs.

Until her death no cause of action arose and her death, followed apparently by the refusal of her husband to pay the deferred dower, gave rise to a cause of action, not to her but to her heirs. The observation of Tindal, C. J., in Decharms v. Horwood (6) quoted by the learned Judge of the Madras Court in the judgment referred to above, do not therefore apply to the present case. This is not a case in which a right accruing to a single person from a covenant in his favour has devolved on her death on two or more of her heirs in several shares, in which case the only difference caused by the death of the covenantee is that the cause of action which resided in one person is by operation of law transferred to a number of parceners who constitute, one heir. In a case like the present where the right to the deferred dower accrues on the death of the wife the agreement must be taken to be one between the husband and the heirs of the wife to pay over to them the money which becomes due after her death.

The interests which the heirs have in the dower are not joint but different, and each on the basis of the facts which constitute him an heir has a distinct title on which cause of action is based. The title of all is not common, and in fact a case might arise in which the title of one as heir might be disputed by one or more of the other persons claiming to be heirs.

For the above reasons I have no hesitation in holding that the Plaintiffs are entitled to bring a separate suit to recover from Defendant No. 1, the share in the deferred dower of Musst. Zainab to which they claim to be entitled through Musst. Bashiran. The next question which has been raised is whether all the other persons who claim to be entitled as heirs to shares in the dower of Musst. Zainab are necessary parties to the suit together with the husband, against whom alone relief is claimed, and if they are necessary parties whether the 4th clause of sec. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies so as to make the addition of them as parties on the record, subject to the provisions of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act.

The District Judge has held that all these persons are necessary parties to the suit and that view appears to me to be correct. Each and all of these persons claiming to be entitled to shares in the dower are in my opinion necessary parties to the suit because each and all are interested in the result of the trial and in seeing that the Plaintiffs do not obtain a decree for a larger share than they are entitled to, and, it may be in disputing the claim of the Plaintiffs to any share at all in the dower. They are therefore persons whose presence before the Court is necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit.

Musst. Mahmudan was therefore a necessary party to the suit. It seems that the Plaintiffs omitted to add her as a party when the suit was brought because she was hostile to their claim. She was brought on the record afterwards on the death of Faizul Huq, Plaintiff No. 1, and as she refused to join as a co-Plaintiff she was made a pro forma Defendant. She then filed a written statement supporting the defence of Defendant No. 1. After she had been brought on the record, it was for the purposes of the suit immaterial in what capacity she had been added as a pro forma Defendant.

The fact however that she was brought on the record in the manner stated above as representative of Faizul Huq would not be sufficient to save limitation if it were held that for the purposes of this suit it was necessary that she should have been brought on the record as a party in her personal capacity within 3 years from the date of the death of Musst. Zainab.

In the present case no relief was sought against her by the Plaintiffs which relief would have been barred by the omission to make her a party to the suit in time.

The question however arises whether if she was a necessary party in order to enable the Court to effectually and completely adjudicate on the suit, the provisions of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act would bar the suit because she was not made a party within 3 years of the death of Musst. Zainab. I think not and for the following reason.

Limitation merely bars the remedy by suit, and the only parties in a suit between whom question of limitation can possibly arise, are those who seek relief and those against whom relief is sought. This indeed seems to be the view taken by the Judges in the case of Durga Charan Sarkar v Jotindra Mohan Tagore (5) for they held in that case that the persons should have been added as parties as they were persons who had an interest in the suit and they were persons against whom a right to relief existed in the Plaintiff if the suit were well-founded.

Musst. Mahmudan was brought on the record as a pro forma Defendant in ample time to enable the Court to determine the matters in issue before it and it was therefore immaterial whether she was or was not brought on the record within the time fixed by the law within which the Plaintiffs were bound to bring their suit against Defendant No. 1 to secure the relief which they sought against him.

The suit therefore was not in my opi-

tion bad for any defect of party. It was correctly framed and all the necessary parties were before the Court in time to enable the Court to adjudicate on the matters before it. It was not barred by limitation as held by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court because Musst. Mahmudan was not made a party within 3 years from the death of Musst. Zainab.

For the above reasons the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance restored.

The appeal is decreed with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The circumstances which gave rise to the litigation out of which the present appeal arises, were not disputed before this Court, and may be briefly outlined. One Musst. Zainab, the wife of the first Defendant Sheikh Akramul Huq, died on the 8th September 1900. At the time of her marriage the Defendant had agreed to pay a deferred dower of Rs. 41,025. Upon her death she left her husband, two sons, two daughters, a maternal grandmother, Bashiran, two step-brothers and a step-sister. Her grandmother died subsequently on the 5th January 1901. On the 4th September 1903, her step-brother Faizul Huq and a transferee from him, instituted the present action to recover a share of Zainab's dower, which had been taken by inheritance by her maternal grandmother. The Plaintiffs joined as parties Defendants all the persons, who were the heirs of Zainab at the time of her death excepting his step-sister, Mahmudan, who was left out for some unexplained reason. The claim was resisted on various grounds of fact and law, one of which was that the frame of the suit was defective inasmuch as Mahmudan had not been joined as a party Defendant. During the pendency of the suit in the Court of first instance, the Plaintiff died, leaving as heirs her step-brother and step-sister. Of these the former applied to be substituted on the record as Plaintiff; as the latter did not join as co-Plaintiff, she was brought on the record on the 3rd May 1904, and made a pro formâ Defendant on the 1st June following. It was then contended on behalf of the first Defendant that as Mahmudan had been made a party more than three years after the death of Zainab, i.e., the date when the right to sue accrued, the suit was barred by limitation, not only as against the added Defendant, but also as against the husband. The Court of first instance overruled this objection on the ground that as no relief was claimed against the added Defendant and as she disclaimed all interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, sec. 22 of the Limitation Act had no application. Upon the merits, the Subordinate Judge found in favour of the Plaintiffs and gave them a decree. Upon appeal the District Judge affirmed the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge on the questions of fact but dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not properly constituted till the expiry of the period of limitation. The Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and on their behalf the decision of the District Judge has been challenged, on the ground, that as no relief is claimed against Mahmudan who disclaims all interest in the dower-debt and as the suit was instituted within time against the husband who is the person solely liable for payment of the dower, the claim is not barred by limitation. On the other hand, it has been argued, on behalf of the husband, that the suit has not been properly framed, that the right of the heirs to recover the dower-debt is a joint right, that even though it be open to one of several heirs to bring a suit for recovery of the debt, the claim must include the whole of the dower-debt, and that assuming that the Plaintiff may sue in respect of his share only, the suit is barred by limitation under sec. 22 of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as it was not properly constituted till the expiry of the period of limitation. In order to determine which of these contentions ought to prevail it is necessary to examine the nature of the right which the Plaintiff seeks to enforce, and the relief which they are entitled to claim, in respect thereof.

As has been already stated the dower in question was a deferred dower, in other words, it was payable only upon dissolution of marriage, either by divorce, or by death of one of the contracting parties. Meer Meher Ali v. Amanee (7). There was no dower-deed executed and consequently the terms of the contract must be assumed to have been such as are consistent with the principles of the Mahomedan law on the subject. The terms, therefore, must be assumed to have been as follows :—(a) if the marriage tie was dissolved by divorce, the husband would pay to the wife the dower due, (b) if the marriage was dissolved by the death of the husband, the heirs of the husband would pay the dower to the widow, (c) if the dissolution of the marriage was caused by the death of the wife, the husband would pay to the heirs of the wife the amount of dower he had agreed to pay.

The first two contingencies have not happened but the third contingency has come to pass. We may assume, therefore, that there was an implied agreement by the husband to pay to the heirs of the deceased wife the amount of the dower-debt. He himself, however, is under the Mahomedan law one of the heirs. The position, therefore, is that, the debtor is bound to pay to the creditors, in which category he himself must be included, the amount of the dower-debt. Under these circumstances, it has been argued on behalf of the Appellants that the right of the heirs to receive the dower-debt was not a joint right and that in reality their rights were several and distinct inasmuch as the shares in which they are entitled to receive the debt are specified by the Mahomedan law of inheritance. It has been contended on the other hand that the right is a joint and indivisible right, enforceable only by all the creditors acting jointly and further that in any view of the matter, if it be treated as enforceable at the instance of one creditor that creditor must sue to enforce the entire claim. The question raised turns upon the determination of the nature of the obligation of the husband to pay the dower-debt to the heirs of his deceased wife, who have, as is well settled, a simple money claim founded solely on the contract entered into by the husband, [Meer Meher Ali v. Amanee (7)]. In dealing with this question it is necessary to bear in mind the distinction between a promise by two or more persons to perform an act and a promise to two or more persons to perform an act. A promise by two or more persons to perform an act is a promise that they or some or one of them will perform it, Addison v. Gibson (8); but a promise to two or more persons to perform an act is not a promise to them or some or one of them but a promise to them all to perform it, [Rolls v. Yate (9)]. In the former case, the entire promise may be performed by one. In the latter case the entire promise cannot be enforced by one. In the former case, the parties to the agreement contemplate that the obligation may be discharged by one, for a man who agrees in conjunction with others to pay A a sum of money does not agree with A that he will only pay the sum in such conjunction and not otherwise, in other words, a joint agreement by several to perform an act may be resolved into an agreement by all or some or one of them to do it and an agreement inter se as to how the debt is to be distributed amongst themselves. The case of an agreement by one person to pay a sum to two is very different, for this does not imply an obligation to pay the sum to the separate account of any; payment to two persons and a payment to one are different and inconsistent things, and a promise to two and a promise to one are equally different and inconsistent. It is obvious, therefore, that a right may belong to two or more individuals severally but not to two or more jointly and severally. but it may belong to two or more jointly. On the other hand, an obligation may be imposed upon two or more persons severally or jointly or jointly and severally at the same time. [Slingsby's case (10), Harriman on Contracts, p. 137]. If we remember these principles, it follows that there can be nothing more clear than that the question whether a contract is joint or several or joint and several is a question of construction, i.e., a question of the intention of the parties to the contract. The rule applicable to cases of this description was thus stated by Baron Parke, in Sorsbie v. Park (11): "The rule is that a covenant will be construed to be joint or several according to the interest of the parties appearing upon the face of the deed, if the words are capable of that construction; not that it will be construed to be several by reason of several interests, if it could be expressly joint." In other words, as stated in a work of almost conclusive authority, [Notes to Saunder's Reports by Williams, Vol. I, p. 162, notes to Eccleston v. Clipsham (12)], though a covenant be joint and several in the terms of it, yet if the interest and cause of action be joint, the action must be brought by all the covenantees; on the other hand, if the interest and cause of action be several, the action may be brought by one only. As stated in Bullen and Leakes Precedents and Pleadings, 6th Edn., p. 20, whether a contract is joint or several depends primarily on the language used. It is a question of intention to be determined by considering not only the language but also the interests and relations of the parties; accordingly the contract will be construed to be joint or several so far as regards the contracties, according as the interests of the parties are joint or several, respectively, and will be deemed to be joint if the interests are joint, and several if the interests are several, Pugh v. Stringfield (13), Thompson v. Hakewill (14), Palmer v. Mallet (15), White v. Tindall (16). This is well illustrated by the cases of Withers v. Bircham (17) and Palmer v. Sparshott (18). In each of these cases it was ruled that where a man covenants with two or more jointly, yet if the interest and cause of action of the covenantees be several and not oint, the covenant shall be taken to be several and each of the covenantees may bring an action for his particular damages; in other words the action follows the nature of the interest, if the interests of the covenantees is joint, the action must be brought in the name of all the covenantees, if the interest is several they may maintain separate actions [see also Williams' Saunders, Vol. II, p. 383, notes to Coryton v. Lithebye (19)]. In the present case, there can be no doubt, that the interest of the heirs in the dower-debt, though joint as to the whole, is several as to the share of each. This is established conclusively by two circumstances, viz., first, that the share of each is fixed unalterably by the law of inheritance; and, secondly, as the husband himself is the debtor as well as one of the creditors, none of the creditors could bring an action to recover the whole of the dower-debt. In such a case it is impossible to hold that the right of the creditors is joint and several, so as to entitle one to sue for the whole debt or to make it obligatory upon him to do so. In my opinion, each of the heirs is entitled to bring an action for recovery of his share of the dower-debt. This view is amply supported by an examination of the nature of a joint obligation. Thus in Domat on Civil Law [Part I, Book 3, Tit. 3, secs. 1 and 2, Vol. X, pp. 712 to 718], it is stated that, if there is solidity among two or more creditors, the result is that every one of the creditors is entitled alone and by himself to exact the whole debt and to discharge the debtor of it with respect to all the other creditors although ultimately there may be a contribution amongst the creditors themselves. Whether, however, there is such solidity or not, depends upon the intention of the parties, namely, whether it was intended that what is owing to several persons is due to every one of them in the whole, that is, whether the intention is that they will be creditors, each of them for the whole. In the absence of such intention, however, if it were only said that a debtor should owe a sum of money to two creditors without mentioning any thing of the solidity, in that case, each creditor could demand no more than his own portion. To the same effect is the exposition of Pothier in his Treatise on Obligations. [Translated by Evans, Part 2, Ch. 3, Art. 7, Vol. I, p. 144]: "regularly when a person contracts the obligation of one and the same thing in favour of several others, each of these is only creditor for his own share, but he may contract with each of them for the whole; when such is the intention of the parties so that each of the persons in whose favour the obligation is contracted is creditor for the whole, but that a payment made to anyone liberates the debtor against them all, this is called solidity of obligation." The effects of this solidity among creditors are stated to be, first, that each creditor may demand the whole debt, secondly, acknowledgment made to any one of the creditors interrupts prescription of the whole debt, and, thirdly, payment made to any creditor extinguishes the debt. [See also Vol. II, App. XI, pages 55 to 62]. The same analysis is adopted by Savigny in his Treatise on Obligations [Translated by Jerardin and Jozon, secs. 16 to 36, Vol. I, pages 150 to 421] and by Thibaut in his System [Translated by Lindley, secs. 109 and 117A and App., page LXXIV]. The substance of this analysis is that if it is the intention of the parties, to be determined either from the expression of their will or from the nature of the obligation itself, that the obligation is to be indivisible, there is a joint right which is vested in several persons and which must be enforced by them jointly. It is also pointed out that one of the most important characteristics of a joint right, strictly so called, is that upon the death of one of the persons in whom the right is vested the whole right devolves upon the survivors to the exclusion of representatives of the deceased [Pothier, Vol. II, page 60, and Thibaut, p. LXXV]. If these principles are kept in mind, the inference is irresistible that each of the heirs is entitled to sue in respect of his share of the dower-debt. In reality, each has a distinct right enforceable by himself though all may jointly sue, because each obtains a share of the whole debt. The view I take is consistent with what has been recognised as the settled rule almost since the establishment of the British Courts in this country, see, for instance, Ali Baksh v. Kalu Beebe (20), decided by the Bengal Sudder Court so far back as 1804, where upon the death of a Mahomedan woman, one of her heirs was allowed to maintain an action for the recovery of her share only of the dower-debt.

The question next arises whether in a suit so framed the other heirs ought to be joined as parties. In my opinion they ought to be on the record as Defendants for two reasons. In the first place, if any question arises as to the total amount of the dower-debt, it ought to be determined in the presence of all the parties who claim interest in that debt. In the second place, if there is any dispute as to the share to which the Plaintiff is entitled, the question ought to be settled in the presence of all the other heirs; as otherwise the debtor may be placed in a position of difficulty if, after he has submitted to a decree in favour of one of the heirs, it is established, as against him by another that the decree has been obtained in respect of a share to which the first Plaintiff was not entitled. It follows, consequently, that in a suit so framed the Plaintiff claims relief primarily and substantially against the husband who is liable for the dowerdebt and the other Defendants are brought on the record, not because any relief is claimed against them, but because the question in the determination of which they have an interest ought to be settled in their presence. In this view of the matter it is impossible to hold that the suit is barred by limitation. It is true that one of the heirs was not originally made a party Defendant but the suit was instituted in time so far as the husband is concerned and it is as against him only that the Plaintiff claims relief. Sec. 22 of the Limitation Act has, to my mind, no application to a case of this description. Sec. 22 provides that when after the institution of a suit a new Plaintiff or Defendant is substituted or added, the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party. It may be taken therefore, that so far as Mahmudan is concerned, the suit as against her was not commenced until the 3rd May 1904, but the suit was instituted as against first Defendant, the husband, on the 4th September 1903, i.e., within three years from the dissolution of marriage by death, as required by Art. 104 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act. No relief is claimed as against Mahmudan, and, indeed, when joined as a party Defendant, she disavowed all interest in the dower-debt. Under these circumstances I feel no doubt that the suit as against the first Defendant is not barred by limitation.

The attention of the Court was invited to several cases, which it was suggested, were inconsistent with the view. Reliance was placed very strongly upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader (1). That case, however, is clearly distinguishable, as there the original cause of action was joint and it was held that when on the death of the person in whom the original cause of action resided it had devolved upon his heirs, they constituted substantially one heir and must, therefore, join in a suit to enforce that claim. It cannot be suggested that in the present case, the wife had any cause of action which upon her death devolved upon her heirs. No doubt the contract for payment of the dower-debt was made with her, but under the contract as the dower was deferred, she could not take anything. It was only upon her death that a cause of action would, for the first time, come into existence in her heirs, who would then become entitled to recover from the husband their share of the dower-debt Reference was also made to the cases of Ram Sebuk v. Ram Lal Koondoo (3) and Ramdoyal v. Junmenjoy Coondoo (4) which were cases of partnership accounts, and the parties, who were added, had interest of such a description in the subject-matter of the litigation that without them, in the one case, the remaining Plaintiffs could not maintain an action, and in the other case no relief could be had against the remaining Defendants. In such cases as those, sec. 22 of the Limitation Act is obviously applicable. Reliance was also placed upon Durga Charan Sarkar v. Jotindra Mohan Tagore (5) in which a question was raised as to who were necessary parties in a suit under sec. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but no question arose as to the applicability of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act. Reference was further made to the case of Kandhiya Lal v. Chander (2) in which it was ruled by a majority of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that, when upon the death of the obligee of a money bond, the right to realize the money has devolved in specific shares upon his heirs, each of such heirs cannot maintain a separate suit for recovery of his share of the money due on the bond. It is not necessary for our present purposes to consider how far this position is well-founded and how far the contrary view expounded by Mr. Justice Mahmood in his dissentient judgment is successfully controverted by the reasoning in the judgment of the majority of the learned Judges. It is sufficient to say that this decision is, as appears from the cases of Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader (1) and Sitaram v. Sridhar (21), based upon the principle that the several heirs of the original promisee cannot be regarded as joint promisees; they constitute one heir and are connected together by unity of interest and unity of title and must enforce their right by one action properly framed. In the present case, the right of action of the heirs of the wife of the first Defendant has not been transmitted to them by inheritance from her, and as one of the heirs happens to be and must necessarily be, under the Mahomedan law, the debtor as well as a creditor, the right of action, even if it was joint has been split up. It follows, consequently, that each heir has a separate right, which he is entitled to enforce separately in respect of his share of the dower-debt, although for the protection of the debtor and for the convenience of the creditors, the right of each must be enforced in the presence of the others. In my opinion, the view taken by the District Judge cannot be supported and his judgment must be reversed. No question has been raised as to the shares of the parties, or the amount to which the Plaintiffs are entitled. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, the decree of the District Judge discharged and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 350 OF 1905.

Sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act does not require persons who claim adversely to the mortgagor to be made parties.

JOGO MOHAN DEB LASKAR v. DAUDOONG BURMAN.

entitled only to a half share and not the whole of the property mortgaged.

The Plaintiff-Appellant instituted this suit against Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Daudoong Burman and Gunamoni Burman, to recover the balance of Rs. 200 (with interest Rs. 900), lent to them on a mortgage-bond, dated 5th May 1895, after deducting Rs. 98 which the said Defendants had paid and a further sum of Rs. 91 odd which the Plaintiff had remitted from his claim. The Plaintiff further asked for a declaration of his lien on the mortgaged property and in this connection added Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the representatives in interest of one Kali Charan as parties to the suit. These latter alleged that the lands sought to be sold did not belong to the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, but had been purchased by Kali Charan and that they were in possession as the successors in interest of Kali Charan. The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 did not appear.

The District Judge found on evidence that the first and the second Defendants had no interest in the land mortgaged and that it belonged to the heirs of the deceased Kali Charan at the time the mortgage deed was executed. He further held that the mortgage contract was in view of the above fact unlawful and could not be enforced.

The Plaintiff appealed.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick for the Appellant.

Babu Brajendra Nath Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

On the 5th May 1905, Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Daudoong and Gunamoni, executed a mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff. The mortgage covered property which, it is alleged in the present case, by the Defendants other than the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, was the property of one Kali Charan who died 12 or 13 years ago leaving two sons Kamini Kumar and Krishna Charan.

As regards the execution of the mortgage and the passing of consideration, the evidence is quite satisfactory, though the learned Judge has not come to any express decision on the points. On the question of the bonâ fides of the document and the passing of consideration, the evidence is such that we cannot disregard it. We must hold that Daudoong and Gunamoni executed the mortgage on the 5th May 1895 and received consideration for it. The property mortgaged is, therefore, liable to be sold and no question would have arisen as regards the right of the Plaintiff to ask for a sale of the property if Kali Charan's sons and heirs had not been made parties. They were unnecessarily made parties because they did not claim the property through the mortgagors. Their claim is adverse to the mortgagors. Sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act does not make it necessary for persons who claim adversely to the mortgagor to be made parties. As authority for the proposition, we may refer to the case of Mon Mohini Ghose v. Parbati Nath Ghose (1). In the view we take, Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the heirs of Kali Charan, are not necessary parties and we direct that their names be expunged from the record. Any question arising between the mortgagors and the mortgagee on one side, and the heirs of Kali Charan, on the other, relating to the title to the mortgaged property must be decided in a future suit properly framed. The issue, therefore, as to whether the mortgaged property belonged to the mortgagors or to Kali Charan does not exist and that issue with the finding on it must also be expunged.

The Plaintiff has, however, admitted before us through his counsel-vakil, that the mortgagors were entitled to a half share of the property and not the whole. He should be entitled to get a decree under the provisions of sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, for the sale of a half share of the property covered by the mortgage.

The learned District Judge has referred to sec. 23, sub-sec. (4) of the Indian Contract Act as invalidating the contract. The contract is certainly invalid so far as Kali Charan's heirs are concerned. But so far as the mortgagors and the mortgagee are concerned, it is perfectly valid. Sec. 23, sub-sec. (4) of the Contract Act has no application to the present case, neither does sec. 33 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulations affect the right of the Plaintiff to ask for the sale of a half share of the property in question.

On the facts stated in the judgment, it appears that in 1881-82 Kali Charan and Daudoong were recorded as joint proprietor's of the property. Primâ facie, therefore, Daudoong had a half share in the property. Whether he lost that right, or had not that right at all, the question must be decided in a future

We therefore direct that a decree be drawn up under the Transfer of Property Act for sale of a half share of the property covered by the mortgage. Each party will bear his own costs in all the Courts. So far as the Defendant No. 1 is concerned, he must pay the costs of the Plaintiff in the first Court and that sum must be added to the mortgage money.

NOTES

MR. JUSTICE GEIDT HAVING BEEN PLACED ON deputation to inspect Civil Courts under the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court, Mr. H. R H. Coxe, I. C. S., has been appointed to act as a Judge of the High Court during his absence. Mr. Justice Coxe took his seat on the Bench with Mr. Justice Brett on the 3rd instant.

ALTHOUGH MR. JUSTICE SALE IS TO BE CONGRATUlated on his appointment as the Legal Adviser to the Secretary of State yet his retirement from the Bench is a great loss to the Calcutta High Court. He was popular at the Bar and his elevation to the Bench made no difference in the cordiality and courtesy with which he treated everyone who came in contact with him professionally or otherwise. The good practice that he enjoyed at the Calcutta Bar made him feel quite at home in the Court where the faces, laws and customs were all familiar to him. A consciousness of being able to deal out justice with ease made him a most patient, self-possessed and dignified judge on the Bench. It is not too much to say that one can hardly remember an occasion when Mr. Justice Sale has been known to lose his temper. With almost Christian resignation he would allow all who appeared before him to have their say to their hearts' content but immediately after he would sit up in his chair and deliver his judgment with a readiness and no less thoroughness that gained for him the reputation of being a quick and expeditious judge. It is because of his ability and amiable qualities that the members of the profession as also the public interested in the Original Side never agreed to his being transferred to the Appellate Side. His career as a Judge being thus confined to the Original Side, his contributions to the case law has not been very large but all the same he has always been a sound judge.

RULE 13, ORDER IX, OF THE NEW CIVIL PROCEDURE Code Bill, provides that in case a party applies to have an ex parte decree set aside and a proper case is made out, the decree will be set aside as against him alone. We think this will create anomalies in many cases. Suppose A sues B, C and D upon a bond and obtains an ex parte decree; B comes in and proves that no summons was served on him. According to the rule the decree will be set aside as against B alone. Now if the suit is retried and the Court finds that the bond is not genuine but is a forged one, the suit will be dismissed and A will probably be prosecuted for forgery and convicted. But the decree against B and C upon the forged bond subsists and A notwithstanding his conviction may recover the decretal amount from them.

UNDER SEC. 108 OF THE PRESENT CIVIL PROCEDURE Code the entire decree under the above circumstances is set aside. Under sec. 544 of the Civil Procedure Code one of several Plaintiffs or Defendents may, in appeal, obtain reversal of the whole decree on a ground common to all. We think that on the same principle an ex parte decree should be reversed as regards all the Defendants if a ground is made out common to all, irrespective of the fact that the application to set aside was by one or more of the Defendants or that the decree set aside was passed against some of them after contest (see the cases of Mahomed Hamedulla, 1 C. W. N. 652: s. c. 25 Cal. 155; Gopal Chetti, 25 Mad. 604).

MAHOMEDAN LAW OF INHERITANCE AND ITS EVOLUTION.

"Mahomedan Law" remarks Sir H. S. Maine in his "Village Communities in the East and West" theoretically founded on the Koran, has really more interest for the jurist than has sometimes been supposed; for it has absorbed a number of foreign elements, which have been amalgamated by a very curious process with a mass of semi-religious rules." (Village Communities, p. 49). The following is an attempt at an approach of the Mahomedan Law of inheritance as formulated by the Prophet in the light of the historical investigations of that eminent jurist and to co-ordinate the isolated facts hitherto presented as the dry bones of a skeleton-system in orderly sequence, as forming connected links in the chain of a living and growing system of law.

Most ancient systems of law whether Aryan or non-Aryan are dominated by the all-pervading principle that property is the property of the family and not of individuals: "The unit of an ancient society is the family, of the modern society the individual" (Maine's Ancient Law, p. 126): This is true not only of old Roman and Hindu Law but also of the Pre-Islamaic laws of the pagan Arabs before their codification by the Prophet. Like the ancient Hindu and Roman law, the pre-Islamaic customs rigidly excluded women from inheritance; nay they even went further. Men incapable of bearing arms and minors were passed over in favour of the strong and the hardy who figured foremost in the incessant tribal wars and effectually safeguarded the interest of the families against the pillaging and marauding instincts of neighbouring and rival families. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali very aptly observes that "the ancient Arab customs had one principal object in view in the succession of a deceased person's property, viz., the maintenance of the goods in the family." With this view, the succession was exclusively confined to males and even among them to those capable of bearing arms. The daughters, the widows and the mothers, as well as the minors were directly or indirectly excluded from succession, the daughters because their birth was regarded as a misfortune (Koran, Chap. LXXXI, Vol. 8), and they ceased upon their marriage to be members of the natural family; the widows because they were placed in the same category as slaves and passed ordinarily into the hands of their husband's heirs as a portion of his patrimony (Koran, Chap. XLIII, Vol. 16); the minors because they were unable to defend by their arms the tribal rights and privileges and their goods therefore belonged to their tutors: (Koran Chap. IV, Vols. 2, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 11: Chap. VI, Vol. 153 and Chap. XVII, Vol. 36). (Ameer Ali, Vol. II, Succession and Status, second edition, p. 48). We learn from the same learned author that the pre-Islamaic Arabs looked upon women with so much aversion and regarded them as so great a misfortune as to bury alive many of their female children and to sacrifice others to their gods. (See Koran, Chaps. VI, XVI, XVII and LXXXI).

The above short account will enable the reader to gauge the importance of the reforms introduced by Mahomed: but it will also appear that he was in no sense a bold reformer; he proceeded only by cautious and conciliatory steps; and hence the system of law as settled by him is a curious compromise, in the words of Prof. Wilson, "between the arrangements appropriate to a patriarchal society and those suitable to a well-polished empire in which the law is strong enough to penetrate within the family and to take account of the separate personality of every man, woman and child" (Wilson Anglo-Mahomedan Law, 2nd edition, p. 91). Even such an ardent advocate of the excellence of the Mussulman system as Mr. Ameer Ali is forced to admit that several institutions which the Mussulmans borrowed from the "pre-Islamaic period have had the tendency of retarding the advancement of Mahomedan nations." (M. L., Vol. II, p. 22); but there is no denying the fact that according to his lights and the ideas of his time, Mohamed pruned away many of the excrescences that checked the progress of the Moslem commonwealth and freed property from one of its most grevious trammels, viz., from being tied down by the all-absorbing needs and requirements of the corporate family and so rendered inalienable, and substituted the individual instead of the family as the unit of all transactions in the Moslem world. This bold step at once clothed individuals with full proprietorship and made it unnecessary to resort to those devices which highly matured systems of law adopted to free property from the fetters which encumbered its free alienation. Hence such distinctions as the ancestral and self-acquired property in Hindu law, Res Mancipi and Res nec Mancipi, under the Roman law, find no place in the Moslem jurisprudence. A Mahomedan father is complete master of his possessions and can freely give it or sell it away; but this free power of gift and sale does not extend to his willing away the whole of his property. A Mahomedan must die intestate as regards the major portion of his property. To speak more accurately, he must leave ⅔ to his heirs. This is at once a certain indication that Mahomed did not go far enough to hold that testamentary power was co-existent with the power of gift but lagged behind in the march of ideas swayed by a regard to the prevailing sentiments of his age. As a natural corollary from the recognition of the unfettered ownership of the father, it at once followed that his sons could not have any manner of right in the property of his father. This is in accord with the English and the Roman law, as expressed in the Latin maxim 'nemo est hæres viventis'—a living person has no heir. This is in marked contrast with the widely prevalent school of Hindu law, the Mitakshara, which recognises the joint ownership of the son in the ancestral property.

Another great canon of inheritance in all matured systems of law is that division per stirpes regulates the devolution of property within the members of the agnatic groups. According to Roman law

"grandsons, if their father were livng" and "has not ceased to be under the power of the grandfather either by death or some other means," "could not be sui heredes and grandsons could only take the place of their deceased father." This is also an accepted principle in the Hindu law and is sytematically applied in deciding questions of partition and inheritance. Ancient systems of jurisprudence reverse this principle of division; no attention is paid to the stock or root and all the grandsons equally divide the estate. This is known as division per capita, or division by head or per head of the members of the agnatic group. In this connection the learned remarks of that distinguished jurist, the late Sir H. Maine, are very instructive. "The tendency of matured and developed law is to give a decided preference to distribution per stirpes. It is only with remote classes of relations that it abandons the distributions between the stocks and distributes the property per capita. But in this, as in other particulars, very ancient and undeveloped law reverses the idea of the modern jurist and uniformly prefers the distribution per capita, exactly equal division between all the surviving members of the family and this is apparently on the principle that all having been impartially subject to a despotism which knew no degrees, all ought to share equally on the dissolution of the community by the death of its chief. A preference for division per stirpes, a minute care for the preservation of the stocks is in fact very strong evidence of the growth of a respect for individual interests inside the family distinct from the interests of the family group as a whole. This is why the place given to distribution per stirpes shows that a given system of law has undergone development and it so happens that this place is very large in Hindu law which is extremely careful for the distinction between stocks and maintains them through long lines of succession." (Sir H. Maine, Early History of Institutions, pp. 328-29). Now turning to any text-book on Mahomedan law we find that as a general rule it does not recognise the principle of representation. Uncles exclude brother's sons. If a grandfather dies leaving him surviving two sons of one son and seven of another, the nine grandsons will take the property per capita and not per stirpes.

How comes it, then, that Mahomedan law advancing almost up to the very goal of individual ownership was caught into the meshes of the primitive law and nailed fast to the division per capita which is an undoubted vestige of the semi-developed and immature condition of law? The question remains yet to be answered and the only answer we can suggest with a near approach to truth is that at the time of the appearance of Mahomed and the promulgation of his laws, an institution corresponding in its main features to the patria potestas of the Romans prevailed in its full vigour; and Mahomed had not either the courage or, perhaps, the inclination to promulgate any change which would give a rude shock to the parental despotism characteristic of his age.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

Earl of Halsbury, Lord Davey. Sir Arthur Wilson. Sir Alfred Wills. 1906. 19, June.	Scotts Patent.

Patent—Prolongation, ground for—Public interest —Usefulness.

Prolongation petition. Patent was for maturing spirits according to a process invented by Mr. Richard Clarkson Scott of Liverpool. The invention reduced the time necessary for maturing spirits bonded in wood, in order to make them drinkable. From the Attorney General's statement in opposition to the claim for prolongation it appeared that there were other inventions for the same object, the removal of deleterious matter from spirits. Mr. Scott's method was different to all those. His petition disclosed that owing to the very conservative trade up to the present his method for removing impurities in a few hours had not been adopted and he had not made a fair reimbursement commensurate with the great importance of the invention. The result of using the invention on raw spirit was that in a few hours precisely the same chemical effects were produced on the spirit as would be produced if it had been bonded in wood for two years. The Petitioners believed that now there were signs of the trade recognizing its merit and importance and the patent consequently becoming productive.

Lord Halsbury said their Lordships regretted that they did not see their way to acceding to Petitioners' prayer. He had failed to show that if the enlargement was granted it would lead to a very different result to what had been going on for 14 years There was nothing to lead their Lordships to suppose that that there would be any difference. The statute contemplated prolongation of a patent upon considerations such as had not been established to their Lordships' satisfaction. The mere fact of sympathy with the patentee was not enough; it must be something more than the mere fact of its being a good patent, and there must be some character of public interest established in the patent and its usefulness. It was manifest that no one had as yet taken up the patent. On one occasion it was tried but those who tried it did not adopt it. It was impossible to suggest that if the patent were renewed there would be a different experience from that which had been established for the last 14 years.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CASPERSZ and CHITTY, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1141 OF 1907. RAJ KUMAR SINGH, Petitioner v. TINCOWRY MONDAL Opposite party. 28th October 1907.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 195 (6), 421 and 440—Summary rejection of an application for revocation of a sanction for prosecution.

The facts are briefly these:—

The Petitioner lodged a complaint against the opposite party. After a trial the opposite party was acquitted who thereupon applied for sanction to prosecute the Petitioner under sec. 211, I. P. C. The trying Magistrate granted the sanction. The Petitioner then applied to the District Magistrate praying that the sanction should be revoked. According to a standing order of the District Magistrate this application was filed before the Joint Magistrate. Subsequently the District Magistrate without hearing the Petitioner's pleader rejected this application summarily. This rule was issued against the order of the District Magistrate summarily rejecting the Petitioner's application.

Their Lordships observed:—

"We think the learned District Magistrate was in error in not hearing the pleader in the matter of the application by way of appeal preferred by the Petitioner under sec. 195 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The principal laid down in the second paragraph of sec. 421 of the Code appears to be a salutary principle in cases like this and we don't think that sec. 440 of the Code is one on which reliance can be placed. It is obvious that an order of rejection should not have been passed without hearing the pleader who might have placed matters before the learned District Magistrate and explained them to him in a way which he may not have considered before the order of rejection was passed and we think the Petitioner was entitled, as of right to be heard through his pleader."

The rule was made absolute and the District Magistrate was directed to dispose of the case in accordance with law.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before GEIDT, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1739 OF 1906. NILMADHUB RAI AND ANOTHER, Defendants, Appellants, v. NABA DAS AND ANOTHER, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 20th November 1907.

Decree, setting aside—Fraud—Perjury—Res judicata.

The predecessor of the Appellants obtained two decrees for rent against the present Plaintiffs, one in respect of a jumma of Rs. 12-15-4 gundas and the other in respect of a jumma of Rs. 5-10-11 gundas. The present suit was brought for the purpose of setting aside the decree for rent in respect of the jumma of Rs. 5-10-11 gundas, and both the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court decreed his suit holding that there was no separate jumma of 5-10-11 gundas, that the land in respect of which the decree for that rent had been obtained was included within the larger jumma of Rs. 12 5-4 gundas and that the rent decree in respect of the smaller jumma had been obtained by fraud.

The Defendants appealed to the High Court and contended inter alia that the suit was not maintainable on the ground of res judicata.

The fraud which the Courts found to be committed in the former suit was that the Court had been misled falsely into thinking that there was a separate smaller jumma apart from the larger jumma of Rs. 12 and odd.

Held—A person cannot set aside a decree passed against him merely on the allegation that it was wrong and that it was obtained by perjury committed by or at the instance of the other party. The fraud which entitles a party to set aside a previous judgment is a fraud by which the person defrauded was prevented from placing his case before the tribunal which was called upon to adjudicate upon it. The case which the Plaintiff set up here was the very case which they had set up before the former tribunal, namely, that they had no separate jumma of Rs. 5 and odd. There was no fraud on the other side by which they were prevented from establishing that case in the former suit.

ADDAITA BHUIA v. KALI DAS DE.

A Local Board Sircar is not a public servant within the meaning of sec. 21, cl. 10, I. P. C.

This was a rule granted on the 5th of September 1907, against an order of R. De, Sub-divisional Magistrate of Tamluk, dated the 30th of July 1907, convicting the Petitioners under secs. 143 and 186, I. P. C., and sentencing them to pay a fine of Rs. 25.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Hari Bhusan Mukherjee for the Petitioners.

No one for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The questions for our determination in the matter of this rule are, first, whether the Petitioners constituted an unlawful assembly within the meaning of sec. 141, I. P. C., and, secondly, whether the complainant, being a District Board Road Sircar, is a public servant in respect of whom the offence under sec. 186, I. P. C., has been committed.

The facts shortly are these:—There was a wooden bridge across a khal which, being in a state of disrepair, it was decided to replace by means of a road with pipes passing underneath for the flow of water. The bed of the khal belongs to the Petitioners and others, and they objected to the laying of the pipes on the ground that it would obstruct the flow of water in the khal. They accordingly removed the pipes placed there.

On these facts, the Petitioners have been convicted under secs. 143 and 186, I. P. C. In his explanation the Magistrate urges that the assemblage was illegal under sec. 141, cl. (5), I. P. C. But the Petitioners were simply asserting their right bonâ fide and preventing any unlawful interference with the khal. They cannot be regarded as members of an unlawful assembly. The mere use of criminal force or show of criminal force by any person to take possession of any property is not sufficient to bring the case within the clause unless some criminal intent is proved against the persons so using force or show of force. In the present case it does not appear that any unnecessary force was used to remove the pipes, which the Petitioners were entitled to do, as the District Board had only the right to bridge the khal by means of a superstructure.

Then on the second question, we entertain no doubt, in the absence of any express authority on the point, that a Local Board Road Sircar is not a public servant within the meaning of sec. 21, I. P. C. The Magistrate has cited cl. 10 of that section; but it cannot be said that a sircar, who merely supervises road work, and, in this case, the construction of a culvert, is a public servant, and that his duty is to take, receive, keep or expend any property, &c., &c., according to the definition given in the 10th clause of the section. In analogous decisions it has been held that such officers are not public servants; but the only case to which our attention has been called is that of Regina v. Ramajirav (1). That case is not on all fours with the present one, and we have to decide, on the language of the section, whether a road sircar is a public servant. In our opinion, he is not.

GOBINDA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY v. DEBENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY.

This appeal arose out of a reference to the Special Judge under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act.

The parties to this appeal were all before the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector. The amount awarded by the Deputy Collector was not questioned on the reference. But the Respondents (who were the first amongst four groups or "parties" of claimants before the Special Judge) in their petition of reference objected that the learned Deputy Collector was wrong in awarding a certain portion of the compensation money which they themselves were entitled to to one Sudhir Lal Roy Chowdhury, the second party. The third and the fourth parties did not ask for a reference, but they applied to the Special Judge to be made parties and their applications were acceded to. Their objection was that the lands for which compensation had been awarded were debutter properties dedicated to the worship of Anandamoyee Thakurani and Thakurs Radhakanta and Govindji. The first party in reply denied that the properties were debutter, and that even if they were debutter, they have according to the consensus of the family been converted into secular property.

The Special Judge held that Sudhir Lal's claim to the share awarded to him was barred by limitation. He dismissed the third and the fourth parties' objections and gave the first party the decree against which the present appeal was preferred.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee, Golap Chandra Sarkar, Narendra Chandra Bose and Surendra Chandra Bose for the Appellants.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The present appeal arises out of certain proceedings under Act I of 1894. Certain lands situated in two villages, namely, Betbaria and Belagachi, were acquired for a public purpose. The persons interested were the members of the first, second, third and fourth prarties; and they all appeared personally or by agents before the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector who made the apportionment of the compensation money among the parties. This was objected to only by party No. 1, who are the Respondents in the present appeal.

From the reference to the District Judge made on the 28th March 1903, it appears that it was made on a petition by party No. 1 and that the dispute then was that the claimants, first party, denied the claim of Sudhir Lal Roy Chowdhuri, party No. 2, who alleged that he had a share of 17 gundas and odd in the acquired land in village Betbaria. When the case came before the District Judge, Govinda Kumar Roy Chowdhury and others, the present Appellants (viz., the third party) and Kedar Nath Roy Chowdhuri (the fourth party) applied to the District Court on the 24th June 1903, and 8th July 1903, respectively, to be made parties, and the District Judge acceded to their request. But it is clear that the real matter that was referred to the District Judge was the dispute between the parties Nos. 1 and 2, that is, with regard to the compensation allowed to party No. 2 by the Deputy Collector.

GOBINDA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY v. DEBENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY.

The objection to the apportionment was made under sec. 18 of Act I of 1894; and under sec. 21 of the Act the scope of the inquiry has to be restricted to the consideration of the interests of persons affected by the objection.

It will appear from the land acquisition proceeding under sec. 11 of Act I of 1904 that Sudhir Lal Roy Chowdhuri was made a member of the first party to which Debendra Kumar Roy Chowdhury and others, the Respondents, belonged, which party according to the Collectors' order was awarded a certain portion of the compensation money.

Disputes appear to have arisen amongst the members of the party which was headed by Debendra Kumar and they seem to have been to the effect that Debendra Kumar and others disputed the claim set up by Sudhir Lal on the ground mentioned in the written statements.

From the above it is clear that the dispute as to the apportionment was exclusively among the members of Debendra's party, with which the members of the other parties had nothing to do. We have already observed that the reference was made on the objection of Debendra and others against the apportionment in favour of Sudhir Lal.

We think that under the above circumstances the learned Judge ought not to have allowed the third and fourth parties to be made parties in the case and that his action has led to nothing but complications and confusion. On the authority of the case of Abu Bakar v. Peary Mohun Mookherjee (1), it is clear that according to the terms of the sections of Part III of the Act, it was not open to the learned Judge to go into the question raised by parties who had never made objection or applied for the reference.

The present case related entirely to the dispute between Debendra and others and Sudhir Lal. The latter's claim to compensation, however, according to the finding of the learned Judge is barred by limitation. He has not appealed against the judgment of the lower Court and in these circumstances, this appeal ought to fail on this ground alone. But we think that even on the merits of the case this appeal ought to be dismissed.

The Respondents claim compensation as proprietors of their respective shares, while the other parties allege that the lands for which compensation has been awarded are debutter properties dedicated to the worship of Anandamoyee Thakurani and Thakurs Radhakanta and Govindji. There is no dispute as to the amount of the compensation money awarded. The dispute is only as to whether the properties are debutter or secular.

The first party allege that these properties are not debutter and that they were granted in the name of the idols as a benami transaction to one of the ancestors of the family of the claimants; in the alternative the Respondents contend that if the properties were originally debutter, yet by consensus of the family they have ceased to be so. Lastly, they allege that the idol Anandamoyee, having been broken many years ago, has ceased to be a juridical person capable of holding property.

GOBINDA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY v. DEBENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY.

The second and third parties deny the breakage but the fourth party admits it.

The learned Judge has by the order appealed against apportioned the disputed portion of the compensation money among the members of the first party with the exception of that portion which represents the share of Girish Chandra, a member of the first party, as he alleges the property to be debutter. The learned Judge in consequence has ordered the portion representing Girish Chandra's share to be invested. He has further held that the claim of Sudhir Lal is barred.

The present appeal is on behalf of the third party who have taken 41 grounds in their memorandum of appeal. The arguments before us, however, have been confined to the following points, namely:—

1. Whether the idol Anandamoyee is a juridical person.

2. Whether the disputed properties are debutter or secular.

3. Whether the properties, if they were originally debutter, have ceased to be so.

The lower Court has found that these properties were at one time debutter and remained so till 1832. It has further held that the lease and release of these properties by Rajballav, a common ancestor, in 1835, gave another character to these properties: and that after Rajballav's death there was a reconveyance and an English mortgage in 1867 regarding these properties, and that all the descendants of Rajballav living at the time were parties to these transactions. These descendants appear to have split up the ancestral debts and divided them according to their respective shares; and hence on the above grounds the lower Court has held that by the consensus of all the members of this family, the properties have been converted into secular properties. In Babu Golap Chandra Shastri's Treatise on Hindu Law (p. 440) it is said that "the endowments may either be public or private. In the former the public is interested and in the latter certain definite persons only are interested. When the property is dedicated to charitable, educational or religious uses for the benefit of an indeterminate body of persons the endowment is a public one; and when property is set apart for the worship of a deity of a particular family in which no outsider is interested, the endowment is a private one. The distinction between private and public endowment is an important one for 'in the case of a family idol the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction [Konwar Doorga Nath v. Ram Chandra (2)].' Mr. Mayne is of the same opinion (vide secs. 437, 438, Hindu Law and Usage, 7th edition).

In accordance with the law laid down in the abovenamed works on Hindu law, these properties can become secular by consensus of the whole family, if the dedication was to the worship of the family idol. From Sudhir Lal's written statements it is an admitted fact that the goddess Anandamoyee is an ancestral family goddess. The third party also in their written statements admit that Anandamoyee Thakurani, Radhakanta Jew and Govinda Dev Thakurs are their ancestral family deities and they were established by their ancestors. From the evidence it appears that the idol's shrine is situated within the heart of the Roy Chowdhuris' family dwelling-house. From the above statements and facts it is clear that these idols cannot be public idols, and hence in accordance with the authorities cited, the properties, even if at one time debutter, could be converted into secular properties.

From the various exhibits on the record it is evident that the members of this family have been treating these properties as secular properties which could be sold, mortgaged, leased or bequeathed. The Appellants' reply is that though it is a fact that the members of the family have in many instances sold, mortgaged and leased these properties or disposed of them by Will, yet these alienations had never been in favour of any stranger and that it is legal for one shebait to convey his share in the shebaiti right to another shebait.

We find from Babu Golap Chandra Shastri's Treatise on Hindu Law (p. 446) that "the office of shebaiti right is not saleable, Narasimu v. Anantha (3), Rangasami v. Ranga (4)." It has been held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Raja Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Mutha (5), that an assignment of the right of management is beyond the legal competence of a trustee under the common law of India and the usage of the foundation, and that the assignment of a trusteeship for the pecuniary advantage of the trustee could not be validated by any proof of custom. In the case of Gnana Sambanda Pundara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (6), it was held that the sale of the right of management and of the endowed property was null and void in the absence of a custom allowing it. In the case of Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Sri Gopal (7), it was held that the right of management is not divisible where there are more trustees than one inasmuch as they hold as joint tenants.

Babu Golap Chandra Shastri has in his abovementioned work (p. 447) laid down a rule of law on the authority of Mancharam v. Pransankar (8) that the shebaiti right may be transferred to a co-shebait or to one who is next in succession. But we prefer to follow the authority of this Court in the case of Prasanna Kumar Adhicary v. Saroda Prosanno Adhicary (9) where it was held that even a shebait could not grant a mourasi mokurari lease of any portion of a debutter property to a co-shebait and the same is null and void.

We find that on the 11th May 1888 (Ex. F) Govinda Kumar Roy Chowdhury executed a registered kobala in favour of Muktakeshi Dasi. It appears from this document that this so-called debutter property was sold by one member of the family to another to pay off the vendor's ancestral debt and to meet the expenses of his daughter's marriage. Ex. F (1) is also a registered kobala from one member of the family to another, dated 14th January 1884. From this document we find that the amount of money to be spent for the worship of the deities has been left entirely to the discretion of the vendee. The above two documents show conduct on the part of some of the members of this family, which is inconsistent with the property being debutter.

There are on the record many other documents showing transactions of a nature indicating the properties to be anything but debutter. The conduct of the members of this family clearly proves that, even if the properties were at one time debutter, they have by common consent been converted them into secular properties.

It is contended on behalf of the Appellants that the fact of the release of the lands by the Government on the ground of their being debutter is proof positive of the nature of the properties being debutter. But it has been distinctly held in the case of Nemaye Churn Pooteetundee v. Jogendra Nath Bannerjee (10) that the mere fact of the land having been released by Government on the grounds of its having been appropriated to the services of an idol does not impose on it the character of a religious endowment, so as to exempt it permanently from being attached and sold in satisfaction of decrees against a person who may hold it. We therefore find, following the authority quoted above, that the release by Government is not conclusive evidence of the property being debutter.

On a review of the whole case, we think that in dealing with the question as to whether the properties in dispute were really debutter or only nominally so, the manner in which the dedicated properties have been held and enjoyed is the most important point for our consideration and a consideration of this leads us irresistibly to the conclusion that the property is only nominally debutter but not really so.

It is admitted that Debendra Kumar and others, members of the first party, are shebaits even now. That being so, the member of the first party who are the Respondents in this appeal are entitled to receive from Government their proportionate share of the compensation money which is in dispute. They have been in possession of those shares and it is immaterial for the purposes of the present case whether they are in possession as shebaits or as proprietors. If after taking out the money, they mis pend it their conduct may be the subject of another suit.

We do not think it necessary to enter into a discussion of the question as to whether the idol Anandamoyee owing to its having been broken, is capable of holding property or not.

For the above reasons we hold that the present appeal fails completely both on law and the facts. We therefore dismiss it with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 213 OF 1906.

RAMPINI, C. J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1907.
12, July.

ADHAR CHANDRA CHATTERJEE, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
NOBIN CHANDRA CHATTERJEE, Defendant, No. 1, Respondent.

Hindu Law—Dayabhaga—Joint property

ADHAR CHANDRA CHATTERJEE v. NOBIN CHANDRA CHATTERJEE.

Self-acquisition—Money received at marriage by a member.

Money received by a member of a joint Hindu family at marriage is not joint family property.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of February 1906, against the decree of Babu Purno Chandra Chowdhury, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 22nd of September 1905, affirming that of Babu Bejoy Keshab Mitra, Additional Munsif of Madaripore, dated the 10th of March 1905.

The Plaintiff and the Defendants were brothers. Plaintiff alleged that they were formerly members of a joint family; that after the death of their father, the Defendant No. 1 was the karta of the family and the money left by the father was placed in the hands of Defendant No. 1, that the amount had by investment been increased to Rs. 11,000; that Plaintiff separated from his brothers in Magh 1308 and that the Defendant No. 1 declined to render any account of the said joint family fund and hence this suit for an account by the Plaintiff.

Defendant No. 1 in his reply stated that no money belonging to the joint family had been placed in his hands on their father's death, that he had obtained money at several marriages which he had contracted and with that he commenced money-lending business, and that it was not a joint family concern; that at his first marriage he got Rs. 1,200 out of which he kept Rs. 400 the rest having been taken by his father.

Both the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge were of opinion that the property in question was the separate self-acquired property of Defendant No. 1 and so dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Babu Lal Mohan Das for the Appellant.

Babu Bidhu Bhusan Ganguly for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for an account.

The Plaintiff seeks for an account from his brother, the Defendant No. 1, who was the karta of the family for some time and who has now established a prosperous money-lending business. The Plaintiff asks that the Defendant No. 1 may be directed to render an account of that business, with a view to claiming a share in the profits.

The Defendant, on the other hand, states that all his acquisitions were self-acquisitions, that he did not acquire anything by means of the joint family funds, and that, therefore, the Plaintiff is not entitled to an account.

Both the lower Courts have found in favour of the Defendant and have dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff appeals to us and contends that the money received on the marriage of a member of a joint family is joint property, and that even if that be not so, a sum of Rs. 400 which the Defendant No. 1 got from his father at the time of his first marriage should be held to have been the nucleus of his money-lending business. He also contends that the onus has been wrongly placed upon him.

ADHAR CHANDRA CHATTERJEE v. NOBIN CHANDRA CHATTERJEE.

It appears that Defendant No. 1 inherited no money from his father and received no money from the joint funds of the family. He, however, has contracted five marriages and has received considerable sums at each of these marriages. The Defendant No. 1 is a kulin Brahmin and has married into non-kulin families, and thus acquired various sums of money as presents. At his first marriage he received Rs. 1,200 and gave Rs. 800 to his father (or his father took Rs. 800 from him) while the Defendant No. 1 himself retained Rs. 400 only. It is now asked that this sum of Rs. 400 be held to have been given to the Defendant No. 1 by his father at the time of his first marriage and that it must be presumed that it formed the nucleus of the money-lending business. It is also contended that the onus is on the Defendant No. 1 to show that he did not gain the property now in his possession by means of this Rs. 400 and that it is not on the Plaintiff to show that the Defendant's money was not self-acquired.

Now, both the Courts below find, as a matter of fact, that the money-lending business was established by the Defendant No. 1 with his own money and with the money which he received at his marriage and that this money cannot be considered as joint family property. We see no reason to dissent from this view. No authority has been shown to us to lead us to the conclusion that such property is joint property, or is property which a member of a joint family is bound to add to the joint funds. It seems to us that the general rule is that whatever a member of a joint family acquires by means of the use of the joint family funds is, joint property, but that money acquired by such a member himself in the manner in which the Defendant No. 1 gained his fortune is not joint property. We, therefore, think that this appeal must fail. There is no presumption that the Rs. 400 which the Defendant No. 1 acquired at his first marriage was joint family property; and we do not consider that the onus has been wrongly placed on the Plaintiff.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th of August 1905, against the decree of J. A. Ezechiel, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Backergunj, dated the 16th of May 1905, modifying that of Babu Bhuban Mohun Ganguly, Subordinate Judge of Barisal, dated the 27th of September 1904.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Gunada Charan Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought to establish the Plaintiffs' claim to certain fishery rights in the river Tetulia or Ilsa. The Plaintiffs have undoubtedly a jalkar named Bhasan Tetulia and registered as No 1422 in the Backergunj Collectorate. The river Tetulia has now shifted its course and flows over the Defendants' zemindari in which they have jalkar rights. The question therefore is whether the Plaintiffs can follow the river, and claim their rights wherever it goes.

The Judge in the Court below has found that the river Tetulia is a tidal and navigable river. He has therefore given the Plaintiffs a decree. The Defendants 1 and 2 appeal. On their behalf it has been contended (1) that the Judge's decree is wrong : (2) that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to a 16 annas share in the jalkar, but only to a 12 annas 7½ gundas share, and (3) that the Judge was wrong in giving the Plaintiffs a decree for dones and khals.

In support of his first contention, the learned pleader has argued (1) that the Government has no right to lease fishery rights in tidal and navigable rivers and (2) that the Judge is wrong in holding that when a tidal and navigable river shifts its course, fishery rights continue to subsist in the river in its new course.

We do not think we need follow the learned pleader in his long argument on either of these points. It is sufficient to say that on both points the law as laid down by this Court is settled by long series of decisions, the correctness of which we see no reason to doubt. The case of Narendra Chandra Lahiri v. Nripendra Chandra Lahiri (1) on which the Appellants' pleader relies relates to non-tidal and non-navigable rivers—and has therefore no relevancy. But in any case, the Subordinate Judge has found as a fact that the river Tetulia, though it has shifted its course, has not proceeded beyond the limits of the Plaintiffs' jalkar mehal No. 1422 The jalkar claimed by the Plaintiffs is still within the boundaries of his mehal No. 1422.

The Appellants' second plea must prevail. The Plaintiffs have only a 12 annas 7½ gundas share in the jalkar mehal. The deed executed in their favour with regard to it was signed only by 3 out of the 8 co-shares who it was proposed should sign the deed. Hence, the deed can only convey to the Plaintiffs the interests of the signatories to it.

The third plea is of no avail. The Judge of the Court below has not given the Plaintiffs a decree for dones and khals but only for that portion of the flowing river Tetulia, which flows east of the Chars Assania and Bhaduria.

We modify the decree of the lower Court restricting the Plaintiffs' rights to a 12 annas 7½ gundas share in the jalkar. This order carries costs in proportion. In other respects the decree of the lower Court is affirmed with costs.

BRETT, J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1907. Heard, 17, July. Judgment, 1, August.	JUGDEO SINGH, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. HABIBULLA and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Mortgage—Purchaser of equity of redemption not made party in mortgage suit—His right against purchaser at mortgage sale—Respective rights how adjusted—Suit for possession—Limitation—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 60, 85—Res judicata.

Where a mortgagee in execution of a decree against the owners of the equity of redemption, except one, brings the mortgaged property to sale and purchases it, the owner of the equity of redemption who was omitted from the mortgage suit is not affected by the decree. The proper procedure for the purchaser in such a case to follow is to sue for recovery of possession subject to the right of the person excluded to redeem him.

Where after such purchase the owner of the equity of redemption who had been excluded brought a suit for recovery of possession against the purchaser at the mortgage sale on the ground that he was not affected by the mortgage decree, and the suit was decreed,

Held—That the owner of the equity of redemption cannot resist a suit by the purchaser at the mortgage sale for possession (subject to the right of the Defendant to redeem) on the ground that the right of the parties ought to have been adjusted in the previous litigation, when in the previous litigation he had successfully pleaded that the purchaser at the mortgage sale must enforce his rights by a separate suit.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of December 1905, against the decree of C. E. Pettet, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Gaya, dated the 21st of July 1905, affirming the decree of Babu Upendra Nath Bose, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that district, dated the 13th of June 1994.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babus Lal Mohan Das and Atul Chandra Dutt for the Appellant.

Moulvi Mahomed Mustafa Khan for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation, out of which the present appeal arises, is a five dams share of Mehal Bhadeji, Pergunnah Mohair, which bears Touzi No. 3033 on the revenue rolls of the Collector of Gya. The disputed property was originally owned by Defendants 2 to 5, but the Plaintiff-Appellant as well as first Defendant-Respondent claim to have the acquired title to it by different transactions and the substantial question in controversy between the parties is as to the manner in which their rights are to be adjusted. The Plaintiff alleges that on the 31st May 1886 one Baij Nath Singh, now represented by Defendants 2 to 5, executed a mortgage in his favour for a consideration of Rs. 1,000. The security comprised six properties and included 11 annas, 10 dams share of Mehal Bhadeji. The loan was repayable on the 23rd June 1884. Default was made in payment and in 1893 the mortgagee sued to enforce the security. He joined as parties Defendants various persons, who had meanwhile acquired an interest in different fragments of the equity of redemption, but by some misapprehension, the nature of which is not material for our present purposes, the first Defendant, who had acquired an interest in the disputed property, was left out of the litigation. On the 28th February 1895, a decree was made on the mortgage by consent of the parties to that suit. The result was that the mortgagee obtained a decree for the balance due on the security, but as he released some of the properties from his claim the decree directed a sale only of the property now in dispute and of certain other properties with which we are not now concerned. In execution of this decree, the properties were sold and purchased by the decree-holder himself on the 26th September 1896. This is the foundation of the title of the Plaintiff. Meanwhile, in the course of proceedings under the Public Demands Recovery Act, a sale was held by the Collector on the 11th of August 1894, and the first Defendant purchased the share of Mehal Bhadeji, now in dispute, for a sum of Rs. 300. His purchase was confirmed on the 14th March 1895. A dispute then arose between the Plaintiff, who had purchased at the mortgage sale, and the first Defendant who had purchased at the certificate sale, as to their respective right to have their names registered under the Land Registration Act. There was a protracted litigation in the Revenue Courts, the ultimate result of which was that the first Defendant was defeated and the name of the Plaintiff was registered as proprietor in the books of the Collector on the 12th of February 1897. On the 14th September 1897, the purchaser at the certificate sale commenced an action for recovery of possession and mesne-profits, substantially on the ground that, as he was not a party to the mortgage suit, his right of redemption and consequent possession of the property was not in any manner affected by that litigation. The Court of first instance made a decree in favour of the purchaser at the certificate sale on the 13th July 1898, which declared that the Plaintiff was entitled to have his name registered with respect to the disputed property, to recover possession thereof and to obtain mesne-profits from the date of dispossession up to the date of delivery of possession. Upon appeal by the purchaser at the mortgage sale, the District Judge reversed this decision on the 24th September 1898, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court, however, Habibulla Khan v. Jugdeo Singh (1), the decree of the District Judge was set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. The ultimate result of the litigation, therefore, was that the purchaser at the certificate sale became entitled to possession and to mesne-profits which had accrued due during the period of dispossession. It is conceded that the first Defendant has executed this decree and is now in possession. It appears to have been argued before this Court, on behalf of the present Plaintiff, who was then Respondent, that the purchaser at the certificate sale was not entitled to an unconditional decree for possession and that he was at best entitled to recover possession after he had redeemed the purchaser at the mortgage sale. This Court, however, held that, in the suit as framed, this objection could not be entertained, and an observation was thrown out that the purchaser at the mortgage sale might bring another suit for the sale of the property in the presence of the purchaser at the certificate sale. On the 21st of May 1903, the present Plaintiff, who had purchased at the mortgage sale and who had been defeated in the previous litigation, commenced this action for recovery of Rs. 2,210 by sale of the 5 dams share of Mehal Bhadeji which was covered by the mortgage of 31st May 1886 and had been subsequently purchased by the first Defendant at the certificate sale on the 11th of August 1894. The Plaintiff founded his claim upon the ground that the effect of the previous litigation had been to deprive him of the disputed property, (the price of which, fetched at the mortgage sale, had been applied in partial satisfaction of the mortgage decree) and that, as the first Defendant was not bound, in any manner, by the previous litigation on the mortgage, the Plaintiff was entitled to recover from him by sale of the mortgaged property the sum of Rs. 2,210 which he had paid at the mortgage sale as the price of the disputed property. The claim was resisted, on various grounds, amongst which it is sufficient to mention two, namely, first, that the suit as framed was not maintainable, and, secondly, that it was barred by limitation. The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation inasmuch as it has been brought more than 12 years after the date on which the mortgage money fell due. An attempt was made, on behalf of the Plaintiff, to take the case out of the Statute of Limitation by reason of some alleged acknowledgment of the debt made by the representatives of the original mortgagor on the 28th February 1895, when the consent decree on the mortgage was made. The learned Judge, however, has held that the acknowledgment relied upon was not sufficient, and, if it were necessary for us to consider this point, a question of some nicety might have arisen. But in the view we take of the rights of the parties, it is not necessary to discuss this matter. In our opinion, the suit has been erroneously framed and, if leave be granted to the Plaintiff to amend his plaint, as we think ought to be done, no question of limitation arises and the rights of the parties may be adjusted without any difficulty.

From the circumstances we have set out, it is reasonably clear that what has happened is that the mortgagee in execution of a decree obtained against the owners of the equity of redemption, except one, has brought the mortgaged property to sale and purchased it. The result of this has been that the right of redemption of the first Defendant, who was omitted from the mortgage suit, has not been, in any manner, affected by the decree made in that litigation, Mallikarjunadu v. Lingamurti (2). The position of the person, who has been thus excluded, is that he has now to reckon with the purchaser at the mortgage sale in whom by virtue of the sale under the decree, the interest of the prior mortgagee and that of the holders of the equity of redemption, who were parties to the suit, have become vested as it stood at the date of the sale; but the decree, which has been obtained behind his back, obviously does not affect his rights, as he is not before the Court and had no opportunity to be heard. [McVeigh v. United States (3). Hughes on Procedure, Vol. I., p. 169]. His right in the property, which gives him the right to redeem, remains as it was before the decree was passed. Ram Narain v. Bandi (4), Gangadas v. Jogendra Nath (5), Rungasami v. Felli Badi (6), Hassanbhai v. Umaji (7), Brij Kishore v. Madho (8). The proper procedure, therefore, for the purchaser at the mortgage sale to follow is to sue for recovery of possession subject to the right of the person excluded to redeem him. It is not necessary for our present purposes to consider, whether it is open to a mortgagee, who has omitted to implead a necessary party, to maintain another suit to enforce his security against the party excluded; that he may do so under certain exceptional circumstances appears to have been affirmed by the Allahabad High Court in Dharam Singh v. Angan Lal (9) and Lachman Das v. Dallu (10); but even if it be assumed that it is open to a mortgagee to enforce his security by a fresh suit for sale against an excluded party, which, however, we must not be taken to affirm, it is well-settled that it is not obligatory upon him to do so and that his appropriate remedy is by a suit for possession subject to an exercise of the right of redemption by the party excluded. In support of this proposition reference may be made to the cases of Banwari Jha v. Ramji Thakur (11), Ram Narain Sahoo v. Bandi Prosad (4), Harprosad v. Dalmardan Singh (12) and Gangadas v. Jogendra Nath (5). Under the circumstances of the present case we think the Plaintiff is not entitled to recover from the first Defendant by sale of that portion of the mortgaged property, which is in his possession, a sum of Rs. 2,210, which, the Plaintiff alleges, he paid at the auction-sale held in execution of the mortgage decree for the purchase of the disputed property. No intelligible reason has been suggested why the Plaintiff should recover the specific sum for which he purchased the property at the mortgage sale, that sum may be greater or less than the portion of the mortgage debt which is fairly chargeable upon the property in the hands of the first Defendant. Besides the Plaintiff has already enforced his security, and it may very well be contended that when he brought an action upon his mortgage and obtained a decree, the effect thereof was to exhaust the original cause of action and to transform the mortgage debt into a judgment debt. No doubt, the first Defendant is not bound by that decree as he was no party to that litigation ; but it is not easy to perceive how, if the mortgage contract is one and indivisible, the cause of action as against the owner of one fragment of the equity of redemption may rightly be regarded as distinct and separate from the cause of action against the owners of other fragment of the equity of redemption. Hemendra Kumar Mullik v. Rajendra Lal Munshi (13), King v. Hoar (14), Kendal v. Hamilton (15), Ex Jewings (16). We must, therefore, hold that the proper remedy of the Plaintiff was to bring an action for declaration of his title as purchaser at the mortgage sale and for recovery of possession, subject to the exercise of the right of redemption of the first Defendant. It was argued, however, by the learned vakil for the Respondent that as the result of the previous litigation between the purchaser at the certificate sale as Plaintiff on the one hand, and the purchaser at the mortgage sale as Defendant on the other, the Plaintiff is precluded from recovering possession. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. It appears from the judgment of this Court on the last occasion that the present Plaintiff, who was then Respondent, did suggest that the first Defendant, who was then Plaintiff, should not be allowed to recover possession unconditionally, that he should be put on terms and that he should be compelled to redeem the mortgagee purchaser before he was restored to possession of the property. The first Defendant then successfully resisted this suggestion on the ground that, as he was not a party to the mortgage suit and as his right of redemption had not been extinguished, he was entitled to recover and retain possession and that the mortgagee purchaser must enforce his rights by a separate suit properly framed for the purpose. This Court allowed the objection to prevail and it is not open to the Respondents now to suggest that the Plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession subject to the exercise of the right of redemption by the Defendant, and that the rights of the parties ought to have been adjusted in the previous litigation. It was, further, suggested by the learned vakil for the Respondents that leave ought not to be granted to the Plaintiff to amend his plaint at this stage of the litigation, and in support of this contention, reliance was placed upon the observations of this Court in the case of Surjiram Marwari v. Berhamdeo Pershad (17). In that case, however, there were very special circumstances, which disentitled the Plaintiff to any indulgence from the Court. In the case before us, if the suit has not been properly framed, the fact must be attributed, in some measure, to the dictum in the judgment of this Court in the previous litigation, where it was said that the Plaintiff might enforce his rights by a suit on his mortgage against the purchaser at the certificate sale. Leave is, therefore, granted to the Plaintiff-Appellant to amend his plaint and to convert the suit into one for recovery of possession of the disputed share, subject to the exercise of the right of redemption of the first Defendant.

The question next arises as to the mode in which the rights of the parties are to be adjusted. The Plaintiff mortgagee has purchased some of the mortgaged properties and the security therefore has been split up under the last paragraph of sec. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Defendant is, therefore, entitled to redeem his own share in the disputed property upon payment of a proportionate part of the amount due on the mortgage [Gangadas v. Jogendra Nath (5)]. The same result follows from the circumstance that the mortgagee has released some of the properties from his claim, the effect of which is to split up the security, and allow partial redemption [Hakim Lal v. Ram Lal (18)]. To find out the proportionate amount payable by the Defendant, the value of all the properties comprised in the mortgage security at the date of the execution thereof must be first determined, as also the value of the 5 dams share of Mehal Bhadeji now in dispute. The principle amount of Rs. 1,000 must then be distributed over all the properties comprised in the mortgage and the amount fairly chargeable to the share of Bhadeji now in dispute, proportionate to its value, will have to be calculated. The amount so fixed is the principal, which, the first Defendant may legitimately be called upon to pay. Interest on this amount will run at the rate specified in the mortgage contract from the 31st May 1886 to the 28th August 1895, i.e., the date which was fixed for re-payment in the decree made in the mortgage suit. This direction is based on the ground that the previous decree is not binding upon the first Defendant, for three reasons; first, because he was no party thereto; secondly, because that decree was obtained by consent, and, thirdly, because in that decree various properties were released from the claim on the mortgage and a heavier liability imposed upon the others than what could legitimately be done. As pointed out by this Court in the case of Gangadas v. Jogendra Nath (5), when a party who has been excluded from a mortgage suit and has thus not been afforded an opportunity to redeem, subsequently seeks to exercise his right of redemption, he is entitled to do so upon the same terms as if he had been made a party to the original suit; the party who has been improperly excluded from a mortgage suit, is entitled to claim that he should not be placed in a worse position than what he would have occupied if he had been made a party to the original suit; if he had been so made a party, he would have been entitled to redeem upon payment of the sum ascertained by the decree together with interest upon such sum at the Court rate between the date of the decree and date of actual realization; in other words, his liability to pay interest at the contract rate would have terminated on the date of the decree, when the liability would have passed from the domain of contract into the domain of judgment; from that date his liability would have been determined by the decree and interest would have run at the Court rate allowed by the decree. This principle is equally applicable whether the decree in the mortgage suit was upon contest or by consent; indeed, in the latter event, the reason for the application of the principle is paramount. This view is clearly supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Kedar Lal Marwari v. Bishen Prosad (19). [See also Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (20)]. The amount determined as payable on the 28th August 1895, will, therefore, carry interest at 6 per cent. from the date up to the date fixed for re-payment in the decree to be made by the District Judge in the present litigation. It was suggested, and we think very properly, by the learned vakil for the Respondent, that against the sum so found due to the Plaintiff must be set off the profits, if any, which may have been realized by the Plaintiff by his possession of the disputed share after the successful termination of the proceedings before the Collector in his favour. We observe, however, from the proceedings in the previous litigation between the parties, that the decree of this Court restored the decree of the Court of first instance which entitled the first Defendant, who was then Plaintiff, to recover mesne profits from the present Plaintiff, who was then Defendant, in respect of the property, between the dates of dispossession and recovery of possession. We have not been informed whether these mesne-profits have been actually recovered by the Respondent; if they have been, the Respondent is clearly not entitled to ask for any set off of the profits which may have been received by the Plaintiff during his possession; on the other hand, if these mesne-profits have not been assessed and realized, the Defendant would legitimately be entitled to the set off which he has claimed. When the amount due to the Plaintiff from the first Defendant has been determined by the District Judge on the principles indicated above, he will make a decree, which will entitle the Defendant to pay the amount to the Plaintiff within six months from the date of the decree; if the Defendant makes the payment, the suit will stand dismissed; if the Defendant fails to make the payment, the Plaintiff will be entitled to be placed in possession of the property in execution of the decree and whatever interest the first Defendant has now in the property will stand extinguished.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge discharged, and the case remitted to him for disposal in the manner indicated in this judgment. The District Judge will be at liberty to take additional evidence for the satisfactory determination of the questions to be tried and he may do so himself, or he may direct the Subordinate Judge to act under sec. 568 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The, final decree, however, is to be made by the District Judge himself. As regards the costs of this litigation, the Plaintiff-Appellant must pay to the first Defendant the costs in all the Courts incurred up to this stage. The costs of the proceedings after the remand will be in the discretion of the District Judge.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 413 OF 1905.

RAMPINI, J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1907. Heard, 12, April. Judgment, 16, April.	SURENDRA MOHAN SINGH and ors., Defendants, Appellants, v. BANSIDHAR MARWARI and ors., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 166, 167—Occupancy-holding—Mortgage—Incumbrance, annulment of—Fraud.

Where an occupancy-holding which had been mortgaged by the raiyat of the holding was purchased by a person in execution of a decree for money obtained by him, and the purchaser re-purchased it in execution of a rent decree against the old tenant for arrears which had accrued previous to his first purchase and annulled by a notice under sec. 167 the mortgage of which he was aware at the time of his re-purchase,

Held—That the purchaser did not commit any fraud in re-purchasing the property and was entitled to annul the mortgage, and the mortgagor was not entitled to get a decree upon the mortgage making the holding liable for the mortgage debt.

That the purchaser was not bound as representative of the old tenant to pay off the decree for rent obtained by the landlord.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of November 1905, against the decree of Babu Nunda Lal Dey, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Bhagulpore, dated the 10th of July 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee, Provash Chandra Mitra, Narendra Chandra Bose and Sailendra Nath Palit for the Appellants.

Babus Krishna Prosad Sarbadhikari and Basanta Kumar Bose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought to enforce a mortgage bond. The Subordinate Judge has held the Plaintiff entitled to enforce his mortgage lien against inter alia property No. 5 which is an occupancy holding of 12 bighas in Khangarpore in the possession of the Defendants 16 to 18.

The Defendants 16 to 18 are the Appellants. They purchased the occupancy holding at a sale held in execution of a money-decree obtained by them against the former tenant Anandi Lal, the Defendant No. 1. This purchase of theirs took place on the 17th December 1902. The landlord of the holding had, however, obtained a rent decree, dated 28th February 1901, in respect of the 16as. share of the rent for the years 1304 to 1307 (1897 to 1900). He executed his decree, put up the holding to sale and the Defendants 16 to 18 again purchased it on the 9th December 1903. They obtained delivery of possession on the 2nd April 1904. They then on the 11th June 1904 applied to the Collector for the issue of a notice annulling the Plaintiffs' mortgage which constituted an incumbrance on the holding. The notice was served on the 29th June 1904. Hence, they contend, the incumbrance at the Plaintiffs' mortgage lien on the holding, was annulled.

The Subordinate Judge has, however, held that the conduct of the Defendants 16 to 18 was fraudulent, inasmuch as they well knew of the Plaintiffs' mortgage, when they purchased the holding on the 9th December 1903, and that they should have paid off the landlord's decree for rent and not allowed the holding to be sold.

The Defendants 16 to 18 urge in appeal that the learned Sub-Judge is in error on this point. The property was an occupancy holding. Hence, under sec. 166, Bengal Tenancy Act, the property was sold to the Appellants with power to annul incumbrances, and that when they took steps to annul the incumbrance through the Collector, they were guilty of no fraud but only excercised a statutory right. We consider this plea to be well-founded.

The learned pleader for the Respondents urges that as the Appellants had purchased the holding in execution of their own money decree, they were the representatives of the old tenant Anandi Lal, and were bound to pay up the decree obtained by the landlord against Anandi Lal, and so allow the Plaintiffs' mortgage lien on the holding to subsist. We are unable to see that the Defendants 16 to 18 were under any obligation to act in this way. We do not know if they had been recognised as tenants by the landlord. In any case, they were not responsible for the rent for the years 1304 to 1307 (1897 to 1900) as they only purchased the holding in 1902. The holding was liable for the back rents, and they accordingly, if they wished to keep the holding, had to satisfy the landlord's decree for rent, and they did so by buying the holding again at the sale held in execution of the landlord's decree. In subsequently annulling the Plaintiffs' mortgage under the provisions of Sec. 167, they only exercised a statutory right, which can never be an equitable wrong or fraudulent conduct on their part.

We, therefore, consider that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is wrong on this point and we accordingly decree this appeal with costs. Hearing fee 3 gold mohurs.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 2360 OF 1907.

WOODROFFE, J.
COXE, J.
1907.

SUKHAN SINGH,
Petitioner,
v.
BAIJ NATH GOENKA,
Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 331, 332—Decree for delivery of possession of the immoveable property—Obstruction to delivery by third party in good faith—His remedy.

Sec. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates an application by the decree-holder; and a third party resisting the delivery of possession of property to a decree-holder cannot apply for the investigation of his claim under this section but may do so under sec. 332 of the Code after he has been dispossessed.

This was a rule granted on the 29th of July 1907, against the orders of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr passed in a rent execution case, (1) dated 17th April 1907, rejecting the application of the Petitioner made under sec. 331, C. P. C, and directing the Petitioner to apply after the delivery of possession under sec. 332, C. P. C., and issuing process for delivery of possession on the 13th May 1907, (2) dated 1st June 1907, directing the issue of fresh process for delivery of possession on the 22nd June, (3) dated 22nd June 1907, directing the issue of process for delivery of possession on 29th June 1907, (4) dated 29th June 1907, directing issue of parwana of delivery of possession on 20th July 1907 and that the Nazir do serve the process personally by the aid of the Police.

The facts as disclosed in the petition were as follows :—

The decree-holder alleging himself to be a purchaser at a revenue sale of Pargana Bist Hazari, Touzi No. 336 of the Monghyr Collectorate, brought a suit for rent and ejectment under the provisions of sec. 66, Bengal Tenancy Act, against the judgment-debtors describing them as thikadars and on 18th July 1906 obtained a decree declaring the decree-holder entitled to the rent and directing the judgment-debtors to pay the amount decreed within 2 months, in default to be ejected from the 14 annas of Mouzah Mirzajung.

The judgment-debtors, the Petitioners alleged, held the said mouzah as thikadars under Khoji Syed Takijan and others proprietors The thika came to an end on the 11th June 1906, when the proprietors conveyed the said 14 annas 1 dam of the mouzah to the Petitioner for a sum of Rs. 8,000 by registered kobala and after that the Petitioner entered into direct possession of the property and is still in possession.

The decree-holder applied for execution of his decree whereupon the Subordinate Judge issued process for delivery of possession to the decree-holders.

The officer deputed to deliver possession reported that he was obstructed by Petitioner's men in the execution of the process.

Subsequently on an application by the decree-holder the Nazir was deputed for execution and was informed of the actual possession of the Petitioner and the Nazir thereupon submitted a report stating his inability to deliver possession and complained against Petitioner's servants of resistance.

The Petitioner applied on the 16th April 1907 under the provisions of sec. 331, C. P. C., stating that resistance if any was occasioned by the Petitioner claiming in good faith to be in possession of the property by virtue of his purchase from the proprietors before the decree obtained by decree-holders, but the Subordinate Judge ordered that the applicant (Petitioner) might apply after delivery of possession under sec. 332, C. P. C.

The Petitioner moved this Court for a revision of the aforesaid orders and obtained the present rule.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Petitioner.

Babus Digambur Chatterjee and Kshetra Mohun Sen for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—It is not necessary to decide the questions that have been raised; namely, whether an appeal lies in this case or whether the Petitioner has his remedy by way of revision. The rule must be discharged upon the merits.

The petition was rejected on the ground that the Petitioner was not a person entitled to apply under sec. 331, C. P. C., which contemplates an application by the decree-holder.

I think that the contention is sound that this section is limited to an application by the decree-holder. The Appellant has not been actually dispossessed, so as to enable him to come under sec. 332, C. P. C.

It has further been stated that the execution proceedings have been struck off and that the matter is now really one relating to costs. The rule is discharged with costs, two gold mohurs.

COXE, J.—I agree.

RASH BEHARI LAL MANDAL and others, Petitioners,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Commitment to the Court of Sessions ordered under sec. 436 of Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—High Court's power to revise under sec. 439—Preliminary inquiry into Sessions cases, Magistrate's power and duties in regard thereto—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 436, 439.

It is not incompetent to a Magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry into Sessions cases to examine the credibility of evidence adduced in the course of the enquiry.

Such Magistrate should not commit the accused for trial in the Sessions Court if he be of opinion that notwithstanding direct evidence adduced against the accused, the prosecution case is improbable and the evidence is unreliable.

The High Court has full jurisdiction under sec. 439, Cr. P. C., to revise a commitment order made under sec. 436 on points of law as well as of facts.

This was a rule granted on the 12th of August 1907, against an order of H. Allanson, Esq., District Magistrate of Monghyr, dated the 29th of July 1907, setting aside the order of discharge passed on the 3rd of June 1907, by Babu Sarat Chandra Chatterjee, Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr under sec. 209, Cr. P. C., and committing the Petitioners to the Court of Sessions.

RASH BEHARI LAL MANDAL v. THE EMPEROR.

The facts material to the report appear from the judgment.

Mr. Jackson and Babus Hara Prasad Chatterjee and Joy Gopal Ghosh for the Petitioners.

Mr. Douglas White for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioners Rash Behari Lal Mandal, Bhai Lal Singh, Nirdhan Singh and Bahuran Kamat were charged with having committed on the night of the 14th November 1906 the offences of rape and dacoity under secs. 376 and 395, I. P. C., at a village within the jurisdiction of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Madhepura in the district of Bhagalpur. The inquiry was proceeding in the Court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Madhepura when, on the application of the Petitioners to this Court, the Court directed a transfer of the case from the Court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Madhepura to the District Magistrate of Monghyr to be tried by himself or by some other competent Magistrate subordinate to him. The District Magistrate of Monghyr directed Babu Sarat Chandra Chatterjee, one of the Deputy Magistrates subordinate to him and exercising first class powers, to hold the preliminary enquiry. On the 3rd June 1907, the Deputy Magistrate discharged the Petitioners under sec. 209, Cr. P. C., being of opinion that he case instituted by the complainant was false, that the witnesses for the prosecution had made false statements and that the story told by them was in many respects improbable. Thereafter an application was made to the District Magistrate of Monghyr under sec. 435 of the Code for a revision of the order of the Deputy Magistrate; and, on the 29th July 1907, the Magistrate directed under sec. 436 of the Code that the Petitioners should be committed to the Court of Sessions at Bhagalpur for trial on the charges of rape and dacoity and abetment thereof.

The present application was made to us on the 12th August for an order to set aside the order of the District Magistrate directing the commitment of the Petitioners. On that date we issued a rule calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why his order of commitment should not be set aside on the ground that it was not supported by the evidence.

Notice of the rule was received by the District Magistrate of Monghyr on or about the 14th August. The record was on that date in the Court of the Sessions Judge and the Sessions Judge despatched the record to this Court on the 15th. On the 21st August the Crown entered appearance in the case.

The rule was fixed for hearing on the 26th August and there was ample time for Counsel on behalf of the Crown to prepare himself to show cause on that date. On the 21st August, however, the District Magistrate of Monghyr wrote to the Registrar of this Court for the return of the record to his office so that he might show cause against the rule issued by us. The Petitioners, however, had filed printed copies of the record and on the 23rd August the necessary number of copies was after comparison supplied to the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs. We did not, therefore, direct that the record should be sent to the office of the District Magistrate but directed that a copy of the paper-book should be sent. It was also unnecessary to send back the record as the Crown had already entered appearance and intended to show cause by Counsel and in fact Counsel had been supplied with a printed copy of the record.

On the 26th August an application was made to us by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer who appeared to show cause for the postponement of the case for a fortnight, but the application was opposed by the Counsel for the Petitioners and, as ample time had already been given to show cause, we declined to postpone the case except for one day. The case came on for hearing before us on the 27th instant.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer practically declined to show cause; but, on questions put by us, he stated that this Court has full jurisdiction to deal with the case on facts and to consider the propriety of the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate. The authorities to which he referred in support of his view are Harbans Singh v. Fakir Das (1), Pirthi Chand Lal v. Sampatia (2), Queen-Empress v. Namdev Satvaji (3) and Re Kalyan Singh (4). The law on the subject seems to us to be quite clear. Sec. 215, Cr. P. C., bars our reviewing a commitment made under secs. 213, 214, 477 and 478 except on a point of law; but it does not bar our revising under sec. 439 a commitment order made under sec. 436, Cr. P. C. Under sec. 439 of the Code, we have all the powers of an Appellate Court.

The only matter to which the Deputy Legal Remembrancer drew our attention is that there is nothing to show that the evidence of Bharosi Dusadh was admitted by the Deputy Magistrate; we shall presently deal with this piece of evidence. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer declined to enter into the facts of the case and left the case in our hands. We accordingly reserved our judgment in order to go through the evidence and to decide without the help of the Counsel for the Crown the question of the propriety of the order made by the District Magistrate of Monghyr.

We have gone through the evidence and after a careful consideration of the reasons given respectively by the Deputy Magistrate and the District Magistrate the conclusion we have arrived at is that a primâ facie case for commitment has not been made out. The Deputy Magistrate entered fully into the evidence and, apart from the discrepancies in the statements of the witnesses, he came to the conclusion that a primâ facie case of rape and dacoity was not established inasmuch as the story told by the witnesses for the prosecution was absurd on the face of it. He was also of opinion that the witnesses had deliberately made false statements on various points. The learned District Magistrate has not sufficiently considered the question of probabilities.

The only point, as we have said, relied on by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer is that the deposition of Bharosi Dusadh, at whose house the family of the complainant took refuge after they were driven from their house, was not accepted in evidence. Bharosi Dusadh was examined at Madhepura before the case was transferred to Monghyr and he died before he was cross-examined. The Public Prosecutor tendered his evidence before the enquiring Magistrate at Monghyr. It does not appear from the record whether the evidence was admitted or not; but there is nothing to show that the evidence was rejected and even if it was, the evidence was not that of an eye witness but of one who could corroborate the women who, it is alleged, were raped. The witness, however, was not cross-examined and it was no fault of the accused that he was not cross-examined. We have read that evidence and treated it as part of the record and we are of opinion that it is not of any value and is not sufficient to outweigh the imperfections and improbabilities in the evidence for the prosecution.

The very revolting nature of the offence or more accurately the offences of rape alleged to have been committed by six men on three women, by two men successively on each woman, near to and in the presence of each other and in the presence of the landlord of the women and the master of the men at a comparatively early part of the night carries with it the insignia of unnaturalness, and highly cogent evidence is, therefore, necessary to support the charges under sec. 376, I. P. C. Some of the persons accused of the commission of the alleged offences belong to high castes and this fact adds to the character of improbability of the story for the prosecution. That the accused Rash Behary Mandal would be personally present at the scene having walked at night from his own residence to the house of a Dusadh situated at some distance at night is also extremely improbable. There was no necessity for his presence and his stay at the place for a sufficiently long time to witness the robbery which, the prosecution alleges, followed the offences of rape. Sundry things, not of much value, were taken away and were most unaccountably returned notwithstanding that most of the things were not identifiable. The circumstantial evidence which might support the statements of the women, who are alleged to have been raped and of the eye-witnesses is wanting. The place where the offences are said to have been committed did not show signs of violence and the persons of the women were not medically examined for the discovery of marks of violence in the commission of the offences of rape. The women declined to be medically examined. The backs of two of the women did not show even a scratch. The first information gave the story of rape on an old woman but it was too absurd to be supported by evidence and was abandoned in Court. The inconsistency between the first information and evidence might be explained and an explanation has been attempted to be given but a considerable amount of discredit attaches to the entire story on account of such serious discrepancy.

The case for the prosecution rests almost entirely on oral evidence which was disbelieved by the Court which was in the most advantageous position of testing the credibility of oral evidence. If Rash Behary Lal had been actuated by a

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE CASE OF Lal Mohan Pal v. Surya Kumar Das, reported at p. 1152 of Vol. XI of this Journal. In this case their Lordships Rampini, C. J., and Sharfuddin, J., held that an award made by arbitrators appointed on a reference in which all the parties to the suit did not concur, is not invalid. Their Lordships observed—"There can be no doubt that, under the provisions of sec. 506 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a reference to arbitration should have the concurrence of all the parties to the suit. But we do not find that, when a reference to arbitration is preferred to a Court and an award made upon it, there is any provision for the setting aside of an award on the ground of the irregularity of the reference under sec. 506. Irregularity in the reference to arbitration and omission of the concurrence of all the parties in the application do not seem to be any of the grounds on which an award, once made, can be set aside."

THE ABOVE OBSERVATION OF THEIR LORDSHIPS SEEMS to go beyond what has been previously laid down on the same point. The decision of their Lordships, however, appears to be justified by the facts of the case, namely, that the parties who did not join in the application for a reference were not actively carrying on the suit. Of the three Defendants Nos. 1, 5, 6, the Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 did not appear at all and the Defendant No. 7 appeared in the suit and put in a written statement, but it appears that he subsequently absented himself. In the judgment there is no clear finding whether this Defendant was or was not an absent party when the application for reference was made by the other Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4. If he was not absent, the application for reference was certainly one not contemplated by sec 506, C. P. C. The ruling in the case of The Chairman of Purnea Municipality v. Siva Sankar Ram, I. L. R. 33 Cal. 899, is to the effect that an award made on a reference in which the Defendants who had not entered appearance did not join, was not invalid, that is to say the Court interpreted the words "all the parties to a suit" in sec. 506 to be those who have entered appearance or are carrying on the litigation. To the same effect is the ruling in the case of Pitam Mal v. Sadik Ali, I. L. R. 24 All. 229.

BUT IT SEEMS TO US TO BE AT LEAST DOUBTFUL whether an award made on a reference in which all the parties who have entered appearance did not join, is not, on a proper construction of the section, wholly void and can be given effect to even as regards those who made the application for reference to arbitration. We may in this connection refer to the case of Kadhu Singh v. Baljit Singh, in I. L. R. 29 All. 423, in which it was held that when during the pendency of a suit a reference was made to arbitration but one Defendant through inadvertence or otherwise did not sign the vakalatnama authorising the pleader to agree to the reference, the whole award was null and void as there was no legal reference to arbitration.

SOME IMPORTANT QUESTIONS BEARING ON THE LAW OF contract and fraudulent representation inducing a contract were decided by the House of Lords in the case of S. Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corporation, which is reported at p. 351 of the L. R. Appeal Cases, 1907. In that case Defendants, the Dublin Corporation, being desirous of carrying out some harbour works, had to invite tenders for the necessary contracts. Certain information had to be afforded to intending tenderers. With this object engineers nominated and employed by the Corporation prepared certain plans. These plans were furnished by the engineers to the Corporation and by the latter to the tenderers of whom the Plaintiff company was one. Upon those plans a very important wall was made to appear as being 9 feet deep but it did not in fact run to such depth, and the Defendants' engineers had no knowledge or reason to believe that it did ; it was in fact recklessly made. It was found as a fact that the Plaintiffs relying upon this representation sent in their tender at a less sum than they would otherwise have done for the execution of that contract.

IN THE CONTRACT THAT WAS ENTERED INTO BETWEEN the parties there was a stipulation that the contractor should verify the representations contained in the plans furnished by the Corporation to the contractor and the Corporation would not be responsible for their accuracy. On the completion of the work the contractors (Plaintiffs) brought an action against the Corporation claiming damages for misrepresentations as to the depth of the wall, which made them spend more for the performance of the contract. The principal defence was that by virtue of the stipulation in the contract, the contractor ought not to have relied upon the representations and they were entitled to no damage caused by those representations, as the Corporation declared themselves not responsible for the accuracy of the representations made by their engineers. It was held that the stipulation in the contract only covered honest mistakes or misrepresentations and that it did not afford protection against fraud whether of the Corporation or their agent.

IN THE COURT OF APPEAL, IT WAS HELD, DISTINGUISHING between what is called conscious fraud and unconscious fraud that inasmuch as the Corporation was not guilty of any conscious fraud, they were not liable to pay damages to the Plaintiffs. As to this Lord Robertson observed—that the distinction "would appear to amount to this, that the contractor should be held to have a cause of action for deceit if he was deceived by a deliberate lie, but no cause of action if he was deceived by a false and reckless statement not really believed in by those who made it, though in law equally fraudulent, and equally valid as the ground of such an action. . . I think this distinction unsound." As to the question whether the Corporation were exempted from liability by virtue of the stipulation in the contract that the contractor should verify the representations—it is pithily observed by Lord James of Heresford, "If this dictum be read as general in its terms, and so applied, it may be read as conferring considerable advantage upon the designers of fraud. At any rate by inserting such a clause those who framed it would run a fair chance of the contractor saying 'I assume that those with whom I deal are honest and honourable men, I scout the idea of their being guilty of fraud. An enquiry testing the plan will be expensive and difficult, so I will not make it.' The protecting clause might be inserted fraudulently with the purpose and hope that, notwithstanding its terms, no test would take place. When the fraud succeeds, surely those who designed the fraudulent protection cannot take advantage of it. Such a clause would be good protection against any mistake or miscalculation, but fraud vitiates every contract and every clause in it. As a general principle I incline to the view that an express term that fraud shall not vitiate a contract would be bad in law." It should be noted that the misrepresentation in the plans was not wilfully made, it was made by the engineers recklessly without any real belief in the existence of the fact represented ; still it was held that the misrepresentation amounted to fraud.

THE FOLLOWING WHICH WE TAKE FROM THE ENGLISH Law Journal will be found interesting by those of our readers who may have a literary taste.

The old connection between law and literature was strengthened by the late Sir Lewis Morris, who practised as a conveyancer in Lincoln's Inn while he was establishing his reputation as a poet. He was called to the Bar in 1861, and continued to practise as a conveyancer until 1881, and it was during this period that he wrote 'The Epic of Hades,' the best known of all his works. There have been several poets who have abandoned the steep places of the Bar for the slopes of Parnassus. The present Poet Laureate was called at the Inner Temple in 1857, and attended the York Assizes and West Riding Sessions for two or three years. But the late Sir Lewis Morris is the only poet of repute who has found the tasks of the conveyancer not incompatible with the cultivation of the muse. Not that there is anything in the work of the conveyancer that is peculiarly opposed to the spirit of romance. Mr. R. D. Blackmore, the author of 'Lorna Doone,' practised as a conveyancer for several years. Sir Walter Scott, speaking of himself and the law, said: 'There was no great love between us, and it pleased Heaven to decrease it on further acquaintance.' Most of the poets who have sprung from the legal profession appear to have entertained the same unfavourable view. Cowper, who was a fellow-pupil of Lord Thurlow's in an attorney's office, was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, but he quickly yielded himself to the charms of literature. Denham, one of the most attractive poets of the seventeenth century, was a member of Lincoln's Inn, and Thomas Gray, the author of the famous 'Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard,' studied for the Bar, but neither of them got beyond the apprenticeship stage. 'Barry Cornwall,' who had a considerable vogue as a poet in the early part of the last century was a solicitor, and produced the greater part of his poetic work before he passed to the other branch of the profession. He is, perhaps, the only lawyer whose achievements as a poet have helped him to a legal appointment, for within a few months of joining the Bar he was appointed a Commissioner in Lunacy, an office which he held for nearly twenty years.

MAHOMEDAN LAW OF INHERITANCE AND ITS EVOLUTION.

Another simplicity which Mahomedan law attained and which English law has not yet attained and perhaps will never attain, is the absence of any distinction between moveables and immoveables. The analogous classification known to English law of Realty and Personalty and the consequent different laws of inheritance guiding the succession of Realty on the one hand and Personalty on the other, do not find any recognition in the system of the Arab legislator.

But it is in drawing up his table of succession that Mahommed stands apart from the legislators of other systems in originality of conception and a practical adaptation to the customs and manners of his time. Sir W. MacNaughten observes, "In these provisions, we find ample attention paid to the interests of all those whom Nature places in the first rank of our affections (MacNaughten's Mahomedan Law, 2nd Edn., Preliminary Remarks, p. 5). Indeed no system of jurisprudence makes at once a provision for the son, daughter, mother, father, and husband or wife of the deceased. Even the Jewish Rabbinical law does not seem to make any provision for the parents either in the first instance or even as a remote contingency; and among the Jewish tribes settled in the Arabian Peninsula, no provision was made for the mother in distributing the effects of the dead man. Neither the Roman law, the most matured and highly developed of the systems of the ancient world, nor the Hindu law provides for such a simultaneous succession of the heirs; these systems trusted to the good sense of the heir for the protection and support of his aged relations, such as his mother and his father's parents and his helpless sister. But Mahommed wanted to give them express rights of inheritance by his legislation. What then is the inference? This question seems to have addressed itself to the serious attention of none of the writers on Mahomedan law including even the most recent of them (Prof. Wilson). To find out a clue to this we must search the records of barbarous communities of ancient times. "There is absolute testimony," says the late Sir H. Maine, "that tribes long pressed hard by enemies or generally in straits for subsistence, systematically put their members to death when too old for labour or arms. The place from which a wild Slavonic race compelled their old men to leap into the sea is still shown; and the fiercer savage has often in many parts of the world made food of them. There is a story of a New Zealand chief who questioned as to the fortunes of a fellow tribesman long ago well known to the enquirer answered. 'He gave us so much good advice that we put him mercifully to death'" (Maine's Early Law and Custom, pp. 23-24). The Arabian society at the time of the advent of Mahommed must have consisted of Pagan tribes steeped in absolute barbarism. And there is positive evidence that they buried alive their female children (see Koran, Chap. VI, XVI, XVII and LXXXI and also Ameer Ali, Vol. II, Introduction, p. 17). A nation devoid of all natural affection for their tender offspring could not be expected to be more merciful towards their old and decrepit progenitor who formed a burdensome appendage on their predatory excursions and source of heavy drain on their scanty and very limited resources and the only way of getting rid of them was to make short work of them. It was, fired by a feeling of disgust and revolt against this unnatural and pernicious custom, that Mahommed declared in the most emphatic terms, you know not whether your parents or your children be of greater use unto you, and it might be reasonably supposed with very great probability of truth that in tearing away from the cruel custom of his time and effecting a wide departure from other systems of law, he felt the necessity for supporting his rule with a reason; and the reason that has unquestioned and unbounded operation on the minds of ignorant and superstitious multitudes was the one selected by him; for he says "this is an ordnance from God and God is knowing and wise. (Koran, Sura V, 8—16). This theory receives an additional support from the way Mahommed exhorts his hearers to accord a portion of their heritage to uterine brothers and sisters; for there too Mahommed feels he treads on untrodden ground and feels the necessity of supporting his mandates with a reason, for he says "And if a man or woman's substance be inherited by a distant relation, and he or she have a brother or sister, each of them two shall have a sixth part of the estate. But if there be more than this number, they shall be equal sharers in a third part after payment of the legacies which shall be bequeathed, and the debts without prejudice to the heirs. This is an ordnance from God and God is knowing and gracious. (Koran, Sura V, Ibid). We have here the high authority of Ameer Ali for the statement that the uterine brothers and sisters had no right of succession before Mahommed's legislation (Ameer Ali, Vol. II, page 49, citing as his authority M. Santaraya). Examining with a little more care Mahommed's Scheme of Inheritance, we find that certain relations of the deceased have an imperative claim to specific fractions of the estate, of his debts and legacies. These persons though inaccurately called sharers in Mahommed's text-books, are the Zimi'l furait. "Possessors' by Divine ordinance," because specific fractions of the estate are assigned to them by Koran itself. The residue goes to another group of relations, inaccurately called 'residuaries.' These are the Asabah, literally members of the family. This, of course, does not imply that 'Possessors by Divine ordinance are not members of the family, but simply that the right of the Asabah to inherit is in virtue of Pre Islamite customs and usages. This too cannot be advanced without some reservation for the concurrent right of females to share along with males, though quantitatively inferior, is based upon express texts of the Koran and not on the pre-existing usages. A failure of sharers and residuaries involved the estate of the deceased man to escheat to the Public treasury according to the Maliki and Shaffae doctrines, but the Hanafite lawyers let in another class of relations called Zami'l arham (possessors by virtue of the womb). These are rendered in English text-books on Mahomedan law as 'distant kindred,' a term which indeed, as Prof. Wilson observes, is "very wide of the mark, seeing that they include persons so near in point of consanguinity as a daughter's son and a mother's father." (Anglo-Mahommedan Law, 2nd Edn, p. 94). This recognition of 'possessors by virtue of the womb' on failure of 'possessors by divine ordnance' and 'members of the family displays a considerable development of legal ideas among the Hanafite lawyers for it is tantamount to the acknowledgment of the principle of cognation so strenuously contended for by the Roman prætors and so successfully engrafted in the scheme of succession as perfected by them.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

LALMAN v. MAHAR SINGH, I. L. R. 29 All. 205. Mortgage-sale subject to charge.

An order may be passed for sale of a mortgaged property subject to a charge.

KASTURA KUNWAR v. GYA PRASAD, I. L. R. 29 All. 207. Civil Procedure Code, secs. 244, 278.

An application by an auction-purchaser under sec. 318, C. P. C, to have the name of one of the judgment-debtors substituted in the applicant's place which was opposed by a third person on the ground that it was with her money that the property had been purchased does not come under sec. 244, C. P. C.

BINDO v. SHAM LAL, I. L. R. 29 All. 210. Appointment of guardian of minor—Welfare.

Where a maternal grandmother was appointed guardian of a girl in preference to her father their Lordships Knox and Richards, JJ., observed as follows:—It is true that there is nothing against the father, but it is again an admitted fact that he has married a second time and will have to go under the control of a step-mother, of whom probably she knows nothing. We cannot think that the girl under these circumstances, will be so happy as she is in the house of the maternal grandmother. What we have to consider is what will really be for the welfare of the minor.

PURAN v. SHEODAT, I. L. R. 29 All. 213. Suit to set aside sale on the ground of fraud—Service of summons.

A suit to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud was held to be not maintainable when the fraud alleged was as to the service of summons and when in a previous proceeding under sec. 108, C. P. C., it was found that there was no fraud.

CHHITAR v. JAGANNATH, I. L. R. 29 All. 214. Specific performance of contract of sale of minor's property.

A contract for the sale of a minor's property to which the Judge had given his permission, was not allowed to be specifically enforced when it appeared that the guardian subsequently obtained a fresh permission to sell the property at a higher price.

SUNDAR LAL v. CHHITAR MAL, I. L. R 29 All. 215. Mortgage—Redemption by Mitakshara son of his share.

In a suit for redemption by the sons in a Mitakshara family who had mortgaged the property along with their father, held, they can redeem their own share alone, a former suit by the father having failed.

PADAM LAL v. TEK SINGH, I. L. R. 29 Cal. 217. Malik, meaning of.

By a bequest a property was given by a person to his wife as malik. Held, that the widow took an absolute estate.

HUSAINI v. MUHAMMAD RUSTUM, I. L. R. 29 All. 222. Restitution of conjugal rights—Legal cruelty.

The Mahomedan law on a question of what is legal cruelty between man and wife does not materially differ from the English law.

CHUNI LAL v. THE NIZAM'S GUARANTEED STATE RAILWAY CO, I. L R. 29 All. 228 (F. B.). Railway Company—Liability.

Receipt of goods by one Railway Company for carriage over its own and another Company's line makes the receiving Company solely liable for overcharge wrongfully demanded.

MULCHAND v. MUHAMMAD ALI, I. L. R. 29 All. 235. Civil Procedure Code, sec. 396—Commission for partition.

The Legislature advisedly used the plural number in the case of commissions to make partition and therefore a Court cannot legally issue a commission to one Commissioner only.

RAM SARUP v. RAM DEO, I. L. R. 29 All. 239. Alienation by widow—Limitation Act, Sch. II, Art. 125.

A collusive arbitration proceeding to which a Hindu widow was a party whereby her husband's property was divided amongst certain persons absolutely is to be considered an alienation within the meaning of Art. 125 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act.

PREONATH v. BISHNATH, I. L. R. 29 All. 256. Civil Procedure Code, sec. 43.

A suit by a doctor for fees for attendance on Defendant's father was held to be barred by sec. 43, C. P. C., when a previous suit by the doctor upon a note of hand by the Defendant's father for a part of the fees did not include the claim made in the second suit.

PIRBHU v. BALDEO, I. L. R. 29 All. 260. Transfer of Property Act, sec. 90.

No decree can be passed under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act even when the property under mortgage can by no possibility be brought to sale.

MUNSHI v. DAULAT, I. L. R. 29 All. 262. Redemption.

Each of several mortgagors can redeem to the extent of his own interest when the integrity of a mortgage is broken up upon the purchase by the mortgagee of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged property.

RAM KISHAN v. KASHI BAI, I. L. R. 29 All. 263. Limitation Act, sec. 12.

"We think it would be unduly restricting the language of sec. 12 of the Limitation Act, if we were to hold, as did the lower Court, that the application for a copy of the judgment must necessarily be by the Appellant or somebody proved to have been acting in the matter as her agent." (Per Stanley, C. J., and Burkitt, J.).

PARBATI KUNWAR v. MAHMUD FATIMA, I. L. R. 29 All. 267.

In a suit for recovery of possession by Plaintiffs on the death of their father, the Defendants set up different titles to different portions, held that the suit was not bad for multifariousness as the cause of action was one.

IMTIAZI v. DHUMAN, I. L. R. 29 All. 275. Civil Procedure Code, secs 244, 310A.

An order refusing a judgment-debtor's deposit under sec. 310A is appealable as an order under sec. 244, C. P. C.

Review.

THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT. By R. F. Rampini, M. A., L. L. D., Indian Civil Service, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and Judge, High Court of Judicature, Calcutta, and J. H. Kerr, Indian Civil Service, Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Revenue and Agriculture. Third Edition, Calcutta, S. K. Lahiri & Co., 54, College Street. 1907.

Until lately Mr. Justice Rampini's edition of the Bengal Tenancy Act had no rival in the field. Great care has been bestowed in the preparation of the present edition and we have no hesitation in commending it to all concerned in the administration of the rent law of Bengal, as a complete and most up-to-date annotated edition of the Act. The changes introduced by Act I, B. C. of 1907, have been duly embodied in the texts of the statute and for convenience of reference, placed within heavy brackets, whilst light brackets indicate the changes made by Act III, B. C. of 1898. As Act I, B. C. of 1907, does not apply to Eastern Bengal and Assam, some of the sections, which have undergone very considerable modifications have been retained as they were before amendment, whilst the sections as modified are also shown in the body of the Act. The recent rulings of which a large body have accumulated since the last edition was brought out, have been embodied in their proper places in the notes. The new rules framed by the Local Government appear in an appendix. Rules for the registration of documents under the Bengal Tenancy Act which are about to be promulgated appear in another appendix But with regard to these latter it is noted that they are still subject to revision and may be modified, but possibly not to any considerable extent. Appendix V shows the provisions of the Act which have been extended to Chota Nagpur. The most commendable feature of the present edition, however, is the introduction which traces within very short compass the gradual evolution through successive stages of the rent law of Bengal. It serves to show further, what otherwise is not very apparent, that the latest modifications introduced in the law are, in part at any rate, in furtherance of the original ideas embodied in the earliest Regulations concerning the relation of zemindars and raiyats. The second part of the introduction gives a brief analysis of the law relating to the record-of-rights The book we notice has gained considerably in bulk, as was inevitable considering the rapid accretion to the statute and case law which have taken place within recent years.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Nicholson v. Piper. Before LORDS JUSTICES BUCKLEY and KENNEDY. 19th October 1907.

Extension of time for appealing—Mistake of legal adviser, as an excuse for delay.

This was an application for extension of time for appealing against an order made under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The applicant, Nicholson, was a workman and received an injury to his foot by an accident in the course of his employment in the service of the Respondent, on January 18th, 1904. An agreement between the employer and the workman providing for the payment by the former of 15*s.* per week as compensation during the workman's incapacity or until the same should be ended, diminished, increased or redeemed in pursuance of the Act, was entered into and duly recorded in accordance with Sch. II, Para. 8 of the Act. Subsequently upon an application of the employer for the termination of the weekly payment on the ground that the workman had recovered, the Judge of the Greenwich County Court, in view of conflicting evidence adduced before him as to the state of the workman, ordered an inquiry by an independent medical referee and relying on his report made the order sought to be appealed against on the 17th November 1907, directing the agreement to be terminated and the payments to cease. The applicant thereafter without appealing from the said order instituted other proceedings and having failed therein, made the present application alleging that at the time when the order was made those who advised the applicant thought that it was impossible to appeal from it.

Lord Justice Buckley in refusing the application observed that in his opinion no special circumstances had been made out to take the case out of the general rule. The mere fact that the litigant's legal advisers thought that he could not appeal was not a special circumstance justifying a departure from the rule. No doubt the cases on this point had oscillated. But the principle which he had stated had been laid down by Lord Justice James in International Financial Society v. City of Moscow Gas Company, 7 Ch. D. 241, and by Lord Justice Collin in In re Manchester Economic Building Society, 24 Ch. D. 408, and had been affirmed in the latest case on the question. In re Coles and Ravenshear, 23 Times L R. 32.

Local authority—Refusing to sanction building plan—Allegation of malice—Right of action.

The Plaintiff submitted to the Defendants certain plans for draining his house and making certain additions to it which the Defendants refused to approve on the ground that they were not in accordance with their bye-laws. The Plaintiff brought this action before Mr. Justice Lawrence and a special jury alleging that the plans complied with the bye-laws and that the Defendants maliciously and in breach of their duty as the local sanitary authority, had disapproved of them. The Plaintiffs asked for a declaration of his right to construct in accordance with the said plans, for an injunction to restrain the Defendants from hindering such construction and for damages. Mr. Justice Lawrence having dismissed the claim, this was an application for judgment or new trial.

Lord Justice Vaughan Williams in dismissing the application said that the Defendant Council in this matter were not exercising judicial functions, but they were exercising a discretion vested in them by statute and the whole object of this action was to see if by bringing the action the Plaintiff could not have the decision of the Council overruled. Assuming the facts to be as alleged, he was of opinion that when a statute vested in a local authority a duty and power such as was here vested, no action would lie against that authority in respect of the decision arrived at, even if there was evidence to show that the members constituting the body were actuated by bitterness or other motive against the Plaintiff. His Lordship pointed out that the Plaintiff was not without a remedy.

Mr. Montague Shearman, K. C., and Mr. Harry Dobb for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Montague Lush, K. C., and Mr. Adam Walker for the Defendant, were not called upon.

Application refused.

KING'S BENCH.—Crossby Brothers v. Lee. Before MR. JUSTICES PHILLIMORE AND WALTON. 31st October 1907.

Fixtures, though removeable—Otto Gas engine—Distraint—Hire purchase system.

HOBSON v. GORRINGE (1897, 1 Ch. 182) followed.

The Defendant owned a shop on the Hackney Road. One Jones was their tenant. The Plaintiffs a firm of engineers had supplied an Otto Gas engine to Jones at the premises on the hire purchase system. Jones fell into arrears of rent and the landlord put in a distraint and took away the engine in question. The engine was fixed to the premises being made fast by excavating the floor and fixing nuts and screwing down. Was this engine liable to be distrained? That question arose in this action brought by the engineers against the landlord. The County Court Judge followed Hellawell v. Eastwood (see above) and held that it was distrainable as it had never become part of the freehold. The Plaintiffs, engineers, appealed. In giving judgment the Court said, inter alia, that over and over again the principles of law stated in Hellawell v. Eastwood had been accepted as correctly stated, but over and over again doubt was thrown as to the correctness of the application of those principles to the facts of that case, as was the case in Hobson v. Gorringe, where the fixing of the machine was much the same as in the present case. The machine here became fixed as part of the freehold, severable possibly as between landlord and tenant. If it was part of the freehold, it was not a distrainable chattel. In Darby v. Harris (1 Q. B. at 895) it was held that although articles might be tenants' fixtures removable by the tenant they were fixtures which were part of the freehold, and were not distrainable.

KING'S BENCH.—Stevens v. Stevens. Before MR. JUSTICE COLERIDGE. 22nd October 1907.

Mother and son—Injunction to restrain son from breaking into house—Son's home rights.

Claim by the Plaintiff, Mrs. Rosamund Stevens, a widow for an injunction to restrain her son, the Defendant, Mr. Percy Stevens, from breaking into and entering her dwelling-house. Mrs. Stevens it appeared was aged 72 and the Defendant 49. From 1882 to 1902, Defendant had been in Australia. From 1902, when he returned and paid his mother a visit, till 1906, when he was forcibly ejected, he resided in his mother's house. An action brought by him in 1905 against his mother alleging fraud on her part was dismissed. He stayed in the house pending the action and abused his mother and sister. The Defendant was repeatedly requested to leave the house but he refused and in 1906, the mother whose health was seriously affected by his conduct, at the advise of her solicitor engaged two men to turn him out, whereupon he left. On the present application, the case of Waterhouse v. Waterhouse, 94 L. J. 133, was relied on in defence as showing that a son had the right to be maintained by a parent irrespective of age. Mr. Justice Coleridge distinguished the said case and said that Mr. Justice Buckley had left open the question which arose in the present case. The Defendant it was quite clear, had no right in law to occupy his mother's house and therefore the grant of the injunction was a matter of discretion. The case referred to furnished a warning that an injunction ought not to be granted except in very grave circumstances. In his opinion the circumstances of the present case were very grave and accordingly he granted an injunction in the terms asked for.

Mr. Gregory for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Turrell for the Defendant.

Injunction granted.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 10337 OF 1907. LEAKAT HOSSAIN, Petitioner v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 3rd December 1907.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 487—Disobedience of Magistrate's order—Trial by same Magistrate—Presidency Magistrate—Retrial—High Courts' duty to order—Indian Penal Code, sec. 188.

On the 5th October 1907, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, applied for an order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., prohibiting the Petitioner, Leakat Hossain, from addressing public meetings or forming or leading processions in the town of Calcutta. Mr. Kingsford, the Chief Presidency Magistrate, issued a notice under sec. 144 directing the Petitioner to refrain from leading or taking any part in processions or from holding or addressing meetings in Calcutta.

On the 26th October a Daroga of the Calcutta Police applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate for sanction to prosecute the Petitioner under sec. 188, I. P. C., for the disobedience of the notice issued under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., by his having led a procession in Bechu Chatterjee's Street, Calcutta, on the day previous, and the Chief Presidency Magistrate sanctioned the prosecution of the Petitioner. The Petitioner was then put on his trial before the same Presidency Magistrate who convicted him under sec. 188, I. P. C., and sentenced him to six months' rigorous imprisonment. A rule was issued by the High Court for setting aside the conviction and sentence.

Their Lordships observed :—

"It seems impossible to resist the conclusion that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had under sec. 487, Cr. P C, no authority to try a case of disobedience of his own order, because sec. 487 expressly lays down that no Magistrate can try a case of disobedience of his own order. It appears to us that the terms of sec. 487, Cr. P. C., as contained in the Code of 1898 are wide enough to include Presidency Magistrates . . . . . No doubt in the Code of 1882 the provisions of sec. 487 were different; as sec. 487 of that Code gave express powers to Presidency Magistrates to try cases of disobedience of their own order. That section was modified in the Code of 1898, and no such power is given in sec. 487 of the Code now in force For these reasons we think that Mr. Kingsford's order is without jurisdiction. Mr. Sinha asks us to order the retrial of the accused. We do not, however, think it is ordinarily our duty to order the retrial of any person. But we will observe that the order we now pass setting aside the conviction and sentence is no obstacle, in our opinion, to the accused being retried if the prosecution thinks it advisable to retry him."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BRETT and WOODROFFE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 169 OF 1906. MAHABIR TEWARI AND ORS., Plaintiffs, Appellants v. BABU PURBHU NATH CHOBEY AND ANR., Defendants, Respondents. Heard, 11, 12, 13th November 1907. Judgment, 20th November 1907.

Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), sec. 13, Expl. (2)—"Ought"—Several independent grounds of action.

The Plaintiffs-Appellants all formed members of one family descended from one Mussummat Bihansa Koer and her husband Hanker Singh Tewari. The Defendants on the other hand were members of a family of Singhs descended from Mussummat Lachminia Koer and her husband Babu Bhagwan Singh.

On the 1st March 1888 a suit was brought by Sheobaran Tewari, the father of the Plaintiffs Nos 5, 6 and 7 and the brother of the other Plaintiffs, in the Small Cause Court against Mohabir Singh and Budhan Singh, the father of Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 on bond for Rs. 100 said to have been executed by those two persons in favour of Sheobaran Tewari, on the 8th July 1884. An ex parte decree was obtained on the 21st March 1888 and in execution of the same the decree-holder Sheobaran Singh sold the whole village Sujihal on the 7th May 1890 and purchased it himself.

On the 2nd May 1884 a mortgage bond for Rs. 1,000 was said to have been executed in favour of Bihansa Koer by the predecessor of Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 by which 49½ bighas of Mouzah Sujihal were hypothecated as security for the debt. A suit was instituted in 1989 by Bihansa Koer against the present Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and a decree was obtained on the 27th February 1890. The Defendants appealed but their appeal was dismissed on the 7th October 1890. On the 3rd January 1897 the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder Bihansa Koer.

On the 30th September 1899 a suit was brought by the present Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 to have set aside the ex parte Small Cause Court decree of the 21st March 1888 and the sale under that decree held on the 7th May 1890 on the ground that the bond and the proceedings based on that bond were fraudulent.

On the 13th January 1900 the same Defendants brought another suit to have the mortgage decree of the 27th February 1890 and the sale under that decree of the 3rd January 1897 set aside on the ground that the mortgage bond and the proceedings based on that bond were fraudulent. This latter suit was dismissed for default on the 7th May 1901. Bihansa Koer died in January or February 1901.

The suit to set aside the Small Cause Court decree and the sale thereunder was decreed in favour of the then Plaintiffs, the present Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 on the 20th December 1900, and that decision was affirmed on appeal on the 12th June 1903.

The present suit was instituted on the 27th September 1904 for a declaration of the Plaintiffs' right to 49½ bighas, of land in village Sujihal and for the registration of their names in the Collectorate as proprietors of 49½ bighas. The Plaintiffs applied in the Land Registration Department in July, 1903 to have their names registered as proprietors of that property, claiming title as purchasers in execution of a mortgage decree at a sale held on the 3rd January 1897. The Deputy Collector allowed the application but on appeal the order of the Deputy Collector was set aside by the Collector and the decision of the Collector was confirmed by the Commissioner of the Division on the 18th June 1904.

The main ground of defence taken by the Defendants was that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed in the suit because they had failed in their defence in the suit instituted on the 30th September 1899 to set aside the Small Cause Court decree to set up the title under which in the present suit the Plaintiffs sought to have their right declared in the 49½ bighas of land in Mouzah Sujihal.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the Plaintiffs' suit but on appeal the District Judge set aside the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim on the ground that it was barred by the provisions of sec. 13, Explanation (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. On appeal to the High Court, Held—When several independent grounds of action are available a party is not bound to unite them all in one suit though he is bound to bring before the Court all grounds of attack available to him with reference to the title which is made the ground of action. It applies to the converse case of a Defendant when pleading in his defence.

The title which the Plaintiffs set up in the present suit was not one which they ought to have made a ground of defence in the former suit and therefore they were not precluded under the provisions of sec. 13, Explanation (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure from obtaining relief in the present suit. The subject-matters of the suit which was brought to set aside the mortgage decree and the suit which was brought to set aside Small Cause Court decree were dissimilar and distinct.

desire of satisfying his lust, his presence at the scene could be accounted for. But a mere desire of revenge at the elopement of a woman of his own class with Laturan and at the persistency of Kunji, one of Laturan's relatives, to stand as his surety when Laturan was charged with the commission of theft are not in themselves sufficient to move a man of position and wealth to do personally what the prosecution alleges he did. These matters have been carefully dealt with by the Deputy Magistrate and the District Magistrate has not given the weight which they deserve in testing the credibility of oral evidence.

The oral evidence, apart from the improbabilities of the prosecution story, is highly unsatisfactory. The District Magistrate has based his conclusion on the assumption of the truthfulness of the witnesses for the purposes of the preliminary enquiry before commitment, but in dealing with the evidence he had to consider whether a primâ facie case had been made out and to perform in the position of an Appellate Court as nearly the same duties as the Magistrate who had held the preliminary enquiry. It has been repeatedly held by the Superior Courts in India that a Magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry would not exceed his jurisdiction if he examines the credibility of testimony and should not commit a person for trial in the Sessions Court if he be of opinion that notwithstanding direct evidence the case is improbable and the evidence unreliable.

Kunji, the complainant, and Gopal did not enquire who raped each of the women though they had ample time to do so and the matter was left to the women themselves for development at a later stage. In other points of their evidence they show evident signs of fabrication. Gopal Dusadh is as unsatisfactory as Kunji. He heard the order given by Rash Behary Lal and heard cries of the outraged women but it is curious that none of the neighbours came to help or heard the cries. Rash Behary Lal might be influential but that would be no reason for people not coming there. None of the neighbours was examined before the Deputy Magistrate. Gopal also contradicts the women on material points. The Dusadhins, Rania, Bhagia and Bhikuli the women alleged to have been raped, stand uncorroborated. The story told by Lakhia is absurd on the face of it. The other witnesses are not of much importance.

The credibility of the testimony of the prosecution witnesses must also be considerably shaken by the fact of Police control over them throughout the investigation and enquiry. • • •

On the whole, we are of opinion that the reasons given by the District Magistrate for setting aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate are insufficient, that he has not sufficiently met the reasons given by the latter for discharging the accused and that this is not a case in which a commitment to the Court of Sessions should have been directed.

We accordingly set aside the order of the District Magistrate and upholding the order of the Deputy Magistrate, we direct that the Petitioners to be discharged.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES Nos. 1033 AND 1081 OF 1905.

MACLEAN, C. J.
GEIDT, J.
1907.
Heard, 11 and 12, November.
Judgment, 25, November.

SHAMBHU CHANDRA HAZRA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
PURNA CHANDRA PAL and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) before amendment by Act I, B. C. of 1907, secs. 105, 106, 108—Record-of-rights—Entries as to character of holding and status of tenant—Correction of entries—Proper procedure.

Before the passing of Act I, B. C. of 1907, an entry in a finally published record-of-rights that lands held by tenants were mal lands or that the status of the tenants was that of settled raiyats could not be corrected by the Settlement Officer except in a suit instituted under sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy Act. He had no authority to revise such an entry under sec. 108 of the Act.

These appeals were preferred on the 2nd and 9th of June 1905, respectively, against the decree of G. K. Deb, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 30th of January 1905, confirming that of Babu Promotha Nath Dutt, Settlement Officer of Uluberiah, dated the 22nd of December 1903.

The appeals arose out of certain settlement proceedings. The landlord, Shambhu Chandra Hazra, applied on 27th July 1901 to the revenue authorities under sec. 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the preparation of a record-of-rights in respect of Mouzah Nazarpur held by him in dur-putni. The records were duly prepared and on the 31st March 1903 the draft record of-rights was published. A month's time was allowed for objections to be preferred against the draft, but none having been preferred the records were finally published on the 9th June 1903. Meanwhile, on the 5th September 1902, the landlord had applied for settlement of rent under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. After the record-of-rights were finally published, the Settlement Officer proceeded to settle fair rents. Notices were issued on the tenants. On the 31st July 1903 the tenants appeared and, on the 19th August 1903, they filed several petitions of objection alleging with regard to some of the lands that they were lakhiraj and not mal lands, and that therefore no rent could be assessed upon such lands; with regard to certain other lands they alleged that they were mokurari kaimi and mourasi kaimi jotes and therefore subject to fixed rents which were not liable to enhancement.

The Settlement Officer held upon evidence adduced before him that the lands objected to as lakhiraj were in fact lakhiraj and had been erroneously recorded in the record of-rights as mal; and accordingly he refused to assess rents on these lands. With regard to the other lands, he found that the tenants had paid the same rents for over 20 years He held, however, that sec. 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act precluded him from applying the presumption raised by sec 50 of the Act in their favour. He was also of opinion that the tenants having been recorded as "settled raiyats," their remedy was to institute a suit under sec. 106. He accordingly held that the tenants were merely settled raiyats and their rents were liable to enhancement. He also found that the area of the jotes had increased. But he refused to grant any increment exceeding 1½ times the existing rent on the ground of hardship.

Both parties appealed to the Special Judge who affirmed the judgment of the Settlement Officer on all points.

The landlord thereupon preferred S. A. No. 1033 and the tenants S. A. No. 1081 to the High Court.

S. A. No. 1033 of 1905.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Charu Chandra Bhattacharya) for the Appellant.—The two questions for decision are (1) whether, as held by the Special Judge, a Settlement Officer can under sec. 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act revise an entry in a finally published record-of rights, (2) whether having found that the area of lands held by the tenants have increased, the Settlement Officer can set an arbitrary limit to the increase of rent as he has done in this case to one-half of the existing rent.

As regards the 1st question, reads sec. 108. Under that section the revenue-officer can only revise an order made either in a proceeding for settlement of fair rent under sec. 105 or in a suit under sec. 106. He cannot revise the record-of-rights itself as finally published. Reads secs. 102, 103, 103A, 105, 106. Here the entry in the record-of-rights was that certain lands were mal and not lakhiraj. The revenue-officer proceeded to alter this entry upon certain applications by the tenants challenging the accuracy of the entries and entered them as lakhiraj lands. The tenants' remedy was by a suit under sec. 106. But they did not institute any suit.

[GEIDT, J.—The petitions of the tenants may be treated as plaints under sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy Act.]

The petitions are not even stamped. They are not plaints as the Special Judge also finds.

The tenants raised no objections when the record-of-rights were being prepared. Even after the draft publication they raised no objection although 1 month's time was allowed to them, nor have they instituted a suit under sec. 106.

Then with regard to some other lands the Settlement Officer had fixed the limit of increased rent to one-half of the existing rent. The Settlement Officer seems to have had sec. 36 of the Act in mind. But this section does not apply to cases in which rent is increased on account of increase in the area. Sec 52 says, the tenant "shall be liable to pay additional rent."

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose for the Respondents submitted on the first point that it was not quite accurate to say that the Settlement Officer in this case proceeded to revise a finally published record-of-rights under sec. 108 upon the tenants' application. Sec. 108, he conceded, had no application. The tenants raised the questions they did by way of objection to the landlord's petition under sec. 105 for settlement of rent. Under sec. 107 a proceeding under sec. 105 is a judicial proceeding. In such a proceeding it was open to the tenants who were in the position of Defendants to raise any question or issue which they might legitimately raise in a suit instituted by the landlord for the same purpose. The fact that the proceedings commenced with an application and not a plaint did not make any difference.

SHAMBHU CHANDRA HAZRA v. PURNA CHANDRA PAL.

Under the Act before its amendment by the Amending Act of 1898, it was repeatedly laid down that it was not only within the power of the revenue-officer but it was his duty to decide all questions relating to the status of the tenant or the character of the land, if raised in a proceeding for settlement of rent. Durga Churn Law v. Basir Mandal (1), Dharani Kant Lahiri Chaudhuri v. Gobar Ali Khan (2) and cases therein cited.

[Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury.—The Amended Act is entirely different.]

[The CHIEF JUSTICE.—Draws attention to sec. 105, cl. (2). Does not that imply that you cannot go behind the entry of the land as mal, except in a suit to set aside the entry under sec. 106]

Draws attention to sec. 103B Under that section an entry is only to be presumed correct until the contrary is proved. Sec. 105 (2) does not control or override sec. 103B. The effect of sec. 103B is that the entry has a certain value as evidence. The presumption under sec. 103B can be rebutted by evidence whenever the entry is relied upon in any judicial proceeding. It was open to the tenant to do so in the present proceeding

[The CHIEF JUSTICE.—You did not at all contest the matter before the Settlement Officer during the preparation of the records. You might institute a suit under sec. 106 after final publication but you did not.]

Submits that notwithstanding all this, the entry cannot have greater operation than is given to it by sec. 103B. The non institution of a suit under sec. 106 leaves the entry just where it was after the final publication of the records. It is optional to a party either to institute a suit under sec. 106 before the revenue-officer within three months, or to institute a suit in a Civil Court at a subsequent date or to contest the correctness of the entry in any subsequent proceeding by adducing rebutting evidence.

As a matter of practice revenue-officers have always allowed questions regarding the nature of the land or the status of the tenant to be raised in proceedings for settlement of rent.

A regards the second point taken, the decision of the Settlement Officer has been affirmed by the Special Judge, and it being a decision settling rent within sec. 109A, cl (3), no second appeal lies.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury in reply.

In sec. A 1081.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose for the Appellant.—The question in this appeal relates to the status of the tenants. The tenants were recorded in the record-of-rights as settled raiyats. But they proved in these proceedings that they had been paying the same rent for over 20 years before the settlement proceedings were commenced. The tenants should have been presumed under sec. 50 of the Act to be tenants holding on fixed rents until the landlord proved the contrary. He has not proved the contrary. The Courts below have thrown the onus on the tenants, being led to do so by a misreading of sec. 115. That section only lays down that holding land at the same rent for 20 years or more commencing from a date subsequent to the date of the final publication of the record-of rights will not raise such a presumption. See The Secretary of State v. Kajimuddi (3).

[The CHIEF JUSTICE points out that the same difficulty as in the case of the lakhiraj lands arises. Could the entry in the record-of-rights relating to the status of the tenants be altered except in a suit under sec. 106 ?]

I answer the question in the same way. Further, points out that sec. 105 (2) does not apply to the present question. There is nothing in the Act to support the position that the entries in the record-of-rights become final if a suit is not instituted to correct the entries under sec. 106.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury for the Respondent was not called upon.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

MACLEAN, C. J —These appeals arise out of settlement proceedings initiated by the landlord who applied for the preparation of a record of-rights. An enquiry was held by the Settlement Officer and a draft record-of-rights published on the 31st March 1903, the parties being informed that the record would be open for inspection, and that objections would be received within one month. No objections were preferred, and on 9th June 1903 the record-of-rights was finally published. The Settlement Officer then proceeded in accordance with the landlord's application to settle fair and equitable rents, and on

(3) I L. R. 26 Cal. 617 (1899)

14th August 1903 the tenants, who had been recorded as settled raiyats holding mal lands, put in a petition objecting that some of their lands recorded as mal were lakhiraj, and that their status was that of raiyats holding at a fixed rent The Settlement Officer on enquiry gave effect to the first of these objections, and altered the entry in the record-of-rights, recording as lakhiraj lands which had been put down as mal. As regards the second objection the Settlement Officer held that the raiyats had not proved that they had held lands at a uniform rate of rent since the permanent settlement. The Settlement Officer's orders on these points were upheld by the Special Judge on appeal

In Appeal No. 1033 which is by the landlord it is objected that the Settlement Officer was not competent to revise the entries relating to mal lands The Special Judge has held that sec. 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act gives the Settlement Officer power to alter these entries. That section provides that a revenue-officer . . . . "may on application or of his own motion within twelve months from the making of any order or decision under sec. 105, sec. 106, or sec. 107 revise the same." It seems clear to us that the entry as to mal lands was not made under any of the sections mentioned. Sec 105 refers to the settlement of fair and equitable rents. Sec. 106 relates to the decision of disputes regarding entries in the record-of-rights. These disputes can only be decided by the presentation of a plaint on stamped paper. No such plaint had been presented, nor had the Settlement Officer professed to settle any such dispute under sec. 106. Sec. 107 merely refers to the procedure to be adopted under the two preceding sections and directs the revenue-officer to make in the record-of-rights a note of all rents settled under sec. 105 and of all decisions of disputes passed under sec. 106. It appears to us, therefore, that sec 108 did not warrant the Settlement Officer in revising the entries as to mal lands in the record-of-rights. The Act gives to tenants ample opportunity for the correction of mistakes in that record. The draft record is prepared in the presence of landlord and tenant. The draft is then published, and objections to any entries therein are invited and considered before it is finally published. A still further opportunity is afforded even after final publication by sec. 106, which allows the parties to institute before the revenue-officer a suit for the decision of any dispute regarding the entries. In the present case the tenants made no objection to the draft record, nor did they after final publication institute any suit regarding the mal lands. The Settlement Officer had no authority to revise the entries regarding mal lands in the record-of-rights, and his orders on this point must be set aside.

Another objection taken in the landlord's appeal is in regard to the limitation of enhancement of rent imposed by the Settlement Officer who has directed that the rent shall not be enhanced so as to be in excess of one and a half times the existing rent. It is urged that such a limitation is inequitable in cases where the tenant is holding an area in excess of that on which his existing rent was fixed. We are, however, unable to entertain this objection, as the order complained of is a decision settling a rent, and on such a point no second appeal lies. See sec. 109A (sub sec. 3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In Appeal No. 1081 preferred by the tenants the sole ground urged is that the Settlement Officer was wrong in deciding that their status was not that of tenants holding at fixed rents. For the reasons already given in a former part of this judgment regarding mal land, we are of opinion that the Settlement Officer had no power to entertain their objection as to their status. Their status had been recorded in the draft record as that of settled raiyats. No objection to this entry was made before final publication, nor was any plaint presented to the Settlement Officer for a decision of a dispute on this point.

The result is that the landlord's appeal No. 1033 succeeds in part. The entries in regard to lakhiraj lands must be expunged, and the lands entered as mal. In this appeal we direct that each party bear its own costs.

Appeal No. 1081 fails and is dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1982 OF 1905.

MOOKERJEE, J. CASPERSZ, J. 1907. Heard, 8, August Judgment, 16, August.

JOGENDRA NATH ROY and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants,

v.

BALADEB DAS MARWARI and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Partition of joint property—Portion omitted by mistake—Fresh suit for partition or joint possession, if maintainable—Co-owner, adverse possession by.

Where, in a suit for the partition of joint property, by reason of a mistake of the parties which was shared by the Commissioner who was appointed to make the partition, a certain portion of the property was omitted from the report and the final decree did not deal with the lands comprised in that portion,

Held—That the effect of the decree was to leave unaffected the joint title and possession of the parties in the lands omitted in the decree.

That such lands may be partitioned in a subsequent suit at the instance of one of the parties.

A mere determination of the shares by the preliminary decree is not tantamount to partition.

The entry into and possession of land under the common title by one co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the others but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all.

A co-tenant will not be permitted to claim the protection of the statute of limitation, unless it clearly appears that he has repudiated the title of his co-tenant and is holding adversely to him. It must further be established that the fact of the adverse holding was brought home to the co-owner.

The possession of a wrong doer cannot be constructively extended over lands not actually in his possession.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of November 1905, against the decree of H. Holmwood, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 31st of July 1905, reversing that of Babu Saroda Prosad Sen, Munsif, 1st Court at Sealdah, dated the 2nd of February 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babus Nilmadhub Bose and Surendra Chandra Sen for the Appellants.

Mr. C. C. Ghose and Babu Provash Chandra Mitra for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The subject-matter of the litigation, which has given rise to this appeal, is a parcel of land comprised in holding No. 129 in the khas mehal of the Government in Cossipur in the Northern Suburbs of Calcutta.

The Plaintiffs and the second and third Defendants were admittedly the owners of the holding No. 129 in which the Plaintiffs had a five-sixth share and the two Defendants had an one-sixth share. In 1884 an action for partition was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs in respect of this holding. The preliminary decree by which the shares of the parties were determined was made in due course, and a Commissioner was appointed to effect a division by metes and bounds of all the lands comprised in the holding. By a mistake of the parties to the litigation, which was shared by the Commissioner, the portion now in dispute was omitted from the Report. As a matter of fact, this portion was, at the time, covered with jungle and was separated from the rest of the land by a ditch The aspect of the locality indicated that the land now in dispute was not included in holding No. 129 which had been directed by the preliminary decree to be mapped out and partitioned. The result was that the final decree in the partition suit dealt with the lands of the holding other than what is the subject-matter of controversy in the present litigation.

The Plaintiffs allege that in 1901 the second and third Defendants took exclusive possession of the disputed lands, ousted the Plaintiffs and settled the property with the first Defendant. Under these circumstances, they commenced this action on the 11th of June 1903 for declaration of their title, for recovery of possession and for partition At a subsequent stage of the proceedings the Plaintiffs abandoned their claim for partition and the plaint, as it now stands, is appropriate to a suit for recovery of joint possession. The claim also originally included a sum of Rs. 30 as compensation for damage done to trees. This part of the claim, however, was also subsequently withdrawn The suit was contested by the first Defendant as also by their landlords The former set up the title of the second and third Defendants and the latter claimed title by adverse possession for the statutory period; they also contended that inasmuch as holding No. 129 had formed the subject-matter of the previous suit for partition, the Plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the present action.

The Court of first instance held that the suit was maintainable, and that the title of the Plaintiffs had not been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of their co-sharers. In this view of the matter, a decree was made in favour of the Plaintiffs. Upon appeal the learned District Judge has reversed this decision. He has found, upon the evidence, that the disputed land was waste at the time of the previous partition suit, and was omitted by mistake from the proceedings of the Commissioner, and consequently, from the final decree; but he has held that the Plaintiffs never had joint title to the land in dispute after the partition of 1884 and, as they had failed to establish possession within 12 years of the suit, their claim must be dismissed.

The Plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court and on their behalf the decision of the District Judge has been challenged, substantially, on two grounds, namely, first, that inspite of what had happened in the suit for partition, the Plaintiffs were entitled to have their joint title to the disputed property declared and to be placed in joint possession thereof; secondly, that inasmuch as the Plaintiffs and the second and third Defendants were co-owners, their title was not extinguished by adverse possession as the Defendants had failed to prove that there was a disclaimer by the assertion of a hostile title and notice thereof to the Plaintiffs.

In support of the first point taken on behalf of the Appellants, it has been argued by their learned vakil that, as the final decree in the partition suit admittedly did not deal with the disputed lands, the joint title of the co-owners was not in any manner affected thereby, and, as the exclusion from the partition decree was due to the mistake of the parties, the Plaintiffs are not precluded from asserting their title to the property. It has been argued, on the other hand, by the learned Counsel for the Respondents that, as the preliminary decree directed the partition of all the lands comprised in holding No. 129 and consequently of the lands now in dispute, the proper and sole remedy of the Plaintiffs-Appellants is to re-open the decree in the partition suit when they might obtain the appropriate relief.

After careful consideration of the arguments, which have been addressed to us on both sides, we are of opinion that the contention of the Appellants ought to prevail. In our opinion, the effect of the decree in the partition suit was to leave unaffected the joint title and possession of the parties in the disputed land. It is obvious that there was no partition in fact, so far as these lands are concerned, for partition is the division made between several persons of joint lands, which belong to them as co-proprietors, so that each becomes the sole owner of the part which is allotted to him. The mere definition of the shares of the joint proprietors does not amount to partition of the property, although such determination may, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Joynarain v. Girish Chunder (1) and Chidambaran v. Gauri (2), effect a severance of the joint interest. To effect a partition, however, the property if susceptible of division must be transformed into estates in severalty and one of such estates assigned to each of the former occupants for his sole use and as his sole property. If this view were not adopted, the very object of the partition might be completely defeated. Co-owners may desire to terminate their property relations with one another and thus avoid a continuance of that discord and irritation which must necessarily attend an association compelled by joint interest but reprobated by every other consideration. If it were held that the mere determination of the shares by the preliminary decree was tantamount to partition, co-owners would have to enjoy their property jointly which is precisely what they intend to avoid. If, therefore, we hold that the effect of the preliminary decree in the suit for partition was not to effect a partition of the disputed lands, it is clear that the effect of the final decree was unquestionably not to effect a partition, it is the common case of both parties that by a mistake the lands, now in dispute, were excluded from the report of the Commissioner and were not dealt with by the final decree.

How then, can it be contended that the disputed lands were partitioned in the former litigation? One test seems to be conclusive. If the lands were partitioned to the share of which co-sharer were they awarded? The learned Counsel for the Respondents found himself unable to furnish an answer to this question. He argued, however, that as the lands formed the subject-matter of the previous litigation, the present action is not maintainable either for the recovery of joint possession or for partition. In our opinion, this contention is not well-founded on principle, and is not supported by any authorities. A very similar question arose in the case of Barnes v. Boardman (3), which related to a partition of joint property. It transpired in the course of the suit that an action had been previously brought for partition of an estate of which the disputed lands formed part, but that, by a mistake of the parties as to their legal rights, these lands had been excluded from the previous suit in which the decree for partition was made in respect only of the land comprised in that action. It was argued on behalf of the Defendants that, as the lands had not been included in the previous suit, they could not form the subject-matter of another litigation. This contention was overruled. Mr. Justice Knowlton, who delivered the judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachussetts, observed as follows:—"It is contended that the Court will not make an order for a partition of a part only of an estate held by tenants in common and that, therefore, when a partition has been made which does not include all the lands that should have been included, the Court will not, in a new proceeding, do that which should have been done in the original suit. It is true that a petition for a partition of a part of an estate held by tenants in common will not be entertained against the objection of any person interested. Ordinarily, a petition of this kind should include the entire estate held in common, but it does not follow, if by mistake or by the consent of all the tenants, a partition has been made of a portion of their estate, whether by order of the Court or otherwise, that the Court is powerless to divide the remainder on a petition of one or more tenants in common. It would be a harsh rule that, after a division of a part of an estate, partition of the remainder could never be ordered by the Court. When parties have acted innocently and fairly in making or obtaining a division, which does not cover all their estate, there is no reason why the law should not aid them when they ask for a division of the remainder. The parties seem to have proceeded under a mistake in regard to their legal rights and nothing appears on either side to affect the right which Petitioners would have in any such case, if they had, by common consent, obtained the partition of a part of an estate held in common and subsequently found that a partition of the remainder of it was desirable."

This view appears to us to be consistent with principles of justice, equity and good conscience and is supported by the decision in the case of Cartwell v. Chambers (4) and by the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jagajit Singh v. Sarabjit Singh (5). We must consequently affirm without hesitation, the doctrine that, although a co owner cannot enforce a partition of a part only of the common lands leaving the rest undivided, and although the entire property must be included in the partition, yet if by mistake or by consent of the co owners, acting innocently and fairly, a partition of a portion only of their estate has been made, whether by order of the Court or otherwise, there is no reason why the Court should not grant a division of the remainder at the instance of one or more of the co-owners. The conclusion, is therefore, irresistible that the effect of the decree in the partition suit was to leave untouched the joint title and possession of the parties and that the present suit for recovery of joint possession may well be maintained.

The second ground taken on behalf of the Appellants raises the question whether their title has been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of their co-sharers, the second and third Defendants In our opinion, this question must be answered in the negative. The principles which are applicable to cases of this description, in which the question arises as to whether the possession of one co-owner has been adverse to that of another, must now be taken to be well settled. The fundamental rule is that the entry and possession of land, under the common title of one co owner, will not be presumed to be adverse to the others, but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all. The obvious reason for this rule is that the possession of one co-owner is in itself rightful and does not imply hostility as would the possession of a mere stranger. To use the language of Mr. Justice Story in Ricard v. Williams (6) "the law will never construe a possession tortious unless from necessity; on the other hand, it will consider every possession lawful the commencement and continuance of which is not proved to be wrongful, and thus upon the plain principle that every man shall be presumed to act in obedience to his duty until the contrary appears." In other words, as the same learned Judge put it in Prescott v. Nevers (7), "the only difference between the possession of a co-owner and other cases is that acts which if done by a stranger would per se be a disseisin, are in the case of tenancies in common, susceptible of explanation consistently with the real title; acts of ownership are not, in tenancies in common acts of disseisin, it depends upon the intent with which they are done and their notoriety; the law will not presume that one tenant in common intends to oust another; the fact must be notorious and the intent must be established in proof." It follows consequently, that one co owner may hold adversely to his co-parcener, and if his possession is continued uninterruptedly for the statutory period, he will acquire an indefeasible title, Doe v. Prosser (8), Doe v. Taylor (9). This is true whether the original entry was with intent to hold adversely or whether the entry was that of a tenant in common. Much stronger evidence however is required to show an adverse possession held by a tenant in common than by a stranger, and a co-tenant will not be permitted to claim the protection of the statute of limitations, unless it clearly appears that he has repudiated the title of his co-tenant and is holding adversely to him it must further be established that the fact of adverse holding was brought home to the co-owner, either by information to that effect given by the tenant in common asserting the adverse right or there must be outward acts of exclusive ownership of such a nature as to give notice to the co-tenant that an adverse possession and disseisin are intended to be asserted, in other words in the language of Chief Justice Marshall in Mcclung v. Ross (10) "a silent possession accompanied with no act, which can amount to an ouster or give notice to his co-tenant that his possession is adverse ought not to be construed into an adverse possession." Mere possession, however, exclusive or long continued, if silent, cannot give one co-tenant in possession, title as against the other co-tenant. [See Clymer v. Dawkins (11), in which it was ruled that the entry and possession of one tenant in common, is ordinarily deemed the entry and possession of all the tenants; and this presumption will prevail in favour of all, until some notorious act of ouster or adverse possession by the party so entering is brought home to the knowledge or notice of the others; when this occurs, the possession is from that period, treated as adverse to the other tenants.]

This view is identical with what has been adopted by this Court in the cases of Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (12), Baroda Sundari v. Annoda Sundari (13) and Ujalbi Bibi v. Umakanta Karmokar (14) The same conclusion is supported by the case of Ittappan v. Manavikrama (15) and by the principles, which regulate the relation between joint owners, as explained in the cases of Mohes Narayan v. Nawbat Pattak (16), Jagarnath v. Jainath (17) and Phani Singh v. Nawab Singh (18).

If, therefore, it is for the Defendants to show not merely that they have been in sole occupation of the disputed lands but also that there has been a disclaimer by the assertion of a hostile title and notice thereof to the Appellants, either direct or to be inferred from notorious acts and circumstances, what is there position? The learned District Judge found that the circumstances which put the Plaintiffs to the knowledge of the infringement of their rights, was the execution of a lease by the tenants in favour of the Respondents on the 22nd of September 1892. If so, the title of the Plaintiffs was clearly in existence and was enforceable on the 11th of June 1903, when the present action was commenced. The difficulty in the way of the Defendants-Respondents, however, does not terminate here. The facts found by the learned District Judge in his judgment show conclusively that the user of the land by them or their tenants was of a description which could not possibly create in them a title by adverse possession to the whole of the lands now in controversy As was observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Radhamoni v. Collector of Khulna (19) to prove title to land by adverse possession for the statutory period, it is not sufficient to show that same acts of possession have been done, the possession required must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor, in other words, the possession must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile, and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the statute of limitations; or as observed by Mr. Justice Clifford in Armstrong v. Monill (20) and by Mr. Justice Maclean in Daswell v. Dela Langa (21) the possession in order that it may bar the recovery, must be continuous and uninterrupted as well as open, notorious, actual, exclusive and adverse. Judged by this test, the acts of possession proved on behalf of the Defendants and their tenants fall far short of what would be necessary to extinguish the title of the Appellants. The land was originally undoubtedly waste and continued to be so for many years; the neighbours and the persons employed in certain mills used the abandoned waste as a convenient place for the purposes of nature and the first substantial use made by the Defendants which may in any sense be regarded as a hostile assertion of title on their part and ouster of the Appellants, was within 12 years of this suit. There is nothing to show that beyond 12 years there were any positive acts referable only to the intention of the Defendants to acquire exclusive control of the disputed land; there were no acts which could be regarded as adverse to the existing title; indeed, they were not acts of possession at all; in other words, to use the language of Bramwell, L J., in Leigh v. Jack (22), the acts of user were not enough to take the soil out of the Plaintiff and vest it in the Defendant, because in order to defeat a title by dispossessing the owner, acts must be done which are inconsistent with his enjoyment of the soil for purposes for which he intended to use it [see also Wali Ahmad v. Tota Meah (23). Pollock and Wright on Possession, page 86, and Lightwood on Possession, page 199].

There is another difficulty, no less formidable in the way of the success of the Defendants. The facts found by the Courts below show conclusively that the possession of the Defendants did not extend over the whole tract now in dispute. Whatever acts of user they have proved, if indeed they be deemed to be acts of passession sufficient to extinguish the title of the Plaintiffs, did not extend over the entire land. Now it was ruled by this Court in the case of Mohini Mohan Roy v. Promoda Nath Roy (24), that the doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of a rightful owner and must not as a rule be extended in favour of a wrong-doer, whose possession must be confined to lands of which he is actually in possession. This principle is recognised in the cases of Radha Govind Roy v. Inglis (25), Udit Narain v. Golab Chand (26), Anandahari v. Secretary of State (27) and Vithal Das v.

Secretary of State (28). That this doctrine is well-founded on reason and principle is manifest, for as was observed by Mr. Justice Strong in Humricut v. Peyton (29) one who enters upon the land of another, though under colour of title, gives no notice to that other of any claim except to the extent of his actual occupancy; the true owner may not know the extent of the defective title asserted against him; and, if while he is in actual possession of part of the land claiming title to the whole mere constructive possession of another of which he has no notice can oust him from that part of which he is not in actual possession, a good title is no better than one which is a mere pretence. Judged by this test also the Defendants have failed to prove that adverse possession on their part has extinguished the title of the Plaintiffs. From every point of view, therefore, it follows that the Plaintiffs are entitled to recover joint possession in the manner claimed.

The learned vakil for the Appellants stated that he does not ask for a decree for ejectment as against the first Defendant, who has been let into occupation of the land by the second and third Defendants who are co-sharers of the Plaintiffs in the property. The Plaintiffs are content to have a decree for declaration of title as against the first Defendant and to be placed in joint possession as landlords along with their co sharers.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the learned District Judge reversed. The Plaintiffs will have a decree which will declare their title to a five-sixths share of the lands in dispute and will entitle them to recover joint possession thereof along with the second and third Defendants. They will however not be entitled to eject the first Defendant in execution of this decree.

It appears from the proceeding of the Courts below that a portion at any rate of the lands included in the present litigation is in the occupation of other persons who are not parties to this suit and who apparently have encroached upon these lands as part of holding No. 115. It is, therefore, necessary to declare that the Plaintiffs will not be entitled in execution of this decree to disturb the possession of such persons, if any, as are not parties to the present litigation. The Plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in all the Courts.

JAMAIT MULLIK and ors., Petitioners,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Judgment of the Appellate Court—What it should contain—Judgment of the first Court, whether may be read as supplementing judgment of the Appellate Court—Joint trial of several accused.

The judgment of an Appellate Court dealing with the case of several accused who were convicted in a joint trial, must show on the face of it that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration and should state reasons as far as may be necessary to show that the Appellate Court has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused.

An Appellate judgment must be quite independent and stand by itself. It ought not to be read in connection with or as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance.

This was a rule granted on the 5th of September 1907, against an order of Babu Jogendra Nath Chuckerbutty, Deputy Magistrate of Midnapur, dated the 17th of June 1907, directing under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., to execute a bond of Rs. 100 with two sureties in the same amount each to be of good behaviour for one year, which order was, on appeal, affirmed by Mr. J. Weston, District Magistrate of Midnapur, on the 3rd of July 1907.

The Appellate judgment of the District Magistrate was as follows :—

"In this case 17 persons have been ordered to find security to be of good behaviour, 7 of them for two years and the 10 Appellants for one year. The case, as far as the former 7 is concerned, was sent up to the Sessions Judge and he has confirmed the order. Now the other 10 prefer this appeal to me.

"The main grounds taken before me are that the accused have been prejudiced by a joint trial, that the case is instituted partly because of failure to detect the Atra dacoity case, and mainly because of a petition put in against the Police Inspector who supervised the inquiry in this case, charging him with assault, oppression, &c. It is also urged that the evidence is the outcome of party feeling.

"The trying Magistrate has made a very careful record of the evidence and written a well considered judgment. There is a mass of evidence in record to show that all these accused form a gang and are supported by one Nilkamal, a wealthy man whom they consult and visit. This being the case it is clear that resorting with men of bad character, old convicts, is an integral portion of the charge and they are no more prejudiced by that than they are by being charged separately with bad livelihood.

"Admittedly the Police took up this case after their failure to detect the dacoity case, but there were indications in that case that it was the work of this gang and their action was therefore proper. That this case was the outcome of the Inspector's revenge is absurd, unless it be believed that the Inspector also managed to get over 60 other witnesses to support his animosity and these were witnesses from some 18 different villages.

"As to the party feeling, there seems to have been some feeling between Hindus and Mussalmans regarding water-supply but the accused were both Hindus and Mussalmans as also the witnesses.

"I consider the order to find security justified and reject the appeal. Appellants will be committed to jail in default of finding security."

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal for the Petitioners.

No one for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule on the District Magistrate of Midnapur to show cause why he should not be directed to re-hear the appeal in the matter of the security demanded from the Petitioners to be of good behaviour, and to consider the case of each Petitioner on the evidence in the record.

The Appellate judgment of the learned District Judge is not in compliance with the law and authorities on the subject. He was dealing with the cases of 17 persons and the evidence of 70 witnesses for the prosecution and 54 for the defence This mass of evidence he disposes of in a very, what we may call, stereotyped manner. The name of not one of the accused, and the name of not one single witness, appear in the judgment of the learned District Magistrate. We have not the slightest doubt, as he mentions in his explanation, that he made notes for his guidance, with reference to each of the accused, as to what the witnesses against him said and what the witnesses in favour of him said, and that before writing his judgment he considered the evidence against each man. But this cannot be considered sufficient. It must appear, on the face of the judgment, that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration, and reasons should be given, as far as may be necessary, to show that the Appellate Court has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused. The necessity is the greater, when, as in the present instance, a very large number of persons were jointly proceeded against and directed to furnish security for good behaviour. We are unable to accept the explanation that the Appellate judgment may be read in connection with, and as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance. The Appellate judgment must be quite independent and stand by itself.

The only order, therefore, that we can pass in the matter of this rule is that the District Magistrate do re-hear the appeal and consider the case of each Petitioner on the evidence in the record.

The rule is accordingly made absolute.

Pending the re-hearing of the appeal by the District Magistrate the Petitioners will be released on bail to his satisfaction.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 346 and 532—Commitment made under sec. 346, Cr. P. C.—De novo trial, if necessary.

Commitment made to the Sessions by a Magistrate acting under the powers conferred by sec. 346, Cr. P. C., is not illegal simply because he has not examined de novo the witnesses who were examined by the Magistrate who submitted the case under the provisions of that section.

To the case of an accused thus committed to the Court of Sessions, sec. 532 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has no sort of application.

This is a rule issued on the 12th of August 1907, calling on the District Magistrate of Burdwan and also on the opposite party to show cause why the order passed by Mr. W. N. Delevingue, Sessions Judge of Burdwan, on the 6th day of June 1907, quashing the commitment of the accused made by Mr. J. C. Leighton, Sub-divisional Magistrate of Asansol, dated the 18th of May 1907, should not be set aside.

The facts of the case material to the report as they appear from the judgment of the Sub-divisional Magistrate are shortly these:—

The complainant, one Kamini Baurini, a female of about 22 years of age, who was a worker at the Sodepur Colliery, was going to a place Chapka where she met the accused Kartik Bauri whom she had known before. This Kartik started a conversation with her and held out inducements to her to come with him saying that he would give her work on good pay and good cloths at a place quite close to her home. He then gave her some tobacco, betel and pan. It appears that the pan was drugged, for after taking it she became stupid. She was then taken during the night by train to a coolie depot. That coolie depot belonged to another accused, Fakir Chand. In the depot she was confined for a day or two and then her name was entered in the register. She was then taken before a Deputy Magistrate, but she was not allowed to stand for a minute before that officer. When she was being sent to Assam, Mr. Mansfield, the Embarkation Agent found her at Goalundo, crying and he took her statement. She then said that she was unwilling to go to Assam. The Deputy Magistrate of Goalundo also examined her with the result that she was sent back. A prosecution was then started against Kartik under sec. 365, I. P. C., and against Fakir under sec. 368, I. P. C. The second class Magistrate who tried the case referred the case to the Sub-divisional Magistrate under sec. 346, Cr. P. C. Before the Sub-divisional Magistrate objection was taken on behalf of the accused that he (the Sub-divisional Magistrate) had no jurisdiction to commit the accused to the Court of Sessions without a de novo examination of the witnesses. He however overruled the objection and committed the accused to the Court of Sessions. But the Sessions Judge quashed the commitment holding it to be illegal. This rule was issued against the order of the Sessions Judge quashing the commitment.

No one appeared to show cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule calling on the District Magistrate of Burdwan, and also on the accused, to show cause why the order of the Sessions Judge of Burdwan quashing the commitment of the accused for trial before the Court of Sessions should not be set aside.

No cause is shown. After hearing the learned vakil for the Petitioner, as representing the Crown, we think that the order of the Sessions Judge cannot be supported. Sec. 532 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has no sort of application to a case of this kind. The second class Magistrate, not being able to make a commitment himself, referred the case to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, to whom he is subordinate, and that officer, acting under the powers conferred upon him by sec. 346 of the Code, committed the accused for trial.

We accordingly make the rule absolute and direct the learned Sessions Judge to proceed with the trial on the commitment already made by the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Asansol.

Let the record be sent down at once.

THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 350—*De novo trial—Omission to examine afresh the prosecution witnesses—Prejudice to the accused.

Where after the prosecution witnesses were examined and cross examined before a Magistrate, the case against the accused was made over to another Magistrate and a de novo trial was commenced before the latter in which the prosecution witnesses were not again examined but they were only cross-examined by the defence without any objection,

Held—That the trial was not in due compliance with the provisions of sec. 350, Criminal Procedure Code, and ought to be set aside.

This was a rule issued against an order of the Honorary Magistrate of Nawadah, dated the 31st of July 1907, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentencing them each, to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment. An appeal against the said order was dismissed by the District Magistrate of Gya on the 15th of August 1907.

The material facts are shortly these:—

The Petitioners were tried for offences under secs. 147, 447 and 379, I. P. C, by Moulvi Zahiruddin, a Sub-Deputy Magistrate, before whom all the witnesses for the prosecution were examined and cross-examined. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate was then transferred and the case against the Petitioners was made over to the file of Moulvi Abu Zaffer, an Honorary Magistrate. The Petitioners thereupon filed an application asking the said Honorary Magistrate to try the case de novo under sec. 350, Cr. P. C., and their application was granted. When the trial commenced de novo the Muktear appearing for the prosecution declined to examine the prosecution witnesses afresh before the Honorary Magistrate.

Thereupon the Muktear for the defence without raising any objection to the procedure cross-examined the prosecution witnesses and then examined 4 witnesses for defence.

The Petitioners were found guilty by the Honorary Magistrate under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal to the District Magistrate the conviction and sentence were upheld. This rule was issued to set aside the conviction on the ground inter alia that the trial of the Petitioners before the Honorary Magistrate was not in accordance with law.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Ganesh Dutt Singh for the Petitioners

No one appeared to show cause.

SOBH NATH SINGH v. THE EMPEROR.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The trial of the Petitioners, on a charge of rioting, was heard before M. Syed Naziruddin, Sub-Deputy Magistrate. That officer having nearly finished the case, was transferred to another place, and so the trial was continued in the Court of M. Abu Zaffer, Honorary Magistrate, sitting singly, with second class powers. An application was made to the second Magistrate for a de novo trial in terms of sec. 350, C. Cr. P. Then what happened was this :—The witnesses for the prosecution were summoned, but the prosecution Muktear declined to examine them. Accordingly, the defence Muktear, without making any objection, cross-examined those witnesses.

We think that the provisions of sec. 350 were not duly complied with. It is impossible to say that the accused have not been materially prejudiced by the procedure adopted, for it is evident that the Honorary Magistrate has arrived at conclusions on the evidence the whole of which was not recorded by himself. Under the circumstances we are obliged to set aside the convictions and sentences, and we direct that the Petitioners be retried by some other competent Magistrate in the district to be nominated by the District Magistrate.

The Petitioners will be released, and their bail bonds cancelled.

REV. No. 1100 OF 1907.

CASPERSZ, J. CHITTY, J. 1907, 27, September. | GOLAP SAHA, Petitioner, v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Excise law—Bengal Excise and Licensing Act (VII, B. C. of 1878), sec. 75, interpretation of—Confiscation in the owner's absence.

The boat in which excisable articles are carried in contravention of the excise law should not be confiscated under the provisions of sec. 75 of the Bengal Excise and Licensing Act (VII, B. C. of 1878), unless it is found that the owner of the boat was is some way implicated in the offence under the excise law.

This was a rule granted on the 10th of September 1907, against an order of Babu Chandra Sekhar Kar, Deputy Magistrate of Hughly, dated the 29th of July 1907, convicting the Petitioner of an offence under sec. 61A of the Excise Act VII of 1878 (B. C) and sentencing him to pay a fine and directing confiscation of a boat which order was, in revision, affirmed by F. Roe, Esq., Sessions Judge of Hughly, on the 16th of August 1907.

The facts material to the report appear from the judgment.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mozumdar obtained this rule on behalf of the Petitioner.

No one appeared at the hearing.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

No one appears at the hearing of this rule. A rule was issued on the District Magistrate to show cause why the order confiscating the boat in the absence of the 5th Petitioner, Golap Saha, and no cause being shown by him, should not be set aside.

For the purpose of the present rule we need not say more than that the 5th Petitioner was not tried as one of the co-accused in the case, under the Excise Act, instituted by Abdul Gani against Ramjiban and others The French liquor was found in the boat of the 5th Petitioner, and under sec. 75 of Act VII (B. C.) 1878, when any articles liable to confiscation under this Act are seized, the vessels, packages and coverings in which they are contained, and the animals and conveyances used in carrying them shall also be liable to seizure and confiscating. As we read the section, it empowers the Court to confiscate the Petitioners' boat, but as a matter of sound judicial discretion such an order should not be passed, in the absence of the owner of the boat. We would go a little further and say that unless the owner was in some way implicated in the offence under the Excise law, he should not be deprived of his property; otherwise, if the principle be disregarded, the discovery of a small quantity of opium on board an ocean steamer would render that vessel liable to confiscation under the Act. This, of course, is not to be thought of, and such a remote liability is clearly beyond the scope of sec. 75.

There is nothing in the evidence, or in the judgment of the trying Court, which justifies the confiscation of the Petitioners' boat. We accordingly set aside that order.

The Petitioner will be entitled to recover the boat on due application being made.

UPENDRA KUMAR GHOSE, Respondent.

Irregularity—Waiver by accused—Effect—Transfer of case—De novo trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 350—Throwing oneself on Court's mercy, if amounts to pleading guilty—Illegal gratification, payment of, under compulsion—Accomplice's evidence.

Except where the law expressly permits waiver the rights of an accused should not be held to be lost by his consent to a procedure or to admission of evidence which the law does not authorise.

The prisoner on his trial can consent to nothing. It is the duty of Magistrates and all Criminal Courts to follow the procedure prescribed by law, and the consent of the accused cannot be invoked against irregularity in procedure.

Where after several witnesses were examined the case was transferred to another Magistrate the latter acted irregularly in convicting the accused on evidence partly recorded by the former Magistrate. Sec. 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code not being applicable to such a case, the irregularity could not be waived by the accused.

Where the accused did not formally plead guilty the fact that he threw himself on the mercy of the Court should not prejudice him.

PURMESSUR SINGH v SOROOP ADHIKAREE (6) not followed.

The testimony of persons who have been compelled to pay illegal gratification has much greater probative force than that of ordinary accomplices.

DEONANDAN PERSHAD v. EMPRESS (1) followed.

This was an appeal under sec. 417, Cr. P. C, against an order of acquittal passed by Mr. S. B. Chowdry, Sessions Judge of Hughly, on appeal from an order of conviction and sentence made by Moulvi Abdus Samad, Deputy Magistrate of Howrah.

The accused, Upendra Kumar Ghose of the S. P. C. A., was placed on trial before Mr. Adie, Joint Magistrate of Howrah, under sec. 161, I. P. C., for having received illegal gratification from Benod Sardar, Coachman. The money was said to have been paid by Natobar who was travelling in Benod's carriage and handed over to the accused by Benod in the presence of constable Darbari Sing.

The case was transferred to the file of Moulvi Abdus Samad, Deputy Magistrate, after the bulk of the evidence was recorded and charges framed by Mr. Adie. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused under sec. 161, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge set aside the conviction on the ground that the witnesses Natobar and Darbari were accomplices. The Government appealed.

Mr. Douglas White for the Crown.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Sarat Chandra Lahiri for the Accused.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The accused, Upendra Kumar Ghose, an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals at Howrah, was tried on three charges under sec. 161, I. P. C., and was on the 19th March 1906 found guilty by Moulvi Abdus Samad one of the Deputy Magistrates at Howrah and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one month and a fine of Rs. 150 on each of the charges or in the aggregate to rigorous imprisonment for three months and a fine of Rs. 450. He appealed to the Sessions Judge at Hughly who on the 27th April 1906 set aside the conviction and sentence for reasons to which we shall presently refer. The Local Government has appealed from the orders of the Sessions Judge both on questions of law and fact. Of the three charges on which the accused was tried, the 2nd and the 3rd have been abandoned in this Court and we must, as regards these, accept the verdict of acquittal. This appeal is thus confined to the first count only which refers to the receipt by the accused of Rs. 2 on the 2nd September 1905 from a chokra Coachman (Benod Sardar) as gratification other than legal gratification for forbearing to do an official duty.

raised and discussed in the lower Appellate Court and before us, it will be necessary to state briefly the history of the litigation. The District Magistrate of Howrah directed the prosecution and the case came before Mr. Prentice then the Joint Magistrate of Howrah. The accused objected to the trial on the ground that he was not a public servant. His objection was disallowed and then he moved this Court against the order of the Joint Magistrate and also for a transfer of the case to some other district. This Court upheld the view of the Joint Magistrate as to the accused being a public servant and declined to transfer the case to another district. In the meantime Mr. Prentice was transferred to another district and the case came before Mr. Adie, his successor. On the 27th February 1906, eight prosecution witnesses were examined in-chief before Mr. Adie—charges were framed to which the accused pleaded not guilty and he was examined under sec. 364, C. Cr. P. The case was then adjourned for the examination of the other witnesses for the prosecution. Mr. Adie was however, under orders for transfer to another district and on his representation that he would not be able to finish the case before he left the district, the District Magistrate on the same day, the 27th, transferred the case to Moulvi Abdus Samad one of the Deputy Magistrates at Howrah. The accused then asked for a trial de novo and the case was adjourned to the 2nd March. On that day the accused waived his right to a trial de novo, and one witness for the prosecution was examined, but the cross-examination of all the witnesses for the prosecution was reserved. The case again came on for trial on the 15th March. The case for the prosecution was not yet closed but the accused threw himself on the mercy of the Court and said he would not cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses and would not also examine any witnesses for the defence. Thereupon the witnesses present in Court were discharged, the trial was considered to be closed and judgment was reversed. The accused, however, did not distinctly plead guilty and Moulvi Abdus Samad also did not record the plea of guilty. On the 19th March judgment was pronounced and the accused was convicted under sec. 161, I. P. C.

The conduct of the accused in first demanding and then waiving a trial de novo and throwing himself later on on the mercy of the Court abandoning his right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution and not entering upon his defence left the trial incomplete. On the 15th March the Deputy Magistrate should have, when the accused threw himself on the mercy of the Court asked him if he then pleaded guilty and if he did so should have recorded his plea. If the accused did not plead guilty he ought to have been formally asked to enter upon his defence The remaining witnesses, if any for the prosecution should also have been examined.

With regard to the charge with which we are at present concerned, three witnesses were examined only in chief Darbari Singh, Natobar Sen and Benod Sardar. The accused declined to cross-examine them and unless the testimony of all of them be held to be tainted as being that of accomplices they certainly make out a primâ facie case against the accused. Darbâri Singh is a Police constable and he was present when Benod Sardar and Natobar Sen both took part in the transaction of bribery. The two latter may be held to be accomplices but we however fail to see why the constable should be held to be an accomplice merely because he was present, saw the transaction and kept silent. The offence is not cognizable and there was no dereliction from duty on the part of the constable in not giving any information to his superior officers. The depositions of Natobar and Benod though they are accomplices, may justify a conviction with merely a slight degree of corroboration as has been held by this Court in Deonandan Pershad v. Emperor (1). They were as they say compelled to pay Rs. 2 to the accused and we fully agree with Brett and Stephen, JJ., in holding that the testimony of such persons though they are technically accomplices, has much greater probative force than that of the ordinary accomplices to a criminal act. If no other questions had been raised in the case, we would have considered the evidence on the record sufficient for a conviction of the accused. We cannot accept the view taken by the Sessions Judge as to the value of the evidence afforded by these witnessses.

We are not disposed to place any reliance either on the waiver of the accused as to a de novo trial or as to his conduct on the 15th March, throwing himself on the mercy of the Court. There being no record of the plea of guilty the conduct of the accused should not prejudice him. If again the law requires that there should be a trial de novo on the transfer of a case from one Magistrate to another the waiver of the accused goes for nothing. In Attorney-General of New South Wales v. Bertrand (2), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that a prisoner on his trial can consent to nothing and this rule as to the effect of a waiver by a prisoner has been consistently followed in India. We may refer to the Queen v. Bishonath Pal (3), The Queen v. Bhola Nath Sen (4), and Queen-Empress v. Murarji Gokuldas (5). In Queen v Bhola Nath Sen (4), Macpherson, J., said —"It is the duty of Magistrates and all Criminal Courts to follow the procedure prescribed by law" and he added that the consent of the accused could not be invoked against irregularity in procedure. In Purmessur Singh v. Soroop Adhikaree (6), however, the evidence of witnesses given in a previous trial was used in a subsequent trial at the express request of the prisoners instead of the witnesses being examined de novo and notwithstanding this irregularity the Court declined to interfere. But the case was not argued by Counsel in this Court and the decisions we have quoted above were not cited. We cannot rely on this case especially as it has not been followed in any later case. We think the safer rule to adopt in criminal trials is that except where the law expressly permits waiver as sec 350, Cr. P. C., does, the rights of an accused should not be held to be lost by his consent to a procedure or to admission of evidence which the law does not authorise.

In this view, the only other question that arises is could the accused be convicted by Moulvi Abdus Samad on evidence partly recorded by Mr. Adie and partly recorded by himself.

The decisions of this Court as well as of the other High Courts lay down the general principle that judgment must be delivered by the Judge who has heard the evidence [Queen v. Rughoonath Das (7), Queen v. Khan Mohamed (8), Queen-Empress v Radhe (9) and Queen-Empress v. Bashir Khan (10)]. To what extent has this rule been altered or modified by the Code of Criminal Procedure (1898)?

Sec. 350 of the Code expressly refers to the case of one Magistrate succeeding another, the former Magistrate having ceased to exercise jurisdiction in the case. The proviso (a) however speaks of any trial and sub sec (2) refers to a matter which does not properly come in as an exception to the rule contained in the first part of the section. The section, it seems to us, is capable of the interpretation that it covers all cases of change of trying Magistrates whether on account of the first trying Magistrate being transferred to another district or on account of a transfer of a case under Chap. XLIV of the Code. But in some of the reported cases a limited construction has been put on the section. It has been held that when a case under trial is transferred under sec. 528, Cr. P. C., the whole proceedings must be commenced de novo. [See Queen v. Khan Mohamed (8)]. The words of sec. 350 of the present Code are slightly different from the words of the similar sections of the Codes of 1872 and 1882. The alteration might have been made with a view to include cases of transfer, but having regard to the general principle of interpretation that provisos and sub-clauses should be governed by the operative portion of the section and to the fact that the general rule laid down in the earlier rulings have been recognised and approved of on more than one occasion since the amendment was made, we hold that Moulvi Abdus Samad acted irregularly in convicting the accused on evidence partly recorded by Mr. Adie.

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the conviction of the accused should be set aside on this ground but as we do not agree with him as to the value of the evidence now on the record. We must direct a de novo trial of the accused.

The evidence as recorded if believed may sustain charges under secs. 161, 342 and 383 of the Indian Penal Code and not merely sec. 161. We therefore direct that the accused be tried on charges under the above sections by some other Magistrate in the district other than Moulvi Abdus Samad.

ACCORDING TO RULE 8 OF ORDER XI OF THE NEW Civil Procedure Code Bill, interrogatories are to be answered by affidavit to be filed within ten days, or within such other time as the Court may allow. The present code (sec 126, C P. C.) also requires interrogatories to be answered by affidavit But we think that instead of requiring interrogatories to be answered by affidavit, it would be more appropriate in this country to require a verification of the answers in the same way as in the case of plaints and written statements. Otherwise parties living in the interior might be greatly harassed if they are required to go to the town for swearing an affidavit. It may also cause great hardship to females.

RULE 9 OF ORDER XIII PROVIDES THAT A DOCUMENT cannot ordinarily be returned to a party before the final disposal of a suit, or, when the decree is appealable, before the disposal of the appeal. It is also provided that a party may receive a document back earlier if he delivers a certified copy to be kept on the record. It is no doubt intended that the Court will exercise its discretion in allowing or refusing applications to receive back documents made pending the decision of the suit. In cases where the genuineness of a document is in issue it may not always be safe to allow the document to be removed during the pendency of the suit. The wording of the rule, however, does not make it sufficiently clear that the Court is to have this discretion.

WHEN A COMMISSION IS ISSUED TO A PLEADER BY A Court for the examination of an absent witness, and the examination extends over a number of days, what remuneration is the Commissioner entitled to? This question, frequently arises for discussion in Mofussil Courts. The concluding portion of Rule No. 10 of the Circular Order of the High Court (Vol. I, p. 136) which bears on this question runs thus:—"For the purpose, the following rates appear to be reasonable and are recommended for adoption by Subordinate Courts. If the Court issuing the commission be that of a Munsif or a Small Cause Court, Rs. 4 for each witness to be examined; if the commission be issued by a Court superior to that of a Munsif or a Small Cause Court, Rs. 10 for each witness to be examined."

DIFFERENT COURTS IN THE MOFUSSIL INTERPRET THE above rule in different ways. Some even go so far as to hold that no matter what length of time, or what number of days, a commission may have taken, in no case is the commissioner entitled to any larger sum than Rs. 4 or Rs. 10 according as the commission was issued by the Court of a Munsif or by a superior Court. We do not, however, understand the above Circular as laying down any such hard and fast rule in this matter. The remuneration of a commissioner should certainly be commensurate with the time and trouble legitimately spent on the commission, and the High Court could hardly have intended to lay down a different rule. What the High Court purports to do in the Circular order is to fix the amount of remuneration for ordinary cases, leaving it to the discretion of the Courts to take into consideration special circumstances and determine the amount with reference to such special circumstances.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE CASE OF Muthuswmi Mudali v. Veni Chetti, reported at page 382, I. L. R. 30 Mad., which was decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court. The Full Bench dissenting from the view of the Calcutta High Court held that where the District Judge revokes the sanction for prosecution granted by a Subordinate Court, an appeal lies to the High Court from the order of revocation. The reasons for this decision are not fully given in the judgment, but it is simply stated that revocation of a sanction is the same as a refusal of sanction, so when there is an appeal from an order refusing sanction, there ought to be an appeal from an order revoking a sanction. But the order of refusal is passed by the first Court in which application is made for the sanction, whereas the order of revocation is passed by the Appellate Court to which an appeal is preferred against an order granting sanction. Here two Courts differ from one another, the superior Court is of opinion that sanction ought not to be given, while the inferior Court is of opinion that sanction ought to be given In such a case the opinion of the superior Court ought to be regarded as final. A sanction for prosecution ought not to be granted where there exists a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the person against whom the sanction is sought or in other words, unless there is a reasonable probability of the conviction of that person. And when the appellate Court revokes the sanction granted by the subordinate Court, it is reasonable to hold that there is considerable doubt of the sanction resulting in the conviction of the accused.

IT MIGHT BE ASKED WHY THERE SHOULD BE AN appeal from the order of an appellate Court granting sanction which has been refused by the lower Court. To this the obvious answer is that such a right of appeal is conferred upon the accused person because it is the policy of law to allow him greater privileges in regard to appeals than the complainant. For instance a complainant is not given any right of appeal against an acquittal of the accused who has a right of appeal from his conviction. Further it may be urged that when one Court refuses sanction and the appellate Court grants the sanction, there exists reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the person against whom the sanction is granted by the appellate Court, and therefore the order of the appellate Court ought not to be final in such a case. When an appellate Court revokes the sanction, an application to the higher Court for revision of the order of revocation on questions of law might be allowable, but it seems to us that a right of appeal from the order of revocation on questions of law as well as facts was not contemplated by the Legislature and appears to be inconsistent with the policy of the criminal law.

MAHOMEDAN LAW OF INHERITANCE AND ITS EVOLUTION.

Another feature of Mahomedan Law, in common with the Roman and Hindu systems, is its extreme solicitude to discharge the just claims of the creditors of the deceased. The horror of a Roman at the thought of his dying in embarrassed circumstances was so great that he hastened to constitute his slave a necessary heir to satisfy his creditor's claims so that at least (if he did not do this) the creditors might sell the estate in the slave's name so as to save the memory of the deceased from disrepute (The Institutes of Justinian, Moyle's Translation, Book I, Title VI, 1). The Hindu law is replete with denunciations against an heir who remains without discharging the just debts of his ancestor. So Mahommedan law lays down as the first duty incumbent upon the Magistrate the payment of the funeral charges and other debts of the deceased. "Those learned in the law (to whom God be merciful) say: There belong to the property of a deceased person four successive duties (to be performed by the Magistrate); first his funeral ceremony and burial without superfluity of expense, yet without deficiency: next the discharge of his just debts from the whole of his remaining effects, then payment of his legacies out of a third of what remains after his debts are paid and lastly the distribution of the residue among his successors according to the Divine Book, to the traditions and to the assent of the learned (Sirajiyyah, p. 1)" The above passage seems to suggest that the payment of the funeral charges, debts and legacies is a condition precedent to the vesting of the inheritance in the legal heirs, but this view seems to have been modified by the decisions of the various High Courts. For a partition come to before the payment of debts does not render the division illegal but only makes the heirs liable for the debts in proportion to the assets received by each. In Tajn Begum v. Amir Mahomed Khan (I L R. 7 All. 822) a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court decided that "upon the death of a Mahomedan intestate, who leaves unpaid debts (whether large or small with reference to the value of his estate), the ownership of such estate devolves immediately on his heirs and such devolution is not contingent upon, or suspended till payment of such debts." Somewhat similar is the language of the Calcutta High Court when they say, "the theory of representation is not known to the Mahomedan law; under its provisions the estate of a deceased person devolves immediately upon his heirs, charged, however, with his debts and they are the persons through whom the property should ordinarily be reached." (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 311).

The causes of diversities in several systems of inheritance are to be sought in the varieties and pecularities of race, climate, soil, character, circumstance, mental and physical development, which have operated in unequal combination and with unequal force. To investigate these causes would often be a difficult, if not a hopeless task; but in the case of the peculiarities of the Mahomedan system of inheritance, some of these causes lie on the surface. A careful reader is tempted to ask whether Mahommed's mind was not struck with the inconvenience of excessive sub-division which his scheme entailed. The answer to this is to be found in the fact that in Mahommed's time, people of Arabia lived a wandering and pastoral life depending for their subsistence more upon their flocks and herds and camel than upon the tillage of the soil. Indeed very few Moslems were agriculturists. The nature of the country was not capable of creating an agricultural instinct in its people. Savage, inaccessible rock-mountains, vast expanse of deserts alternating with small strips of verdure here and there with shallow pools of water—these filled up the Arabian landscape. The wealth of the people was chiefly derived from common trade and immense flocks of sheep and goats. So the infinitesimal fraction which was secured by the inheritance rules of the Mahommedan prophet to some of the claimants of the dead man's effects, procured for them a camel or two and a dozen or score of sheep with which a start in life was fairly possible. This of course proved a great inconvenience when people increased in numbers and, pressed hard for subsistence, began to migrate into other countries more advantageously situated for large and extensive agricultural operations.

This is the reason that Mahommedan families settled in the Punjab and the Chenab Valley discarded their own system of inheritance in favour of the one prevalent among the Hindu population around them. This is also the reason why the Hindu converts to the Moslem faith did not adopt with equal zest and zeal the benefit of the Mahommedan rules of inheritance. The Khojahs and Cutchi Memons of Bombay Presidency are such steadfast followers of the Hindu Inheritance Law that though Mahommedan Law cannot in theory at least be divorced from the Mahommedan religion, a uniform current of decisions of the Bombay High Court has established that as regards simple questions of inheritance and succession they are to be governed by the principles of Hindu law. (1) Herbai v. Sonabai, Perry's oriental cases, p 110; (2) Herbai v. Gorbai, 12 Bom. H. C. R, p. 294; (3) Rahmatbai v. Herbai, 3 Bom, p. 34; (4) Shivuji Hazman v. Datu Mowji Khoja, 12 Bom., p. 281; (5) Ashabai v. Tyab Haji Rahimtalla, 9 Bom. 115; (6) Cassumbhoy Ahmedbhoy v. Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy and another, 12 Bom., p. 280: s. c. 13 Bom., p. 534.

To conclude it may fairly be said that Mahommedan law is largely an admixture of pre-Islamite usages and of the specific rules of law enunciated by Mahommed to his companions and followers. He found the tribes of the peninsula sunk in abject barbarism, steeped in gross immorality and devoid of all sense of kindly feeling to their offspring and ranking women in the same category as chattels. But Mahommed enforced as one of the essentials of his creed 'respect for woman,' introduced amongst them a purer faith and a nobler conception of household life, devised means for making the matrimonial tie more lasting and endurable, provided women with rights of inheritance and denounced in scathing terms their fearful custom of burning their female children alive. One of the great results of the new legislation, says Ameer Ali (Mahommedan Law, Succession and Status, Vol. II, 2nd Edn., p, 49) "was to raise women in the scale of civilisation, by elevating their moral and social position and giving the widow, the mother, the daughters and sisters heritable rights."

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 968 OF 1907. SOITA BISWAL AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. DOCHI, Opposite Party. 27th November 1907.

Trespass—Civil and not Criminal—Indian Penal Code, sec. 448—Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 522—Non-applicability of.

The facts of the case are shortly these :—

The complainant one Dochi went to Puri on a visit and in her absence certain persons took possession of her house and established there a boy alleged to be the adopted son of the father of the complainant. Dochi on her return complained to the Deputy Magistrate of house-trespass and theft against the Petitioners who were then put on their trial and convicted under sec. 448, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 The Deputy Magistrate also ordered delivery of possession of the house in dispute as also of certain property recovered which the complainant alleged the accused had stolen. This rule was issued to set aside the conviction and sentence and the order of the Deputy Magistrate for delivery of possession.

Their Lordships observed :—

"It is clear that the case is one, not of Criminal but of Civil trespass. The Petitioners took possession of the house for the alleged adopted son and are now in possession. The complainant says that certain articles of her property were removed. But the accused have not been convicted of theft, on the contrary the Deputy Magistrate says the things carried off are not identifiable and he has abstained from convicting them of theft. He says the things recovered could not be satisfactorily identified. Notwithstanding this, he has ordered possession to be given to the complainant, although he records in his proceeding that the accused have all claimed the things found in their possession as their own . . . . Finally he has ordered possession of the house to be made over to the complainant. We suppose he has passed the order under sec. 522, C. Cr. P. But the provisions of that section do not warrant his doing so, because the Petitioners have not been convicted of any offence attended by criminal force. We set aside the conviction and sentences and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

"The property in possession of the Petitioners must be returned to them and possession of the house restored to the persons found in possession of it."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before GEIDT, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1675 OF 1906. TITU MIA, Defendant, Appellant v. HABIBULLA MIA AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 20th November 1907.

Court-fees Act (VII of 1870), sec. 12—Assam Land and Revenue Regulations—Settlement—Civil Court—Jurisdiction.

The suit out of which the present appeal arose was brought to obtain possession of certain land which had been settled with the Defendant by the Cachar Revenue Authorities. The lower Courts found themselves unable by reason of sec. 39 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulations to give the Plaintiffs a decree for possession, but gave them a decree declaring their right to obtain settlement, and they passed the decree on the finding that the disputed land was formerly included within the Plaintiff's dag and that therefore they were entitled to settlement.

The Defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held—No appeal lies on a question of Court-fee. The second clause of sec. 12 of the Court-fees Act gives the Appellate Court, when it finds that the fee paid is insufficient, power to order payment of the proper Court-fee, but that the appeal on that point cannot be brought by itself.

Held further—That any question as to the right of a party to obtain settlement from the Revenue Authorities is not excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Court.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2649 OF 1905.

MOOKERJEE, J. CASPERSZ, J. 1907. Heard, 9 and 12, August. Judgment, 21, August.

SAHADEV SUKUL and ors., Decree-holders, Appellants, v. SHEIKH SAKHAWAT HOSSEIN, Judgment-debtor, Respondent.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), sec. 4—Application by heir of mortgagee for supplementary decree—Succession certificate, if necessary—"Debt"—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 90.

Where after a preliminary decree had been made in a mortgage suit, the mortgagee died, and his sons got themselves substituted on the record and an order absolute was made in their favour, but the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property proving insufficient, they applied for a personal decree for the balance under sec. 90, Transfer of Property Act,

Held (on a review of the authorities)—That until the applicants obtained a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act no such decree could be made in their favour.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd of December 1905, against the decree of E. Panton, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Sarun, dated the 29th of June 1905, reversing that of Moulvi Ali Ahmad, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that district, dated the 8th of April 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitra for the Appellants.

Moulvi Mahomed Mustafa Khan for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

On the 19th September 1895, the Defendant-Respondent executed a mortgage bond in favour of one Sakhi Sukul now represented by his sons the Appellants. In 1901, the mortgagee sued to enforce the security against the mortgagor and other persons who had meanwhile acquired an interest in different portions of the equity of redemption. On the 30th April 1902, the usual mortgage decree was made in favour of the Plaintiff, mortgagee. Subsequently the Plaintiff died, and his sons, the present Appellants, made an application for order absolute. Their names were substituted in the mortgage decree which was made absolute on the 6th January 1904. The mortgaged properties were then sold at their instance, and the sale-proceeds were applied in partial satisfaction of the decree. On the 23rd December 1904, they applied to the Court for a decree against the mortgagor for the balance of the amount still due on the mortgage. Objection was taken on behalf of the mortgagor that no decree could be made in favour of the applicants until they obtained a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act. The Court of first instance overruled this objection and passed a decree in favour of the applicants under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Upon appeal, the learned District Judge reversed this decision.

The applicants have now appealed to this Court, and on their behalf it has been contended, that the provisions of sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act, are inapplicable for five reasons; namely, first, that the amount in respect of which a personal decree is sought is not a debt, because it was indefinite and unliquidated at the time of the death of the creditor; secondly, that if it is a debt, it was not due to the deceased, but accrued due to the applicants after the mortgaged properties had been exhausted and the sale-proceeds had been found insufficient; thirdly, that the succession opened out during the pendency of proceedings in Court; fourthly, that as the title of the applicants is not disputed, there is no necessity for the production of a certificate, and, fifthly, that as the applicants were members of a joint Hindu family with their father, governed by the Mitakshara law, the right to realise the debt has vested in them by survivor ship and not in virtue of inheritance. It has also been contended that an opportunity ought to have been afforded to them to produce a succession certificate if one is required by law.

In support of the first branch of his contention, the learned vakil for the Appellants placed reliance upon the cases of Bisseswar Roy v. Durgadas Mehta (1), Subbauna v. Munckka (2) and Sabju Sahib v. Noorddin Sahib (3). These cases are authorities for the proposition that a liability, which is not in respect of a liquidated sum, cannot be held to be a debt in the ordinary accepted legal sense of the term. In this view of the matter, it was ruled in the first and third cases, that a suit for account by a principal against an agent or by one member of a firm against another for account of partnership assets is not a suit for a debt within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act. These cases, however, are obviously distinguishable. Here the demand of the Plaintiff, mortgagee, is for a sum certain. It is in every sense of the word an ascertained debt, founded on an express contract, and not an unliquidated demand or liability. No doubt, the sum recoverable by the mortgagee from the mortgagor personally does not admit of specification till the mortgaged properties have been exhausted, and the debt satisfied in part, but that only shows, not that the claim of the mortgagee is in respect of an unliquidated sum, but that his remedies for the recovery thereof are in the first instance restricted. To recover his debt, he must first proceed to sell the mortgaged properties, and it is only when the sale-proceeds are insufficient to satisfy the demand, that he is at liberty to proceed personally against his debtor. The cases of Hari Das v. Baroda (4) and Dambar Koeri v. Sham Kissen (5) do not in any way militate against this view, because here the debt is an actually existing debt and not merely a contingent debt which might or might not become due. The distinction is between a liquidated money demand, Rawley v. Rawley (6), and unliquidated damages, for instance, damages for tort or for breach of covenant, Wilson v Knubby (7). In the case before us, the action is founded on an express contract in which, to use the language of Bacon's Abridgment, the certainty of the sum or duty appears, and "the Plaintiff is to recover the same in numero and not to be repaired in damages as in those actions sounding in damages." [Watson v. McNainy (8), Bamn v. Tonkin (9)]. From this point of view, it appears to us to be clear that the claim is in respect of a debt within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act. The first branch of the contention of the Appellants consequently fails.

In support of the second branch of the contention of the Appellant, reliance was placed upon the case of Nemdhari v. Bissessari Kumari (10), in which it was ruled that the Succession Certificate Act refers only to debts upon which the deceased could sue, and that, consequently, a debt which had accrued due since the death of the deceased was not a debt in respect of which a certificate need be produced. This principle has obviously no application to a case like the present. Here the whole debt accrued due on the 29th March 1896 the date for repayment mentioned in the bond. It may be conceded, that the creditor was bound in the first instance to seek a particular remedy for the satisfaction of his claim, but nevertheless the debt was all the while in existence and in full vigour. There is no foundation for the assumption that the debt came into existence or accrued due for the first time, when the sale-proceeds proved insufficient to satisfy the mortgage decree. One test appears to us to be conclusive. If a question arises as to whether the personal remedy is barred by limitation, with reference to what point of time is the matter to be determined? It was ruled by this Court in Purna Chandra Mandal v. Radha Nath Dass (11) and Rahamat Karim v. Abdul Karim (12), that when an application is made under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act for a supplemental decree, the Court has to consider, whether the personal remedy was barred by the rule of six years at the date of the institution of the suit. This view, which is identical with that taken in the case of In re Barker's claim [McDermott v. Boyd (13)], is manifestly inconsistent with the theory that the debt accrued due after the sale of the mortgaged properties. To use the language of Lord Herschell, in the case just mentioned. "The right of realization as against the debtors personally did not give a separate and independent cause of action; the truth is, that the debt is one debt only." In other words, as Lord Justice Lindley puts it. "The promise to pay the deficiency does not create a new obligation to pay, it only applies the old obligation to a reduced sum; the realisation of the security does not add to the cause of action, the cause of action accrued long before." It follows, therefore, that in the case before us, the debt, which the creditor seeks to enforce, accrued due during the lifetime of the creditor. The second part of the contention of the Appellants also fails.

In support of the third head of the contention for the Appellants, allusion was made to a dictum of the learned Judges who decided the case of Baid Nath v. Shamanand (14) and to the decision of this Court in Mahomed Yusuf v. Abdur Rahim (15). In the former of these cases, it was observed, that it is extremely doubtful whether the Legislature ever intended that sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act should apply not only to a case where a person claims to recover money under the title of succession to the original creditor, but also to a case where upon the death of that person during the pendency of the suit some other person is substituted in his place as Plaintiff in the cause. In the second case, which turned upon the construction of cl. (b) of sec. 4, sub-sec. (1), it was ruled, that when an application for execution had been made by the judgment creditor himself, and upon his death, his legal representative applied for leave to continue the execution proceedings, it was not necessary for the latter to produce a certificate. It is not necessary for our present purposes to examine whether these views may not be open to criticism and whether they are not too broadly formulated [see Vasquez v. Pragji Harji (16), where Farran, J., undoubtedly assumed that upon the death of the Plaintiff pendente lite, though the suit might be continued by his representative, a certificate in proof of his representative title must be produced, before a decree could be made]. It is sufficient to point out, that the cases cited are distinguishable. The present case turns upon the construction of cl. (a) of sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) which prevents a Court from passing a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person. The Appellants are undoubtedly persons of this description, and they seek a decree against the debtor of their deceased father in respect of debt due to him. No doubt, the claim was included in the plaint by which the action was commenced, but the claim has not yet been investigated, and the application under sec. 90 is substantially one for a supplemental decree. It was pointed out by this Court in Purna Chandra v. Radha Nath (11) that the object of sec. 90 is to obviate the necessity for a fresh suit, possibly in a Court, different from that which passed the decree for sale; the proceedings founded on an application under sec. 90 are a continuation of the original suit; the relationship of decree-holder and judgment-debtor created by the decree for sale is no longer of any benefit to the decree-holder, and the parties are, therefore, again practically relegated to the position of the Plaintiff and Defendant. In this view of the matter, it is difficult to appreciate, upon what intelligible principle a case of this description should be excluded from the operation of cl. (a) of sec. 4, sub-sec. (1), the terms of which are undoubtedly comprehensive enough to cover the case. In our opinion the third part of the contention for the Appellants cannot be sustained.

The fourth head of contention for the Appellants is, that, as shown by the preamble to the Act, its object is to afford protection to parties paying debts to representatives of deceased persons, and as the Appellants were substituted in the place of their father in the decree for sale, they ought not to be called upon to produce a succession certificate. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. No doubt, according to the decision of this Court, in the cases of Kanchan Modi v. Baijnath Singh (17) and Baid Nath v. Shamanand (14), the representatives of a mortgagee seeking relief against the mortgage property alone need not take out a certificate under the Act on the ground that such a suit is not for the recovery of the debt but for recovery of an interest in immoveable property. It was consequently possible for Appellants to obtain an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property; but this fact does not lead to the inference that they are equally entitled to the balance of the mortgage money; it is quite conceivable that the owner of the mortgage money might have made provision for the disposition of his estate so as to leave the immoveable property to one person and the money to another. No doubt, in the view taken by this Court of the scope of sec. 4, the debtor is not entitled to any protection, so far as the sale of land itself is concerned, but so far as the personal remedy is concerned, the law gives him protection, and there is no reason why he should be deprived of it. Besides there is no admission by the Respondent that the Appellants are the persons entitled to the personal decree. But even if there were such an admission, the Court could not ignore the mandatory provisions of sec. 4. In such a case if the matter is brought to the notice of the Court in time, it is the duty of the Court to stay its hand and to give effect to the clear legislative intent. See Santaji v. Ravji (18) where it was held by Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., that a certificate was necessary even in the case of a decree by consent. It was pointed out that the Succession Certificate Act of 1889 is meant to facilitate collection of debts by affording proof of representative title, and also for the protection of the revenue, and this is clear from the provisions of sec. 14. It is not necessary to consider, therefore, whether the principle of waiver would apply; if the object of the Act was not merely protection to the debtor, the provisions clearly could not be waived by him. [See Mis. App. 279 of 1906]. We must consequently hold that the fourth part of the contention for the Appellants cannot be maintained.

We may observe that the view we take of the applicability of sec. 4 to money decrees on mortgages, is supported by the cases of Janaki Bullay v. Hafez Mahomed (19), Roghunath v. Poreshnath (20), Narechand v. Yenana (21) and Palaniyandi v. Veerammal (22). In the first two cases, which were decided under Act XXVII of 1860, it was assumed, that the production of a certificate would not be necessary unless a personal decree was asked for on the basis of the mortgage. In the other two cases, which were decided under Act VII of 1889, it was ruled, that when a personal decree was prayed for and granted the requisition of a certificate as a condition precedent to such a decree is right. In these two cases, however, the mortgagee had died before the suit to enforce the security which was commenced by his representatives; this circumstance, as we have explained in dealing with the third branch of the contention of the Appellant, does not affect the matter.

The fifth head of the contention of the Appellants is to the effect, that as they were members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family with their father the right to realise the debt has vested in them by survivorship, and may be enforced without the production of a certificate. In answer to this contention, the learned vakil for the Respondent contended, that as held in Venkataramana v. Venkaya (23), to make this principle applicable, it must appear on the face of the bond, that the debt claimed was due to the joint family. It has been ruled, however, in the cases of Bissen Chand v. Chatrapat (24), Bejraj v. Bhairo Prosad (25), Patesshuri v. Bhagawati (26), Vithal v. Gotya (27) and Pallamraju v. Bapanna (28), that it is not necessary that it should appear on the face of the bond, that it is a joint family debt; it is enough, if it is admitted or proved that the family is joint, for if this much is established, the presumption is that the debt is a family debt, and when such a debt has vested by right of survivorship no succession certificate need be produced. In the case before us, however, the Courts below have not investigated whether the mortgage debt was a joint family debt. We think in all the circumstances of this case, that the Appellants ought to be allowed an opportunity to have this matter determined.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed in part and the order of the learned District Judge discharged. The case will be remitted to him for determination of the question, whether the mortgage debt was a joint family debt. If this question is answered in the affirmative, the Appellants will not be required to produce any certificate. If it be answered in the negative, the Appellants will be afforded a reasonable time to produce the requisite certificate. We think they ought to be allowed this opportunity, because, even if their application were dismissed on the ground of their failure to produce a certificate, it would be open to them to apply again under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, for as held in the case of Rahamat Karim v. Abdul Karim (12) no period of limitation is applicable to an application under sec. 90 for a personal decree against the mortgagor. We may add, however, that the Appellants will act wisely, if when the case goes back, they obtain a succession certificate so as to render unnecessary the discussion of any question in bar of their claim. Under the circumstances the Appellants must pay the Respondent his costs of this appeal.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 2323 OF 1905.

WOODROFFE, J. | KUNJA BEHARI SINGHA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
COXE, J. | v.
1907. | BHUPENDRA KUMAR DUTT and others, Defendants, Respondents.
Heard, 6 and 7, August. |
Judgment, 7, August. |

Contract Act (IV of 1872), sec. 72—Voluntary payment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 310A—Property of third person sold in execution—His remedy—Right to recover money erroneously deposited under sec. 310A.

When property belonging to A was sold in execution of a decree against B and A had the sale set aside by making a deposit under sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code, Held—That A has no right to sue the decree-holder for recovery of the amount of the deposit money paid to him.

DULICHAND v. RAM KISHEN SING (2), JUGDEO NARAIN SINGH v. RAJA SINGH (1) referred to.

A was not bound to apply under sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale, nor had he the right to do so.

This was an appeal preferred on the 5th of December 1905, against the decree of A. C. Sen, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Bankura, dated the 11th of September 1905, reversing that of Babu Durgu Churn Sen, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 28th of June 1904.

The facts of the case are as follows:— The Defendants-Respondents obtained a decree against the sister of the Appellant. In execution of that decree property standing in the name of the judgment-debtor but claimed by the Appellant's mother as her own was sold.

The Appellant's mother thereupon applied under sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code to have the sale set aside on her depositing the purchase-money, &c. The application was allowed and the sale set aside. She then instituted the present suit to recover the amount deposited by her from the decree-holder to whom the money had in due course been made over. The Subordinate Judge gave her a decree, but on appeal his decision was reversed by the District Judge.

The Appellant preferred this second appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WOODROFFE, J.—This is not a case where money has been paid to stay a sale in execution by a person who intends to bring a suit to test the right of a decree-holder to attach and sell. Therefore we are not concerned with any cases which have these facts as the basis of their decision, we are concerned with the particular facts of this particular case. The case before us is one where the Plaintiff's property was in fact sold for the debt of his sister. The ordinary procedure in such a case would be that a suit should be brought by the person whose property has been so sold to establish his title. If he succeeded, he would get back his property and if the auction-purchaser was thus deprived of the property by reason of the want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor he would be entitled to a refund of the purchase-money. On the other hand, the decree-holder who had by reason of the establishment of the Plaintiff's title been deprived of the proceeds of sale for the satisfaction of his debt, would be entitled to proceed against other properties of the judgment debtor for the purpose of such satisfaction. In this the ordinary way the rights of all the parties would have worked out. In 1894, the Legislature introduced into the Civil Procedure Code a special provision for the benefit of the judgment-debtor and any person whose immoveable property had been sold in execution. Such a person might at any time within thirty days from the date of sale apply to have the sale set aside on making certain deposits in Court.

Now, what has happened is shortly this that the Plaintiff instead of pursuing the ordinary course, the one which I have indicated, mistook his remedy and applied under sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code which had no application to his case. He could not in fact apply under that section which applies only to cases of persons whose interest are affected by the sale. The Plaintiff was not a person whose interest was affected by the sale and he could not have applied under the terms of that section. He was not merely not bound but he was not entitled to have the sale set aside. The sale however was wrongly set aside at his instance and he now wants back the money which has been paid to set aside the sale and which has been made over to the decree-holder.

I do not myself think that he is entitled to get this money back. The property, as I have said, had been sold. His remedy was not that under sec. 310A, C. P. C, for he was not affected by the execution proceedings. This was not a case in which the money had been deposited for the purpose of staying the execution. The execution proceedings had, except as regards those of confirmation, practically come to an end, and would have come to an end but for sec. 310A. It is said that there are equities in favour of the Plaintiff. For my part I think that, with the exception of one circumstance, all the equities appear to be the other way. Owing to the erroneous and unwarranted action of the Plaintiff in applying under provisions which had no relation to his case, the sale was set aside and the purchase-money which would have been available to the decree holder was turned away. It is true that instead of that money which would have been available for the purpose of the decree-holder's debt was substituted the money of the present Appellant. But he now seeks to get the money back. In short having wrongfully deprived the decree-holder of the benefit of his case he in addition seeks to deprive him of the money conditional upon the payment of which alone the sale was set aside. Further the position of the decree holder appears to be likely to be a difficult ones if he is deprived of this money. It is doubtful whether under the circumstances of this case the execution proceedings could be revived.

According to the evidence adduced in the lower Court the judgment-debtor who is the Appellant's sister is a lady of property and who is in a position to satisfy the debt. The money which was paid by the Appellant was paid directly for her benefit and by the payment her debt was satisfied.

It appears to me that the justice of the case requires that at any rate the decree-holder should not be called upon to refund the money.

Whether or not the money is properly recoverable from the judgment-debtor, we are not concerned, because the judgment-debtor has not appealed against the decision of the lower Appellate Court. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs, a separate set of costs is payable to the auction-purchaser who has been made a party.

COXE, J.—I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

The decision in Jugdeo Narain Singh v. Raja Singh (1) seems to be authority for the proposition that when A's property is notified for sale as being the property of B in execution of a decree against B and A, after an unsuccessful objection, pays the decretal amount in order to prevent the sale, the payment is not a voluntary one and A is entitled to sue the decree-holder for a refund. The difficulty of reconciling this view with Chap. V of the Contract Act is evident from the observations of Markby, J., quoted in the ruling. The learned Judges, however, considered that they were bound by the decision of the Privy Council in Dulichand v. Ram Kishen Sing (2), in which it was held that such a payment was not a voluntary one but made under the compulsion of law. It may seem somewhat anomalous that when a third party deposits money in order to prevent a sale, the payment should be involuntary; but then when he pays money after the sale in order to set it aside it should be voluntary.

If in the latter case he is not a person whose immoveable property has been sold, it would seem that in the former case also he is not a person whose immoveable property is going to be sold. But I think it would be still more anomalous to hold that a payment which a prior purchaser is not authorized by law to make is a payment made, to quote the words used in Dulichand v. Ram Kishen Sing (2), under the compulsion of law. I do not think, therefore, that we are bound to decide this case on the principle which was laid down in Dulichand v. Ram Kishen Sing (2) in which case, all the circumstances, besides the fact that the sale had not taken place, were altogether different. In that case the decree-holder had no equitable right to retain the money at all; whereas in the present case the District Judge finds that the decree-holder acted perfectly bonâ fide, and the property that he attached was in the name of his judgment-debtor. I think therefore that the Plaintiff is not entitled under sec. 72 of the Contract Act to recover the money from the decree-holder, and as regards his claim to recover on the general equities of the case I agree entirely with the observations of my learned brother.

That if any additional cess is imposed or if the amount of cess is increased, the incidence of the new burden must be regulated according to the statute.

This was an appeal preferred on the 12th of December 1905, against the decree of A. W. Cook, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Gya, dated the 19th of September 1905, reversing the decree of Moulvi Mirza Bedar Bakht, Munsif of Aurangabad, dated the 30th of May 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The circumstances which gave rise to the litigation out of which the present appeal arises may be shortly stated as follows :—On the 26th September 1881, the Defendant-Respondent took a perpetual mokurari lease of the entire Mouzah Zakhim Salempore from the Plaintiffs-Appellants. A sum of Rs. 6,340 was paid as bonus and the rent payable was fixed under the lease by a clause which runs thus :—"At varying jamas, to wit, on an annual uniform jama of Rs. 1,580 from 1289 to 1291 (Fasli) and at an annual uniform consolidated jama of Rs. 1;585 of the current coin from 1292 (Fasli) together with abwab, such as, selami for Dusserah and Holi, Purkha, Sair, Road cess, Public works cess, &c., all of which are included in that very sum of Rs. 1,585." This is the covenant as embodied in the kabuliyat which was produced in the Courts below. In this Court, a certified copy of the lease was allowed to be produced and an examination of it shows that the corresponding covenant in that document is expressed in identical language.

At the time when the lease was granted the amount of cesses levied by Government from the zemindar was Rs. 97. Since then, as the annual value of the land has gradually increased, there has been a corresponding increase in the demand of the State. In 1889, the cesses were levied from the zemindar at the rate of Rs. 108-1-1 per year and in 1902 the amount was increased to Rs. 174-4-3. The Plaintiffs-Appellants commenced the present action for declaration that they were entitled to recover from the tenure-holder Defendant the amount of cesses of Rs. 97 which they had been called upon to pay by the Government and also for recovery of the sums paid. The claim was resisted by the Defendant on the ground that the amount payable by her in respect of this tenancy had been unalterably fixed by the terms of the contract of the 26th September 1881 and that the burden of all new impositions by the State must be borne by the Plaintiffs zemindars. The Court of first instance overruled this objection and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs. Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that decision.

The Plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court, and, on their behalf, it has been contended that, upon a true construction of the lease of 1881, the Defendant is liable to bear the burden of the increase in the amount of cesses payable. Whether this contention is valid or not, must depend upon the terms of the contract between the parties. But, before we consider the question of true construction of the lease of 1881, it is desirable to point out that it was open to the zemindar and the tenure-holder to contract themselves out of the provisions of sec. 41 of the Bengal Cess Act of 1880 (See Suurnomoyee v. Paresh Narayan (1), Shumbhu Nath v. Hurrosundari (2), Ashutosh Dhur v. Amir Molla (3) and Narendra Kumar Ghose v. Gora Chand Joddar (4). The question, therefore, reduces itself to this to what extent have the parties contracted themselves, out of the provisions of sec. 41 of the Cess Act, because to that extent only will their rights and liabilities be governed by the contract and, beyond that, the statute must prevail.

The lease is described as a perpetual mokurari lease which implies that the tenancy was permanent, heritable and transferable and that the rent was fixed in perpetuity. From this it was argued on behalf of the Defendant-Respondent, that the sum of Rs. 1,585 was the only sum payable by the tenant, to the land-lord during the whole period of the continuance of the tenancy. It was pointed out that the lease describes this sum as the uniform annual jama which includes abwabs of various descriptions and Road cess and Public works cess, and it was contended that this implied whatever might be the amount levied by the Government from time to time as Road cess and Public works cess, the tenant could not be called upon to pay anything more than Rs. 1,585 annually; in other words, it was argued that the effect of the agreement between the parties was that the tenant should take upon herself to pay the whole of the cesses payable at the time of the contract and that, if the amount payable was subsequently increased the burden of the excess should fall upon the landlord.

After a careful examination of the terms of the contract, we are clearly of opinion that the contract did not provide that if the cesses were increased in future the additional burden should fall upon the landlord. The only reasonable interpretation of which the covenant in question is capable is that the amount annually payable by the tenant, namely, Rs. 1,585 included abwabs, Road cess and Public works cess. No doubt it was a consolidated amount, but the contract does not provide for the contingency which has happened, namely, an increase in the amount of cesses levied by the State. Much stress was laid on behalf of the Respondent upon the words "yeh sab shamil usi pundrah sao pachasi rupea menhai bil mokhata" and it was suggested that this means that Rs. 1,585 was the only amount which could, however the circumstances might alter, be legitimately demanded by the landlord from the tenant. In our opinion, there is no foundation for the interpretation suggested. The word "bil mokhata" is well known, it means "according to agreement, stipulated, fixed or consolidated." In Wilson's Glossary, p. 87, a "bil mokhata jama" is stated to mean 'stipulated assessment' and a 'bil mokhata pottah' is stated to mean a lease for a gross aggregate rent; one in which the land taxes and other cesses or abwabs are consolidated. The position of the word 'bil mokhata' in the sentence in the lease before us, might even justify a literal translation "according to agreement" (that is, the lease), instead of the derivative rendering 'consolidated' and this interpretation considerably weakens the contention for the Defendant-Respondent.

The clause in question in the lease now before us seems, therefore, to imply nothing more than this, that Rs. 1,585 was the total amount inclusive of abwabs and cesses. There is nothing to show that the parties contemplated a possible increase in the amount of cesses leviable by Government, and they do not appear to have provided for this particular contingency. If so, the obvious result is that the rights and liabilities of the parties must be regulated by the statute, only except in so far as the contract has made provision to the contrary. How far, then, has the contract in this case made express provision contrary to the statute. In our opinion, the effect of the contract is that the tenant undertakes to pay the whole of the cesses which were levied at that time, inclusive of the share payable by her under the statute as also the share the burden of which would otherwise have to be borne by the landlord himself. If any additional cess is imposed or if the amount of cess is increased, the incidence of the new burden must be regulated according to the statute.

In support of the interpretation which we put upon the contract, reliance may be placed upon two well-established principles. In the first place, it is indisputable that when an exemption is claimed from statutory liability, the contract under which exemption is claimed, must be strictly construed against the claimant and it must appear from its terms, beyond the possibility of any dispute, that the parties intended to vary the liability as imposed by the statute. This rule is especially applicable where exemption is claimed from taxation imposed by the State. No doubt, in this particular instance, it was open to the parties to contract themselves out of the provisions of the statute. But it must be clearly and satisfactorily established, not only that the parties did intend that their liability should be different from that created by the statute, but also, that they intended the variation to go to the extent now suggested on behalf of the Respondent. In the second place, it is well-established that the construction to be placed on a deed ought to be such as will render it reasonable rather than unreasonable and will make it just to both the parties rather than unjust to one of them [see Attwood v. Emery (5), Rawlinson v. Clarke (6)]. In other words, as stated by Phillips, J., in McElroy v. Sloope (7), a Court should always prefer that construction, consistent with the language of the deed, which will prevent one of the parties from obtaining an unconscionable advantage over the other.

Now, in the case before us, if the contention of the Respondent prevails, what is the obvious result? Under the Bengal Cess Act, the amount of cesses payable is assessed upon the annual value of the land, which means the total rent actually payable or assessed as reasonably payable during the year, by all the cultivating raiyats of the land. Consequently, as the total amount of rent payable increases, there must be a corresponding increase in the amount of cess leviable. It follows accordingly, that the greater the diligence and success of the Defendant in the enhancement of rent payable by the cultivating raiyats, the larger will be the amount of cesses demandable by the State. The contention of the Respondent, therefore, amounts to this—that the greater the profit she makes by increasing the rent payable by her tenants, the greater will be the additional burden thrown upon the landlord; and it is quite conceivable that if in course of time, the annual value of the land, that is, the annual profits of the Defendant continuously increases, the increase in cesses might reach a figure which would absorb the whole of the rent receivable by the Plaintiffs. If the contract between the parties had expressly stated that their relative position was to be of this description, a Court might feel itself compelled to enforce the terms of the agreement. But when the lease does not expressly make a provision to this effect and, when a different interpretation is possible and is consistent with the language of the deed, we must decline to accept the construction suggested on behalf of the Respondent, the result of which would be manifest injustice to one of the contracting parties. We must adhere to the just rule of interpretation that the words of a contract should be given a reasonable construction, where that is possible, rather than an unreasonable one, and we must endeavour to give a construction, most equitable to the parties, which will not give one of them an unfair or unreasonable advantage over the other [Clay v. Ballard (8)]. We feel no doubt whatever, that the interpretation which the Respondent now put on her contract, is an after thought, and is not the interpretation put upon it by the parties when it was executed.

The learned vakil for the Respondent suggested that at the time when the lease was granted, it was executed by way of a compromise of a dispute, and that there was an agreement between the parties that future alteration in the cesses should in no way disturb the jama mentioned in the lease. In support of this view he cited the 8th paragraph of the written statement. It is obvious, however, that this can be of no assistance to the Respondent It cannot be disputed that under the Indian Evidence Act, no evidence of extrinsic circumstances is admissible to add to, contradict vary or alter the terms of a deed, and as was observed by Lord Denman, C. J., in Goss v. Lord Nugent (9) "if there be a contract which has been reduced into writing, verbal evidence is not allowed to be given on what passed between the parties, either before the written instrument was made or during the time that it was in state of preparation, so as to add to or substract from or in any manner to vary or qualify the written contract." If evidence of negotiations was admissible to contradict the terms of the written contract the very object which the parties had in view in reducing the terms of the agreement into writing, would be completely defeated. No doubt, as stated in Meriam v. United States (10), it is a fundamental rule that in the construction of contracts, Courts may look not only to the language employed but to the subject-matter and the surrounding circumstances, and may avail themselves of the same light which the parties possessed when the contract was made, but this may be done with a view to interpret the contract and not to contradict it [Inglis v. Buttery (11), Macdonald v. Longbottom (12)] In the case before us, if we advert to the subject-matter of the lease and the surrounding circumstances at the time of its execution, it is clear that the parties did not intend and could not very well reasonably have intended that the burden of all additional impositions should be borne by the landlord, specially if this imposition was due to an event, the entire profit of which would be enjoyed by the tenant. We must consequently hold that, so far as the additional amount of cesses is concerned, the rights of the parties must be regulated by the statute.

The question next arises as to the amount which may be legitimately claimed by the Plaintiffs from the Defendant. The effect of the contract was, as we have already stated, that the tenant undertook to pay to the landlord not only what was at the time legitimately demandable from her as tenure-holder under sec. 41 of the Bengal Cess Act, but also the amount the burden of which would otherwise have to be borne by the landlord as zemindar. If we examine the provisions of sec. 41 of the Bengal Cess Act, we find their ultimate effect to be this: The cess is calculated upon the annual value at a certain rate, which in the present case, is one anna in the rupee. The zemindar, in the first instance, pays to the Government the amount assessed, that is, $\frac{1}{16}$ of the annual value, subject to a deduction proportionate to the Government revenue, which turns out to be $\frac{1}{32}$ of the revenue. But the zemindar collects from the tenure-holder $\frac{1}{16}$ of the annual value subject to a deduction of $\frac{1}{32}$ of the rent paid and the tenure-holder, in his turn, collects from the cultivating raiyats $\frac{1}{32}$ of the annual value. The nett result of this operation is that if the total amount of cesses be taken to be $\frac{1}{16}$ of the annual value, the Government bears $\frac{1}{32}$ of the revenue; the zemindar bears $\frac{1}{32}$ of the difference between the rent he collects from the tenure-holder and the revenue he pays to Government, the tenure-holder bears $\frac{1}{32}$ of the difference between the rent he collects from the cultivating raiyats and the rent he himself pays to the zemindar; and the cultivating raiyat bears $\frac{1}{32}$ of the rent he pays to the tenure-holder. It is obvious, therefore, that if the rent payable by the tenure-holder to the zemindar is, as in this case, constant, the amount of cesses which the zemindar has ultimately to bear is a constant quantity and it is this amount which under the contract in this particular case, the tenant herself undertook to bear. The tenant also undertook to pay the amount then payable by her under the statute which would vary with the annual value. As the annual value has now increased it is this item alone which has increased and the whole of the increase had to be paid by the tenant. It has been found that the amount of cesses payable at the date of the contract was Rs. 97, and this was included in the consolidated sum of Rs. 1,585. The amount of cesses now payable is Rs. 174-4-3. The difference therefore, namely, Rs. 77-4-3 which has been levied by the Government from the zemindar, is payable by the Defendant tenure-holder, and this is the rate at which the claim is laid in the plaint, although the calculations by which this amount is determined are not very intelligible. The Plaintiffs further claimed damages at the rate of 25 per cent. The Court of first instance, however allowed damages at 12 per cent. only, which seems to us to be fair. It is clear, therefore, that the total amount which was decreed by the Court of first instance is legitimately recoverable by the Plaintiffs from the Defendant.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge reversed and that of the Court of first instance restored. This order will carry costs throughout.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES
NOS. 2128 AND 2172 OF 1905.

MACLEAN, C. J.
GEIDT, J.
1907.
12, November.

SYED ABDUL RAB CHOWDHURY, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
H. C. EGGAR, and anr., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XLV of 1882), sec. 437—Suit against mutwallis*—Suit for rent—Parties—Minor—Representation*

When a suit for rent was brought against two persons in the capacity of mutwallis, but one of them who was a minor was not properly served and no guardian was appointed on his behalf,

Held—That mutwallis are trustees and the presence of all of them in the suit was essential, and it was properly dismissed for defect of parties.

These were appeals preferred on the 13th and 14th of November 1905, against the decree of Babu Purna Chandra Chowdhuri, Sudordinate Judge of Faridpur, dated the 18th of July 1905, reversing that of Babu Lalit Mohan Das, Munsif of Madaripur, dated the 23rd of January 1905.

These two appeals arise out of two suits for rent described in the plaints as brought against "Syed Abdul Rab Chowdhury &c., &c., mutwalli for self and as guardian of Syed Mahomed Mahabubrab Chowdhury, son of the late Syed Abdul Rahim Chowdhury." After Plaintiff's title to receive the rents, the plaints set out the position of the Defendants as follows:—"The Defendants were in possession of the putni taluk as mutwallis under a wakfnama of Amirunissa Khatun, the predecessor in title of the Defendants."

Defendant, Syed Abdul Rab Chowdhury, objected to the suits on amongst other grounds that they were not properly laid against Defendant No. 2 who was a minor, and on this point the Munsif found as follows.

"The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are described in the plaint as mutwallis, and are alleged to be in possession of the putni taluk in that capacity. . . . The summons has been served on the Defendant No. 2 and no steps have been taken to have a guardian appointed for him."

The Subordinate Judge agreed with the Munsif that the Defendant No. 2 had not been properly represented in the suit and he further found that he had not been properly served.

The Munsif had dismissed the suit on the ground amongst others of defect of parties. This decision was reversed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal and the suits were decreed. The Defendant No. 1 preferred these second appeals.

Dr. Priya Nath Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—I think this appeal must succeed upon one short point, namely, that the Plaintiffs cannot succeed because they have not brought before the Court all the parties who are liable to pay the rent. In this case the rent was created by a putni pottah, the date of which is not given but the effect of which is stated in the first paragraph of the plaint. The interest under that putni pottah subsequently became vested in the two first Defendants as mutwallis. I have always regarded a mutwalli as a trustee. One of these mutwallis is a minor; he is a Defendant but no guardian ad litem has been appointed on his behalf, for the purposes of this suit. It is found that the summon was not properly served upon him. An objection was taken at the hearing that Defendant No. 2, the minor, was a necessary party to the suit, and that he was not properly represented before the Court. He had not been properly served and it appeared that no guardian ad litem had been appointed on his behalf. Even then if the Plaintiffs, in order to save the suit, had asked the Court to allow it to stand over for a short time to enable a guardian to be properly appointed and proper notice to be served on Defendant No. 2 such an application would possibly have been granted. But they did not do that. I consider it essential that both the mutwallis who are the persons liable to pay the rent should be before the Court, and as they were not before the Court the view taken by the Court of first instance is right and the suit fails.

Other points of some nicety were raised, but I need not go into them.

Both the appeals are allowed with costs and the suits dismissed with costs.

Sec. 51 of the Chowkidari Act does not save rights created by the chowkidar but refers to contracts made by the zemindar in respect of the village in which the chowkidari land or any portion of it is situate

This appeal is from the decision, dated the 8th of December 1905, of Babu Umesh Chandra Sen, Subordinate Judge of Birbhum, reversing that of Babu Durga Das Chakraburty, Munsif of Rampur Hat, dated the 29th of May 1905, and arises out of a suit for ejectment.

The facts of the case are shortly these :—

The disputed plots of land were chowkidari land One plot was settled with the Defendants by the Magistrate on behalf of the chowkidar for a term of 25 years from 1293 to 1317. The other plot was settled with the Defendants by the chowkidar himself. Afterwards the land was resumed under Act VI of 1870, B. C., and transferred to the zemindar, the Maharaja of Burdwan. The Plaintiff claimed title as putnidar as well as under a fresh settlement in respect of the resumed lands from the Maharaja. The Munsif had decreed the suit in regard to one plot but dismissed it as regards the other plot. There was an appeal and a cross-appeal to the Subordinate Judge resulting in a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for possession of both plots.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The main question argued before us refers to the construction to be put on the last words of sec. 51 of Act VI (B. C.) of 1870. Under sec. 50 of the Act, the Collector is authorized to make a transfer of resumed chowkidari land to the zemindar. Sec. 51 says that the transfer shall be subject to the amount of assessment mentioned in the deed of transfer which is to be in the form prescribed in Sch. C of the Act, and "subject to all contracts heretofore made in respect of, under, or by virtue of, which any person other than the zemindar may have any right to any land, portion of his estate or tenure, in the place in which such land may be situate."

The contention before us is that the words quoted above reserve the rights created by the chowkidar whose land is resumed in favour of a third person. We are of opinion that this contention is not sustainable. The words evidently refer to a contract made by the zemindar in respect of the village in which the chowkidari land or any portion of it is situate. This has been the view taken in a series of cases decided by this Court and the form as given in Sch. C conforms with the view that has been taken in these cases. The last words of the form are "subject to all contracts binding the said—in respect of any lands, portion of the said—situated within the said village." The section evidently refers to contracts in the nature of putnies or mokraris created by the zemindar himself in favour of third persons. If the transfer is made to the zemindar and the zemindar has already granted a sub-lease of the entire village including the chowkidari land, the sub-lessee would be entitled to the benefit of the transfer made by the Collector under the Act. It would go against the principle of the Act itself and the well-known status of chowkidars if we are to hold that the rights created by the chowkidar would subsist notwithstanding the transfer by the Collector by virtue of the provisions contained in sec. 51 of the Act. A chowkidar is in possession of chowkidari land for the purpose of certain services and his interest is limited to the period during which he serves the estate or the zemindar. As soon as his service ceases, his right to the land ceases. The grantor ceasing to have right in the land, the grantee must necessarily cease to have right under any grant made by the grantor.

We are, therefore, of opinion that, both on principle and on the construction of sec. 51 of Act VI (B. C.) of 1870, leases created by the chowkidar must be held to have ceased upon the transfer by the Collector of the land to the zemindar. Our judgment with respect to this point will cover both the plots A and B which are the subject of dispute in this case.

As regards plot A, a further contention has been raised, namely, that the Magistrate of the district having granted a lease for 25 years in favour of the Appellants, they are entitled to rely on that lease in any suit for ejectment by the transferee from the Government. It does not however appear that the Magistrate or the Collector had any power to grant such a lease and it would seem from the wording of the lease itself that the Magistrate or the Collector intended to act on behalf of the chowkidar. If that is so, the grant of a lease by the Magistrate or the Collector could not be of any use as against the transferee. The Magistrate or the Collector stood in the same position as the chowkidar himself. And then again if the lease be considered as one created by the chowkidar himself, the lease is void for non-registration inasmuch as it was executed after the Transfer of Property Act came into force. For these reasons, we are of opinion that this appeal must fail and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

BRETT, J.
HOLMWOOD, J.

MUSSAMAT HAFIZAN, Petitioner,
v.
ABDUL KARIM, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 380, 410—Pauper Plaintiff, if can be required to furnish security for Defendant's costs.

The provisions of sec. 380 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot apply to the case of a person to whom permission has been granted under sec. 410 of the Code to sue as a pauper, as the effect of an order requiring such a person to furnish security for the Defendant's costs would be to render nugatory the order under sec. 410.

In making an order under sec. 380 of the Civil Procedure Code against a Plaintiff who had been permitted to sue as a pauper, the Court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity.

NUSSEROODDEEN BISWAS v. UJJUL BISWAS (1) relied on.

This was a rule granted on the 5th of August 1907, against an order of Babu Ram Lal Das, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Patna, dated the 16th of July 1907, directing the Petitioner to furnish security of Rs. 800 within a month for the costs of the suit instituted by her against the opposite party.

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment.

Babus Baidya Nath Dutta and Chandra Sekhur Prosad Singh for the Petitioner.

Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The present rule is directed against an order passed on the 13th of July 1907 by the Subordinate Judge of Patna under the provisions of sec. 380, C. P. C., requiring the present Petitioner to furnish security to the extent of Rs. 800 within a month for the payment of any costs incurred or likely to be incurred by the Defendant in the suit which has been instituted by the Petitioner. It appears that the Petitioner who is a woman instituted a suit against the opposite party claiming to be entitled as his wife to a certain amount of money as dower, and that when she instituted the suit she put in an application for permission to be allowed to bring the suit as a pauper. An enquiry was, in consequence, made into that application with the result that an order was finally passed under the provisions of sec 410, C P. C, granting the application and permitting her to prosecute the suit as a pauper. After that application had been granted, the application which led to the order which is the subject of the present rule was put in by the Defendant, the opposite party, asking the Court to require the Petitioner under the provisions of sec. 380 to furnish security for costs. That application was supported by an affidavit which contains certain allegations to the effect that the woman was a person of immoral character, that she never was the wife of the Defendant and that she was supported in the case by two touts of the Patna Bar. In reply to that affidavit the Petitioner filed a counter-affidavit denying the truth of the allegations made in the Defendant's affidavit and stating that she was 'not in a position to give security for the costs in the suit.

The Subordinate Judge on a consideration of these two affidavits has recorded the following order:—"Having carefully considered all the circumstances presented to me I think I ought to exercise discretion in favour of the Defendant. It is therefore ordered that the Plaintiff do furnish security to the extent of Rs. 800 within a month. In default the suit will be dismissed with costs." After that order had been passed the Petitioner applied to this Court and obtained a rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why that order should not be set aside.

In support of the application it has been contended, and we think fairly contended that the effect of the order passed by the Subordinate Judge under the provisions of sec. 380, C. P. C, is to render nugatory the order passed under the provisions of sec 410 of the Code.

The learned vakil who has appeared in support of the application has invited our attention to the case of Nusseroodeen Biswas v. Ujjul Biswas (1), and has pointed out that a similar view was taken by the learned Judges who tried that case, though that case was (to a certain extent) not quite on all fours with the present. In that case the order under sec. 380 had been passed with reference to an Appellant who had been allowed to appeal as a pauper. And the learned Judges say in effect that to allow an order for security to be passed on such an Appellant, would be practically to render nugatory the order passed allowing him to appeal as a pauper, and they go on to add that in their opinion the provisions of the section of the Code then in force which corresponds with sec. 380 of the present Code were so inconsistent with the provisions of the Code dealing with suits and appeals by paupers as to, in their opinion, support the view that the provisions of sec. 380 were not applicable to suits or appeals brought by paupers. It has been argued on the basis of this decision that in the present case the Subordinate Judge in passing the order demanding security from the Petitioner either exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law or acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity.

(1) 17 W. R. 68 (1871).

MUSSAMAT HAFIZAN v. ABDUL KARIM.

In support of the order it has been argued that the Subordinate Judge was not prevented by the fact that the Petitioner had been permitted to sue as a pauper from requiring security from her under the provisions of sec. 380, and the learned vakil has gone so far as to suggest that as the order for security is one within the discretion of the Subordinate Judge we as a Court of revision ought not to interfere with it under the provisions of sec. 622, C. P. C. In our opinion this contention cannot prevail. The provisions of sec. 622 certainly give to this Court full powers to interfere if we are satisfied that the lower Court has either exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity. In this case we think that the view which this Court took in the case on which the learned vakil for the Petitioner relies is one which we should adopt and that the provisions of sec. 380 cannot be taken to be applicable to the case of a person to whom permission has been granted under the provisions of sec. 410 to sue as a pauper. We think therefore that the Subordinate Judge, in passing the orders which he passed under sec. 380, C. P. C., and which had the effect of rendering nugatory the jurisdiction which he had exercised under the provisions of sec. 410 of the Code, acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity and that his order under sec. 380 of the Civil Procedure Code must be set aside.

In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has refrained from giving his reasons for passing the order under sec. 380, but after reading the two affidavits we think that the materials before him were not sufficient to justify that order. We, therefore, direct that the rule be made absolute and that the order passed under sec. 380 requiring the Petitioner to furnish the security be set aside. The Petitioner will recover costs of this proceeding from the opposite party. We fix the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

N. G. Rule made absolute.

THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. JETHMULL RAMANAND (1) followed.

Application for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes, dated the 16th of March 1907.

The facts of the case material to this report appear from the judgment.

Babu Munindra Nath Bhattacharjee for the Appellant.

Babus Lal Mohan Das and Mahendra Coomar Mitra for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a rule, calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur, passed in the exercise of his powers of a Court of Small Causes and dated the 16th March 1907, should not be set aside on the ground that the notice to the Defendant, opposite party, was in accordance with the provisions of sec. 77 of the Indian Railways Act.

The facts are as follows: It appears that certain goods were booked on the 13th February 1906, from station Jaipur on the Rajputna Malwa Railway. These goods were to be delivered to the Plaintiff at Dinajpur station on the Eastern Bengal Railway; but they never reached the Petitioner. The Petitioner therefore applied to the Rajputna Malwa Railway Company and carried on for some time correspondence with them. Ultimately the East Indian Railway Company on being referred to admitted that the goods had been received by them on the 14th February 1905, but that they had gone astray.

The Petitioner then sued the East Indian Railway Company who defended the suit on the ground that no notice of claim was ever given to them under the provisions of secs. 77 and 140 of the Indian Railways Act. The Small Cause Court Judge held that as the notice of claim must be given within six months and as no such notice was given, the suit was barred by the special law of limitation, and it accordingly dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff has obtained this rule to show cause why the decree of the Small Cause Court should not be set aside. He contends that the notice given to the Rajputna Malwa Railway was sufficient and that the suit is accordingly not barred by limitation: and furthermore, that the East Indian Railway Company admitted that they received the goods.

We think, however, that we must hold on the authority of the case of The East Indian Railway Company v. Jethmull Ramanand (1), that the notice to the Rajputna Malwa Railway Company was not sufficient notice of claim to the East Indian Railway Company under secs. 77 and 140 of the Railways Act and that although the East Indian Railway Company admits the receipt of the goods and that they went astray on their line, the suit being barred by limitation, there can be no decree given against them.

The rule is discharged with costs, two gold mohurs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), secs. 16, 32 (2)—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 646B—Institution of a suit before a Munsif exercising Small Cause Court powers up to a certain value—Trial by his successor invested with higher powers.

Where a suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 70 was instituted in the Court of a Munsif exercising Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 50 and subsequently during the pendency of the suit the Munsif was transferred and the substantive Munsif who succeeded him had powers of a Small Cause Court up to Rs. 100, Held—That the suit should be tried as if the powers of the Court remained the same as they were when the suit was instituted.

This was a reference under sec. 646B of the Civil Procedure Code made on the 6th of March 1907, by Mr. A. W. Cook, District Judge of Jessore, for the consideration by this Court of the case tried by the Munsif of Bongong (Babu Amulya Churn Ghose) as the Judge doubted whether the proceeding was in accordance with the law.

The facts appear from the judgment.

No one appeared on this Reference.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

RAMPINI, C. J.—This is a reference under sec. 646B by the District Judge of Jessore.

The facts are that a money suit in which the claim was for Rs. 70 was instituted in the Court of Babu H. L. Sinha, Officiating Munsif of Bongong, who had Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 50. Before the trial of the suit commenced the officer for whom Babu H. L. Sinha was acting returned, and Babu H. L. Sinha was transferred. The substantive Munsif of Bongong had Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 100. Accordingly relying on the provisions of sec. 16 of Act IX of 1887, which bars the trial of a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes by any other Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable, he tried the suit as a Small Cause Court suit.

The Defendants against whom a decree was given, applied to the District Judge in revision. The District Judge has referred the case to us. He relies on the provisions of sec. 32 (2) of Act IX of 1887; and the cases of Hari Kammaya v. Hari Venkaya (1), Kanan Nambiar v. Anantan Nambiar (2) and Shambhu Dhanaji v. Ramvithu (3).

Sec. 32 (2) provides that the jurisdiction of a Court before which a suit is instituted is not affected by a change in the powers of the Court after the institution of the suit.

The substance of the rulings relied on by the Judge is, as he says, that a case started as an ordinary money suit cannot be tried subsequently as a Small Cause Court suit, although the Court in which the suit was instituted may subsequently be invested with sufficient powers to try the suit by the Small Cause Court procedure. The Judge goes on to say:—

(2) I. L. R. 29 Mad. 124 (1905).
(3) I. L. R. 28 Bom. 244 (1903).

"The present case is not exactly parallel to the cases in Hari Kammaya v. Hari Venkaya (1) and Shambhu Dhanaji v. Ramavithu (3) which contemplate the extension of the powers of the same officer during the pendency of the suit.

"The case in Kanan Nambiar v. Anantan Nambiar (2), however, refers to the transfer of an original money suit to another officer, whose powers under the Small Cause Courts Act were sufficient to enable him to deal with the case by summary procedure. It was ruled that having been instituted as a regular money suit, it must remain such and be tried under the ordinary procedure. The ruling in Hari Kammaya v. Hari Venkaya (1) is cited and followed. The principal ground for the decision in Hari Kammaya v. Hari Venkaya (1) appears to be that the parties should not be deprived of their power of appeal, which they have so long as the suit is dealt with under the ordinary procedure. The same principle will hold good, whatever the changing circumstances be, e.g., the transfer from one Court to another, or the increase in the power of the same officer during the suit, or the change in the officer presiding in one and the same Court. If this be so, then in the present case, the Defendants have been deprived of their right of appeal by the procedure adopted in disposing of the case. It seems to me therefore that the Munsif, 1st Court, Bongong, was wrong in disposing of the case under Small Cause Court procedure and I accordingly submit the record under sec. 646B of the Civil Procedure Code."

(1) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 212 (1903).
(2) I. R. L. 29 Mad. 124 (1905).
(3) I. L. R. 28 Bom. 244 (1903).

We consider that the views of the District Judge are correct. The word used in sec. 32 (2) is "Court." As interpreted, and we think correctly interpreted, by the rulings cited by the District Judge, it lays down that when a case is instituted in a Court which has certain powers, it must be tried by that Court irrespectively of any subsequent increase in those powers. The present suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Bongong, when that Court had only Small Cause Court powers up to a limit of Rs. 50. By the return of the substantive Munsif of Bongong, the powers of the Court were increased to Rs. 100. But under sec. 32 (2), we think the suit should have been tried, as if the powers of the Court remained the same as they were when the suit was instituted.

We must therefore set aside the decree of the Munsif of Bongong and remand the suit to him for retrial.

We return the record to the District Judge of Jessore.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—I agree. I consider the District Judge is right not only on the authority of the rulings he has quoted, but also under the provisions of 33 of Act IX of 1887. (Provincial Small Cause Courts Act). Under this section a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes is to be deemed to be different from the Court exercising ordinary jurisdiction in suits of a civil nature which are not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. In the present case the substantive Munsif

NOTES

A BILL HAS BEEN INTRODUCED INTO THE VICEROY'S Council to consolidate and amend the law for the limitation of suits and for other purposes. The Bill is intended primarily to remedy hardship to some mortgagees caused by the recent decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Vasudev Pillai v. K. S. Srinivasa Pillai, reported at p. 1005 of the last volume of our reports, to make some amendments auxiliary to the Code of Civil Procedure Bill which is now before the Council, and further, to amalgamate in one enactment the various Acts in which the law of limitation is at present scattered.

WE NOTE WITH SATISFACTION THAT THE GOVERNMENT has lost no time in extending relief to the mortgagees who, labouring under the impression that the period of limitation for instituting suits on their mortgages was 60 years instead of 12 years, have not or did not bring their suits within 12 years, i.e., the period of limitation as prescribed in Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. The Bill provides that in parts of the country where the 60 years' rule prevailed the mortgagees, whose claims are barred under the 12 years' rule of limitation as laid down in the decision of the Privy Council, will be allowed two years' period of grace to institute their suits. Also that those suits which have been dismissed as being barred by limitation since the date of the Privy Council decision should be restored.

IN THIS CONNECTION WE DRAW ATTENTION TO A PARAgraph which appeared at p. cccl of the last volume of this journal, where we referred to the hardship that resulted to the mortgagee in consequence of the Full Bench decision in Balaram v. Mangta, 11 C. W. N. 969, a case from Sambalpur where formerly the 60 years' rule prevailed. Surely the mortgagee was, as we then said, "in no way responsible for the change of jurisdiction brought on by the Partition of Bengal." Although the provision in the Schedule for the extension of the Bill to the Sambalpur district will furnish relief to suitors whose suits may have been dismissed since the 22nd of July (the date of the decision of the Judicial Committee) yet it makes no provision in the case of those whose suits have been dismissed prior of that date in accordance with the views of the Calcutta High Court, since the transfer of Sambalpur to Bengal. The Full Bench decision in Balaram v. Mangta is a case in point in which the mortgagee's suit was dismissed only six days before the date fixed in the Bill. We would therefore suggest that the provision of the Bill should be made applicable to cases of the kind in the Sambalpur district from the date of Partition of Bengal.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE CASE OF Ram Narain Routh v. Lal Das Routh, decided by their Lordships Mookerjee and Caspersz, JJ., a report of which appears at p. 55 of the current volume of this journal. Their Lordships held that when a person having an interest in a tenure or holding advertised for sale, makes a deposit under sec. 171, Bengal Tenancy Act, he is not in all cases entitled to get delivery of possession of the tenure or holding saved from sale by his deposit by an application to the execution Court in which the deposit is made; he can only get delivery of possession by such application as against the defaulting judgment-debtor, but not as against a stranger to the execution proceeding who happens to be in possession of the tenure or holding. The reasons assigned by their Lordships are that when such a stranger will dispute the title of the depositor to make the deposit under sec. 171, Bengal Tenancy Act, it is hardly conceivable that the execution Court should decide the dispute which is between persons neither of whom is a party to the suit and further that under sec. 62 of Act VIII, B. C. of 1869, which is replaced by sec. 17 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the depositor was declared to be entitled to obtain immediate possession of the tenure of the defaulter on applying for the same, whereas sec. 171, Bengal Tenancy Act, simply says that the depositor "shall be entitled to possession of the tenure or holding &c."

THE LANGUAGE OF SEC. 171, BENGAL TENANCY ACT, is no doubt ambiguous in so far as it does not say by what procedure the depositor will get possession. The words used are "he (i.e., the depositor) shall be entitled to possession of the tenure or holding." But it seems to us that having regard to the fact that the object of the provisions in sec. 171, Bengal Tenancy Act, is to enable a person having an interest in the tenure or holding which will be voidable upon the sale of the tenure or holding to save his interest by preventing the sale of the tenure or holding and at the same time to avoid unnecessary delay and multiplicity of actions, the Legislature did not by these words intend that the depositor will have to bring a regular suit to get possession. According to this decision, the same words "shall be entitled to possession," will have to be interpreted in different ways according as the possession is sought against the defaulting tenant or a third person, who of course holds possession of the tenure or holding advertised for sale, by some title derived from the defaulting tenant. For if the third person claims possession adversely to the defaulting tenant, he can in no way be bound by the order of the execution Court delivering possession to the depositor.

IT IS SAID THAT BY THE CHANGE OF LANGUAGE IN sec. 171, the procedure for getting possession under Act VIII, B. C. of 1869, has been changed. But it might as well be argued that if the Legislature meant to enact that the depositor will have to bring a regular suit to get possession in certain cases, it would have used appropriate words indicating its meaning. At the time when sec. 171 was enacted the Legislature knew that the depositor gets delivery of possession by an application to the execution Court and so if the Legislature intended to change or modify that procedure is it not reasonable to suppose that the Legislature would have expressly said so?

AS TO THE INAPPROPRIATENESS OF THE EXECUTION Court investigating into the locus standi of the depositor to make the deposit under sec. 171, at the instance of a third party, all we can say is that such investigation becomes incumbent upon the execution Court when the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder questions the title of the depositor to make the deposit. When the third party raises the question, the investigation need not be more lengthy or complicated. All that the Court has to see is whether the depositor has an interest in the tenure or holding advertised for sale, which will be voidable upon the sale; but the Court need not pause to consider the respective claims of the depositor and the third party to make the deposit. Admittedly the third party has not made the deposit so the tenure or holding would have been sold with the result that the third party's interest in it would have been avoided but for the deposit made by the "depositor" who asks for delivery of possession. Certainly the third person cannot complain of any injury to himself by reason of the deposit. The mere fact of his having a right to make the deposit under sec. 171, will not disentitle another person having a similar right who by the exercise of due diligence makes the deposit before him, to get possession from the Court. The only question the Court will have to decide is, whether or not the person who made the deposit is entitled to do so under sec. 171, whether the locus standi of the depositor is questioned by a party to the suit or a third person. It is not necessary for the Court to determine whether the third person has a better title to make the deposit, for admittedly he did not take any steps to make the deposit at the proper time.

Understudy, employment as—Right to play the principal's part in latter's absence.

Defendants, the Managers of the Vaudeville Theatre, London, and the Plaintiff Ethel Newman, an actress, entered into a written contract to the effect that the "Managers engage the said artiste for the run of the play to follow The Catch of the Season, at the said theatre to understudy Miss Edna May commencing on or about the 24th March 1906 and the said managers agree to pay weekly to the said artiste the sum of £4 inclusive and an extra salary of £1 per performance for every performance that the said artiste shall play Miss Edna May's part . . . . . And the said artiste agrees to perform to the best of her ability upon the above conditions. The rehearsals prior to and during the continuance of this engagement to be given free. And the said artiste agrees not to appear at any place of public entertainment at any time during her engagement by the said managers without the written consent of the said managers or their representatives and further agrees to read and conform to the rules and regulations governing the said Vaudeville Theatre." The Plaintiff alleged that in fulfilment of this engagement she acted at a number of matinees and on other occasions when Miss Edna May was absent. On 22nd September 1906 when Miss Edna May finally left the theatre Plaintiff played her part for a fortnight; but early in October she received notice that Miss Phyllis Dare would take Miss Edna May's part at the next performance. The Plaintiff refused to understudy Miss Dare and brought this action in which the question arose whether upon the above agreement the Plaintiff as "understudy" had the right to play the part of Miss May when absent; or whether the Defendants warranted to the Plaintiff that Miss May would act the part contemplated during the run of the piece and as Miss May had not done so, the Defendants were liable in damages to the Plaintiff. Both questions were decided against the Plaintiff. Lord Justice Vaughan Williams said that upon the face of it the term "understudy" was used in the theatrical profession and the evidence given in explanation of it showed that it did not imply any right in the understudy to play the part of the principal actor or actress in the latter's absence, his or her obligation and right being simply to be ready to do so if called upon by the management.

Sir Arthur Wilson.	Bejoy Singh Dudhuria,

10th December.

Leave to appeal—Substantial question of law—Sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code—High Courts not unanimous in its construction.

This was an application for special leave to appeal under the following circumstances :—

On 22nd May 1901, the Petitioner purchased for the sum of Rs. 12,000 a house at Baluchar at a sale held in execution of a decree made on 1st September 1896, by the Calcutta Small Cause Court against one Chattraput Singh in favour of the firm of Tara Chand Hakin Chand. On 2nd June 1895, the father of the Respondent also obtained a decree against Chattraput Singh from the High Court at Calcutta (Original Side). The Respondent desired to execute that decree by attachment and sale of the said house. He, however, having failed to set aside the said sale to the Petitioner by summary proceedings, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad, on 30th September 1902, against the Petitioner to obtain a declaration that the sale to him was fraudulent and that he had purchased the said house benami for Chattraput Singh. The Petitioner in defence denied the fraudulent and benami nature of the purchase and pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by secs. 317 and 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On 26th May 1904, the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment and decided that the purchase money came from the Petitioner's firm; that nevertheless the inference to be drawn from all the circumstances was that the purchase was benami for Chattraput Singh and that the suit was not barred by either of the above-mentioned sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. A decree was accordingly made. Against that decree the Petitioner appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which, on 16th April 1907, delivered judgment and affirmed the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge. On 30th May 1907, the High Court rejected the Petitioner's application to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the last-mentioned decree. The following were the terms of that order: "This is an application for a certificate that the case is a fit and proper one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The amount in dispute is well over Rs. 10,000 and the decree appealed against is one of affirmance. The Petitioner must therefore make out that the appeal involves some substantial question of law.

"The suit was one to set aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground that it was fraudulent and both Courts have found that it was a fraudulent sale and set it aside. It is contended that a substantial question of law arises in relation to sec. 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that this section is a bar to the suit. Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, who appears for the applicant, has, with his usual fairness, stated that, when the matter was before the Court he felt, having regard to the decisions of this Court, that beyond mentioning the point he could not properly occupy the time of the Court by arguing it. There certainly was no serious argument before us and this possibly accounts for the somewhat summary manner in which the point was dealt with in the judgment sought to be appealed against.

"Apart however from any such consideration it is difficult to appreciate how any substantial question of law is involved upon the facts found in the judgment so far as sec. 317 is concerned.

"The finding of fact is that the sale was a fraudulent one. The ground of the present suit is fraud and is not the ground mentioned in the section.

"The other substantial question of law which is suggested is that the Plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this suit because he would not be entitled to any share in the sale-proceeds under sec. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That point was not raised until reply; it was not seriously urged in argument. If the Appellant had considered it a substantial question of law one might reasonably have expected that it would have been urged in the opening of the appeal. I do not think it is a substantial question of law within the meaning of sec. 596."

Mr. DeGruyther for the Petitioner.—Both Courts in India have concurred in finding that the purchase money was in fact paid by the Petitioner. The finding that the said sale was fraudulent and benami is an inference drawn from the circumstance in regard to which the High Court in their judgment state "taken separately the various incidents in connection with the sale and the subsequent dealing with the house to which we have referred might not have been sufficient to warrant the conclusion of the lower Court, but taken collectively they disclose a reasonably clear case of fraud and dishonesty." That shows that the finding is not one of fact but an inference from facts found. The suit is barred in law by secs. 317 and 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and although the High Court at Calcutta has construed sec. 317 against the contention of the Petitioner, that construction is opposed to decisions of the High Courts of Madras and Allahabad: Rama Kurup v. Sridevi, (1892) I. L. R. 16 Mad. 290, and Kishan Lal v. Garuruddhawaja Prasad Singh, (1899) I. L. R. 21 All. 238.

When the High Courts differ, it is a good ground for appeal in order that their Lordships may decide which construction is the right one.

Leave to appeal granted.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1209 OF 1907. JOGENDRA NATH CHAKRAVARTY AND ANOTHER, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 3rd December 1907.

Warrant of arrest—Whether illegal when only initialled by the officer who issued it—Indian Penal Code, sec. 225B.

The material facts of the case are shortly these:—

A money decree was obtained against Jogendra Nath Chakravarty, the Petitioner No. 1, and in execution of that decree the Munsif issued a warrant for his arrest. A Civil Court peon went with the warrant to arrest Jogendra, but when the warrant was shown him, Jogendra ran away. The peon chased him and caught him near the house of one M., the Petitioner No. 2. A struggle ensued between the peon and Jogendra who shouted for help. Thereupon M. and several others numbering more than five came to the spot and forcibly rescued Jogendra from the grip of the peon who was also very roughly handled by M. and received several injuries on his person. The Petitioners were tried by the Deputy Magistrate of Patukhali who convicted Jogendra under sec. 225B and sec. 147, I. P. C. and M. under secs 147, 323 and 225B and sentenced each of them to 2 months' rigorous imprisonment under each of the sections, the sentences to run concurrently and the Petitioner No. 2 to a fine of Rs. 30 in addition. On appeal to the Sessions Judge the separate sentences under the different sections were set aside, but the Petitioner No. 1 was sentenced to 2 months' rigorous imprisonment and the Petitioner No. 2 was sentenced to 2 months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 30.

The Petitioners obtained the present rule to show cause why the convictions of and sentences passed upon them should not be revised, and why the convictions under sec. 225B, I. P. C., should not be set aside. It appears that the warrant of arrest issued by the Munsif was not signed with his full name, but was only initialled.

Their Lordships observed:—

"It is contended that this mode of signing a warrant is illegal. The learned pleader for the Petitioners cannot show us any authority for this contention; nor any ruling of any Court that a warrant is illegal and can be resisted simply because it is not signed with the full name of the officer who issues it, but only with his initials. Nor has he shown us that "initials" do not come within the definition of "signature" as laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure and in the General Clauses Act. On the other hand the learned Sessions Judge says that the initialling of a criminal warrant is, under sec. 537, Cr. P. C., sufficient to make it legal. Therefore we are unable to hold that the warrant in this case which was initialled and not signed with the full name of the Munsif, was not signed within the meaning of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and we do not think we can say that the conviction under sec. 225B cannot be sustained" . . . .

Joint family—Dayabhaga School—Son's liability for father's debt.

The Plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of a sum of money on a bahikhata. The Defendant No. 2 denied liability alleging that he was not present when the advance was made, that he was never benefited by the advance, that he was not a member of the joint family with his father, Defendant No. 1, and that he could not be made liable for his father's debt. The family was governed by the Dayabhaga School of law.

The Small Cause Court Judge passed a decree against both the Defendants. The judgment rested mainly on the ground that the Defendant No. 2 was joint with Defendant No. 1. He therefore held that they were jointly liable.

Defendant No. 2 moved the High Court.

Held—If the parties were governed by the Dayabhaga School of law, the son could not be made liable for the debts contracted by the father.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD ROBERTSON LORD COLLINS SIR ARTHUR WILSON. 1907. 19, November.	BIBI PHUL KUMARI, Appellant, v. GHANSHYAM MISRA and another, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 283, suit under—Stamp on plaint—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17, cl. (i).

In a suit brought under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, the proper Court-fee payable on the plaint is Rs. 10 under the Court Fees Act, Sch. II, Art. 17, cl. (i).

DHONDO SAKHARAM KULKARNI v. GOVIND BABAJI KULKARNI (1) approved.

Appeal from a decree of the above-mentioned High Court, dated the 10th of December 1903, confirming a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purneah, dated the 27th of August 1900.

The sole question raised on the appeal was the determination of the proper Court-fee payable on the plaint in the suit.

Chhatrapat Singh (Respondent No. 2) was the owner of Pergunnahs Katihar and Kumaripur, bearing Nos. 1175 and 1176 in the registers of the Purneah Collectorate. On 2nd September 1893 he sold the said properties to the Appellant, Bibi Phul Kumari, who obtained possession thereof and was duly registered as proprietor in the Collector's register.

In or about 1898 Ghanshyam Misra (Respondent No. 1), having obtained a decree for money against Chhatrapat Singh, attached the said properties and advertised them for sale in execution of his decree.

The Appellant objected to the said attachment and applied to the Subordinate Judge of Purneah for removal thereof, claiming the said properties as her own. On 24th April 1899 an order was made rejecting her claim.

The Appellant, thereupon, instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purneah against the Respondents as Defendants. Paras. 6, 7 and 8 of the plaint were as follows:—

"6. That the cause of action in this case accrued to the Plaintiff from the 24th April 1899 aforesaid within the jurisdiction of this Court.

"7. That for the purpose of jurisdiction this suit is valued at Rs. 70,000, being the value of the properties advertised for sale as aforesaid.

"8. That the Plaintiff pays a Court-fee of Rs. 10 for her prayer for a declaration and another fee of Rs. 10 for her prayer for permanent injunction."

The Plaintiff prayed for judgment as follows:—

"(a)—That the Plaintiff's title to and possession of the aforesaid properties be declared and that it be declared that the Defendant 2nd party has no right or title left in the said properties after the sale to the Plaintiff as aforesaid.

"(b)—That it be further declared that the said properties are not liable to be sold in execution of the decree of the Defendant 1st party against the Defendant 2nd party as aforesaid.

"(c)—That a permanent injunction may issue on the Defendant 1st party not to execute his said decree against the said properties of the Plaintiff.

"(d)—That the costs of the suit and interest be awarded to the Plaintiff as against Defendant 1st party.

"(e)—That such further relief be granted to the Plaintiff as the Court in the circumstances of the case may consider her entitled to"

Chhatrapat Singh did not defend the suit. Ghanshyam Misra filed a written statement in defence pleading inter alia that the Plaintiff's suit could not proceed on the ground that the plaint in the case was insufficiently stamped. On the pleadings the Subordinate Judge fixed five issues, of which it is necessary to refer here to only one: "Whether the plaint has been sufficiently stamped."

After the completion of all the evidence on all the five issues, the Subordinate Judge on 27th August 1900 delivered a judgment on the abovementioned issue only, holding that the suit did not fall within Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, but was one on which Court-fees were payable, calculated on Rs. 62,022-11-0, the amount of the decree of Ghanshyam Misra; and on failure to pay a further sum of Rs. 1,230 into Court by 31st August 1900, he made a decree dismissing the suit with costs. In his judgment he observed as follows :—

"The Plaintiff's learned pleader contends that the subject of the present suit is to have an unfavourable order made in a claim case set aside and also for a declaration that Defendant No. 2 has no subsisting interest in the disputed properties which might be put up for sale for the satisfaction of Defendant No. 1's decree against him, and further that the title and possession in respect of the said properties are with her (Plaintiff), that under Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, the latter is bound to pay Rs. 10 stamp for each of those two prayers and as she paid Rs. 20 stamp, she has sufficiently complied with the requirements of the law, especially when she seeks a declaration of right and no consequential relief, and in support of this contention cited the following precedents.—Chunia v. Ramdial (2), Gulzari Mal v. Jadaun Rai (3), Fatima Begam v Sukh Ram (4), Munraj Kuari v. Maharajah Radha Prasad Singh (5), Dildar Fatima v. Narain Das (6), Gobind Nath Tiwari v Gajraj Mati Taurayan (7), Kammathi v. Kunhamed (8), Dhondo Sakharam Kulkarni v. Govind Babaji Kulkarni (1), Vithal Krishna v. Bal Krishna Janardan (9).

"A reference to these authorities reveals the fact that the three High Courts uniformly held that the Court Fees Act being a fiscal enactment its provisions must be so construed as to affect the litigants less heavily and acting upon this principle they unanimously held that in a suit instituted under sec. 283, Civil Procedure Code, the duty leviable should be that provided in Art. 17, Sch. II and not ad valorem provided in Sch. I of the Court Fees Act. The 9 Bom. precedent went so far as to hold that the same duty would be payable even when the plaint contained a prayer for an award of possession. Against this array of authorities there are two precedents of the Calcutta High Court, the one reported in Ahmed Mirza Saheb v. A. Thomas (10) and the other in Modhusudun Koer v. Rakhal Chunder Roy (11). The former distinctly rules that in a suit of this nature, ad valorem duty should be leviable while the latter lays down that the duty should be charged on the amount of the decree and not on the value of the property attached, unless the two amounts happen to be identical. None of these precedents it is true is a Full Bench one, but when they are in conflict with other High Courts one of which is a Full Bench decision in Vithal Krishna v. Bal Krishna Janardan (9), I think, I am bound to follow the dictum of the High Court to which I am subordinate. Now it appears from the execution mohurir's note that Defendant No. 1's decree is now worth Rs. 62,022-11-0 and I must call upon the Plaintiff to pay duty on this sum amounting to Rs. 1,250, but as she has already paid Rs. 20, she would now be required to pay Rs. 1,230 on or before the 31st current."

Against that decree of the Subordinate Judge the Appellant appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which Court on 10th December 1903 delivered its judgment and made a decree dismissing the appeal with costs. The judgment of the High Court contained the following:—

"The Subordinate Judge has pointed out that in certain cases decided by the Allahabad, Madras and Bombay High Courts a suit of this kind has been held to be one coming under Art 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, and therefore subject to a Court-fee duty of Rs. 10 only. He has, however, followed two rulings of this Court, Ahmed Mirza Saheb v. A. Thomas (10), Modhusudun Koer v. Rakhal Chunder Roy (11), according to which a suit of this nature is one in which consequential relief is prayed for and therefore subject to an ad valorem Court-fee duty.

"The learned pleader who appears for the Appellant has invited us to come to the conclusion that the above cited rulings of this Court are erroneous and to refer the question of the Court-fee duty payable on such a suit to a Full Bench with a view to having the decisions in these two cases set aside. We do not see any necessity to adopt this course. The earlier of these two cases only followed a still older decision reported in Muftee Jelalooddeen Mahomed v. Shaharoollah (12); so that the rule of this Court on the subject is one of very many years standing. Moreover, in this case the Plaintiff seeks not only for a declaration of her right, but for the grant of a perpetual injunction restraining the sale, as the property of Defendant No 2, of the property she lays claim to. Hence, she would seem to us to seek for more than a mere declaratory decree and the suit comes within the purview of the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Parsad v. Sukhdai (13) which seems to have been overlooked in some at least of the later cases decided by the Allahabad High Court, which are cited in the Subordinate Judge's judgment."

The Appellant, thereupon, brought the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. DeGruyther for the Appellant.—The present suit is brought under sec. 283 of that Code. The High Courts in India are not in agreement as to the proper Court-fee payable on the plaint, when a suit is brought under sec 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Bombay High Court has held that the plaint in such a suit is to be treated as falling under cl. (i), Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870): Dhondo Sakharam Kulkarni v. Govind Babaji Kulkarni (1) The Allahabad High Court has held that such a suit need not be valued according to the value of the property, but could be brought on a stamp of Rs. 10 under Act VII of 1870, Sch. II, Art 17 (iii): Chunia v. Ramdial (2). The Calcutta High Court has held that as there is consequential relief claimed it did not fall under either cl. (i) or cl. (iii) of Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, but that it fell under sec. 7 (iv) (c) of that Act and accordingly ad valorem duty prescribed by Sch. I of that Act was payable on the plaint. Ahmed Mirza Saheb v. A. Thomas (10).

[LORD COLLINS.—You do not say in your plaint that Rs. 10 is sufficient stamp on the price of the relief, which you claim.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—I am not under sec. 7 (iv) (c) at all. The question is whether consequential relief is asked for. If the answer is in the affirmative, the Court-fee already paid on the plaint is not sufficient; but if the answer is in the negative, which it is submitted is the case here, it is sufficient. When you ask for possession of the moveable or immoveable property, you must pay ad valorem duty. But no possession is claimed in this case.

[LORD COLLINS.—Is not the value of the relief you claim the value of the burden or obligation you want to get rid of?]

Mr. DeGruyther.—This is a suit to set aside a summary order. Neither the case of Muftee Jelaloodleen Mahomed v. Shahunoollah (12), nor the case of Ahmed Mirza Saheb v. A. Thomas (10) decides on what the ad valorem duty is payable. The case of Modhusudun Koer v. Rakhal Chunder Roy (11) has no bearing on this point. The question there related to the jurisdiction of the Court. The present suit is a suit to set aside a summary order and the Court-fee already paid is sufficient under sec. 6 and Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act. The decision in Dhondo Sakharam Kulkarni v. Govind Babaji Kulkarni (1) is right. See also Vithal Krishna v. Bal Krishna Janardan (9) and Gobind Nath Tiwari v. Gajraj Mati Taurayan (7) All that the Appellant wants to get rid of is the attachment. Reference was also made to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) and Kathama Natchiar v. Dorasinga Tever (14).

The Respondents did not appear.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBERTSON.—The sole question in this appeal is what is the proper Court-fee payable on the plaint in the suit. The Act governing the question is the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). Proceeding on the theory that what was due was Rs. 20, the Appellant stamped her plaint accordingly, her suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance on the ground that her plaint was insufficiently stamped; and this judgment was affirmed by the High Court of Bengal in the judgment now appealed against. The present appeal has been heard ex parte.

For the right determination of the question at issue it is necessary to ascertain what are the object and the nature of the suit. Now, fortunately, this is not dubious. The Plaintiff succinctly and accurately states that the cause of action accrued on 21th April 1899, that being the date of a judgment pronounced against her in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purneah in certain execution proceedings. What had taken her into that Court was this: she had bought a property from the second Respondent and had taken possession and was registered as proprietor. After and notwithstanding this, the first Respondent, purporting to be a creditor of the second Respondent, under a decree for Rs. 62,022 attached the property and advertised it for sale. The Appellant lodged with the Subordinate Judge of Purneah, before whom the execution proceedings took place, a claim to the property, claiming that her right should be declared and that an injunction should issue against the execution of the decree held by the first Respondent. This claim was rejected by the Subordinate Judge on 21th April 1899, and his decree is the cause of action in the suit which gives rise to this appeal.

Now the right of the Appellant to sue for the establishment of her right, which the Subordinate Judge had negatived, rests on the 283rd section of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882).

"The party against whom an order under sec. 280, 281 or 282 is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive."

This is clear of itself, and the High Court, in the judgment appealed against, describes the suit as "of the nature referred to in sec. 283."

Having thus ascertained what is the nature of the suit, their Lordships turn to the Court Fees Act to see whether such actions of appeal are specifically dealt with; for it is only if they are not specifically dealt with that the task arises of finding to which group of cases this is to be assigned. Now, the 17th Article of Sch. II is expressly made to apply to "plaint or memorandum of appeal in each of the following suits."

"1. To alter or set aside a summary decision or order of any of the Civil Courts not established by Letters Patent, or of any revenu Court."

Now this is an exact description of the effect of the Appellant's suit. It is true that, instead of asking the Court to alter or set aside the decree which is the cause of action, she categorically asks from the Court the several decrees which she had asked from the Subordinate Judge, and which the Subordinate Judge had refused. But this is merely a verbal or formal difference, and sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, under which section the action is brought, recognizes such a suit as not merely an appropriate, but the only mode of obtaining review in such cases.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the first head of Art. 17 of Sch. II applies to the case. This view is opposed not only to that of the Respondents and of the High Court, but to that of the Appellant. Misled by the form of the action directed by sec. 283, both parties have treated the action as if it were not simply a form of appeal, but as if it were unrelated to any decree forming the cause of action. Accordingly, on the one hand, the Appellant, pointing to her prayer for a declaration, says she pays Rs. 10 on that, and, pointing to her prayer for injunction, says she pays other Rs. 10 on that. In their Lordships' judgment, this is not the proper view of the suit taken as a whole; but if it were, it would be extremely difficult for the Appellant to bring her suit, which asks consequential relief as well as a declaratory decree, within the enactment which she invokes.

On the other hand, the Respondents equally ignore the essential fact that this is a plaint for review of a summary decision; and they go on to bring the action, treated as an original action, within the class of cases where the Court-fees are ad valorem of the action. It is not necessary to discuss this in detail; but their Lordships are not satisfied that, even if the value of the action determined the fee, the Respondents have rightly ascertained the value. What they have done is simply to take the sum in the execution decree. This is plainly a fallacious proceeding. The value of the action must mean the value to the Plaintiff. But the value of the property might quite well be Rs. 1,000, while the execution debt was Rs. 10,000. It is only if the execution debt is less than the value of the property that its amount affects the value of the suit.

Their Lordships, however, are satisfied that there is in the statute no general or overriding reference to value. The terms of sub-sec. 1 of Art. 17 (which they hold to apply) contains no reference to value. In like manner the class of suits dealing with arbitration awards is coupled with suits such as that immediately in question; awards may be of value Rs. 10 or of value Rs. 100,000; and yet no distinction is made. In short, the statute, for good reasons or bad, has dealt with certain actions irrespective of value; and the present action is one of them.

This being a matter of practice, although to be determined by statute their Lordships would willingly have given much weight to any consentaneous practice. But while the Respondents can claim to be supported by decisions of the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts, there is a contrary decision in the Bombay High Court, Dhondo Sakharam Kulkarni v. Govind Babaji Kulkarni (1), which has the high authority of Sir Charles Sargent, whose judgment is in accordance with the conclusion at which their Lordships have arrived.

It is a singular fact that while the ratio of the Appellant's case is at variance with that which their Lordships adopt, there is only a difference of Rs. 10 in the practical result,—the Appellant having maintained that she was liable for Rs. 20, while she was truly liable only for Rs. 10. On the other hand, the sum held due in India was Rs. 1,320, and this was the result of the ad valorem theory. It is to be observed that the Appellant did not, as she should have done, stand on the first clause of the 17th Art of Sch. II, but, on the contrary, contributed to mislead the Courts by advancing a theory which was as unsound as that of the Respondents. Their Lordships think that, in these circumstances, the justice of the case is met by the first Respondent (who alone appeared in the suit) paying half of the Appellant's costs in the High Court and in England.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be allowed, that the decrees of the High Court and the Court of the Subordinate Judge ought to be discharged, that the case ought to be remitted to the High Court with a view to the necessary steps being taken to dispose of the remaining issues reserved by the Subordinate Judge for future consideration, that the first Respondent ought to pay half the Appellant's costs in the High Court, and that the costs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge ought to be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge after the other issues have been disposed of.

The first Respondent will pay half the Appellant's costs of this appeal.

Solicitor: Mr. C. G. Farr for the Appellant.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1060 OF 1906.

MACLEAN, C. J.	GAYRATULLA SARDAR, Defendant, Appellant,
GEIDT, J.	v.
1907.	GIRISH CHANDRA BHAUMIK and ors., Plaintiffs,
13, November.	Respondents.

Mokurari, meaning of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 11, 18, 74, 179— Abwab—Rent.

The word "mokurari" means "with fixed rent" that is to say, when applied to a tenure, it means a tenure held at a fixed and permanent rate of rent.

Held, upon a construction of the lease in this case, that it was not a mokurari lease and that the stipulation in the lease for payment of Rs. 3 instead of delivery of 2 goats was an abwab and that the case did not fall within the protection of sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

GAYRATULLA SARDAR v. GIRISH CHANDRA BHAUMIK.

This was an appeal preferred on the 23rd of June 1906, against the decree of Babu S. C Ganguli, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 14th of March 1906, confirming that of Babu Netai Chura Ghose, Munsif, 2nd Court, at Narail, dated the 15th of September 1905.

The facts of the case material to the report are as follows: Plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of rent. The defence inter alia was that the stipulation for payment of Rs 3 instead of 2 goats is an abwab and not legally enforceable. The material portion of the lease is as follows:—

"This is a deed of a Kayemi Mourasi Patta. I am in possession by receipt of rents and profits of Kharija Taluk Kismut Ragharpur bearing Towji No 870 of the Jessore Collectorate and bearing an annual revenue of Rs. 6-4-2 situated in Pargana Naldi Mouzah Alakdanga, Sub-Registry Lohagara, Zillah Jessore. It being now inconvenient to collect the rents of the tenants in the Mofussil I have proposed for a bandbust and you have also prayed to me to take a settlement. I have granted your prayer; accordingly I grant you a patta, on receipt of a selami of Rs. 5, of the lands described in the boundaries below out of the aforesaid taluk and measuring (by guess) four khadas of lands including raiyati, khamar, hasil (culturable), patit (waste) at an annual rent of Rs. 66-4-2 out of which Rs 10 is to remain in suspension on account of lands under water.

1. From this day you will be entitled to collect rents from tenants and take the profits of khamar lands and shall pay rent to me in four kists mentioned below from the 4 annas kist of 1301, and shall enjoy the same in succession of sons and grandsons You shall not be entitled to raise any plea for abatement of the jama which has been fixed, if you do it shall not be granted.

2. You shall pay as per kists for payment of rent the road-cess and public-works cess fixed for this taluk by the Government.

3. If you do not amicably pay rent, the amount of rent stated above as suspended shall be added to the rent and I shall be entitled to realise the same by suit with damages at the aforesaid rate and with all costs. No objection of yours shall be granted. At my will I shall be entitled to demand the amount of rent under suspension and you shall be bound to pay the same.

5 If in future any revenue, etc, is levied by Government you shall, without any objection, pay the same to me and if for the creation of any hât and bazar or for Railway purpose any portion of the land is acquired I shall get the whole of the compensation and you shall only be entitled to a reduction of rent.

7. At the time of the Saradiya Puja the tenants of this mehal used to deliver two goats and render begar service; in the same way you shall cause them annually to render the aforesaid begar service and to deliver two goats, price Rs 3. If you do not do so I shall be able to realise from you without any objection the expenses which I shall incur on that account. You and your successors shall equally be bound by the terms of this patta.

The first Court held that it was by no means clear from the terms of the lease that he held the tenure either at a rent or rate of rent fixed in perpetuity, that the word kaimi used in the kabuliyat does not necessarily import fixity of rent and that sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to the case. The first Court further held that the sum agreed to be paid as price of the goats is an abwab and not enforceable at law. The lower Appellate Court held that the agreement about payment of Rs. 3 for the price of goats seemed to be a lawful consideration for the use and occupation of the land and observed as follows:—

"Ex. I is the registered kabuliyat executed by Defendants and the tenure is therein mentioned as "kaimi mourasi" meaning permanent and heritable tenure. Defendants by Ex. I agreed to give 2 goats or Rs. 3 as the price thereof. Sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is in Plaintiff's favour.

Appellant's pleader cites the Full Bench ruling Radha Prosad Singh v. Bal Kowar Koeri (1). The agreement about goats or price thereof in Ex. I seems to be a lawful consideration for the use and occupation of land and sec. 179, Bengal Tenancy Act, lays down that nothing in the Act shall be deemed to prevent any proprietors, etc., from granting a permanent mokurari lease on any term agreed on between him and his tenant. I don't think that ruling cited by Appellant's pleader applies and I find the 3rd point for the Plaintiffs.

I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs and decree the cross-appeal, the Munsif's decree is thus modified."

The Defendant appealed.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Janoki Nath Pal for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—We are unable to agree with the lower Appellate Court that the lease in this case is a permanent mokurari lease within the meaning of sec 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It described as a deed of "kaimi mourashi lease," i.e., a permanent heritable lease. The word mokurari, as I understand, means "with fixed rent," that is to say, when applied to a tenure it means a tenure held at a fixed and permanent rate of rent. But that is not the case here—that is not the nature of the lease—and consequently the case does not fall within the protection of sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The payment of Rs. 3 instead of the delivery of 2 goats is, we consider, an abwab—that has scarcely been disputed—within the meaning of sec. 74; and, consequently, that is not recoverable. All that the landlord can recover is the rent; and not this additional payment of Rs. 3. The appeal succeeds on this point only. The appeal, therefore, must be allowed with costs, and the decree of the lower Appellate Court varied and there will be a decree only for the rent claimed.

GEIDT, J.—I agree.

Decree modified.

Service tenure—Resumption—Digwars of Ramgurh—Dismissal by Government and re-settlement with them as sikmi talookdars—Default, proof of—Act VIII, B. C. of 1878, settlement under—Effect.

The Digwari service in this case corresponded closely with what in other cases have been termed ghatwalli There is nothing in the use of the term Digwar to raise any presumption in favour of the contention that the holders of land by a service so named hold as personal servants of the Rajah. If anything, the presumption would seem to be the other way.

The power of Government, although generally exercised through the Rajah, was always recognised as supreme with respect to the supervision over the Digwars in regard to the discharge by them of their police duties. The Rajah of Ramgurh never possessed or exercised a right to dismiss the Digwars and to resume the Digwari grants, save in cases of default; and by the terms under which persons held Digwari grants, no such power was given or reserved to the Rajah.

The dismissal by Government of the Digwars and the substitution for them of a new system of rural police supposed to be of superior quality did not entitle the Rajah to resume the lands as for default.

The subsequent settlement of the lands by Government, purporting to act under Act VIII, B. C. of 1878, with the dismissed Digwars, treating them as sikmi talookdars, and imposing on them assessments for road and police purposes of an amount far beyond the burden which previously rested on the holdings in the shape of supplying patrols, amounted to a continuance in the form imposed by statute of their public duties. There was no default.

These appeals were preferred against the decrees of R. H. Renny, Esq , Second Subordinate Judge, Zillah Hazaribagh, dated the 14th of June 1887.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

No. 191.—We do not propose this morning to deliver a final judgment in this appeal, that is to say, a final judgment in it. It may be that in hearing the other cases something may arise which might make it desirable to add to the terms of the judgment which has been written. But substantially we are now about to dispose of the questions which have arisen in the lengthy argument before us in this case.

The Plaintiff is zemindar or Rajah of the well known Ramgurh estate described in Hunter's Vol. 17, p. 120.

The names of the Rajah's predecessors so far as material are as follows :—

Plaintiff succeeded under the decision in 1872 reported in 9 B. L. R. 274 (Maharani Hiranath Koer v. Ram Narayan Sing).

The Plaintiff zemindar of Raj Ramgurh brings this suit for the possession of lands situated within the limits of his zemindari.

The Plaintiff's case is that these lands were held in lieu of salary by Digwars or road patrols appointed to guard ghats and roads within the zemindari by the Plaintiff or his ancestors; that the Digwars were so appointed that they were the servants of and subject to the zemindar of Ramgurh estate, and the appointment and dismissal of them was in the power of the zemindars for the time being, the Magistrate and the Police only keeping an eye and having supervision over them (the Digwars) to see if they discharged their duties faithfully; that at times the authorities informed the zemindar of the dishonesty and misconduct of the Digwars and had many of them dismissed and others appointed; that when a Digwar was dismissed his jaghir was resumed and the resumed land settled afresh according to the choice of the zemindar; that afterwards the District Superintendent of Police at different times dismissed several of the appointed Digwars and appointed others and at his request the zemindar of Ramgurh used to pay the salary of the said Digwars in cash into Government Treasury; that in 1877 on account of negligence on the part of the former Digwars the authorities thought it proper to make a fresh settlement with the Digwars and all the old Digwars with whom settlement had been made by the zemindar of the Ramgurh estate were dismissed. Plaintiff sets out a perwana from the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, dated the 16th February 1877, by which a new settlement with the Digwars was ordered. He states that after this the Deputy Commissioner instructed Mr. Wilson, formerly Assistant Commissioner, but at the time Manager of the Ramgurh estate, on his (the Plaintiff's) behalf to resume the baiswan jaghir lands which were held in possession by the dismissed Digwars in lieu of their salary, and in consideration of their being in possession for a long time to execute lease pattahs in their favour for terms of 20 years; that such settlements were offered to the Digwars and accepted by some of them, but that he has not yet got possession.

He claims that from the 16th February the date of the perwana, he has been entitled to resume the Digwari lands held by the Digwars who have been dismissed and that his cause of action against them then arose.

Paragraphs 11 to 17, inclusive, of the plaint set out a case made against the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh which is not involved in the appeal before us. It is however necessary to refer to it. The Plaintiff states that by the perwana of February 16th, 1877, he was required to pay to Government Rs. 1,004 per mensem, as Digwari assessment; that in March 1880 he was directed by another perwana to pay only the reduced assessment of Rs. 615-11 4 and on the 31st July 1882 by another, to pay Rs. 946-5, each of which successive orders he has obeyed.

The Plaintiff complains that under the Hazaribagh and Lohardagga Police Act, which is Act VIII of 1878 of the Bengal Council, the dismissed Digwars were settled with and assessed as sikmi talookdars or under tenure-holders whereas they were not sikmi talookdars but Digwars in the special service of Plaintiff, while no Digwari assessment was made on persons who were really sikmidars of the Plaintiff whose number is very great; he says the Digwars having been dismissed and the whole amount of salary charged on him under the perwana of February 1877 they had no right to retain possession of the service lands; but by the proceedings of the Deputy Commissioner they had been made sikmi dars and he feels great difficulty in resuming the lands held by them.

The suit was originally instituted against 182 Defendants included in two Schs. ka and kha, the first containing the names of the Digwars made Defendants the second, kha, being described as persons holding possession of the mouzahs mentioned in the said schedule under mortgages, &c., made on behalf of the Digwars named in Sch. ka. The plaint states in para. 18 that they are made Defendants "for when the principal Digwars have no right to hold possession of the disputed mouzahs, the persons who hold under or through them can have no right at all to hold possession. That is the cause of action as against these persons. No case is made against them as alienees without the sanction of the zemindar. The last of the original Defendants is the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh. To these 182 Defendants many more were subsequently added either on their own application or on the application of the Plaintiff. By an order of the Judicial Commissioner of January 9th, 1885, the Plaintiff was allowed to proceed against nine sets of Defendants in so many separate suits, the Deputy Commissioner remaining also a Defendant. As against the others the suit was dismissed with liberty to file a fresh one.

These nine cases after being before several judicial officers were finally heard by Mr. Renny, 2nd Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, who dismissed the suits and it is from his decrees that the present appeals are brought. No appeal is brought against that part of the decrees which dismissed the suit as against the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh.

The Sub Judge has disposed of the nine cases in one judgment, noticing the points in which the nine cases, called by him lots, differ from each other.

At the request of the parties we consented to hear the appeal relating to lot I first, and it was argued before us at very unusual length, owing in part no doubt to the imperfect manner in which the case was originally shaped and was presented by both sides at the hearing in the Court below.

We have thought that in complying so far with the wish of the parties, we have adopted the least inconvenient mode of dealing with a case which, in consideration for the unfortunate litigants, we have felt bound to hear, although the mode in which it has been framed and managed makes it almost impossible to deal with it satisfactorily.

Substantially, the Defendants' contentions in their written statements are, that they are under tenure-holders who themselves had under them Digwars and road patrols. They deny that they rendered or held by personal service as Digwars. They set up an ancestral jaghir and they also contend that the Plaintiff is bound by the proceedings had under Act VIII of 1878 of the Bengal Council and referred to in the plaint.

In evidence they attempted to show that they held under a Mudkati Jaghir granted for services done to the Plaintiff's ancestors against the Pindaris or other marauders. This they undoubtedly failed to establish.

The Sub-Judge has found that it is shown that they hold Digwari Jaghirs which is the case set up by several of the other Defendants and he finds that the Defendants did not refuse to obey orders and did not fail to render service. He finds, therefore, that Plaintiff is not entitled to resume the lands held by the Defendants.

The Sub Judge also holds that the suit is barred by sec. 34 of Act VIII of 1878 of the Bengal Council. We think it unnecessary to determine that question: and as the Government is not represented before us, we abstain from expressing any opinion as to the regularity of the proceedings taken under the authority of that Act by the executive authorities.

Before us the Appellant's contention was that the Defendants had the lands held by them merely as wages to hired servants, and that the Rajah could dispense with the services for which the wages were in this form received at his pleasure, and could then resume the lands: it was further contended that if the performance of the services ceased without the Rajah's own act in dispensing with them, he then also had the power to resume; and further, that as a matter of fact the services had ceased by reason of the Defendants' default, and that therefore the Rajah, from any point of view, had become entitled to resume.

The Respondents contend that even on the Appellant's own case the Defendants have their lands by a permanent tenure, heritable in its nature; that the lands are held subject to certain services, namely, the payment of a small rent, and the performance of the duty of guarding certain ghats. In short that the relation between them and the zemindar was not the hiring of a servant giving him certain land by way of wages, but arose out of grants of land upon the condition of certain services [as in Rajah Leelanund v. Thakur Munoorunjun (1)]

The Defendants have not produced any grant or sannad. The Plaintiff tendered, during the proceedings in the Court below, documents which he put forward as copies of sannads granted to the Defendants' predecessors by divers of his ancestors. These documents we hold to be inadmissible.

(1) I. A. Sup. Vol. 181 (1873).

NAM NARAIN SINGH v. TEKAIT GANJHU.

But it is in the 6th paragraph of the plaint expressly alleged by the Plaintiff that the mouzahs mentioned in the schedule were granted by his ancestors to the ancestors of the different Defendants as baiswan Digwar Jaghir in lieu of salary for their service as Digwars and their protecting the passes. It has been throughout the Plaintiff's case that the different Defendants held under grants or sannads; the questions in the case have throughout been whether the grants were made upon such terms that they were resumable at the pleasure of the Rajah, or if not in what events, and whether, if resumable in any events, such events have happened as to entitle the Rajah to resume and to maintain his present suit for possession.

Before we proceed to refer to the evidence of the Plaintiff, we must observe upon the character of the services to which the term Digwari is applied, for the decisions in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and in this Court have been usually with reference to services, termed in the cases decided, Ghatwalli services, and this case has been argued for the Appellant upon the footing that the Digwari service of the Defendants was a service personal in its nature, and not of that public character which formed an element in the determination of the cases respecting Ghatwalli tenures.

Having regard to the nature of the service, to the length of time during which according to the Plaintiff's case, these lands have been held under it, to the extent of the aggregate of the mouzahs (over 400 bighas in this single case) and to what is before us as to the use of the term Digwar in one or two cases which have come before the Privy Council we have no doubt that the Digwari service in this case corresponds closely with what in other cases have been termed Ghatwalli. The terms for all purposes, such as arise in this case, in respect of the nature of the services, seem to be interchangeable. There is nothing in the use of the term Digwar to raise any presumption in favour of the contention that the holders of land by a service so named hold as personal servants of the Rajah. If any thing, the presumption would seem to be the other way.

The origin of these kinds of services and the nature of them and of the tenures held subject to them in this part of Bengal are fully set out in Lord Kingsdown's celebrated judgment, Lelanund Sing v. The Government of Bengal (2). The term Digwars, so far as we are aware, first appears in reported cases, in Rajah Nilmoney Singh v. Bakra Nath Singh (3) and in Nilmoney Singh v. Beer Singh (4). Those were cases relating to the Pachete Raj and in both the report of Lala Khanya, tehsildar of Pachete, made in 1799 was much referred to. On reference to these cases, it is plain that in 1799 the Digwars in the Pachete Raj occupied a position which so far as it differed at all from that of the Ghatwals did so in being superior rather than inferior to that of the Ghatwals of that particular region. It is certain that in the latter of the two cases referred to, the Plaintiff, the Pachete Rajah, made no attempt to dispute that the 57/½ mouzahs held by the Digwars in that zemindari were, as he put it, Government mouzahs and could not be resumed by him; and that Digwars were there treated as servants who were required to perform police service for Government—were, in fact, as stated by Counsel in argument at p. 110, Vol. 9 I. A., appointed by and subject to the Magistrate "and free of all obligations to the zemindar." The Judicial Commissioner in Beer Singh's case (4) observes that "there can be little doubt that these rural police were variously named at different times and in different districts, but as guardian of the Ghats or passes they are better known in latter times as Ghatwals."

Probably the term Digwar might be applied to the humblest class of persons engaged in this species of police duty or to a person of much higher social rank who held an estate on this kind of service. So might the term Ghatwal. There might be tabedar Ghatwals, as well as jaghir Ghatwals.

The documents called "copies of sannads" are Exhibits 22, 23, 24 said to be copies of sannads granted in A. D 1795, Ex. 25 A. D. 1806, Ex. 27 A. D. 1853 and Ex. 28 A. D. 1855. As to these it is enough to say that there is no proof whatever that sannads corresponding to them were ever granted or that if they were, these are correct copies of them. They do not even purport to be copies of sannads actually executed. There is nothing in them or in the evidence relating to them to justify the admission of them in evidence; they were properly treated as inadmissible, and as worthless, in the Court below.

Exhibits 2A55 and 2A56 have been held to be inadmissible by the lower Court.

They are said to be copies of lists of Digwars, Ghatwars, and Bouihars for the years A. D. 1799 and 1806 respectively, which lists are said to have been furnished to the executive officers at the time in accordance with their duty towards Government by the Rajahs of Ramghur.

The originals of which these documents are put forward as copies, were called for from the Deputy Commissioner and were not produced and these papers are it was contended admissible as secondary evidence of them.

They were admitted by the Acting Judicial Commissioner who sat during that part of the hearing of the case at which they were put in, so far as his marking them as evidence in the case can have that effect, and they do not appear to have been objected to at the time. But according to the course pursued during the conduct of this case, all the documents produced seem to have been marked and admitted de bene esse, all questions as to their admissibility being reserved until the case should be finally disposed of after arguments.

We do not find that in the memorandum of appeal any objection is taken to the rejection of these documents on the ground that they had been admitted without objection on the part of the Defendants and Defendants certainly did argue before the lower Court after evidence had closed, as we understand, that those papers were not admissible. We think we must treat them as not precluded from pressing that objection in appeal before us.

As to these documents it is to be observed.

1. That there is no evidence that the lists of which they purport to be copies were actually sent to the Government officials.

2. That there is no evidence that lists similar to these in form, and in the nature of the very minute particulars given, were as a matter of usage, or of duty, sent by the Rajahs to the Government in former or in recent times. Reg. 12 of 1807 was not in force at the date which the latter of these lists bears; and the Regulation then in force, 22 of 1793 did not require such lists as these are to be furnished.

3. There is no evidence that copies of lists such as these were regularly kept according to the course of business (assuming that there was a course of business) in the Rajah's sheresta. No other copies before or after these in date, are produced by the Plaintiff similar to these nor any list of any kind until the comparatively recent date of A. D. 1864.

4. There is nothing except their alleged age to bring these documents within sec. 90 of the Evidence Act. They do not purport to be written by any known person, nor do they bear upon the face of them any form or mode of authentication of any kind. Bukshi Bhugwan Das says he heard from Joy Kissen they were prepared in Raja Moni Nath Singh's time. That is all.

5. Lastly as to their credibility, they are wholly different in their character from an undoubtedly authentic list, Ex. A to A84, put in by the Defendants, and produced from the records of Government to which we shall refer later on.

They were used before us, and, if they are not genuine, they must have been framed to support the contention that the Digwars whose holdings are mentioned in them were only, as the Plaintiff now contends, subordinate Digwars holding the land possessed by them as wages. They would not, in our opinion, establish that contention if they were accepted. They may well be construed as limited to this:—As setting out an estimate on the one side of the value of the land held by Digwari service, and on the other of the number of men who are to be kept up by the holders of the land granted. In early times—and these lists if genuine run back nearly 100 years, and probably relate to land held long before on this service—the value of the land let out on this sort of service would naturally coincide tolerably closely with the money value of the services for which it was granted. In truth, we are disposed to think, that these lists if admitted might, from some points of view, rather support the Defendants' than the Plaintiff's case. There is however no evidence that lists of this character were ever made out. Nor have we any means of judging whether, if lists of this kind ever were in use, those before us have or have not been given terms of expression calculated to give colour to the Plaintiff's case that the Digwari service was originally at any rate a personal service rendered to his ancestors.

We observe that the witness Bukshi

NAM NARAIN SINGH v. TEKAIT GANJHU.

Bhugwan Das whose employment it is to look after the Plaintiff's cases, says that the list made by him and Joy Kissen Das was prepared from those two lists and other papers. We gather that this must be the list 2A21 : he says the list he and Joy Kissen made was prepared in pursuance of orders received from the thakbust authorities when conducting the survey in A. D. 1859, which survey lasted for some years, certainly up to 1864. No doubt a list in the form of 2A21 was sent in 1864 S. But how long before that date the lists dated A. D. 1799 and 1806 were in existence, there is nothing to show.

We heard the Appellant's Counsel upon these documents. We thought it possible that they might be let in as statements against interest inasmuch as they go to show an interest in the Defendants' predecessors in the mouzahs in question. But there is nothing to show who made them, or to connect them with any former Rajah as declarations made by him. On considering them we feel constrained to reject them as being destitute of any of those guarantees of genuineness (whether as to themselves or as to that of which they are offered as secondary evidence) which the law requires.

Next as to Ex. 2A21. Its original was, as we have said—or is stated to have been—prepared by Bhugwan Das and Joy Kissen. Its value so far as it has any is in the kyfeut which begins with the words "There is no Ghatwalli in my estate. The Digwars are appointed as servants by me, &c.," which we are told is the correct translation.

The original was called for from the Deputy Commissioner's Office, and after about a year and a half Ex. D21 and a letter D18 were extracted from that office. D21 which is in the Persian character is identical with 2A21 save in the kyfeut, which is wholly different, and is unfavourable to the Plaintiff's case. It says "the Digwars are under the person in possession and the patwaris are not under me" indicating that independent position of the Defendants or Digwars which the Plaintiff repudiates.

There can be no doubt that Rajah Ram Nath did send such a list as this. D18 which is the covering letter which accompanied it, is proved to be his and on it there is an order for the transcription into Persian character of the Hindi list which it covered.

This order is in the handwriting of Bajrung Behari who was alive when the suit was heard and in Tirhoot. He was not called. There is nothing save the existence of the list in the Government records, to connect D21 with the Persian transcription ordered ; and no proof that any such transcription was made. There is absence of proof of the loss of the Hindi original, but very loose evidence of search. Still, slight as it is, we think there is enough evidence to render D21 admissible, valeat quantum.

So far as it goes, it slightly aids the Defendants' case and contributes to throw doubt on the Plaintiff's Ex. 2A21.

But 2A21 is itself of so little value (if it has any) that it is scarcely material to discredit it. So far as it goes, however, it is completely discredited, or contradicted (it matters little which) by A1 to A84.

That exhibit is an undoubtedly authentic list, produced from Government records, each page of which contains or contained the seal of Rajah Ram Nath. It was made in A. D. 1843 and one of the headings of the different columns into which it is divided is "name of Laghnedar, Alakidar and Ghatwal." In that column of the document appear the names of the different predecessors of the Defendants, as we shall presently notice.

This document confirms the kyfeut of D21; and on the evidence, so far as there is any, that exhibit must be held to be correct, and 2A21 spurious so far as it differs from it.

Of the principal documents relied on by the Appellant before us, there remains but the two copies of ekrarnamas, 2A29 and 2A30. The latter is a registered document it is proved. The ekrar-nama 2A29, dated 8th Assar, Sudi 1910, corresponding with A. D. 1853, relates to three of the villages in question. We were referred to the evidence of Radhika Das, page 58, of Domun Lal, page 88, and of Bissumbhur Das, pp. 109-10, as proving this document. The first two witnesses do prove the handwriting of the document: but Bissumbhur Das proves the execution of an ekrarnama by Tekait, Pertap, Baiju and Gendawri Ganjhu. The document in question purports to be by Maniar Cheta Tekait and Gandawri Ganjhu. It is of little consequence. Were this document proved, it would do no more than record a re-settlement of three Digwari Mouzahs from which the Digwars had been for a time removed in consequence of orders from the Government officer, or as he is called in Ex. 26 the attachment perwana, "the Court." We shall refer to this again presently. Most of the documents set up by the Plaintiff must therefore in our opinion be rejected. But although we reject them, we ought to refer to the desired use of them, as it bears upon one of the two chief points in the case to which some of the oral evidence also is directed. This point relates to the alleged right of resumption by the Rajah at pleasure.

One of the tests applied in the Ghatwalli cases to try the powers of resumption asserted by the zemindar, was, whether the service on which the land was held was public, or personal to the zemindar [see the case in Raja Nilmoney Singh Deo v. The Government (5) and Nilmoney Singh v. Beer Singh (4) in the Privy Council]. For if the service be personal to the Rajah, as in the last case was alleged, it may be that the Rajah dispensing with it or the occasion for it ceasing may resume: we say "may be," for perhaps even in that case it may not in every case necessarily follow that he can do so. We need not discuss this.

It was, however, the aim of the Appellant to show that the services in the present case were personal. Hence the argument that where in the statement in the lists (for though we reject them, we must refer to this in stating our view of the argument) the statement "for self" appears, that is an indication that the service was personal, and that the holder of the mouzah or mouzahs was bound to personally discharge it. We do not, of course, attribute to the Plaintiff such a confusion of terms as would be involved in the suggestion that because the service was to be that of the Digwari tenant personally, he would therefore be only bound to a service personal, and not public, within the meaning of the decided cases. But we understand Plaintiff's argument to suggest, that, where service by the Digwari holders in person may appear to have been stipulated for, that stamps such a character on the holding as to show or tend to show that such Digwari holders were of a subordinate order and were mere servants of the Rajah, carrying out under his personal orders the service which he was bound as between himself and Government to have performed.

To this contention (if we rightly apprehend the learned Counsel for the Appellant as making it) there appear to us to be two answers.

In the first place, in the lists which are, as correct statements of fact and apart from the kyfeut, undisputed, i e., 2A21 and D21, the Digwari holders are less in number than the sirdars mentioned in the fourth column, in some cases. Take the first named persons in 2A21A, namely, Maniar and Tekait. They are the Digwari holders: they are two; No. 3 Chitu Ghanju is one: the Sirdars are two. No. 17, two Digwari holders, 3 Sirdars. See also Nos. 20, 27, 36, 41, 42, the Sirdars are 4. Take the ekrarnama 2A30: the Digwari holders created, or recognised, in the transaction there recorded are two: the Sirdars are eight. There are other examples in the exhibits in the case relied on by Plaintiff; but these are enough.

In the second place personal service rendered in commanding the guards of passes or roads does not necessarily involve the holding of a subordinate position such as to argue a merely personal relation to the Rajah. It may be consistent with the enjoyment of considerable social rank. It certainly was in the case of the Ghatwals of Beerbhoom whose office may have been originally one of personal service, although ultimately it came to be one which might be held even by a female. In the present case, the magnitude of the holdings, to which we have before adverted, seems to us to negative the existence of any such humble relation between the Defendant and the Rajah such as he asserts, and as they eagerly repudiate. In the documents other than the lists, whether those rejected or that which has been admitted, viz., the ekrarnama of 1875, there is not a trace of submission to expulsion from the holding granted save in the case of non-performance of the service upon which the holding is granted.

Then as to the oral evidence upon the question as to the right of the Rajah to resume at pleasure, or notwithstanding the tenant's competence and readiness to perform the services.

As to this, we must limit ourselves to stating the conclusion at which we have arrived. We think it clear that the Appellant has not shown any exercise on the part of the Rajah and his predecessors of the right to resume save in cases in which the holder of the lands granted failed to perform the services to which he was bound by the conditions of his tenure. In such cases resumptions have been shown to have taken place, followed in almost every instance proved by the letting of the land resumed to other persons upon similar terms to those under which it had been previously held; in one case a part of the land previously held by Digwars seems to have been otherwise applied by the Rajah. In but one did the whole of the land resumed for default remain in the Rajah's hands. Another Digwar added the service to his own.

We think it also clear, from the plaint, and the evidence, taken with the plaints, that the power of Government, although generally exercised through the Rajah was always recognised as supreme with respect to the supervision over the Digwars in regard to the discharge by them of their duties. In the evidence for the Appellant the acts of the Rajah with respect to defaulting Digwars are spoken as his, and no doubt in form they were, but we have no doubt that in effect he acted under the impulse and by the authority of Government and as representing it, or rather, the Commissioner or Agent General for the time being in that respect.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the evidence documentary and oral fails to show that the Rajah ever possessed or exercised a right to dismiss the Digwars and to resume the Digwari grants, save in cases of default or that by the terms under which persons held Digwari grants, any such power was given or reserved to the Rajah.

It is argued however and this is the second point in the case that the lands are in the zemindari; that the Rajah is primâ facie entitled to them; and that unless the Defendants establish the under-tenure which they claim, is entitled to a decree for possession.

As to this contention we think we must have regard to the case made by the Plaintiff, and the real controversy in the suit. No doubt the suit was ill framed, and ill-managed on the Plaintiff's side and on the Defendant's, too. Had the Plaintiff's suit been treated in this appeal, as perhaps it might have been, it may be that it would not have survived the opening. The whole case bristles with objections to any attempt at disposing of it on strictly applied rules. We think we ought to deal with it, as far as we can, upon the real dispute between the parties that is, whether under the circumstances, the Rajah has a right to resume as the executive officer appears to have told him he had. The right to resume is the sole right claimed by him and whether he has that right or not is in truth the sole question disputed.

We must look at the statement of facts on which he claimed that right. The Defendants are entitled in our opinion to the benefit of any admissions made by him in claiming it.

He claims that the Digwars have no right to hold and that therefore, i.e., for that reason alone, the persons who hold under or through them can have no right at all to hold possession. So far, as to the Defendants deriving title from Digwars the case against each is the same. He makes no claim in this suit by reason of any alienation made without his assent, supposing that he could do so.

He claims against the Defendants as being persons who hold under grants to their ancestors from his own. His case is that as a matter of fact the mouzahs held by the Defendants have descended from father to son. It is natural that a case should be a little modified in appeal in the hands of more instructed advisers contemplating, perhaps, with impartial disapproval the Plaintiff's and the Defendants' mode of shaping their case. But what we have stated was the Plaintiff's case throughout. His witness, the record keeper Radhika Das, says at p. 62 "The mouzahs which have been sued for have descended from father to son;" and we think there is no doubt on the evidence that as a fact these mouzahs have as a rule so descended.

For the decision of this case therefore we must take it as admitted by the Plaintiff that the Defendants, whoever they were, took and now hold under the terms of the original grant whatever they were; and that any defence open to the original grantees is open to them. Ex. A1 to A84 appears to us to be conclusive, coupled with the Plaintiff's evidence and admissions on this question. It is clear from it that Defendants' predecessors had a service tenure at a fixed rent, 45 years ago, in these very mouzahs. The nature of the service is amply proved outside this document. But it proves that the tenure was by service and at a fixed rent besides, a holding somewhat inconsistent with the idea of an enjoyment of a piece of land as wages.

In truth the whole case points but the one way, in our opinion. It is to be lamented that the course described by Chief Justice Garth in Leelanund v. Thakoor Munrunjun Singh (6) with regard to the Khurrukpore Raj should have been followed so minutely in the present by the executive officers, and unfortunately, by the Bengal Council. We cannot help fearing that an ill-drawn Act, VIII of 1878, and ill-conceived proceedings of the executive before and after its passing, have caused the present unfortunate litigation.

We think upon the evidence and the authorities (cited below) that the Digwars on this estate held either first under Government, which there is some ground to suppose they did, or second under the Rajah subject to performing the Digwari service; that there is no proof of any default by them, that the assessment by the Government of them under Act VIII of 1878 is a continuance of their service and that in no case can the Rajah take possession against them.

We have said that Exhibits A1 to A84, coupled with the Plaintiff's evidence and admission, are conclusive as to the particular jaghirs included in them upon the questions arising in the case. We may however add that, having regard to the numerous decided cases with regard to the local police grants in the district, and having regard to the history of the district as set out in the books of authority referred to, it is impossible to shut our eyes to the fact that a customary tenure under perhaps different names exists along the border of the whole of this hill-country in this part of Bengal, the existence of which species of tenure in that country cannot be disregarded in construing the relation of parties situated as the parties in this case are. Nor should we disregard the fact, brought out by the learned Counsel for the Appellant when he was kind enough to furnish us with a large scale map of this region, that these mouzahs in question are to be found ranged in the near vicinity of, and in a manner ranged along the road, the ghats of which (Karo-Behara) the tenure-holders were bound by their service to guard. We need not deal at length with the cases cited. We think it clear that, having regard to Leelanund Singh's cases, the Khuruckpore cases, [Lelanund Sing v. The Government of Bengal (2), Raja Lilanund Sing v. The Government (7), Rajah Leelanund v. Thakur Munoorunjun (1), Leelanund v. Thakoor Munrunjun Singh (6)] and the Pachete cases [Raja Nilmoney Singh Deo v. The Government (5), Nilmoney Singh v. Beer Singh (4), Rajah Nilmoney Singh v. Bakra Nath Singh (3)] which we have already referred to, the claim made by the Rajah in this case has been, in so many words, condemned by anticipation in deciding the cases about Ghatwalli tenures.

One word as to the Act of 1878, Bengal Council. It is contended that the service to which the Digwars were appointed ended by the default of the Digwars in 1877, and the dissatisfaction of the Government with the service rendered expressed by the executive officers and recorded in the Gazette is pointed to as proof of that default.

We entirely agree with the lower Court in considering that no such default is shown. It amounts to no more than the substitution for an old fashioned and imperfect system of police of a new system supposed to be of a superior quality. It is in making that substitution that the executive officers assessed the Defendants, at first authoritatively before the passing of the Act, and subsequently acting or supposing themselves to act under its provisions. We think that it is impossible, having regard to the fact that these Digwars were assessed for road police purposes in an amount, at any rate until 1882, immensely beyond any burden which, in the form of supply by them of patrols, had formerly rested upon their holdings, to regard this system as anything but a continuance in the form imposed by statute of the discharge of their previous public duties, and upon that ground alone we hold that no default can possibly be held to be proved in this case from the action of Government, while of default by them in the conduct of the old fashioned system, there is no adequate proof whatever.

Lastly as to the effect of the ekrarnama of 1877, that document applies, as we understand, to the present case alone. There is no such document in the other cases shortly to be heard. One of the two grantees whose obligation is recorded in that ekrarnama is a party to this appeal; and we think it impossible, having regard to the terms of that document, to hold that in the absence of the default as referred to in that document and so long as the grantee or grantees are willing to discharge the service prescribed to them, the terms of that grant, at any rate during their lifetime and that is enough to dispose of the present case, are such as to render it possible for the Rajah to resume as against them. As we have said we have dealt with these matters for the present as not formally disposing of the appeal, although substantially what we have just now said will be the judgment in the case. The points which we have now determined will govern the hearing of the appeals in the other cases; and we shall formally pronounce the judgment in accordance with the terms we have now laid down when deciding the other appeals.

APPEAL NO. 192

(Called Lot II in the judgment)

In this case there are, 1st an ekrarnama, p. 137, put in by the Plaintiff, 2nd Sawan Budi 1863; 2nd a sannad of 6th January 1871 by Colonel Money acting under the Court of Wards, p 326; and 3rd a perwana by the Deputy Commissioner to the Rajah, November 1865. The other documents are inadmissible The ekrarnama bears the character of that noticed in the preceding case; namely that admitting liability to expulsion from the jaghirs granted in case of default; it does no more.

The sannad is of too recent a date to be of much value. At most it is a reletting, or a confirmation of 5½ mouzahs to the son of deceased holder Bhao Singh in accordance with custom of the Maharajah's cutcherry. It certainly could not operate as a surrender of a tenure already existing such as form the exhibit next to be referred to. The perwana of 1865 is of some importance as an act of authority by the Deputy Commissioner calling upon the Rajah to compel Bhao Singh, the jaghirdar, to pay the Digwars under him their salaries; and requiring the Rajah, "should Bhao Singh act contrary to the conditions of the Ghatwalli settlement," to take action. It confirms the view expressed by us in the first case, as to the nature of these tenures, both as being held by public service, and that service being of a Ghatwalli nature.

In A38 Bhao Singh's name appears as jaghirdar of those 5½ villages. They were plainly held on Ghatwalli service to be done upon the Tesri ghat.

APPEAL NO. 193

(LOT V)

As to the right of resumption this case stands on the same footing as those already dealt with.

The names of the fathers of the first 3 Defendants appear in A66 as jaghirdars of the mouzahs claimed: they were Goorodyal, father of Roopdyal, Sodu Nath, father of Chet Singh, and Ramdyal, father of Pahari.

These Defendants are alleged by the other Defendants in this case to have assigned to them, whether as mokuraridars or as mortgagees in possession, interests in possession in the whole of the mouzahs in dispute. The fact of these partial alienations was not disputed in appeal before us and this circumstance no doubt accounts for the confession of judgment by two out of the three principal Defendants. But for the reasons stated in the previous cases we think Plaintiff not entitled to the khas possession claimed.

APPEAL NO. 180.

(LOT III)

As to appeal No. 180, Lot No. III in the judgment of the lower Court, there is no doubt as to the execution of the kabuliyat by Purdhan Ram Lall who, nevertheless, takes an active part in the defence of these suits, filing a written statement in which the case applicable to the body of the Defendants is set up.

Now, it is to be noticed, that the suit is not brought as against the Defendant upon the lease and kabuliyat. Had it been, it would have been fairly open to the Defendant to apply to have the suit as against him tried separately. The point is not merely a technical one. The suit as originally framed was a suit brought against a whole community of persons on one ground said to be applicable to them all; and the allegations in the 9th paragraph of the plaint as to the execution of leases and kabuliyat are, in truth, merely statements of facts made in support of the general right claimed: it is not alleged in that paragraph that this Defendant or any of the Defendants set out in the list to the plaint had taken leases nor are he and they sued as lessees. In short the suit is not brought against this Defendant on the kabuliyat: and he is not called upon to consider, prepare and make any defence respecting it.

Upon the case before us we are of opinion, further, that a good defence to the suit upon the lease, had it been sued upon, might most probably be made. Such of the Digwars as submitted to take leases, did so, according to the Plaintiff, upon being called together by Col. Boddam and asked to give up their Digwari lands and take settlements. We should hesitate before allowing these persons to be bound by leases accepted by them under such circumstances. We are however relieved from the necessity of either deciding such a matter, or of sending back this particular case for evidence as to what actually led to the execution by this Defendant of the kabuliyat and the acceptance by him of the lease, by the fact that no suit is brought against him on this document, and no relief claimed against him on the strength of it.

APPEAL NO. 181.

This case has no special feature in it and must be decided on the same grounds as the first.

APPEAL NO. 182.

(VIII)

This case stands on the same footing as No. 193. Original owners admit claim, but have assigned.

APPEAL NO. 183.

Save as to 4 annas same as the last case. As to 4 annas Plaintiff is entitled to a decree against the Defendant Danukhdari as to whatever rights that Defendant may have as between himself and the Defendant Kunjbehari, as to which we of course say nothing. As against Kunjbehari the appeal must be dismissed.

The result in all the cases, except Appeal No. 183, is that the judgment of the lower Court must be affirmed and the appeals dismissed, with costs in all of them other than Nos. 181 and 182, which we dismiss without costs the Respondents not appearing. In Appeal No. 183 the decree will be in the terms of our judgment in that case.

NOTES

THE PROVISION IN CL 18 OF THE INDIAN LIMITATION Bill has, except for an error of omission which we notice below, our entire approval. The Select Committee in their report on the Civil Procedure Code Bill of 1903, justly observe that the purpose of sec. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code (which requires two months' previous notice to be given to the Defendant in all actions against the Secretary of State or any other public officer) is "to give notice and facilitate compromise, but not to shorten the period of limitation." The clause accordingly provides for the exclusion of this period in computing the period of limitation for such suits.

THIS REASONING HOWEVER APPLIES EQUALLY TO SUITS which have to be instituted, after notice, against Police Officers and Municipal employees for wrongful acts committed in the course of the discharge of their duties. See, for instance, the provisions of sec. 42 of the Police Act V of 1861 and sec. 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act III, B. C. of 1884. Sec. 634 of the Calcutta Municipal Act III, B. C. of 1899, may also be noticed in this connection. But the interpretation of the section as given in The Corporation of Calcutta v. Shyama Charan Pal, 9 C. W. N. 217, has in most cases the opposite effect of extending the period of limitation. We think that the terms of the clause should be made more general so as to cover all suits in which a notice of the claim has to be given to the Defendant as a condition precedent to the institution of the suit, provided of course such notice itself does not, as in ejectment suits against tenants, constitute the cause of action.

UNDER THE PRESENT CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AS also under the amending Bill all Courts are to pronounce judgment in open Court, but as far as we are aware this rule is seldom observed in the Mofussil Courts. There, as a rule, judgments written at home are brought into Court, and only the result is communicated to the pleaders or parties. This provision of the law should be strictly complied with, principally on the ground that arithmetical, clerical or other errors, and sometimes very serious ones, can be corrected by the pleaders then and there in case judgments are read out in open Court. The judgments should, moreover, be signed after they have been read in Court. In the present state of Mofussil practice applications have frequently to be made for correction of such errors resulting in the waste of the Court's time as also in throwing away a considerable amount of unnecessary costs. We must say, however, that the Subordinate Courts find it necessary to depart from the rule because they are always hard pressed for time. The Legislature may well represent to the Executive Government the need for relieving the pressure on these hard worked officers. Such shortcomings as these have arisen from this one cause.

RULE NO. 2 OF ORDER VI WHICH IS BASED UPON Order 19, Rule 4 (of the English Rules), provides that 'Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures.' The English Rule is as follows:—"Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures and not words." We are not in favour of the adoption of the English rule in this country. Plaints, written statements and other documents are often drawn up in vernacular and sums and numbers are expressed in the vernacular notation which when referring to land vary in different localities. It is therefore all the more necessary that the quantities should be expressed in words and not in figures only. Even sums of money are sometimes expressed in pies and sometimes in gundas and therefore unless they are expressed in words they are likely to lead to confusion.

THE PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN SEC. 310A, C. P. C., will be found in Rule 88 of Order XXI with certain alterations. Similarly Rule 89 embodies the provisions of sec. 311 with certain alterations. Under Rule 88 when immoveable property is sold "any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale may at any time within thirty days from the date of sale apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court . . . . ." a certain amount. The expression "holding an interest therein" does not seem to be sufficiently expressive. It may be questioned hereafter whether the above expression includes a lessee or a mortgagee. It seems to be preferable to use the same expression as in Rule 89, viz., any person whose interests are affected by the sale. We do not see any reason why a person whose interest is not affected should be allowed to come in.

THE WORDS USED IN SEC. 310A ARE AT PRESENT AS follows :—Any person whose immoveable property has been sold . . . . may at any time within thirty days from the date of sale apply to have the sale set aside. In sec. 311 the words are the same, i.e., "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" (besides the decree-holder). Both sections contemplate the same classes of persons. Having regard to the word used in the proposed amendment it may be questioned whether a person who may come in under Rule 88 could also come in under Rule 89. But reference to clause (2) of Rule 89 would seem to indicate that the Legislature intended by the two rules to provide two alternative remedies to the same classes of persons. Further, the amending Rule 88 may easily be construed as excluding persons who by succession or otherwise may acquire the rights of a person entitled to apply under the rule, within 30 days from the date of sale. Such a result could hardly have been contemplated by the framers.

THE LATE MR. L. P. PUGH.

It is with deep sorrow that we announce the death of Mr. L. P. Pugh, the most senior member of the Calcutta Bar. He was born on the 3rd of August 1837 and passed away in peace on the 6th of January 1908. He was thus over 70 years of age when he died. It was only during last year that he rapidly broke down in health and retired from the High Court. Before that his stately figure, dignified manners, natural courtesy and good nature, his patient industry and legal erudition had secured for him a unique position at the Bar. He was held in great regard and high respect by the Bench, the Bar and all sections of the community both European and Indian. He had received his early education in Winchester College which is the oldest of English public schools and finished his academic career at the Oxford University of which he was a Master of Arts. He got called to the Bar at the Lincoln's Inn in November 1862 and joined the Calcutta Bar in the following year. He was then known as Evans and the earlier references to Mr. Evans in the law reports refer to him, and not to his brother, Sir Frederick Evans, who joined the Calcutta Bar later on. In 1868 he assumed the name of Pugh by Royal License. From 1868 to 1885 he held high offices in his native county of Cardiganshire in Wales. He was a Justice of the Peace and also a Deputy Lieutenant of his county and represented Cardiganshire in the House of Commons as a Liberal Member from 1880 to 1885. He also practised for a time on the Chancery Side of the High Court in England. All this varied experience and deep study had made a very sound jurist of him. As a consulting lawyer on questions which lay outside the pale of ordinary practice or the Anglo-Indian Codes, he had no equal in this country. It was at his instance and through his advice that some very interesting questions of International and constitutional law were taken before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Yusufuddin's case (2 C. W. N. p 1) and their Lordships held that the Independent Native Princes in ceding certain jurisdiction to the British Government along the Railway lines in their territory had not parted with their sovereign right over the same. When no senior Counsel was available for defending Mr. Tilak at the sedition trial before the Bombay High Court, Mr. Pugh readily accepted his brief and zealously defended him. His liberal views did not undergo any change even in the autocratic atmosphere of India. During Lord Elgin's Viceroyalty when the Chalmer's Sedition Bill was introduced for amending the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, Mr. Pugh, as head of a committee, drew up representations on behalf of the Bar pointing out the highly objectionable nature of the intended legislation. Because of the liberality of his views and his sterling independence he commanded the confidence of the people and also the respect of Government. He was appointed to officiate as the Advocate-General for some time and, later on, a member of the Viceroy's Council. It is said that many years ago he was offered a seat on the Bench of the Calcutta High Court and that he refused it on the ground that it was merely an officiating appointment. Had he been made a permanent Judge of any High Court in India, he would have surely added to its strength, prestige and learning. We cannot conclude without an acknowledgment of our deep sense of obligation to the illustrious deceased who as the president of our Editorial Committee guided us in conducting this journal for many years. We deeply mourn his death and convey our heartfelt condolence to the bereaved family.

THE LAWS OF ENGLAND. Being a complete statement of the whole law of England by the Right Honourable the Earl of Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain 1885-86, 1886-92 and 1895—1905, and other lawyers. Vol. I. London. Butterworth & Co., 11 and 12 Bell Yard, Temple Bar, Law Publishers. 1907.

When Lord Halsbury laid down his office of Lord High Chancellor for the third time, it was little expected that at his time of life and at the end of a career of strenuous labour he would engage himself in the stupendous task of working out a comprehensive account of the whole law of England. But nothing is extraordinary for a man past eighty who to this day is found regularly sitting in the highest Court of Appeal and disentangling intricate questions of law and fact and coming to a decision amid the conflicting views of the Courts below and of the opposing counsel before their Lordships' Bars.

In the arduous task of editing this great work, his Lordship is assisted by lawyers of great eminence. The contributions, too, are by lawyers of proved ability and repute. But the master-mind of Lord Halsbury is throughout discernible, even through the details of this work. His Lordship has not only contributed a very luminous introduction but has had the whole of the work passed under his supervision.

The present volume is the first instalment of this great work. It fulfils the high expectations which its authorship naturally raises in one's mind, and bears out the claim made in the publishers' announcement that it is "neither an encyclopædia, a digest of cases nor a dictionary. It rather takes the form of a series of treatises on every branch of the law by experts in each particular branch." The form of a dictionary is retained in so far as the arrangement of the titles is alphabetical. But only the most comprehensive titles have been selected for exhaustive treatment and cross-references are freely given both for the purpose of avoiding repetition as also to supply the links necessary for connecting the subjects dealt with under different titles into a harmonious whole. It is not within the scheme of the work to include historical and theoretical matter and they have been excluded except where they are essential to the right understanding of the existing law.

The statement of the law proceeds, as in some of the most approved text books of English law, unhampered by the citation of reasons, illustrations and authorities, which are relegated to notes at the foot of the page. But the "notes," sometimes exceed the "statement" in bulk, a result which could not well be avoided seeing that it is aimed to present a full and complete statement of the law in a practical and readily accessible form.

The titles dealt with in the present volume are:—Action, Admiralty, Agency, Agriculture, Aliens, Allotments, Animals, Arbitration, Auction and Auctioneers, Bankers and Banking. From the importance given to Agriculture, Allotments and Aliens, it will be seen that the authors have been fully alive to modern developments. It will interest those who observe the signs of the times to note that "Building Societies," "Clubs," "Education," "Friendly Societies," "Income Tax," and "Intoxicating liquors," will be among the titles to be specially dealt with.

The present work, we believe, is itself a sign of the times. Reform of the law has been talked of, ever since Bentham delivered his caustic and not always well balanced criticisms of the law of England as it was in his time. Reform accomplished has, however, consisted merely of legislative enactments of an empirical character and not always well advised. As Gladstone truly said you must have first a comprehensive account of what law is before you commence amending it, and the present editor justly observes that a great many law reformers have failed because they have not observed the necessity of this preliminary inquiry. It is precisely this preliminary inquiry that has been undertaken in this work.

This again, it may be noted, is the first instance of a work of this nature being initiated not by the State but by the private enterprise of a body of lawyers. The reform of law which is still in the air will not, we believe, be the work of a state legislature but of the lawyers themselves, but lawyers who will have drawn their inspiration not so much from old books and authorities as from a living study of the complex and rapidly evolving social fabric of the present day which in its working is bringing into existence new ideas of rights and obligations, not dreamed of by Bracton or Lyttleton and not foreshadowed to Bentham or Mill.

The learned editor truly observes that the great difficulty is to state the law as it is without giving such an authority to the mode of its statement as to make itself equivalent to a statute. From this point of view also it is fortunate that the work has not been undertaken at the instance of the Legislature.

The work, we believe, will be specially appreciated in India where the practitioner in law cannot ordinarily do without a considerable number of English text books and yet finds that he does not possess all that he needs for purposes of reference. In the present work, he will find just what he has been wanting "a complete statement of the whole law of England."

Woodman's Digest is brought up to the year 1900. The present work consolidates and digests the cases reported in authorised as well as unauthorised reports between the years 1901 and 1905. We have been familiar with Mr. Aiyar's annual compilations. The present work does not merely consolidate the annual digests for the years 1901 to 1905. The whole matter has been rearranged, as far as possible in logical sequence. The notes of decisions are reasonably concise and altogether the digest is up to the standard of the best works of its kind.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Edmund and others v. Martell. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, LORD ALVERSTONE and LORDS JUSTICES BUCKLEY and KENNEDY. 28th October 1907.

Costs—Depriving successful party of costs—Judicial discretion—Leave to appeal—Judicature Act, 1873, sec. 49.

Plaintiffs brought this suit against the Defendants who were lessees having liberty to erect three dwelling-houses on the demised land and no more, for alleged acts of waste. The Judge found that the Defendant had converted one room into a shop entailing subsidiary alterations and that a stable had been built by an under-lessee to the Defendant's knowledge. The lease contained no covenant prohibiting the lessee from turning a dwelling-house into a shop nor did it confer any power upon the lessee to erect shops or to convert dwelling-houses into shops. There was a covenant however by the lessee not to carry on any noisome or noisy trade or business on the premises, but no breach of covenant was alleged in the present action. The Judge, Mr. Justice Sutton, held that no injury or damage had been caused to the reversion, that on the other hand the inheritance might have been improved. This was a case of "ameliorating waste" and he accordingly gave judgment for Defendant, at the same time depriving her of her costs on the ground that the Defendant should have approached the landlord before making alterations.

Held—That this was not a ground for depriving the successful party of the costs of the litigation. The Judge had not exercised his judicial discretion at all in this matter. No leave to appeal was required in such a case and the present appeal lay notwithstanding that no leave had been taken.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., and Mr. Ricardo for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. S. T. Evans, K. C., and Mr. John Sankey for the Defendant.

Appeal allowed.

KING'S BENCH.—Whitehead v. Palmer. Before MR. JUSTICE CHANNELL. 1st November 1907.

Administrator ad colligenda bona—Power to sell—Vesting of lease.

In this case one Mrs. Leconteur, who had a lease of certain premises at £450 a year having died, a sister of hers applied for letters of administration. A caveat was entered by some person and on the application of the deceased's sister, the Defendant was appointed administrator ad colligenda bona. Application was made at the same time that the Defendant should have liberty to sell the lease, as it was hoped that the sale would fetch a premium approaching £1,000, an asset which would go a great way towards securing the solvency of the estate and accordingly power was given to him to sell the lease. Defendant entered upon the premises and endeavoured unsuccessfully to sell and a quarter's rent thus fell due after the death of Mrs. Leconteur, after which the lessor instituted the present action for ejectment on the basis of a forfeiture clause together with a quarter's rent and mesne profits. The Defendant did not give up possession till after judgment was pronounced against him.

Held—That the appointment of the Defendant as administrator ad colligenda bona coupled with a power to sell had the effect of vesting the lease in the Defendant, and he was liable to pay rent but that he was only liable up to the value of the premises, as it was settled law that where the rent under a lease was in excess of the value of the premises, the executor or administrator who had entered, if he pleaded properly, was only liable up to the amount of the value of the premises. His Lordship thought £450 was the value of the premises and he held the Defendant liable to pay rent and mesne profits at the rate of £450 a year.

Mr. E. M. Pollock, K. C., and Mr. G. W. Powers for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Howard D'Egville for the Defendant.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL]

LORD ROBERTSON.
LORD COLLINS.
SIR ARTHUR WILSON.
1907.
18, November.

RAI RADHA KRISHNA RAI BAHADUR and others, Petitioners, Appellants,
v.
BABU NAURATAN LAL, Respondents.

Special leave—Substantial question of law—Sec. 596, Civil Procedure Code—Alienation by Hindu lady, tenant for life—Legal necessity.

This was an application for special leave to appeal under the following circumstances:—

On 2nd October 1904, the Respondent instituted a suit against the Petitioners in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna to recover possession of certain villages, which originally belonged to Radha Krishna who died on 7th November 1879, and was succeeded by his daughter, Mussammat Sheo Koer. That lady executed the following deeds of mortgages by her general agent, her son Sheoratan Lal, who predeceased her, in favour of the predecessor in title of the Petitioners and in favour of one Bal Kishen Das, viz. :—

On 1st December 1883, a mortgage for Rs. 20,000.
On 16th December 1883, a mortgage for Rs. 2,000.
On 6th April 1885, a mortgage for Rs. 10,000 and
On 16th July 1885, a mortgage for Rs. 7,000.

On 23rd November 1888, the mortgagees obtained decrees on the said mortgages and in or about the year 1891 the predecessor in title of the Petitioners in execution of those decrees purchased the property in suit.

On 10th June 1902, Mussammat Sheo Koer died and the Respondent, who is her son and next heir on her death to the estate of the said Radha Krishna, brought the present suit, alleging that the said mortgages were not executed for legal necessity so as to bind the reversioner, that Sheoratan Lal was not duly authorised to act for his mother and that the said decrees were fraudulently obtained without the knowledge of Mussammat Sheo Koer.

On 31st July 1906, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment and decided that Mussammat Sheo Koer executed the power-of-attorney in favour of her son and that she knew what she was doing. He also held that the said decrees were not fraudulently obtained and that the compromise was made with the knowledge of Sheo Koer. As to whether the debts were contracted for legal necessities, his judgment was as follows:—"I now come to legal necessity. Babu Radha Kishen died on 7th November 1879, at his death he was possessed of some 70 villages and the income from them amounted to about Rs. 35,000 in the year. I do not believe that Babu Radha Kishen left any considerable cash balance. He left no debt. Sheo Koer's succession was opposed by Badri Narain. He claimed to be adopted by Babu Radha Kishen. Sheo Koer's application for succession certificate was contested by him without effect. Sheo Koer got the certificate on the 20th February 1880, Budri Narain also opposed her application for registration under the Land Registration Act and in those proceedings he was unsuccessful.

"Then on the 5th August 1881 he instituted a suit for declaration of his title as the adopted son of Radha Kishen and for possession. This suit was decided against him on the 10th October 1882. He filed an appeal to the High Court on the 12th March 1883. There was a demand of security for costs.

"The security furnished was insufficient and the appeal was rejected on the 2nd June 1885. There was an application for review and Budri Narain also preferred an appeal to the Privy Council. Their Lordships of the Privy Council remanded the case for hearing on the merits. The High Court heard the appeal and dismissed it. There the litigation rested. The bonds which resulted in sales that are in question in this suit are four in number (as set out above). The first bond recites that the money was required for the expenses of defending the appeal by Budri Narain, for the expenses of a daughter's marriage and for the payment of Dr. Madho Babu's debt.

"The evidence is that it was represented that the marriage expenses would come up to five or seven hundred rupees. There is no evidence that Sheo Koer was under any necessity to borrow for this small amount and there is no evidence to connect the daughter's marriage with the debt."

The Sub Judge further held that the amount recited in the bonds as required for the purposes of the litigation were altogether too large.

"Sheo Koer was an illiterate Purdanashin lady. There is no reliable evidence that she knew when these debts were incurred. Her son, Sheo Ratan, contracted the debts under his power of-attorney. He was a young man between 25 and 30 and given to drinking and association with nautch girls.

"There is no knowing how much of these moneys he spent on the litigation and how much on his evil ways and even whether he received the full amount written in the bonds. If all the money was spent on the litigation the expenses appear to have been unreasonable, if not reckless. The creditors if they contemplated binding the estate of the reversioner were to use greater circumspection and to make proper enquiries about the immediate need.

"I decide that no case of legal necessity has been established." A decree was accordingly made for delivery of possession of the property in suit.

Against that decree the Petitioners appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and on 14th June 1907 that appeal was dismissed. The High Court decided that there was a large cash balance on the death of Radha Kishen, that in consequence of the litigation with Budri Singh the whole of the collections were not stopped, and therefore that it was not proved that the lady had not sufficient funds with which to meet the expenses of the litigation. The High Court also held that the evidence failed to prove that the loans were taken with the knowledge or consent of Mussammat Sheo Koer and that there was not sufficient evidence that the lady really understood and consented to the terms of the compromise. On the true construction of the power-of-attorney it was found that Sheo Ratan Lal was not authorised to borrow money for his mother and it was suggested that he borrowed for himself and spent the money in extravagant living.

The Petitioners applied to the High Court for leave to appeal against that decree to His Majesty in Council on 25th July 1907. Their application was rejected on the ground that "no substantial point of law was involved in the appeal."

Mr. DeGruyther for the Petitioners.—The judgments of the Subordinate Judge and the High Court are not in accord except broadly that the loans were not justified by legal necessity. On this point the Subordinate Judge finds that there was no large cash balance on the death of Radha Kishen, while the High Court found there was no necessity for the loans because the cost of the litigation could be met from the said cash balance which the lower Court found to exist. Both the Courts in India have misapplied the law governing transactions of this class as finally settled in the case of Hunooman Pershad v. Mussamat Mabooee, 6 Moore's Indian Appeals 393. They have disregarded the fact that the extravagance of Sheo Koer's son in spending the income to which Sheo Koer was absolutely entitled may have occasioned the necessity for loans, and wrongly assumed that the money lent was spent in extravagance instead of necessities. The Subordinate Judge also erred in law in requiring proof of the application of the monies borrowed to the necessary purpose for which they were borrowed, and in holding that even monies if borrowed and spent in a litigation to uphold the title of the lady and the next reversioners to the estate would not be loans for necessary purposes within the meaning of the Hindu Law unless the total amount spent in the litigation was in his opinion reasonable. The Courts came to the same conclusion of fact on different grounds. But the question whether there was any legal necessity arising from certain facts is a question of law. The present appeal does, therefore, raise substantial questions of law.

Application refused.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 695 OF 1907. CHINTAMONI SINGH, Petitioner v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. Heard, 4th, 6th, 7th and 10th December 1907. Judgment, 20th December 1907.

Bad livelihood—Sec. 110, Cr. P. C.—Sec. 256, Cr. P. C.—Applicability of—Transfer of a proceeding under sec. 110, Cr P. C., under sec. 192, Cr. P. C.—Power of the District Magistrate to order—Sec. 529, cl. (f), irregularity—Duty of the Court to test carefully evidence for prosecution when dealing with a case under Chap. VIII, Cr. P. C.

The facts are briefly these :—

The Petitioner was the sirman or rent collector of a rich estate and the protege of an influential zemindar. On the report of the Assistant Superintendent of Police, the District Magistrate recorded an order under sec. 112, Cr. P. C., to the effect that he had received information from the Assistant Superintendent of Police, Araria, that the Petitioner was, by habit, a robber, that he habitually protected and harboured dacoits and habitually committed mischief and extortion and abetted the commission of these offences and that he was of so desperate and dangerous a character as to render his being at large without security being required of him hazardous to the community. The order accordingly required the Petitioner to show cause why he should not be called upon to execute a bond of Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 500 each for his good behaviour for a period of three years. The hearing of the case began before the District Magistrate who after the examination-in-chief of 109 witnesses for the prosecution and the cross-examination of one of them transferred the case to the file of Mr. C. H. Reid, Sub-divisional Magistrate of Araria, who proceeded regularly with the case from the 19th June 1905, till the 12th July 1906. The prosecution closed its case on the 15th November, when the Petitioner was called upon to make his defence. The Counsel for the Petitioner objected that the Court could not put his client on his defence before he had again cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution. This objection was overruled by the Court on the ground that the prosecution witnesses had been fully cross-examined before the prosecution closed its case. Then the examination-in-chief of the defence witnesses commenced on the 7th December 1905 and in the course of 68 sittings evidence of 48 witnesses was recorded. On the 2nd February 1906, the trying Magistrate passed an order directing that the examination-in-chief of further witnesses for the defence must be finished within 30 hours. In consequence of this order only 741 witnesses out of 1,760 witnesses which the defence cited could be examined.

At the conclusion of the proceedings which lasted over 237 sittings, the Petitioner was bound down to be of good behaviour. He appealed to the Sessions Judge who affirmed the order of the trying Magistrate. The Petitioner then obtained this rule from the High Court on the 17th July 1907. Various points of law were raised by the Petitioner's Counsel with respect to which their Lordships hold :—

(1) That it was not necessary under the law to give a list of witnesses either in the report of the Police to the Magistrate or in the order of the Magistrate under sec. 112, Cr. P. C.

(2) That the District Magistrate was competent under sec. 192, Cr. P. C., to transfer this case to the file of the Sub-divisional Magistrate. That under sec. 192, Cr. P. C., the power of transfer is not restricted to criminal cases but extends to cases of every description triable under the Criminal Procedure Code. That even if it were held that the District Magistrate had no power to transfer, his action in transferring the case could only amount to an irregularity which would be cured by the provisions of sec. 529, cl. (f), Cr. P. C.

Akhbar Ali Khan v. Domi Lal, 4 C. W. N. 821, followed.

(3) That sec. 256, Cr. P. C., has no application to a case under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., and a person called upon to show cause under sec. 110 has no right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses under sec. 256, Cr. P. C.

(4) That under the circumstances of the case the trying Magistrate was justified in putting a time limit on the examination of defence witnesses.

(5) That in dealing with cases under Chap. VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code, Magistrates ought, especially where no previous conviction is proved, to take great care to test the evidence for the prosecution.

(6) That in the present case the evidence of general reputation coming from the people of villages where dacoities had taken place although the Petitioner did not live amongst those people, is evidence of general repute as required by sec. 117, Cr. P. C. The case of Isri Persad, I. L. R. 23 Cal. 621, distinguished.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MACLEAN, C. J., and HARINGTON and STEPHEN, JJ. PRIVY COUNCIL APPEAL No. 1 OF 1907. JAI BERHAM AND OTHERS, Appellants v. ANANTA RAM MARWARI AND OTHERS, Respondents. 10th December 1907.

Security bond for costs of Respondent in the Privy Council—Enquiry by Subordinate Judge—Practice—Notice.

The security bond for the Respondents' costs in the above Privy Council appeal was executed by a third party and the bond was sent to the District Judge of Dumka for enquiry and report as to the sufficiency of the security. The District Judge of Dumka sent the bond to the Subordinate Judge of Godda for enquiry who without any notice to the Appellants enquired into the matter and reported the security to be insufficient. The District Judge simply forwarded the report to the High Court, on the arrival of the report the Appellants filed the following objections under the Rule XIX, Chap. IV of the High Court Appellate Side Rules. (1) That under Rule XVIII of the High Court Rules the security bond can only be tested by the District Judge alone and he cannot delegate his power to the Subordinate Judge. (2) Notice ought to have been given to the Appellants (after the arrival of the bond) to produce evidence in support of the sufficiency of the security and as no such notice was given the Appellants could not produce evidence.

Held—It had all along been the practice for the District Judge to send the security bond to the Subordinate Judge within whose jurisdiction the property was situate to enquire into the sufficiency of the security for report and that it was the duty of the Appellants to enquire about the arrival of the security bond and to produce evidence and notice need not be given to them. As the security was found insufficent, six weeks time was allowed to the Appellants to deposit Rs. 4,000 in cash or Government Promissory notes.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BRETT and HOLMWOOD, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 369 OF 1906. BHOUL SAHU AND ORS., Plaintiffs, Appellants v. BABU BAIJNATH PROTAP NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. Heard, 20th and 21st November 1907. Judgment, 11th December 1907.

Bond executed by guardian—Suit to recover from minor's estate—Promise how far binding—Document, purporting to bind—Pleadings.

The Plaintiff brought an action to recover a sum of money due on a bond executed in his favour by the Defendant No. 2 as mother and guardian of Defendant No. 1. The bond was executed on the 24th March 1901 and renewed a previous bond executed on the 24th August 1894. Defendant No. 1 came of age on the 29th May 1901 and the suit was instituted on the 1st October 1904 to recover the money due on the oond out of the estate of the Defendant No. 1 or for a joint decree against both Defendents.

The Court of first instance held that the money due on the bond had been borrowed by Defendant No. 2 as his guardian for the benefit of the estate of Defendant No. 1 and gave the Plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed, to be realised out of the estate of the Defendant No. 1, at the same time declaring that Defendant No. 1 was not personally liable for the debt due under the decree.

On appeal the District Judge reversed the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit in its entirety. The Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the bond in suit was duly executed by the Defendant No. 2 for consideration and that it was valid and genuine. He also held that it was executed by the Defendant No. 2 in her capacity as guardian and on behalf of Defendant No. 1 who was at the time of its execution a minor. He dismissed the suit however, disagreeing with the Subordinate Judge on the following grounds: He held that as it is settled law that a guardian cannot bind a minor by a personal covenant therefore the suit on the contract must fail. He further held that though the Plaintiffs might have succeeded in a suit upon the ground of necessaries supplied, or benefits rendered, there was no evidence except as to the sum of Rs. 1,000 that any portion of the money was borrowed by Defendant No. 2 for either of these purposes, and that as regards the sum of Rs. 1,000 which was borrowed on the registered bond of the 24th August 1894 the claim was barred by limitation as the guardian Defendant No. 2 had not done any act within 3 or 6 years from the date of that bond to extend the period of limitation so as to bind the Defendant No. 1.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Held—That while a liberal construction should be given to pleadings so as to give effect to the meaning to be collected from the whole tenour they ought to be expressed with sufficient definiteness to enable the opposite party to understand the case he is called on to meet.

Indur Chunder Singh v. Radha Kishore Ghose (I. L. R. 19 Cal. 507 at p. 512) applied.

Held—The suit was intended to be a suit to recover the sum due under the bond from the estate of Defendant No. 1 on the ground that the debt recoverable under the bond had been incurred by the Defendant No. 2 as mother and guardian of Defendant No. 1 for necessaries and for the benefit of the estate.

Held further—A guardian cannot bind his ward personally by a simple contract debt by a covenant, or by any promise to pay money or damages, but subject to modification that the promise will not bind the minor unless it has been made merely to keep alive a debt for which the ward's property was liable.

Held also—A guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it.

In the present case, the promise to repay the money in each bond was a personal promise and there was nothing in either of the bonds to indicate that in the event of her failure the estate of the minor would be liable, or that by the bond she purported to bind the minor's estate. Hence the Plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief.

Their Lordships observed as follows:—

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 490 OF 1904.

BRETT, J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1907. Heard, 12, 13, 14 & 15 February. Judgment, 18 March.	BROJO NATH BOSE and others, v. RAJA SRI SRI DURGA PERSAD SINGH.

Service tenure—Digwar of Ghat Tasra in Jheria—Police duties—Government control—Rights of the zemindar—Right in sub-soil—Mokurari lease of underground rights granted by Digwar, suit by zemindar questioning—Government a necessary party.

The Digwar of Tasra and Raharaband in Jheria has been holding under a tenure which is ancient and hereditary, subject to the payment to the zemindar of a fixed rent only, and on condition of the performance of certain police or public services for the due discharge of which the holder has been responsible to the Government which alone has exercised the power of appointment to and dismissal from office.

His position is analogous to that of the Ghatwals of Birbhum.

The underground rights including mining rights belong to the Digwar, the right to receive the fixed rent alone being reserved to the zemindar.

SRIRAM CHUKRABUTTY v. KUMAR HARI NARAIN SINHA (38) followed.

Government has an interest in maintaining intact the mouzahs set apart for the remuneration of the Digwar, and it has all along assumed itself to possess the right to do so.

Where therefore the zemindar instituted a suit against the Digwar with the object of establishing his exclusive right to the sub-soil and minerals,

Held—That the Government was a necessary party in the suit.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of October 1904, against the decree of Babu Mahendra Nath Roy, Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, dated the 14th of June 1904.

The appeal arose out of a suit for declaration that all sub-soil rights to the minerals in Mouzahs Tasra and Raharaband in Pergunnah Jheria belonged to the Plaintiff zemindar, and for recovery of a sum of Rs. 16,000 on account of coal dug up by the Defendants and for a permanent injunction restraining the Defendants from digging up coal in future in the mouzahs.

The Subordinate Judge had decreed the Plaintiffs' suit in full. Hence this appeal by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

Mr. Hill, Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Ratan Chand Boral for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babus Jogesh Chunder Dey and Lalit Mohan Ghose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

BRETT, J.—The Plaintiff-Respondent is the proprietor of the permanently settled estate of Pergunnah Jheria within which Mouzahs Tasra and Raharaband are situated. Defendant No. 1 was in December 1887 appointed Digwar of Ghat Tasra by order of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum on the dismissal for misconduct of Digamber Singh, the previous Digwar. Defendant No. 1 at the same time received possession of the two Mouzahs Tasra and Raharaband as the Digwari jaigir attaching to his office, and since that date, continued to pay to the zemindar a yearly sum of Rs. 64 in respect of those two mouzahs. On the 2nd January 1892, Defendant No. 1 with the consent of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum executed in favour of Defendant No. 2, Mr. Mathewson, a mokurari patta of all the surface and sub-soil rights in Mouzahs Tasra and Raharaband, excluding only 4 bighas of land in Raharaband on which his kachari bari, etc., stood. In that lease a clause was inserted that the rights and interests of Government over the surface lands and underground rights in the said two mouzahs shall not in any way be interfered with or affected by the settlement.

On the 17th December 1897, Defendant No. 2 executed a deed of assignment of his rights under that lease to the Tasra Coal Co. Ld., Defendant No 3, on whose behalf he had been acting in taking the lease. The Coal Company in accordance with the settlement subsequently dug out and raised coal from the sub-soil of the two mouzahs.

The Plaintiff alleged that Digamber Singh had been in possession of the two mouzahs under an ordinary sankarari (yearly) ijara settlement on payment of a yearly rent of Rs. 64 and that he had no permanent rights in the two mouzahs, and he contended that Defendant No. 1 on his appointment as Digwar by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum did not acquire any higher right in the mouzahs than the sankarari ijara right, and therefore that he acquired no right to the minerals. He alleged that the mineral rights belonged to him as landlord and that the Defendants by granting and receiving a lease of the sub-soil rights, and by digging up the coal, had wrongfully infringed his rights.

He accordingly brought the suit, (1) to have it declared that all sub-soil rights to the minerals in the two mouzahs belonged to him, (2) to recover the sum of Rs. 16,000 on account of 8250 tons of coal dug up within the 3 years prior to institution of suit, and (3) to obtain a permanent injunction restraining the Defendants from digging up coal in future in the two mouzahs.

The Defendant No. 1 in his written statement first contended that Government was a necessary party to the suit and that the suit could not proceed unless Government was made a party. He further alleged that the assertion made by the Plaintiff in his plaint that Digamber Singh had held the two mouzahs under a sankarari ijara settlement was false, that, on the contrary, the mouzahs had all along been held from before the advent of the British Government as a Digwari jaigir by the person who held the appointment of Digwar of Tasra Ghat and as such rendered Police services to Government, that the jaigir was permanent and hereditary and had been held by the Digwar all along on payment of a fixed quit rent or Digwari Panchak to the zemindar, that Digamber Singh having been dismissed from his appointment as Digwar by Government for misconduct the jaigir had passed to him, Defendant No. 1, on his appointment as Digwar, that the sub-soil rights as well as the surface rights in the jaigir belonged to him, and that as he had granted the lease to Defendant No. 2 with the consent of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum the lease was valid. He denied the right of the Plaintiff as zemindar to the minerals. The other Defendants supported this line of defence.

The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit in full in favour of the Plaintiff, and the Defendants have appealed to this Court.

Six issues were raised in the lower Court. The Subordinate Judge first dealt with the question raised by the Defendants, viz., whether Government was a necessary party to the suit and whether the suit could proceed without making the Government a party. In support of the plea raised by the Defendants, the cases of Mahomed Israile v. Wise (1), Krishno Lall Nag v. Bhyrub Chunder Deb (2) and H. H. Cannon v. Bissonath Adhicari (3) were relied on. The Subordinate Judge held that these cases did not apply as in the present case the Plaintiff did not complain of any unlawful act on the part of Government, and therefore he had no cause of action against Government. Relying on a passage in Daniell's Chancery Practice (Vol. I, p. 264) and on the case of Kashi v. Sadashiv (4), he found that though Government might have been a proper party, it was not a necessary party. He accordingly decided the issue in favour of the Plaintiff.

The 2nd issue raised was whether the suit was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge remarks in the judgment that this point was not pressed but at the same time he has held that the plea cannot stand. Brojo Nath Bose, Defendant No. 1, claimed to have been digging out the coal from the sub-soil from 1888, but the Subordinate Judge held that there was no regular or systematic working of the coal till after the Company took possession under the lease granted to Defendant No. 2 on the 2nd January 1892, and the suit was instituted on the 18th December 1903, i.e., within 12 years of that date.

Further he held that if the Defendants in digging out the coal were trespassers or wrong-doers such possession would give them no title by prescription, and in support of this view, he relied on the cases of Mohini Mohan Roy v. Promoda Nath Roy (5) and Secretary of State for India v. Krisnamoni Gupta (6).

The 3rd and 4th issues involve the important questions in dispute in the case, viz., has the Plaintiff any right to the minerals in dispute; and is the Defendant No. 1 an ijaradar under the Plaintiff? Neither party was able to produce much documentary evidence in support of their respective cases. This seems to have been due to the fact, as the Subordinate Judge points out, that the part of the country in which the mouzahs are situated was previously in a frequent state of disturbance and that the public offices and records were burnt both before and at the time of the Mutiny. The Plaintiff however relied on a lotbandi of Pergunnah Jheria for the years 1208—1801, and on a Register of appointments of Ghatwals and Chowkidars from 1st February 1832 to 29th July 1839. This document, it is to be observed, is not quite correctly described by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment. In the former document Mouzah Tasra is entered as yielding a yearly profit of 45 rupees. In the latter there is no mention of any Digwari jaigir of Tasra and Raharaband. The Plaintiff also produced receipts from 1250 to 1282 (1844 to 1876) in which Palwan Sinha, whom the Defendant allege to have been a Digwar, was described as an ijaradar or etmandar. He also relied on a safabandi of 1857. The Defendants on the other hand relied on two Isum navisi papers of the years 1845 and 1861; in the first of which Bahal Sinha is described as Digwar of Mouzahs Tasra and Raharaband, and in the other Palwan Sinha is similarly described, also on an application made in 1285 (1879) by Digwar Palwan Sinha of Tasra for the appointment of his son Matabbar as Digwar and on the order passed thereon dated 8th May 1879; and on certain orders, one passed in 1884 appointing Digamber Singh as Digwar in place of Matabbar, another on 14th March 1885 dismissing Digamber Singh, another of December 1887 appointing Girish Chandra Ghose to act in place of Defendant No. 1, Brojo Nath, who was appointed Digwar: also on the Register of Ghatwali lands in Manbhum in 1880 to 1883 and the survey maps of Ghatwali lands of Tasra and Raharaband prepared in 1881. They also produced copies of a judgment in a case instituted by Government in 1885 to set aside sales of some of the lands in the two mouzahs as being Digwari lands, of two Road-cess returns filed in 1872 and 1898 on behalf of the landlord describing Palwan as the Digwar of the "Digwari lands Tasra and Raharaband at an annual rental of Rs. 64," and relied on statements made by Digámber in 1862 at the time of a survey of the mouzahs and on receipts from 1890 to 1896 in which Brojo Nath is described as Digwar.

The Subordinate Judge after a careful consideration of this evidence came to the conclusion that it was impossible to accede to the contention of the Plaintiff that the Digwars were ordinary ijaradars liable to be ejected at the pleasure of the zemindar, and held on the contrary that the mouzahs in dispute are Digwari mouzahs.

In order however to determine the other more important issue whether the Plaintiff, or the Defendant No. 1 as Digwar, is entitled to the mineral rights in the two mouzahs, the Subordinate Judge first devotes his attention to determining when the mouzahs were constituted Digwari mouzahs. He points out that Pergunnah Jheria in which the two mouzahs are situated originally formed a part of the District of Birbhum; by Reg. XVIII of 1805 it was transferred to the district of the jungle mehals which was then constituted and in 1814, Prithi Singh, the zemindar, was invested with the management of the Police in his estate of Jheria. By Reg. XIII of 1833 the district of the jungle mehals with certain exceptions was formed into a new District of Manbhum. The head-quarters of the jungle mehals was at Bankura and he concludes that the fact that no mention is made of the Digwari jaigir of Tasra and Raharaband in the Register of appointments of Ghatwals and Chowkidars from 1st February 1832 to 29th July 1839 obtained from Bankura goes to support the conclusion that the Digwari tenure was not created before 1839.

Referring to cls. 4 and 13 of sec. 7 of Reg. XVIII of 1805 he comes to the conclusion that the Digwars of Jheria were as much servants of the landlord as of the Government, and he accepts the evidence of Matabbar Sinha, and of Joy Lal Sinha, son of the dismissed Digwar Digamber Singh, to support the view that the Digwars were servants of the landlord, though liable to dismissal by the Magistrate. By Reg. XIII of 1853, the zemindar of Jheria was divested of his powers over the Police, and the Subordinate Judge considers that the fact that the earliest evidence of the existence of the Digwari jaigir of Tasra and Raharaband is the Isumnavisi of 1845 supports the view that the jaigir came into existence after the Permanent Settlement.

He next considers the question whether the Digwars can be regarded as independent talukdars, and finding that they do not fall into any of the classes described in sec. 5 of Reg. VIII of 1793 he holds that they cannot claim to be actual proprietors of the soil, or to hold a higher position than mere lease-holders as described in sec. 7 of the Regulation. He also held that as the Defendant had failed to produce strict evidence of his title, and as his predecessors had failed to establish their right to separation within one year from the passing of Reg. I of 1801 it was impossible to hold that they were independent talukdars.

He next deals with the contentions of the Defendants, viz., (1) that the tenure existed prior to the Permanent Settlement, and therefore the tenure-holders were not affected by it, (2) that the tenures were hereditary and permanent that they were appropriated by Government and set apart for Police purposes and as they were not included in the Permanent Settlement, the property in the soil was with the tenure-holders, and (3) that the tenure in dispute was analogous to the Ghatwali tenures in Birbhum and that the same incidents attached to it.

As to the 1st contention he finds that as there is no evidence of the existence of the tenure earlier than 1845 the most that can be presumed is that it was in existence at the time of the Permanent Settlement.

As to the second he holds on the authority of the cases of Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (7) and Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (8), that the onus is on the landlord to prove that the land in dispute was included in the assessment of the Permanent Settlement, and he relies on the lotbandi of 1801 produced by the Plaintiff as sufficient proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that Tasra and Raharaband were included in the lands assessed at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The entry in that document he holds to be sufficient to prove that a quit rent was paid by the zemindar and on the authority of the case of Gadadhur Banerjee v. The Government (9), he holds this is sufficient to establish the fact that the mouzahs were included in the lands assessed at the Permanent Settlement.

He next holds that as a service tenure the lands in dispute either fall within the provisions of sec. 41 of Reg. VIII of 1793 and as such are the property of the landlord or within the provision of sec. 8 of Reg. I of 1793. Conceding for the sake of argument that they fall into the latter class he finds that all that Government could reserve would be the produce of the lands and not the lands themselves and relying on a report of Mr. Millet, dated 26th March 1842, and a despatch of the Secretary of State, dated the 25th March 1880, he concludes that notwithstanding the reservation in respect of Police services the proprietary interest in the soil in the villages included in the Permanent Settlement was vested in the zemindar. Also on the ground that prior to the Permanent Settlement the zemindars had only rights to collect the rents and no right to the soil itself the holders of small tenures of one or two villages for the discharge of Police duties could not have had higher rights. He therefore concludes that the Digwars cannot be held to be proprietors of the soil so as to be entitled to the mineral rights in it.

He next proceeded to deal with the cases relied on by the Defendants. They were Lelanund Sing Bahadoor v. Government of Bengal (10), Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (11), Kooldeep Narain Singh v. Mahadeo Singh (12), confirmed in appeal by the Privy Council in Kooldeep Narain v. Government (13), and approved by the Privy Council in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (7), Munrunjun Singh v. Raja Lelanund Singh (14), confirmed in appeal in Lelanund Singh v. Munurunjun Singh (15), Raja Nilmoney Singh v. The Government and Beer Singh (16), Bukronath Singh v. Nilmoni Singh (17), confirmed on appeal, Nilmoni Singh v. Bukronath Singh (18), Anundo Rai v. Kali Prosad Singh (19), confirmed on appeal in Kali Prosad Singh v. Anundo Rai (20). In these cases the questions raised related to the right of the Government or of the landlord to resume Ghatwali tenures on discontinuance of services or the like or the liability of the tenure to sale for the debts of a Ghatwal, and the Subordinate Judge held that they did not apply to the present case, or affect the conclusion at which he had arrived on a consideration of the regulations, that the proprietary right to the soil was vested in the landlord.

Dealing with the last contention he holds that it cannot be concluded that, even if the Ghatwali tenures in Manbhum were analogous to those in Birbhum, all the incidents which attached under the Regulations to the latter could be held to attach to the former. He further holds that the enactments relating to the Birbhum Ghatwals were of the nature of private statutes and could not be extended to strangers and he distinguished those tenures from the present by the fact that the rent was payable in respect of the former direct to Government.

He, therefore, comes to the conclusion that the three contentions failed.

Returning then to the questions whether the right in the minerals belonged to the zemindar or to the Ghatwal, he comes to the conclusion that a Ghatwali tenure is one of the class in which an office is granted the performance of the duties attaching to which is to be remunerated by the use of certain lands and relying on the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Dashad (21), he holds that the position of a Digwar was that of a servant. Further referring to the case, Ramchandra v. Venkatrao (22), he finds that the grant of a tenure such as that at present in dispute very rarely amounted to a grant of the soil and that the burden of proving that there was a grant of soil lay heavily on the party alleging it. He held the present Defendant has failed to prove any such grant, and he points out that the policy of the Mahomedan Government was averse to grants in perpetuity of the soil. He further finds that the settlement of the tenure did not amount to a grant of an estate burdened with the performance of public duties.

Referring to the state of the law in England he points out that a tenant for life is not entitled to work mines [Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Wodehouse (23)]. He also points out that the case of Gordon Stuart and Co. v. Tikaitnee Seobas Kowarie (24) in which the right of a maintenance-holder to work mines was in question did not support the view that the right to the minerals passed with the maintenance grant to the grantee, while the case of Tituram Mukherjee v. E. E. Cohen (25) supported the opposite view.

He, therefore, comes to the conclusion that the right to the coal and other minerals is in the zemindar.

On the remaining issues he held that the Plaintiff was entitled to a permanent injunction and to recover Rs. 1,851-11 on account of the coal taken.

The findings of the Subordinate Judge and his reasons for the same have been set out at greater length than would otherwise have been desirable because the Appellants traverse his findings on all the points except that on the fourth issue which was that the mouzahs are Digwari mouzahs. Also in support of the appeal and in opposing it, we have been referred to all the authorities dealt with by the Subordinate Judge as well as to others.

The question raised in the suit is one of first impression and as it is of importance and by no means easy of solution it has been necessary to set out the case of each party in some detail.

Before considering the rights which attach to the Digwari tenure it will be as well first to consider its character and the circumstances under which it was created and has passed from one holder to another. From the copy of the Register of Ghatwali lands as ascertained during the survey in 1880 to 1883, Ex. N1, filed by the Defendants, it appears that Mouzah Raharaband covers 6025 bighas and Mouzah Tasra 897 making a total of 6922 bighas. The rent payable yearly to the landlord is 64 rupees. It is not clear however how much of this land is now under cultivation ; but even though the learned pleader for the Respondent has ridiculed the idea that the possession of such a tenure entitles the holder to be regarded as a Warden of the Marches, it certainly seems to place him in a higher position than a Ghatwal or Chowkidar holding a few bighas of land or receiving small salary for his support. In the report made on the 18th June 1799 (Ex E), a distinction is drawn between Digwars and Jaigirdars on the one hand and Ghatwals and village Chowkidars on the other. The two former, it is stated, 'get jaigirs of villages and have no fixed salary in cash. Ghatwals receive a salary in cash and village Chowkidars get land in some places and in others cash. The entries in the General Register of the Revenue-paying land in estates borne on the Revenue roll of the District of Manbhum prepared under Act VII of 1876 (Ex. 14 filed by the Plaintiff) differ materially from the entries in the Register previously referred to and no explanation of the difference has been given.

This tenure was admittedly held by Digamber Singh up to 1887 when he was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum for misconduct, and Defendant No. 1 was appointed Digwar in his stead and was placed in possession of the tenure. Digamber Singh was appointed Digwar in 1884 (29th February) in place of Matabbar Singh who resigned (Ex. Y). He appears to have been the brother of Matabbar. His predecessor was appointed Digwar on the 8th Falgoon 1285 (the 25th April 1879) on an application made by his father, Pahlan Singh, who retired on account of old age (Ex. X). In that application, Pahlan Singh described the post as "the hereditary post of Ghatwal." In the Isumnavisi of 1861, filed by the Defendants (Ex. V), Pahlan is entered as Digwar and in the Isumnavisi of 1845 (Ex. 5), Bahal Singh is entered as Digwar; the latter was a nephew of Akbar (see evidence of D. W. 3) who was the previous Digwar. In the evidence of Digamber Singh (Ex. 7) given on the 10th February 1862, it is stated that the two villages were settled with Akbar some 50 years before that date, and there seems to be no reason to distrust the truth of that statement which was made long before the present dispute arose. This carries the tenure back to 1814 when Prithi Singh the zemindar of Jheria was granted a Sannad (See Ex. 5, dated 23rd August 1814 and Ex. 6) investing him with the care of the Police in his estate, that is to say, up to nearly 100 years before the date of the present suit.

The tenure is therefore an ancient one. It has remained in the possession of members of the same family up to 1887 when Digamber Singh was dismissed for misconduct, having devolved successively on members of that family on the death or resignation of any incumbent of the office. Both office and tenure have therefore been hereditary though there appears to have been a condition, that in the event of dismissal by Government of a member of that family for misconduct and in the event of there not being a member of the family suitable for appointment, the office and tenure would pass to the person appointed as Digwar by the Government. On the dismissal of Digamber and on the appointment of Defendant No. 1 as Digwar the tenure passed to Defendant No. 1. All orders, for the appointment and dismissal of the Digwars have been made by Government, the zemindar never having had any voice in the matter (see Exs. V, X, Y, Z, JII, 22. 20. T1—W, and the evidence of Girish Chandra Ghose, D. W. 8); all that the zemindar has received in respect of the tenure for this long series of years has been the rent of Rs. 64, which from the receipts filed appears to have remained fixed and unchanged all along. The services rendered by the Digwar have been Police or public services and the Digwar for the time being has been held responsible for the due discharge of those services to Government and not to the zemindar Reg, XIII of 1833 deprived the zemindar of Jheria of his Police functions and since then the Digwars have been directly under Government.

The learned pleader for the Plaintiff-Respondent has set up in this Court a case with regard to the creation of the tenure which does not appear to have been advanced in the lower Court. The case is that when Raja Prithi Singh was invested with the control of the Police in 1814 he appointed his ijardars to do the work for him under his orders and that the ijardar of Tasra and Raharaband was in that position. The duty of the ijardar is said to have been to collect the rents of the mouzahs and to pay them to the zemindar, and as remuneration for his services, partly as rent collector and partly as Digwar or Police officer, he was allowed to hold and receive the profits of the mán lands in the mouzahs. This view it is contended is supported by the lotbandi (Ex. 11) for 1208 B. S., by the copy of the Register of revenue-paying estates in Manbhum (Ex. 14), by the receipts in which the person holding the tenure is described indiscriminately as Digwar, talukdar, ijaradar or etmamdar, by the safabandi of the estate, dated the 15th September 1857, (Exhibit 15) when the estate was under the Court of Wards, by para. 25 of the report of Rai Charan Ghose, Deputy Collector, dated 17th September 1875, with covering letter of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum of 3rd May 1875 (Ex. F), by the evidence of Gonesh Kuiri Chakladar (P. W. 6) and of Jailal Sinha (P. W. 9), by the deposition of Digamber Singh (Ex. 7) and by the report of the Police (Ex. T1) and the receipt given by Defendant No. 1 when he was placed in possession of the lands of the tenure on appointment as Digwar (Ex. W). These documents do not however appear to us to support the view contended for. It is not alleged on behalf of the Appellant that the Digwar did not hold a certain portion of the two mouzahs in his khas possession but it is alleged that he received the profits of that land as well also as all the other profits and rents of the two mouzahs, subject only to a yearly payment of Rs. 64 as rent to the landlord. This view is supported by the petition of Defendant No. 1, dated 22nd November 1891, Ex. I, asking the permission of the Deputy Commissioner to grant the lease to Defendant No. 2. The payment of the uniform amount of Rs. 64 a year to the landlord for a long series of years is also hardly consistent with the view that the person in possession of the tenures was a rent-Collector for the landlord. The evidence of the Chakladar, a servant of the zemindar, and of Joy Lal Singh, the son of the dismissed Digwar Digamber, is not entitled to complete reliance. The safbandi in fact proves nothing as it contains no entry relating to the mouzahs and the entries in the Register, Ex. 14, not being supported by any evidence do not afford any assistance. The lotbandi will be dealt with later on, but as it appears to have been prepared for a special purpose it cannot be accepted as of much value in determining the question.

On the other hand the circumstance that the Digwar has all along been responsible to Government for the due discharge of his duties, that the appointments to and dismissals from the office have been all along made by Government and that the tenure has passed to the persons whom Government has appointed, are entirely inconsistent with the suggestion that the holder of the tenure was a servant under the landlord responsible to him for the due collections of the rents of the estate. Government would not have been able to dismiss a servant of the zemindar without the consent of the zemindar.

We hold, therefore, that the view put forward by the learned pleader for the Plaintiff-Respondent cannot be accepted and that the holder of the two Mouzahs Tasra and Raharaband did not hold them as a simple ijaradar under the landlord responsible to him for the rents of the tenure, and receiving as his remuneration only the mân lands. The tenure has all along been a Digwari tenure ancient and hereditary, held subject to the payment of a fixed rent to the landlord, and on condition of the performance of certain Police or public services, for the due discharge of which the holder has been responsible to the Government which alone has exercised the power of appointment to or dismissal from the office.

This being in our opinion the character of the tenure we have now to consider the different points which were urged before the Subordinate Judge and have been argued before us.

The first of these is whether Government is a necessary party and whether the suit should have been dismissed for non-joinder of Government as a party Defendant. The learned Counsel for the Appellant in contending that Government is a necessary party has dwelt on the fact that whether or not Government itself has an interest in the minerals it has as trustee for the public a substantial interest in the tenure and as such is bound to oppose any attempt to reduce the profits of the tenure in value and so to render it less useful for the purpose for which it was created, that is to say, for the remuneration of the holders for the discharge of their public services. The two mouzahs having been set aside as an appendage to the public office of Digwar it is contended that a tenure was thereby created and the person with whom the settlement was made acquired by it rights to the whole produce or profits of the land whether derived from the surface or sub-soil. All that the landlord reserved was the right to the quit rent of Rs. 64. The Digwars in succession have all along been responsible to Government for the due discharge of their public duties, and there is corresponding duty on the part of Government to them to protect their rights in the tenure from infringement. The Government has a further duty in the interests of the public to protect the rights of the Digwar from encroachment by the zemindar.

It appears that in an objection raised in certain proceedings before the Survey Officer in 1883 (see copy of judgment, dated the 16th March 1883, Ex. 27) the zemindar, the grandfather of the present Plaintiff, did not dispute that the two Mouzahs Tasra and Raharaband had been set apart as Digwari or public service lands. In the suit in 1885 (see copy of plaint, Ex 51) Government asserted a right to the mouzahs as Government Police Digwari land, and sued to have set aside a sale of a portion of the lands in the two mouzahs in the execution of a decree for debt against the Digwars and obtained a decree (see Ex R1). In 1881 the two mouzahs were measured and demarcated as Ghatwali lands, and they were included in the Register of Ghatwali lands of 1880 to 1883. It has already been shown that the Government has all along exercised the right of appointing and dismissing the Digwars, and it has, therefore, an interest in maintaining intact the mouzahs set apart for their remuneration. The lease of the mineral rights to the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was granted by Defendant No. 1 only after he had taken the permission of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum and had explained that the profits from the two mouzahs were insufficient for the due discharge of his duties. The permission to grant the lease was given subject to the condition that he inserted in the deed a clause to the effect that the settlement was made without prejudice to the rights of Government and a clause to that effect was inserted in the deed.

The Government, therefore, has all along asserted a right in the two mouzahs on the ground that they are public service lands, and in granting permission to the Defendant No. 1 to give the lease to the other Defendants, the Deputy Commissioner on behalf of Government has maintained the same position. The Plaintiff in the present suit claims exclusive right to the minerals.

We think that the rule stated in Daniell's Chancery Practice, Vol. I, page 264, and the case of Kashi v. Sadashiv (4), on which the Subordinate Judge has relied, cannot be taken to apply to the facts of the present case. Nor, do we think, is the case of Ven Gelder Apsimon & Co. v. Sowerby Bridge United District Flour Society (26), on which the learned pleader for the Plaintiff has relied before us, on all fours with the present case. Here a right to the tenure as one set apart for public purposes has all along been advanced and acted on by Government for a long series of years without apparently any objection having been raised by the Plaintiff and though the right to the profits from the sub soil has not been directly claimed either by Government on its own behalf or on behalf of the holder of tenure still now that the Plaintiff advances an exclusive right to the sub soil profits it is a matter in which the Government has a substantial interest as affecting the profits derivable from the tenure. The Digwar's personal interest in the tenure terminates with his life while the exclusive rights which the Plaintiffs claim are such as affect the profits of the tenure permanently, and in the permanent interests of the tenure the Government is concerned for the reasons already stated. The three cases on which reliance was placed before the Subordinate Judge, and which have also been relied on before us on behalf of the Defendants Respondents, are not quite on all fours with the present. But the facts of this case are, in our opinion, even stronger to support the view that the Government is a necessary party in this suit. Indirectly, the Plaintiff in this suit seeks to defeat rights which the Government has all along assumed itself to possess on behalf of the public and which in other proceedings in other Courts it has claimed with success. In sanctioning the grant of the lease by Defendant No. 1 to Defendant No. 2, the Government has asserted these rights. Under all these circumstances, we feel bound to differ from the view of the Subordinate Judge and to hold that Government was a necessary party in the suit.

The next question whether the suit was barred by limitation which was not pressed before the Subordinate Judge has however been argued before us and it is necessary for us to determine it. For the Appellants it has been argued that the evidence proves that the Defendant No. 1 began to dig out coal in 1888, that the Road-cess notices from 1889 to 1902 (Exs. VI-5 to VI-18) show that cesses were realised during those years from him on the coal dug out at values varying from Rs. 65 to Rs. 2,400, that in 1891 the negotiations were first entered into with the Coal Company for the grant of the lease, that application for permission was then openly made to the Deputy Commissioner and was granted on the 8th December 1891, that the lease was executed on the 2nd January, 1892 and finally transferred to the Coal Company on the 17th December 1897. All these facts show that there was an open assertion of the right of the Digwar to the sub-soil coal adverse to the zemindar since 1888. The fact that the present suit was not instituted till the 18th December 1903, i.e., till 15 days before the expiry of 12 years from the date of the lease, though the zemindar must have been aware that the Digwar was asserting rights to the sub-soil coal so far back as 1888 indicates, it is urged, that the zemindar acknowledged that the sub-soil rights to the coal belonged to the Digwar. It has been contended that this is not a case of constructive possession by a wrong-doer but one of actual possession openly asserted and it is argued that this is one of the special cases contemplated by Hall, V. C., in the remarks made in his judgment in Ashton v. Stock (27).

For the Respondents, however, it is contended that all that the Digwar did from 1888 to 1892 was to take the surface coal or coal washed out by the action of the Damudar River (see the evidence of P. W. 4, P. W. 6 and P. W. 7), and that this did not amount to an assertion of a right to the sub-soil coal. The account filed by the Defendant's witness, Girish Chandra Ghose, is characterised as worthless. It is further argued that even if the Digwar dug out the sub-soil coal during those years he was acting as a wrong-doer and on the authority of the case of Mohini Mohan Roy v. Promoda Nath Roy (5), it is argued that constructive possession applies only in favour of a rightful owner and need not (as a rule) be extended in favour of a wrong-doer, whose possession must be confined to land of which he is actually in possession, and on the authority of the case of Wali Ahmed Chowdhry v. Tota Meah Chowdhry (28) that occupation by a wrong-doer of a portion of land only cannot be held to constitute constructive possession of the whole so as to enable him to obtain a title by prescription. All then that the Defendants could have acquired a right to by prescription was the coal actually taken out by them and not to all the sub-soil coal. And as bearing on this point reference has been made to the cases of Earl of Dartmouth v. Spittle (29), Ashton v. Stock (27) and Lord Courtown v. Ward (30).

We have seen the accounts which were produced by Girish Chandra Ghose and we think they are of no value as evidence. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the sub-soil coal was not regularly or systematically worked till the lease was granted to the Company in 1892 and we are unable to attach any value to the Road-cess notices which were apparently issued on information furnished by Defendant No. 1 himself. There is moreover no direct evidence to prove that the right to the sub-soil coal was asserted by Brojo Nath Bose, the Digwar, to the knowledge of the Plaintiff before 1892 though there may have been no concealment that he was working the coal and we hold, following the view adopted in the cases relied on by the Plaintiff-Respondent, that the suit was not barred by limitation.

We have now to consider the important question in the case, viz., whether the right to the sub-soil coal or minerals belongs to the Plaintiff as zemindar or to the Defendant No. 1 as Digwar. We have already noticed the circumstances under which the tenure appears to have been created, the conditions under which it has been held, and the manner in which it has devolved on each Digwar in succession. It is not necessary for us to repeat in detail the description of the course of special legislation in Bengal so far as it imposed on the zemindar the management of the Police in their estates and affected the position of the persons appointed to discharge those duties. This has been set out in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. Pergunnah Jheria in which Mouzahs Tasra and Baharaband are situated was admittedly originally included in the district of Birbhum. In 1805 it was included with other pergunnahs in the District of the jungle mehals, the head-quarters of which was at Bankura. In 1833 it, with other pergunnahs, was formed into the District of Manbhum. It is clear from the documentary evidence (see Report of Mr. Money, Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, dated 14th November 1864, Ex. L1, the Report of Col. Morton, Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, dated 3rd May 1875, (Ex. F) and Hunter's Statistical Reports, Vol. 17, p. 281), that in the first half of the last century the whole of the country covered by the jungle mehals and the neighbouring districts was in a very disturbed state and that public offices and records were on several occasions destroyed by fire, that during the Mutiny the main portion of the records of the Manbhum District met with a similar fate, and that in consequence, requests had to be made to the collectors of the neighbouring districts to send copies of quinquennial and decennial papers to afford the required information regarding the different estates in the different pergunnahs in the District (see Rubkari, dated 19th September 1857) (Ex. 2). Jheria was one of those pergunnahs. The reply received (see Ex. 1, dated 13th October 1857 and Ex. 13) was to the effect that the papers relating to the pergunnahs were not in existence, and that only the old lotbandies of certain pergunnahs and a copy of a book showing the lands and jamas of Chabla and Panchkote for the year 1202 were to be found. It is not, therefore, surprising that the documentary evidence which each party is able to produce to prove the origin of the tenure is small and not of a very substantial character.

The ancient document on which the Plaintiff mostly relies is the copy of the lotbandi of 1208 B. S. (Exhibit II). It bears the heading "List of Lotbandi of Collector's Revenue for 1208 B. S. in respect of Pergunnah Jherriah, District Birbhum," and it appears to be one of the papers which were sent to Manbhum on 13th October 1857. This document has been attacked by the learned Counsel for the Appellant as being a copy of a copy and inadmissible in evidence, and also on the ground, that its genuineness is open to suspicion. The first ground of attack is based on the endorsement on the face of the document which runs "Copy, Sd. R. C. R. Extra-Assistant Commissioner." There is, however, nothing to prove the meaning of this endorsement and the objection does not appear to have been pressed in the lower Court. We see no reason to treat the document as inadmissible on the ground set forward. Its genuineness is attacked because there was some delay in its production by the Plaintiff, because the officer who produced it had only been one year in office and because the report of the Naib Mahafiz, dated the 7th March 1859, (Ex. D) would not have been made if the lotbandi had been received in 1857. It is also suggested that it is manifestly incorrect as it mentions Tasra with profits of Rs. 45 but makes no mention of Raharaband and it is argued that the explanation advanced by the Subordinate Judge that Raharaband is an offshoot of Tasra cannot be accepted because Raharaband is the larger of the two mouzahs. We do not think these objections are sound. The delay in the production of the document was not serious, and the accident, that the officer who produced it had been one year only in office is not material. The report of the Naib Maha-fiz related to Ghatwali and jaigir lands which find no place in the lotbandi, and the list of papers, dated the 13th October 1857, (Exhibit B) goes to support the view that the document is genuine. The omission to give in the lotbandi the profits of Raharaband would not be of importance unless it were proved that at that time any profits were derivable from that mouzah. The survey map prepared in 1881 show that even then a large portion of the mouzah was covered with jungle. The document is, therefore, in our opinion admissible in evidence and genuine. Its value as proving that in the year 1208 there was no Digwari tenure of Tasra and Raharaband has to be considered. The document appears to have been prepared under cl. 2, sec. 29 of Reg. VII of 1799, in view of a possible sale of the whole or a part of the pergunnah for arrears of Government revenue, and its object was to show to intending purchasers the value of the produce of the different mouzahs in the pergunnah in the past year and also to enable the Collector after such a sale to re-assess the Government revenue on the two portions in accordance with the provision of Arts. X and XI of Reg. I of 1793, and Reg. I of 1801. The statement would ordinarily not specify Digwari tenures but would only mention the rent payable on them to the landlord. The omission of any mention of the Digwari tenure of Tasra and Raharaband can hardly be accepted as proof that no such tenure was then in existence.

The next document of ancient date relied on by the Plaintiff is (Exhibit 4), the Register of appointments of Ghatwals and Chowkidars from the 1st February 1832 to the 29th July 1839. This document contains no mention of the Digwari tenure of Tasra and Raharaband, and to this fact the Subordinate Judge has attached considerable importance as indicating that the tenure was not then in existence. This document, however, is not as the Subordinate Judge has described it a Register of Ghatwali lands but of appointments of Ghatwals and Chowkidars. It is to be observed that in the report (Exhibit E), dated 18th June 1799, made by Ranji Tehsildar, a distinction is drawn between Digwars and Jaigirdars who were remunerated by jaigirs of villages and the Ghatwals and Chowkidars who were remunerated by fixed salaries in cash or plots of lands in their villages. In the Register there are only two instances of persons who held one village each all the rest being remunerated by salaries or by a certain number of bighas of land in their respective villages. If the holder of Tasra and Raharaband was a Digwar, he would not be likely to be entered in the Register, and, even otherwise, if there had been no appointment to the office between January 1832 and July 1839, there would be no entry in the Register. We are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge that this Register supports the view that the Digwari tenure was not in existence in those years.

From the provisions of cls. 4 and 13 of sec. 7 of Reg. XVIII of 1805, the Subordinate Judge comes to the conclusion that the Digwars were servants of the landlords as much as of Government and he considers that this view is confirmed by the evidence of Matabbar Singh and Joy Lal Singh. These two witnesses are relations of Digamber Singh who was dismissed for misconduct and their evidence does not appear to us to be entitled to reliance. The evidence oral and documentary on the other hand goes conclusively to prove that the services rendered by the Digwars were Police or public services, that for the due discharges of those services the Digwars were responsible to Government which alone had power to appoint or dismiss them. There is nothing to support the view, which the Subordinate Judge accepts, based on the Regulation alone, that the Digwar of Tasra and Rahara-band was a servant of the landlord. The view we take is supported by Hunter's Statistical Reports, Vol. 17, p. 257, where it is pointed out that the services paid by "the Ghatwals of Manbhum were from the first military or Police services and never acquired a menial or personal character." The Digwars appear to have held a position superior to the Ghatwal. See Hunter, Vol. 17, p. 334. We are unable to agree with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on this point.

The oldest documents on which the Defendants rely to prove their Digwari tenure are Exhibits U and V., the copies of the Isumnavisi papers 1845 and 1861, the former of which shows Bahali Sinha as Digwar of Tasra and Raharaband, and the latter shows Pahlan Singh as Digwar.

The learned pleader for the Plaintiff-Respondent contends that these documents are of no value and in support of this contention relies on the remarks made by Mr. Clay, Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, in his Report of the 3rd June 1869 (Exhibit K1), as to the worthlessness of such documents as evidence, and on the case of Fergusson v. The Government and Dwarka Nath Singh (31), in which similar documents were rejected as evidence. The value of such documents as evidence in a particular case must, however, depend on the special circumstances under which they are offered for belief. Supposing them to stand alone without any evidence to support them it is probable, having regard to the circumstances under which they are said to have been in the first instance prepared, that they would be of little value to prove the facts contained in them. But when, as in the present case, they are supported by other evidence they certainly are entitled to more credit. The documents, Exhibits X., Y., Z., III., 22, 20 and T, to which reference has already been made and which prove the retirement of Pahlan Singh and the appointments of Matabbar, Digamber and Brojo Nath Bose in succession as Digwars, certainly support the two Isumnavisi papers as proving that the Digwari tenure was in existence when the two documents were prepared. The Defendants also rely on the depositions of Digambar Singh, dated the 8th and 10th February 1862 (Exhibits 7 and 8), which were given long before the present dispute arose. These carry the tenure back at least to 1814 when Prithi Singh was entrusted with the maintenance of the Police in his estate of Jheria. There seems no good reason for discrediting these statements made so long ago and before the present dispute arose. The receipts given by the zemindar for the rent, produced by the Defendants, are also relied on as proving that the existence of the Digwari tenure was then openly asserted and admitted. The Register of the Ghatwali lands in Manbhum prepared in 1880 to 1883 and the maps prepared in 1881 are relied on as proving the existence of the tenure and it is pointed out that its existence was also taken for granted in the proceedings before the Survey Officer in 1883, and was openly asserted by Government in 1885.

(31) 8 W. R. 232 (1867).

BROJO NATH BOSE v. RAJA SRI SRI DURGA PERSAD SINGH.

Under all these circumstances, we hold that the evidence for the Defendant is sufficient to establish the existence of the Digwari tenure certainly as far back as 1814, and we are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge that the evidence fails to prove that the tenure was in existence before 1845. We think that the evidence of the Defendants makes out a probable and consistent story of the creation of the tenure and of its continuance down to the date of suit. We accept it as true.

There is, it is true, no direct evidence to prove the existence of the tenure prior to 1814, and we have to determine whether when the tenure was created the zemindars intended to reserve anything except the quit rent of Rs. 64. The fact that the same rent has been accepted all along would seem to support the view that the right to the rent was all that it was then intended to reserve. The rights to the sub soil coal do not appear to have been thought of then. Nor can those rights be held to have been covered by the provisions of the Mahomedan Law taken from the Hedaya to which attention is drawn in Mr. Millett's Report of the 26th March 1842, as they related only to mines of precious metals.

In order to prove the respective titles of the zemindar and Digwar to the mineral rights, we have been referred by the learned representatives of both parties to a long series of rulings in which in neighbouring districts and in the estate of Pachete in the District of Manbhum, the rights of Digwars have been considered and dealt with. We are aware of the danger of attempting to generalise from one class of persons to another possibly different class, and we propose to deal with those cases only so far as they may appear to throw some light on the relations of the zemindars and Digwars in the present case. The learned Counsel for the Appellant has indeed gone so far as to suggest that as Pergunnah Jheria originally formed a part of the District of Birbhum, and as the rights of the Ghatwals in Birbhum have been recognized by Government by special legislation in Reg. XXIX of 1814 and Act V of 1859, we should hold that the Digwar in the present case has the same rights as those conferred by statute on the Ghatwals of Birbhum. All however that we think we should be justified in doing is to ascertain whether there is a sufficient analogy between the legal position of the Digwar of Tasra and Raharaband and that of the Ghatwals of Birbhum to justify the inference that the incidence attaching to the tenures of the former should be regarded as similar to those attaching to the latter. At the same time, we are not prepared to agree with the Subordinate Judge that the enactments dealing with the Ghatwals of Birbhum are of the nature of private statutes.

Now we find that in the case of Ghat-wali tenures in Khuruckpur in Bhagalpur District, it was held in the case of Raja Lilanund Singh v. The Government of Bengal (10), that such tenures did not fall within cl. 4, sec. 8 of Reg. I of 1793 and that, as they were included in the Permanent Settlement, they could not be resumed by Government, and in the case of Munrunjun Singh v. Raja Lilanund Singh (14), that in respect of the same class of Ghatwals it was found that they held a perpetual hereditary tenure at a fixed rent in money and service, and that except for misconduct on their part, they could not be evicted by the zemindar. This was confirmed on appeal by the Privy Council, Lilanund v. Munrunjun (15). The same view was taken in the case of Tekait Manoraj Singh v. Raja Lilanund Singh (32). A similar view was taken by this Court in the case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Kali Charan Roy (33) with regard to a Ghatwali tenure in Bankura. In the case of Anundo Rai v. Kali Prosad Singh (19), confirmed by the Privy Council in Kali Prosad v. Anundo Rai (20), it was held that a Khuruckpur Ghatwali tenure is transferable if the zemindar assents and accepts the transfer.

In the case of Kooldeep Narain Singh v. Mahadeo Singh (12) with regard to a Ghatwali tenure created by a sannad, dated 1743, in a pergunnah adjoining Khuruckpur, a Full Bench of this Court held that the tenure was permanent and hereditary, that it was held at a fixed quit rent, and therefore that the landlord was not entitled to resume it on the ground that the Ghatwal had ceased to perform the services, if Government refused to renounce the claim to the services. This was confirmed by the Privy Council on appeal, Kooldeep Narain v. Government (13); a similar view was taken by the Privy Council in the case of Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (7). This related to a tenure in Pergunnah Sultanpore in the District of Bhagalpur.

In the case of Bukronath Singh v. Nilmoni Singh (17), confirmed by the Privy Council in Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Bukronath (18), it was held with regard to a Ghatwali tenure in Pergunnah Pachete, District Manbhum, that though the mouzahs which made up the jaigir were included in the area of the zemindari at the time of the Permanent Settlement, yet as the share of profits which were retained by the jaigirdar formed no part of the assets on which the Government revenue was fixed, that as the succession to the jaigir was subject to the sanction of Government and as the jaigirdar was liable to render public services, the tenure being in Pachete which formerly was included in the District of Birbhum, the jaigir was analogous to one described in Reg. XXIX of 1814, and further that the jaigir was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree for debt against the predecessor of the jaigirdar. Pergunnah Pachete is close to Pergunnah Jheria in Manbhum.

In respect of a tenure in the District of the Sonthal Pergunnahs in the case of Binode Ram Sen v. Deputy Commissioner of the Sonthal Pergannahs (34), it was held that the rents of a Ghatwali tenure are not liable for the debts of a former deceased holder of the tenure on the ground that the rent was assessed so as to leave the holder of the tenure what was at the time considered sufficient or the performance of his services and each Ghatwal was entitled to the whole of it, and in the case of Chittro Narain Singh Tekait v. Assistant Commissioner of the Sonthal Perganahs (35), it was held that a transfer by Government on default on the part of the Ghatwal was valid.

In the case of Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (7) already referred to, it was noticed that a clear distinction must be drawn between the grant of an office the performance of whose duties are remunerated by the use of certain lands and the grant of an estate burdened with certain duties; and in the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Dashad (21), it was also held that a further distinction must also be drawn between a grant for services of public nature and one for services, private or personal to the grantor.

The former class of grants in each instance were liable to resumption by the grantor, while the latter class were not so liable.

In the case before us, it has in our opinion been fully established that the services to be performed were Police service and purely of a public nature. The zemindar having certain public services to perform settled a certain number of villages with the Digwar on the condition that he would perform those services due to Government, and reserved for himself only a quit rent of Rs. 64. The same rent has been paid ever since, and the tenure has passed to different members of the family who have in turn been found by Government fit to discharge the public services. On default, Digamber Singh was dismissed by Government and the tenure passed to Brojo Nath Bose, Defendant No. 1, who was appointed Digwar by Government in his place. The tenure was, therefore, in our opinion created in the first instance to enable the holder to discharge public duties and has all along been so regarded. We hold, therefore, on the authority of the case last mentioned, that the tenure is not liable to resumption by the landlord.

In the suit No. 33 of 1885 (Ex. RI), the Government successfully asserted that the lands were not liable to sale for debts of the Digwars as they were Police Digwari lands and on the dismissal of Digamber Singh, the tenure was transferred by Government to Defendant No. 1. These circumstances show that the tenure corresponds with those in the Sonthal Pergunnahs which formed the subject of the two cases noted above and a transfer by Government on default of the Ghatwal would be valid [Chittro Narain v. Assistant Commissioner of the Sonthal Pergannahs (35).]

(35) 14 W. R. 203 (1870).

BROJO NATH BOSE v. RAJA SRI SRI DURGA PERSAD SINGH.

It has also been established that the tenure is ancient, that it is hereditary, and that it has been held all along at a fixed rent of Rs. 64. At the same time, it would appear that the mouzahs of which it consists were included in the zemindari for assessment at the time of the Permanent Settlement. In these respects it resembles the tenure in Pergunnah Pachete. The question then arises, whether we should follow the view taken in the case of Bukronath Singh v. Nilmoni Singh (17) and hold that the tenure must be regarded as analogous to the Ghatwali tenures in Birbhum so as to carry the same incident. It is clear that it was treated as such by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, when he gave the sanction to the lease of the mining lrights; a sanction which is required by Act V of 1859 in the case of mining eases granted by the Ghatwals in Birbhum. The opinion of the local officer is no doubt not conclusive, but we think, that in a matter like the present, where local knowledge is valuable it is entitled to some consideration.

We find further that as early as 1816, the Nizamat Adalut regarded the Ghatwals of the jungle mehals as similar to those in Birbhum (see Ex. A). In 1883 (see Ex. R) and in 1903 (see Ex. S), the Government asserted its right to control the Digwars in executing leases of mineral rights, and the evidence of Gopal Mollah (D. W. 4) is to the effect, that all leases executed by Digwars were subject to the control and sanction of Government. The evidence of the Digwars who are witnesses for the Defendants (D. W. 1 & D. W. 6) is also to the effect that Government exercised entire control over the Digwars, and that the zemindar had no power of control over them. It further appears (see Ex. Q1 and Ex. A1) that leases of sub-soil rights have been granted by Digwars in other parts of Manbhum without any objection having been taken by the zemindar.

We think that all these circumstances justify us in holding that the position of the Digwar in the present case is analogous to that of the Ghatwals in Birbhum, and in inferring that he has been recognized throughout as possessing the same rights. In this view of the case, we hold that the mineral rights in the tenure do not belong to the zemindar.

The argument of the learned pleader for the Respondent based on Mr. Millet's Report of the 26th March 1842, the letter from the Secretary to the Board of Revenue to the Government of Bengal, dated 9th January 1872 (Exhibit 16A), and the Despatch of the Secretary of State for India, dated 25th March 1880 (Exhibit 26), that Government has disclaimed all title to mineral rights in lands which were included in the Permanent Settlement, and that, therefore, such rights belong to the zemindar, cannot have weight in determining the question before us, which is whether the zemindar or the Digwar is entitled to the mineral rights. The question as between the zemindar and Government is not in issue.

Further, we hold that on other grounds also we should arrive at the same conclusion. We have found that the tenure was created not later than 1814, that it has been held at the same rental ever since, that it has descended by inheritance to members of the family of the original grantee until Digamber Singh in 1887 was dismissed for misconduct, that the zemindar has never exercised the power to appoint or dismiss a Digwar holding the tenure, that this power has all along been exercised by Government, that the tenure passed on the transfer by Government, and that the only profit which the zemindar has received from the tenure during the long course of years has been the rent, which seems to have been a quit rent Under such circumstances we think that the only possible conclusion at which we can arrive is that the tenure was created as a permanent tenure on a fixed rent, and that it was heritable [see Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh (36) and Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh (37)]. All that the zemindar reserved was the fixed rent of Rs. 64, such being the case, we see no reason to differ from the view taken in the case of Sitaram Chukrabutty v. Kumar Hari Narain Sinha (38) and hold that the Digwar, as holder of a permanent tenure, possesses all underground rights including mining rights, unless there is an express reservation to the contrary [see also Shyama Charan Nundy v. Abhiram Goswami (39), Tituram Mukerji v. Cohen (40)]. In this case no such reservation is shown to have been made in fact, nor can it be implied from the conduct of the zemindar.

We are of opinion that the cases of Bagdu Majhi v. Raja Durga Prosad (41) and Prince Mahomed Buktyar Shah v. Rani Dhojamani (42) relied on for the Respondent, are not in point. In the former, the Defendant was holding under an ijara created 12 years before suit, and the latter was a case of a maintenance grant.

Further, we hold that the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge has arrived, based on the finding that the Defendant No. 1 was not an independent talukdar is not sound. The learned Counsel for the Appellants explains that Defendant No. 1 never set up the title of an independent talukdar. His contention was that sec. 5 of Reg. VIII of 1793 was not exhaustive and that the Digwari tenure held by Defendant No. 1 was a peculiar tenure, analogous to the Ghatwali tenures in Birbhum, referred to in the preamble of Reg. XXIX of 1814 to which the provisions of the then existing Regulations did not apply. This indeed has been the case urged throughout before us, and we think that no conclusion adverse to Defendant can be drawn from the fact that he has failed to prove that he is an independent talukdar.

We are unable, therefore, to agree with the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge has arrived, that the title to the sub-soil rights in the Digwari tenure in suit is with the zemindar, the Plaintiff.

It is not necessary to determine the other points raised in the subsequent issues.

The result is that the appeal is decreed

FATIMA BIBI and others, Appellants,

v.

SHEIKH AHMED BUKSH and others, Respondents.

*Mahomedan Law—Gift—*Marz-ul-mout—Right test to be applied—Practice where concurrent findings of fact are under consideration.

Where the question was whether a certain deed of gift made by a deceased Mahomedan donor in favour of his son was invalid by reason of the Mahomedan Law of Marz-ul-mout relating to gifts made in death illness and the Courts in India applied the test which was treated as decisive on this point, viz., was the deed of gift executed by the donee under apprehension of death?—their Lordships held that the test applied was the right one.

Appeal from a decree of the abovementioned High Court, dated 14th August 1903, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated 20th August 1900.

The principal question for their Lordships' consideration was whether under the Mahomedan Law a deed of gift executed on 21st May 1897 by one Moulvi Dadar Buksh in favour of his son, Respondent Sheikh Ahmed Buksh, was valid.

One Dadar Buksh, the father of the Respondent Sheikh Ahmed Buksh, was a Sub-Deputy Collector at Khurdah in Bengal. For some years before his death he suffered from diabetes. Towards the end of 1896 he was advised that he should go on leave as he was suffering from a serious disease. On 4th April 1897, the Civil Surgeon of Puri certified that he had examined Dadar Buksh on the morning of that day, and found him much worse than when he examined him on 10th December 1896. He was of opinion that he was totally unfit for work on account of albumenuria, and should be granted six months' leave for rest and change of climate. Dadar Buksh was granted leave by the Collector of the district in anticipation of sanction and went to his home at Cuttack. He was there examined by a Medical Board consisting of the Civil Surgeon of Cuttack and the medical officer of the regiment stationed there at the time. They certified on 9th May 1897, that he was suffering from albumenuria and considered the state of his health to be such as to render it highly inconvenient for him to proceed to Calcutta for the purpose of examination by the Medical Board there as directed by the Government.

On 21st May 1907, Dadar Buksh and his wife, Mussammat Salimatunnissa, the pro forma Defendant No. 7, executed a joint deed of gift (hibanama) in favour of their son, Ahmed Buksh, the Respondent, who was then a minor. His mother conveyed to him certain properties she had acquired by purchase on 10th July 1879, and his father conveyed to him a portion of his immoveable estate. It set out that as the grantee had not attained majority the offer and acceptance duly took place between the grantors and the grantee's maternal uncle, Munshi Maho-med Ibrahim. The deed of gift was registered on 25th May 1897.

Dadar Buksh died on 27th May 1897, leaving him surviving a widow, the said Mussammat Salimatunnissa, a son, the said Ahmed Buksh, and six daughters, viz,—(1) Fatima Bibi, married to Syed Nurul Huq; (2) Khadja Bibi, married to Syed Abu Ahmed; (3) Zohara Bibi; (4) Zainab Bibi; (5) Zoheda Bibi; and (6) Khatima Bibi, married to Syed Abu Mahammad.

On 26th March 1898, the three married daughters presented to the Deputy Collector petitions for registration of their names, in respect of 7 pice interest each in the estates named in the petitions, which they claimed as heirs of their father. The widow of Dadar Buksh put in an objection on behalf of her minor son Ahmed Buksh, in which she stated that Dadar Buksh had executed a deed of gift on 21st May 1897, by which he gave all the said properties to his son. The Deputy Collector, holding that the matter involved intricate questions of Mahamedan Law, referred the cases to the District Judge of Cuttack for determination under sec. 55 of Act VII of 1876 (B. C.). On 2nd July 1898, the District Judge delivered his judgment on the matters referred to him. He decided that the deed of gift was made during the death illness (marz-ul-mout) of the donor and was consequently invalid. His answer to the reference, therefore, was that the Petitioners, the three married daughters of Dadar Buksh, were entitled to be registered to the extent of 7 pice each. On appeal against that order the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal made on 31st January 1899 an order refusing to interfere under sec. 622 of Act XIV of 1882.

On 27th December 1898, Khatima Bibi, one of the married daughters, executed a deed of release in favour of the said Ahmed Buksh, in which she admitted that the deed of gift executed by her father was valid.

On 15th July 1898, Syed Nurul Huq, the husband of Fatima Bibi, applied to the District Judge of Cuttack to be appointed guardian, under Act VIII of 1890, of the three minor and unmarried daughters of Dadar Buksh for the purpose of protecting their interest in the property left by their father on the ground that their mother was not a fit person to be their guardian as she had an interest adverse to that of the minors and done acts prejudicial to their interest. On 18th March 1899 an order was made appointing the applicant as such guardian.

On 1st July 1899, Ahmed Buksh having regard to the abovementioned orders of Court and the claims made by five of his sisters, instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack. The five sisters, who contested his claim, were made the principal Defendants and his mother and sister, who admitted it, were made pro forma Defendants. The plaint asserted the validity of the said deed of gift and its recognition by Khatima Bibi. It treated the order of 2nd July 1898, for registration of the names of the three married daughters of Dadar Buksh as tantamount to dispossession of the Plaintiff to the extent of the shares claimed by them, and prayed for a restoration to possession of the gifted property to that extent (3 annas, 6 pies), and a declaration of title and confirmation of possession in regard to the remaining interest in the said property

In answer to the suit the widow confessed judgment and Khatima Bibi did not appear. The other five daughters of Dadar Buksh, who contested the same, filed a written statement in defence, wherein they denied the execution of the said deed of gift in fact, and alleged that, if executed in fact, it was not intelligently executed by Dadar Buksh. They asserted that if duly executed the deed was invalid under Mahomedan Law because executed during death illness, because improperly registered, because insufficiently stamped and because the gift was not completed by delivery of possession. Of the six issues fixed by the Subordinate Judge only one is material for the purpose of this report: "Is the hebanama propounded by the Plaintiff a genuine and valid document?"

The Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment on 20th August 1900, and decided that the deed was duly stamped and duly registered. In regard to the alleged invalidity on the ground that possession of the gifted property was not given to the donee, he found as a fact that possession was delivered and as a question of law that delivery of possession was not necessary under the Mahomedan Law when the donor and donee were father and minor son. On the general question of the validity of gift made in death illness (marz ul mout) he held that by Mahomedan Law, to invalidate a gift the donor must at the time of the gift be under apprehension of death, and that as a fact Dadar Buksh was not, on 21st May 1897, under such apprehension. In accordance with the above findings he made a decree granting the Plaintiff the relief prayed for with costs, except in regard to one house, as to which he held that the Plaintiff ought to have sued for possession, not for a declaration of title. His judgment on the issue set out above was as follows:—

"I think it will be better to examine first the law on the subject of death-bed gifts (marz-ul-mout) and then apply the law to the facts of this case.

From the cases reported in Ashruffunnissa v. Azeemun (1), Enaet Hossein v. Kureemoonissa (2), Saduk Ali v. Bibee Pearee (3), Wazir Jan v. Saiyyid Altaf (4), Hassarat Bibi v. Golam Jaffar (5) and from text-books of Justice Ameer Ali and Shama Charan Sarkar, it appears that gifts made by Mahomedans while under apprehension of death are invalid. In Hassarat Bibi v. Golam Jaffar (5), Justice Ameer Ali said in determining whether the donation of a person suffering from a mortal disease comes within the doctrine of marz-ul-mout gifts, several questions have to be considered, viz.

(1) was the donor suffering at the time of the gift from a disease which was the immediate cause of his death;

(2) was the disease of such a nature as to induce in the person suffering the belief that death would be caused thereby or engender in him the apprehension of death;

FATIMA BIBI v. SHEIKH AHMED BUKSH.

(3) had the illness continued for such a length of time as to remove or lessen the apprehension of immediate death or to accustom the sufferer to the malady.

This being the law on the subject, let us determine what the state of Dadar Buksh's health was at the time he executed this deed." . . .

The finding of the learned Sub-Judge based on the testimony of Salimatunnissa Bibi (his wife), Babu Balaram Bose (the Sub-Deputy Collector) and Dr. Bhusan Chandra, was that he was suffering--(1) from diabetes for 5 or 6 years; (2) from albumenuria for at least 12 months and occasional fevers. With all these maladies on him he worked and then came home on sick leave about 4 weeks before his death. Thus the disease he had been suffering from, was of long continuance and hence accustomed him to it as also lessened the apprehension of death.

As to the actual state of the patient's health at the time he executed this document he found the opinion of his attending physicians to be that they did not on the 9th of May think that the patient was in danger of death and that the doctor who treated him on the 20th and 21st did not think him to be in danger of imminent death, and the deed was executed on the 21st.

The next question for consideration was what Dadar himself and his relatives thought of his illness. Dadar a little after his arrival at Cuttack drove to a dispensary and walked to the dispensary room. He also drove to Docter Bhushan's place and walked with the latter up to a certain distance. Thus the condition of his health was not such as to inspire him with apprehension of death. His wife deposed that neither he nor his relatives had apprehended death. She is the best person to depose on this point being naturally his constant companion, especially during illness. Several respectable persons who had visited Dadar during his illness were examined by Defendants and not a single person was questioned about Dadar's apprehension of death. It was Nurul Huq only who deposed on this point, but the learned Sub-Judge placed no reliance on his uncorroborated testimony, especially when it was found to be opposed to medical evidence.

The Court, therefore, found that at or about the time this deed was executed, neither Dadar nor his friends and relatives were under apprehension of death.

One other circumstance which proved that Dadar Buksh was not under apprehension of death at the time was that the hebanama made mention of his future heirs. Now the idea of death could never enter the head of any man who was thinking of begetting children.

The Sub-Judge in view of all these circumstances held that Dadar was not under apprehension of death and therefore the deed was not invalid.

True, Dadar Buksh died within 7 days after the execution of the deed, but the Mahomedan Law does not say that is a deed of gift is executed during illness and that illness ends fatally, the gift will be invalid. But it says that to invalidate a document executed during illness the donor must apprehend death.

Cross-appeals by the Appellants and the Respondent, Sheikh Ahmed Buksh, to the High Court of Judicature at Fort

FATIMA BIBI v. SHEIKH AHMED BUKSH.

William in Bengal were disposed of by one judgment, Fatima Bibee v. Ahmad Baksh (6). Except as to the question of fact, viz., whether possession was actually delivered on the execution of the deed in question, in regard to which no opinion was expressed, the High Court affirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on all questions of law and fact and dismissed the appeals with costs.

The Appellants, thereupon, preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Jardine, K. C., and Mr. Ross for the Appellants.—There is evidence to show that Dadar was very ill. That fact raises a presumption that the gift in this case was invalid under the law of marz-ul-mout and shifts the onus on the other side, which must prove that the gift was good because the law of marz-ul-mout did not apply to the present case It is submitted that the Respondent has not discharged that onus.

The High Court is not right in saying that the question is merely whether Dadar was under apprehension of death. That is not a correct test. One must look to the surrounding circumstances to find whether there was apprehension of death and not only to the state of mind of the patient as the lower Courts have done. Here all the surrounding circumstances go to show that there was apprehension of death and the gift is, therefore, bad. Baillie in his Digest of Mahomedan Law, (2nd Ed.), Book VIII, Ch. VIII, at p. 552, says that the most valid definition of death illness is, that it is one which it is highly probable will issue fatally, whether, in the case of a man, it disables him from getting up for necessary avocations, out of his house or not, such as, for instance, when he is a fakeeh, or lawyer, from going to the musjid, or place of worship; and when he is a merchant, from going to his shop; and whether, in the case of a woman, it does or does not disable her from necessary avocations within doors. Ameer Ali in his Mahomedan Law, (3rd Ed.), Vol. I, at p. 22, gives the same passage but curiously enough has fallen into an error by putting it in inverted commas as the translation of the fatawa. The correct translation of the fatawa is given in the Calcutta Law Journal (1905), Vol I, No 12, para. 16, p. 131n. Reference was made to the following: "Appendix C. referred to in para 16 of the review being a correct translation of what is at p. 453 of Baillie's Digest, 1st Ed., to supply the place of the passage in Baillie's beginning with words. 'The most valid definition of death illness is that, &c. . . . .' These words so reproduced here within inverted commas, are words of Mr. Baillie himself introducing the subject and have no place in the Doorool Mukhtar, p. 246, to which reference is made in the foot-note by Mr. Baillie." The evidence shows that the illness here was one which it was highly probable would issue fatally, and consequently the gift is bad

There is no concurrence in the judgments of the lower Courts and therefore the finding is not concurrent in the true sense.

Mr. DeGruyther for the Respondent.—The question with reference to the invalidity of a gift under the law of marz-ul-mout has been recently considered by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (7) and the principles there laid down should be applied to the present case. In order to establish marz ul-mout there must be present at least three conditions: firstly, proximate danger of death, so that there is, as it is phrased, a preponderence of khauf or apprehension, that is, that at given time death must be more probable than life; secondly, there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person; thirdly, there must be some external indicia, chief among which would be the inability to attend to ordinary avocations: Sarabai v. Rabiabai (8) followed in Rashid Karmalli v. Sherbanoo (9). The Courts in India after examining the whole of the evidence have concurrently found on all the three points in favour of the Respondent. The evidence actually goes to show that death in this case took place suddenly. The gift is good as found by the Courts in India

(6) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 319 (1903).

FATIMA BIBI v. SHEIKH AHMED BUKSH.

Mr. Jardine replied that Sarabai v. Rabiabai (8) followed the decision of the Calcutta High Court in this very case under appeal.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD COLLINS.—The question in th case is whether a certain deed of gift made by one Moulvi Dadar Buksh deceased in favour of his son Sheikh Ahmed Buksh is invalid by reason of the Mahomedan law of marz ul-mout relating to gifts made in death illness. The deed was executed on the 21st May 1897, and on the 27th of the same month Moulvi Dadar Buksh, the donor, died. A great number of objections to the deed were urged by the Appellants (the Defendants) before the Subordinate Judge, all of which were considered in great detail and overruled by him in a most elaborate judgment in favour of the Respondents. That judgment was affirmed on appeal by the High Court at Fort William, and it is the concurrent judgments of these two tribunals that this Board is now called upon to overrule. The only point which the Appellants have argued on this occasion was that which no doubt goes to the root of the matter, viz, whether the gift was invalid under the law of marz ul-mout. The test which was treated as decisive of this point in both Courts was, Was the deed of gift executed by Dadar Buksh under apprehension of death? This, which appears to their Lordships to be the right question, is essentially one of fact, and of the weight and credibility of evidence upon which a Court of review can never be in quite as good a position to form an opinion as the Court of first instance, and it would probably be enough to prevent this Board from interfering if it should appear that there was evidence such as might justify either view without any clear preponderance of probability. Their Lordships are, however, clearly of opinion that the reasons given both by the Subordinate Judge and by the High Court, which they will not repeat, establish a large preponderance of probability in favour of the conclusion at which they both arrived.

Their Lordshps will therefore humbly

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA.]

LORD ROBERTSON.	MA WUN DI and anr., Appellants,
LORD COLLINS.	v.
SIR ARTHUR WILSON.	MA KIN and ors., Respondents.
1907. 2, December.

Marriage—Presumption arising from cohabitation with habit and repute—Conditions precedent to its application—Practice—Point not submitted to either Court in India raised before the Privy Council.

Before applying the general presumption of marriage arising from cohabitation with habit and repute it is necessary to make sure that there are the conditions necessary for its existence, viz., firstly, there must be some body of neighbours, many or few, or some sort of public, large or small, before repute can arise; and, secondly, the habit and repute, which alone is effective, is habit and repute of that particular status which, in the country in question, is lawful marriage.

The differences between English and Oriental customs about the relations of the sexes made such caution specially necessary in the present case.

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee declined to entertain a point urged by the Appellants as being covered by the language of one of the issues raised in the case when it appeared that the parties by their conduct of the case had construed it in a narrower sense.

Appeal from a decree of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, dated 19th March 1906, affirming on appeal a decree of the District Court of Amherst at Moulmein, dated 27th June 1905, which dismissed the Appellants' suit with costs.

Maung Gale, the disposition of whose property was the subject of the appeal, was by religion a Buddhist, and was a native of and domiciled in Burma. Up to 1887 he resided in Moulmein with his wife, Ma Kin, the first Respondent, and his five children, the remaining Respondents. In that year he went to Chiengmai (Timmé) in the Siamese Shan States where he traded with money sent by his brother, Maung Tha Hnyin, and with the exception of expeditions into the teak forests and occasional visits to Moulmein, he lived there until his death in July 1894. On his death his estate was taken possession of by H. B. M. Consul in Siam, and was shortly afterwards made over to the deceased's brother, Tha Hnyin, who retained possession of the whole. Subsequently his wife, Ma Kin, who had continued to reside in Moulmein, was, in 1898, appointed administratrix of his estate by the Courts in Burma, and she shortly afterwards commenced proceedings against Tha Hnyin for recovery of the deceased's property—which ultimately became the subject of appeal to His Majesty in Council—and the action was compromised by the payment, on 1st July 1902, by Tha Hnyin to the first Respondent as such administratix, of

MA WUN DI v. MA KIN.

Rs. 53,000. Shortly afterwards the first Appellant, Ma 'Wun Di, claimed her share, as one of his widows, and the share of her son, the second Appellant, Maung Myat Pu, from the first Respondent, as administratrix, and on 27th January 1905 commenced the suit, now under appeal, in the District Court of Amherst in Lower Burma against the Respondents as Defendants. The Appellants alleged in their plaint that the first Appellant was lawfully married to Maung Gale at Chiengmai in 1887, where she lived and cohabited with him and assisted him in his business until his death, that the second Appellant was the only child of Maung Gale and the first Appellant, that according to Burmese Buddhist Law the Appellants were entitled to a half share of Maung Gale's estate, and that the first Appellant had applied to the first Respondent for payment of the same, but the first Respondent denied that the Appellants were heirs of Maung Gale or entitled to any share of his property. The Appellants, therefore, prayed that it might be declared that they were respectively a widow and son of Maung Gale, and that as such they were entitled to a half share of his estate; consequential relief was also asked for.

The first Respondent in her written statement put in issue the allegations of the Appellants. She alleged that the first Appellant was not the wife of Maung Gale but that her status was only that of one of numerous concubines taken by him from time to time during his stay in Siamese territory, most of whom were discarded by him some time before his death, and that the first Respondent would herself have been discarded by Maung Gale had he not died before he could carry out his intention. The first Respondent also stated that she had heard that Maung Gale had a child by the first Appellant but that she had never seen the child and she put the first Appellant to proof of the fact that the second Appellant was the child in question. She further alleged that neither of the Appellants was entitled to receive anything out of Maung Gale's estate but were only entitled to retain what he gave them during his lifetime, and asserted that for the past fifty years it had been the practice of Moulmein foresters to take to themselves women of the country when visiting and residing in Siamese territory, but never, so far as she could ascertain, had the children of such women been considered legitimate children entitled to inherit.

Of the five issues fixed by the District Judge it is necessary to mention the following three only :—I. Whether the first Plaintiff, Ma Wun Di, was the legally married wife of Maung Gale? II. Whether the second Plaintiff, Maung Myat Pu, was the legitimate son of the late Maung Gale? III. Whether either or both Plaintiffs are entitled to a share in the estate left by Maung Gale? And, if so, to what share? And to what share are the heirs entitled?

The District Judge decided that the first Appellant was not the legally married wife of Maung Gale and that the second Appellant was not his legitimate son. He considered that as a result of his findings on the first two issues it was not necessary to go into the other issues and dismissed the Appellants' suit with costs. In the course of his judgment he observed as follows :—

"I am not satisfied that any wedding ceremony as alleged took place. Had any ceremony taken place it would have been done on a grand scale. Maung Gale's servant Maung Nyein would undoubtedly, as alleged, have been present and would have given it as the first proof of Ma Wun Di being Maung Gale's wife instead of stating as he did that he knew she was Maung Gale's wife "because they lived together, eat together, slept together, and went about together. Holding that there was no wedding ceremony the next point to consider is the conduct and relationship of Maung Gale and Ma Wun Di. On this point it is admitted that Maung Gale kept three other Shan girls in the same house with Ma Wun Di. That each occupied a separate room and that Maung Gale divided his attention amongst them, sometimes eating and sleeping with one and sometimes with the others The witnesses one and all say that Maung Gale acknowledged Ma Wun Di as his wife and that she was regarded as such by the public. Now, it is impossible to believe that had Ma Wun Di been the acknowledged wife of Maung Gale (a man who lived like a prince) that he would have kept her in the same house and on the same level with three other women who were admittedly concubines and made her subordinate to a servant like Maung Bin. Again Maung Gale's letter Exhibit I proves clearly that he only regarded Ma Wun Di as a temporary mistress or "monkey wife" and that he intended to discard her like the others when he returned to Moulmein. Not only as the events which occurred during the lifetime of Maung Gale prove that Ma Wun Di was nothing more than a temporary mistress, but the subsequent conduct of Maung Shwe On and Ma Wun Di on his death corroborate the same and prove conclusively that not only was she not regarded by the public as the legal wife of Maung Gale, but that even she herself did not consider herself as such. The learned Advocate Maung Chit Hlaing lays great stress on the documents Exhibits A and B. It is true that in these documents Ma Wun Di is described as the wife of Maung Gale, and at first sight they appear to be strong proof of Maung Gale having acknowledged her publicly as his wife. Ordinarily they would be; but when one comes to consider the circumstances of the present case, and that it is the custom for Burman foresters to take on a temporary mistress or "monkey wife" during their stay in Siam, I do not think any importance can be attached to the entries. For the above reasons I am satisfied that Ma Wun Di was merely a "monkey wife" or temporary mistress of Maung Gale and not his legal wife. For the above reasons issues one and two are decided in the negative. On the finding of the first two issues it is unnecessary to go into the other issues."

The Chief Court of Lower Burma on appeal by the Appellants affirmed the judgment and decree of the District Judge. The judgment as far as it is material to this report was as follows :—

"The learned Advocate for Appellants has referred to the well-known principle, that the presumption of marriage arising from cohabitation with habit and repute can be rebutted only by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence. It would in my opinion be quite unreasonable to allow this presumption to arise or have any weight in the case of a woman who enters into a union with a man with her eyes open to the fact that the man has already a legally married wife. It is not forbidden to a Burman Buddhist to have two wives at the same time; but it is universally conceded that the leading principle of Buddhism is rather monogamy than polygamy, that polygamy is rare, and that it is considered disrespectable On the contrary, I should be inclined to say that if a woman, cohabits with a Burman, whom she knows to be the lawful husband of another woman, the presumption is that she is a mistress and not a wife, and I would add that the presumption is strengthened, if, as in the present case, the cohabitation is behind the back and without the knowledge of the first wife.

"The Appellants place much reliance on two documents. One is a certificate of nationality as a British subject of Maung Gale, in which under the heading "Names of female relations living with Maung Gale" is entered "Ma Wun Di, wife." The other is a decree of a Siamese Court for money against Maung Gale, husband, and Ma Wun Di, wife. I do not think that these documents offered a very strong inference that the relation of husband and wife actually existed.

"On the whole I think that the evidence is quite as consistent, and in fact more consistent with concubinage than with marriage. The conduct of Ma Wun Di subsequent to the death of Maung Gale raises the strongest inference that she did not regard herself as having the status of wife. She allowed the whole of Maung Gale's property to be taken possession of first by the British Consul, and then by Maung Gale's relations from Moulmein, without raising a protest. Though Maung Gale died in 1894, and though a law suit was going on about his estate for many years, she never intervened, and it was not till 1902, eight years after Maung Gale's death, and after she had herself married again, that she took any steps to assert her rights as a married woman or to obtain a share of his estate.

"As regards Maung Gale it is very clear from his letter to his wife in Moulmein —Ex I—which was written in 1890, three years after he had united with Ma Wun Di, that he did not regard Ma Wun Di as having the status of a wife.

"There is much evidence on the record that shows that it is customary for Burman foresters from Moulmein, who have to spend long periods in Siam on business, to take concubines in that country. One witness states that these girls can be got for Rs. 5 or 10 each Maung Gale was a special sinner in this respect. At the same time he would have five or six concubines, all under the age of 16. Several of these lived in the same house as Ma Wun Di, and the evidence does not convince me that she differed in any way from them, except that she may have been the head of the harem."

The Appellants, thereupon, appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Roskill, K. C. and Mr. J. W. McCarthy for the Appellants.—In both of the lower Courts the onus of proof of the marriage was thrown on the Appellants. But where a man and woman are proved to have lived together as man and wife, the law will presume, unless the contrary be clearly proved, that they were living together in consequence of a valid marriage, and not in a state of concubinage: Sastry Velaider Aronegary v. Sembecutty Vaigalie (1). There is undisputed evidence in this case proving that the first Appellant and the deceased lived together as man and wife, and therefore a valid marriage must be presumed. That presumption shifts on the Respondents the onus of clearly proving that there was no valid marriage in this case. But the Respondents have not adduced any such evidence to rebut that presumption and therefore the lower Courts were wrong in deciding, as they did that there was no marriage between the first Appellant and the deceased. Again, the Chief Court expressly held that such a presumption could not arise or have any weight in the present case. But it is submitted that that finding is wrong, because the presumption of marriage from cohabitation with habit and repute does arise in a country where concubinage is not considered immoral: Sastry Velaider Aronegary v. Sembecutty Vaigalie (1). Evidence shows that the position occupied by the first Appellant was quite different from that of other women in the house in Siam, where she was treated as a wife. She is described as wife in two official documents. One of them is a certificate of nationality issued from the British consulate at Chiengmai, under the hand and seal of the Vice-Consul, to Maung Gale as a British subject, which was renewed in 1891, wherein the first Appellant is described as wife, and none of the other women were so described. The other document is a copy of the judgment in a suit in the International Court at Chiengmai, carried on appeal to the Court of Appeal at Bangkok, in which the deceased and the first Appellant were sued as joint Defendants and as husband and wife. An experienced writer, late of Education Department, Siam, describing Siamese wedding says:—"No registers are signed and no official record of events is made. . . . . The whole ceremony above described is only observed in the case of the first or chief wife, who always remains the legal head of her husband's household. Other wives are merely bought as so much merchandise, all formality being omitted except such as attends the payment of the purchase money. Polygamy is extensively practised amongst the higher classes, but it is controlled in the case of the poor by the fact that a man must not have more wives than he can keep. . . . . No disgrace of any kind is attended to the condition of a subordinate wife, but she does not hold a high social position. Very often she inhabits a house separated from that in which the head wife resides. Upon the death of the husband her children are legally entitled to a share of the property, but they do not share on equal terms with the children of the first wife. Then too, a bought wife can be sold or given away, while the head wife can only be divorced. It sometimes happens that a

NOTES.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL CASE OF Bibi Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra, which was reported at p. 169 of the present volume of this journal, decides an important point of law as to the amount of Court-fee payable in a declaratory suit. The Plaintiff had preferred a claim to certain properties which were attached in execution of a decree obtained against her vendor. Her claim having been rejected by the execution Court, she instituted a suit under sec. 283, C. C. P., and prayed for a declaration of her title and possession of those properties and for a permanent injunction on the decree-holder not to execute his decree against the said properties. She paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 for the declaration and a further sum of Rs. 10 for the permanent injunction. Both the Subordinate Judge and the High Court held that the Plaintiff's suit was not only for a declaration but also for consequential relief inasmuch as the Plaintiff asked for a permanent injunction, and rejected the plaint as being insufficiently stamped, as ad valorem fee on the value of the decree was not paid.

IN ONE SENSE IT MIGHT BE SAID THAT THE PLAINTIFF'S prayer for a permanent injunction was a prayer for consequential relief. But their Lordships of the Judicial Committee overruling the decisions of the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts held that there was really no prayer for consequential relief. Their Lordships observed, "for the right determination of the question at issue it is necessary to ascertain what are the object and the nature of the suit." As the real object of the suit was to set aside a summary decision of the execution Court which rejected the claim preferred by the Plaintiff to the attached properties, the Court fee payable was held to be Rs. 10 in accordance with the first head of Art 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act. Here the Plaintiff's prayer for permanent injunction was held not to have changed the nature of the suit and the Plaintiff was required to pay the amount of Court-fee he would have to pay if such an injunction was not asked for.

THERE IS ANOTHER FEATURE IN THE CASE WHICH deserves notice. The Plaintiff herself misconceived the nature of her suit. She regarded the prayer for permanent injunction as a prayer for a distinct relief which it was necessary for her to ask in the suit and for which she paid a Court fee of Rs. 10 apart from the declaration sought for in the suit. Still she was not held bound to pay the proper Court-fee for the relief by way of injunction. Her prayer for injunction was held to be superfluous.

SUPPOSE AFTER A HAS OBTAINED A DECREE AGAINST B on a mortgage-bond and attached the mortgaged properties in execution of a decree, B brings a suit for a declaration that the mortgage-bond was forged and that the decree was fraudulent and he asks for a permanent injunction upon the decree-holder mortgagee not to execute the decree against the mortgaged properties. The question arises what is the amount of the Court-fee payable in this suit. The answer to this depends upon the question whether the prayer for a permanent injunction is a prayer for consequential relief or not. Here it might be said that the real object of the suit is to have it declared that the mortgage-bond and the decree obtained upon it are void and inoperative. If this object is gained by the suit, there would ordinarily be no further necessity for a permanent injunction upon the decree-holder not to execute his decree. For if the decree be declared to be void, there would remain nothing to be executed.

BUT IN THE CASE OF Umatul Batul v. Nanji Kuar, reported at p. 705 of 11 C. W. Notes, it was held in a similar case that the Court-fee payable is an ad valorem fee on the value of the decree against whose execution the injunction was asked for. But it might be argued following the line of reasoning adopted in the Privy Council case that the prayer for an injunction was superfluous in this case also and therefore it should not have been taken into account in determining the amount of Court-fee leviable on the plaint. But once it is admitted that the prayer was not superfluous, the observation of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee at p. 174, (bottom of col. 1 and top of col. 2) leaves hardly any room for doubt that the prayer for a permanent injunction is a prayer for consequential relief and should be valued and paid for accordingly.

IN THE CASE OF Gajadhar Mahto v. Raghubar Gope, reported at p. 60 of the current volume of this journal, it was held that if A sues B, his co-sharer, for contribution for a certain sum of money paid by him on behalf of the co-sharer to discharge a decree for rent obtained by the landlord against both A and B, B can set-off previous payments made by him on behalf of A to discharge previous decrees obtained by the landlord against A and B, even though the claims of B for contribution against A in respect of these payments are barred by limitation. The reasons assigned in the judgment are: "It is true that at the time when the Plaintiffs (A) made payments in satisfaction of the decree in 1899, the remedy of the Defendants (B) at law to recover from the Plaintiffs the sums which they had previously paid was barred by limitation. But though the remedy might have been barred the right to the debt was not extinguished." If this view of the admissibility of a claim for a set-off be correct then a Defendant when sued by the Plaintiff for a debt can successfully set-off any debt due to him from the Plaintiff even though his claim has been barred long before the Plaintiff's suit.

SUPPOSE A IS INDEBTED TO B, BUT THE CLAIM OF B is barred by limitation. B then somehow or other manages to take a loan from A and refuses to repay the debt. If A sues B for the debt, B will escape his liability to repay the debt by pleading that long before he took the loan from A, A took a loan from him which was never paid. We doubt whether such a view of the law of set-off as laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure is correct. Sec. 111, C. C. P., expressly lays down that the Defendant's claim of set-off must consist of an ascertained sum of money legally recoverable by him from the Plaintiff. If the claim of the Defendant against the Plaintiff be barred by limitation, how is it legally recoverable from the Plaintiff? Moreover it has been held that a set-off can only be successfully pleaded when an action could have been maintained for the same debt, see Rawley v. Rawley, 1 Q. B. D. 469 and Heera Lal v. Bishen Sahay, 2 W. R. 296. Again a claim to set-off is treated as a cross-suit and the Defendant can recover a decree against the Plaintiff if the amount of the set-off exceeds the demand of the Plaintiff. This also shows that a claim to set-off, in order to be operative, must be pleaded within the period of limitation.

NO DOUBT CASES MAY BE IMAGINED IN WHICH THE question of limitation regarding a claim for set-off may not arise, as where in the course of the same transaction continuing for a long time demands and cross-demands arise between the parties and the amount to which one of the parties is equitably entitled as against the other can be ascertained only after striking out a balance between the demands and cross-demands. But in the case under notice the question of set-off did not arise in the course of one continuous transaction involving demands and cross-demands. Nor did the Court base the decision on such a view of the relation between the parties. The claim of the Defendants in the case was treated as an outstanding debt due from the Plaintiff, the right to recover which at law was however barred by limitation.

This small hand-book makes no pretence to be an original work on Jurisprudence but is a careful analysis of the subject from the point of view of different schools of jurists. The introduction is lucid and ably written and will be useful to students first taking up the study of this subject. It is by no means a 'cram-book' and we can thoroughly recommend it, not as a substitute for well-known text-books, but as an aid and addition to the study of the latter.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Rawsthorne v Rowley. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and LORDS JUSTICES FLETCHER MOULTON and FARWELL. 7th November 1907.

Trustees retaining authorised securities—Duty to investigate title.

In 1873 one Miss Mangnall advanced £3,000 to one Mr. A. B. Rowley on the security of a deposit of deeds relating to certain freehold plots, &c. The loan was not to be called in for 5 years, but Mr. A. B. Rowley was to be allowed to repay the sum at any time on giving 3 months' notice. In 1874 Miss Mangnall married and she made a settlement of the £3,000 and the Defendant, W. T. Rowley (a brother of the debtor) and another person, now deceased, were made trustees. The money and the securities were assigned to the trustees upon trust to permit and allow the £3,000 to remain on the particular security, for five years or for such longer period as the trustees should deem proper or in case the amount should have been repaid upon trust for investment. In 1894 Mr. A. B. Rowley's firm stopped payment and it was subsequently discovered that he had parted with one half of the premises covered by the security. This was an action by the beneficiaries under the trust for a declaration that the trustees had been guilty of a breach of trust in permitting the sum to remain invested in the security.

Held, reversing the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster, that in retaining authorised securities, there was no duty or obligation on the part of the trustees to make further investigation as to the title of the security or the solvency of the mortgagor, if the trustees were acting in good faith and there were no circumstances to raise suspicion. In this case Mr. W. T. Rowley had acted honestly and he could not be held liable.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Lewis and Lewis v. Durnford. Before MR. JUSTICE SWINFEN EADY, 8th November 1907.

Contract in restraint of trade—Solicitor's clerk, bond by, not to act for firm's clients for five years—Reasonable restriction.

The Defendant was for 12 years, up till August 1906, employed as Chancery and Conveyancing clerk to the Plaintiffs who were a firm of Solicitors. This was an application by the Plaintiffs for an injunction to restrain the Defendant till judgment or further order from acting as Solicitor for any corporation or for any person or persons who were in the month of August 1906, or had been within five years previous thereto, a client of the Plaintiffs' firm. The application was based on a bond given by the Defendant in 1901, whereby he undertook inter alia not to solicit by letter or otherwise the business of, or act for, any person who was "for the time being or who had within five years previously been a client of the firm." The question was as to the construction of the bond and whether the stipulation was enforceable.

Held—That the covenant referred to persons who should be clients of the Plaintiffs not at the time of the Defendant's acting for them but at the time when his engagement with the Plaintiffs ended or within five years before that time and that it was not wider than necessary for the protection of Plaintiffs' very considerable practice by restricting one who had been in their confidential employment and had had frequent opportunities of becoming acquainted with their clients and their clients' affairs, from acting contrary to their interests. Breaches of the covenant were not disputed and the parties having agreed to treat the hearing as the trial of the action, a perpetual injunction was granted against the Defendant.

Mr. Eve, K. C., and Mr. Meyrick Beebee for the the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Dunckwerts, K. C, and Mr. Austen Cartwell for the Defendant.

Suit decreed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re Sidney, Hengeston v. Sidney. Before MR. JUSTICE SWINFEN EADY. 31st October 1907.

Gift for "charitable or emigration uses"—Uncertainty.

The question in this case was whether a bequest by the testator John Sidney of all his estate not otherwise disposed of, upon trust for such charitable uses or such emigration uses or partly for such charitable uses and partly for such emigration uses as the executors in their absolute and uncontrolled discretion might think fit, was a good charitable gift.

Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady in delivering judgment observed following, Hunter v. Attorney-General, (1899) A. C. 309, that a bequest which was made for a charitable purpose and also for an indefinite purpose not charitable without any indication as to possible apportionment is wholly void. The present gift again could not be supported on the ground that the words used meant and should be limited to a gift for the benefit of the poor with a view to emigration by assisting them directly or indirectly to emigrate nor was it good as being for public benefit. Emigration was not a thing confined to the poor and he was not prepared to say that it was for the good of the community. The gift was vague and indefinite and not a good charitable gift.

Mr. Macnaghten, K. C., and Mr. J. E. G. De Montmorency appeared for the next of kin.

Mr. George Lawrence for the Attorney-General.

Mr. James Rolt for the executors.

PROBATE, DIVORCE & ADM. DIVISION.—Lewis v. Lewis & ors. Before MR. JUSTICE BARGRAVE DEANE. 4th November 1907.

Will—Execution—Separate sheets.

The question in this case was whether the Will of David Lewis, deceased, was properly executed and arose upon an application for the revocation of letters of administration cum testamento annexo granted to the applicant. The Will consisted of two sheets of paper. The testator in writing out these sheets stated at the top of the first sheet as also at the bottom of the second that the writing was his Will. The evidence of the attesting witnesses was that the testator held the two sheets together in his hand and did not let go of them whilst they were being signed on the second sheet and they became separated subsequently. His Lordship held that the Will was properly executed.

As to costs, it was urged that the testator was to blame and the costs should come out of the estate. It appeared that the applicant made the application for revocation after having herself taken out administration because she had been advised that an intestacy would suit her better. At the same time his Lordship thought the case was a proper one for enquiry. No order was made as to costs.

Mr. Barnard, K. C., and Mr. Gwynne Hall for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Atkin, K. C., and Mr. Griffith Jones for the Defendants.

Suit dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD ROBERTSON.	FISCHER, Petitioner,
LORD COLLINS.	Appellant,
SIR ARTHUR WILSON.	v.
1907.	GOPALASAMI and others,
18th November.	Respondents.

Privy Council—Appeal—Appealable value—Indirectly affecting property of large value—Claim of landlord to tree-tax—Leave granted on terms.

This was an application for special leave to appeal in the matter of twelve appeals under the circumstances following:—

The Petitioner who is a mittadar of Salem, in the years 1899 and 1900 instituted 11 suits in the Court of the Deputy Collector of Salem under sec. 9 of the Madras Act, No. VIII of 1865, against the Respondents to enforce the acceptance by them of certain pottahs or leases. The Respondent, Gopalasami Chettiar, had in the year 1897 instituted a suit in the said Court against the Petitioner and his predecessor in-title to challenge the validity of the pottahs tendered to him for the year 1305 Fasli. The principle question involved in all those suits was whether the Petitioner was entitled to insert a covenant in the said pottahs for the Respondents to pay a "tree-tax" in addition to the rent per acre fixed on the lands of tenants at the time of the permanent settlement. The "tree-tax" claimed by the Petitioner was a "charge for every fruit tree coming into bearing as well as for every palmyra tree whose leaves are useful for thatching, growing on the pottah land of a tenant as soon as the tree comes into bearing or yields useful leaves as the case may be" and that claim was founded on the custom of the mitta. All the suits were tried together and the evidence was recorded in one case as a "test suit" the Deputy Collector stating that "the fullest opportunities had been given to both sides to produce whatever evidence they might have bearing on the issue and as a result, when these suits were decided finally in the Appellate Court, a vexed question of the Salem mitta would be settled as a large body of the tenants would be bound by the decision. On 1st December 1900 the Deputy Collector delivered his judgment and decided that the custom set up was proved and that it was ancient, continued, certain and reasonable and was valid and binding on the tenants. He also decided that so far as the custom related to trees grown with the water from well sunk at the tenants' expense after the year 1865 it could not be enforced under sec. 11 of Madras Act VIII of 1865. Against that decision there were cross-appeals in the District Court of Salem. On 24th December 1901 the District Judge delivered a judgment which governed all the appeals and decided that "a custom of levying a tree-tax on pottah lands over and above the land rent has existed in the Salem mitta from the earliest times of which we have any evidence." He concluded as follows:—"I find that tree-tax in some form or other was levied before settlement and that the method of doubling the land tax was not then unknown, that in the Mitta of Salem and the mittas adjoining tree-tax was levied from the time of the settlement onwards at various rates and in different ways and that a custom exists in the Salem Mitta attaching to each contract for rent a contract to pay tree-tax. I find however that such custom cannot under the present law be enforced so as to deprive a tenant of the benefit of his own improvements and that therefore where the improvement was made after 1865 the tenant is not bound to pay tree-tax for trees raised by means of it and I find that a contract not to pay the tax cannot be inferred from its non-enforcement by the zemindar." Against that decision the Petitioner and the Respondents filed second appeals in the High Court of Judicature at Madras. That Court affirmed the construction placed by the Courts below on the said sec. 11 and reversed the findings in regard to the custom and held that an "implied contract" to pay the "tree-tax" could only be inferred from the acts of the particular tenant charged and not from the fact of payments made by other tenants. The High Court on 8th October 1906 dismissed the Petitioner's application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council by an order in terms following. "The amount of tree-tax involved in each of these twelve suits varies from Rs. 1-2 to Rs. 36 per annum the total of the amount in all twelve suits is only Rs. 189. It is therefore clear that even if the appeals be consolidated the value of the subject-matter is far less than Rs. 10,000. The vakil for the Petitioner however says that 'indirectly' the appeal involves a question respecting property of that amount as a number of other suits were decided in accordance with the decision of the High Court in these twelve suits. The vague affidavit however which has been filed does not show this. It says that tree-tax collections in the mitta amount to Rs. 1,500 per annum but that is no guide as to the sum that is affected by the decision since in many cases these payments are the result of contract express or implied or of decrees after litigation and will not be affected by the decision against which leave to appeal is now sought. We cannot therefore give leave to appeal on the ground that the conditions of sec. 596, Civil Procedure Code, are complied with. Then we are asked to give leave on the ground stated in sec. 595 (c), viz., that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. We do not think that the decision does more than apply the laws as previously laid down by this Court and the hardship would be great if the Defendant whose interest is in each case only a few rupees should be compelled to go to the expense of resisting an appeal to the Privy Council in order to maintain the decree. In these circumstances we refuse to give leave to appeal in any of these twelve cases." The Petitioner, thereupon, made the present application.

Mr. DeGruyther for the Petitioner.—The High Court had no jurisdiction under sec. 584 of the Civil Procedure Code on second appeal to reverse the finding of the District Judge that a custom was proved imposing on each tenant a liability to pay tree-tax. The construction placed by the Courts in India on sec. 11 of the Madras Act VIII of 1865 is erroneous and that the matter raised is one of general public importance. The decision of the question whether or not the custom alleged is proved affects not only all the tenants in this mitta, but also the landlords and tenants of several adjoining mittas and the settlement of the question is one of general public importance as stated by the Deputy Collector who tried these cases. The Petitioner instituted 12 cases in which the total amount claimed as tree-tax even if capitalised does not exceed Rs. 10,000, but if he had gone to the expense of instituting a very large number of other suits so as to make the capitalised value of the aggregate amount claimed by him in such suits a sum of money exceeding Rs. 10,000 he would have been entitled to appeal as of right inasmuch as the amount directly involved in the appeal would have exceeded the appealable amount. The amount claimed by the Petitioner as tree-tax amounts to Rs. 1,500 per annum and the practical effect of the judgment of the High Court will be to deprive him of the said amount so that indirectly the present appeal does involve 'a claim or question to or respecting property' more than Rs. 10,000 in value, thus fulfilling the requirements of sec. 596 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Petitioner would abide in any event by such order as to costs of the appeals as your Lordships on the determination of the appeal should think fit to make.

Leave granted upon the Petitioner depositing £300 as security for costs to be paid in any event. Appeals consolidated.

TEJA SINGH, Petitioner, Appellant,
v.
BOBA BICHITRA SINGH, Respondent.

Leave to appeal—Substantial question of law—Succession to Mutt—Mohunt—Chela.

This was an application for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the following circumstances:—

In the city of Patna there is a Sikh temple known as Sri Harmandilji built upon the spot where the tenth of the Sikh Gurus was born. It has always been in the possession and management of a mohunt or spiritual head each mohunt having the power to nominate his successor, and in default of appointment the succession is (as the Petitioner submits) governed by a sort of spiritual descent. In the year 1797 Newal Singh mohunt appointed Dyal Singh as his successor and in 1832 Dyal Singh appointed Sukha Singh to succeed him and in 1861 Sukha Singh exercised a power of appointment in favour of Didar Singh. On the death of Sukha Singh disputes arose in regard to the succession. Under the provisions of Act XX of 1863 the District Judge of Patna appointed Genda Singh temporary manager of the affairs of the temple. Didar Singh sued Genda Singh for possession of the temple as mohunt but on 17th July 1872 his suit was dismissed by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal on the ground that he was not a person capable of being appointed mohunt. In default of appointment by the last mohunt Genda Singh succeeded to the mohuntship and as such remained in possession till the date of his death when Dharm Singh whom he had nominated as successor became mohunt. On 1st March 1880 Dharm Singh executed a document nominating the Petitioner as his successor and died in November 1894. On 9th October 1882 the District Judge of Patna acting under the provisions of Act XX of 1863 removed Dharm Singh from the management of the temple and appointed Sumer Singh as manager and after Sumer Singh's death he appointed Dalip Singh on 22nd June 1903. On 11th September 1903 the Petitioner instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna against Dalip Singh to recover possession as mohunt of the temple basing his title on the nomination made by Dharm Singh and on apostolic succession as chela of Genda Singh. Dalip Singh having resigned the post of manager in November 1903 the District Judge of Patna appointed the Respondent in his place. On 30th July 1904 the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment and made a decree dismissing the Petitioner's suit holding that Genda Singh was not mohunt of the temple but only manager, that he had no power to appoint the Petitioner, that the appointment of the Petitioner was in fact made by Dharm Singh, and that there was no satisfactory and reliable evidence that the Petitioner was the chela of Genda Singh and that he was disqualified from office being a widower and a pardeshi. Against that decree the Petitioner appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal but the High Court by a decree, dated 20th December 1905, dismissed his appeal and found that Genda Singh claimed to be mohunt as of right, that he acted as such and performed the functions of mohunt without opposition except from Didar Singh and that his nominee Dharm Singh succeeded him without any objection but that there being nothing before the Court to indicate that he was legally or regularly appointed in accordance with the custom of the Mutt. The High Court further held that the nomination of the Petitioner was invalidated by the removal of Dharm Singh from the management, that the Petitioner had not proved a custom of the Mutt for a chela to succeed as mohunt in default of appointment and that he had not proved that he was a chela of Genda Singh. The High Court was lastly of opinion that the suit was barred by limitation. On 20th December 1905 the Petitioner applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council but his application was rejected by the High Court by an order, dated 10th August 1906, which after deciding that the subject-matter of the appeal was considerably over Rs. 10,000 in value proceeded in terms following:—"No doubt the appeal raises certain questions which may be taken to be of considerable importance to the parties to the suit but we are unable to say on the conclusions of fact arrived at by this Court that they are substantial questions of law within the meaning of the last paragraph of sec. 596 of the Civil Procedure Code. We may add without discussing any of those questions that if the Plaintiff had been rightly found by this Court not be chela of Genda Singh and if the Plaintiff's cause of action arose upon the removal of Dharm Singh from the office of mohunt and that if the ekrarnama by which the Plaintiff was nominated to be the next mohunt became unfructuous by reason of such removal of Dharm Singh it is difficult to see how the decision of this Court when it holds that the Plaintiff has no right to succeed and that his claim is barred by limitation involves a substantial question of law within the meaning of sec. 596." The Petitioner, thereupon, made the present application to His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal.

Mr. DeGruyther for the Petitioner.—The appeal involves many substantial questions of law, e.g., (a) whether the suit is barred by limitation, i.e., whether the cause of action arose on the removal of Dharm Singh in the year 1882 or on his death in 1894; (b) whether the removal of a mohunt under the provisions of the Act XX of 1863 invalidates the nomination of a successor to the mohuntship with the effect of putting an end to the office for ever; (c) the determination of the true nature and effect of the appointment of a manager under the said Act. The evidence to prove that the Petitioner was the chela of Genda Singh is sworn to by respectable witnesses and there is no evidence on the other side. The High Court has relied on the heading of a plaint in which the Petitioner is described as "chela of mohunt Dharm Singh," although in a deposition in the said suit the Petitioner stated that he was the "chela of Genda Singh" The High Court wrongly admitted in evidence in appeal a deposition of Dharm Singh which is not clear but from which an inference is drawn that Dharm Singh said that the Petitioner was his chela. The Petitioner even if he were the chela of Dharm Singh would be entitled to succeed on Dharm Singh's death. The result of the decisions of the Courts in India is that the temple is left in perpetuity without a mohunt.

Leave granted.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISIONAL No. 1254 OF 1907. PROBHAT CHANDRA CHOWDHURY, Petitioner v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite party. 17th December 1907.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), secs. 14 and 19 (f)—Possession of a gun—Meaning of.

The Petitioner was convicted under sec. 19 (f) of the Arms Act (XI of 1878) and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 5. The gun which was used by the Petitioner belonged to a gentleman named Rajendra Narain Chowdhury who had been exempted from the operation of the Arms Act. He is now in England. His gun seems to have been left by him with his brother. The Petitioner was the cousin of these two gentlemen. On the 30th March last a mad dog entered the compound of the bari of the Petitioner; and he seized a gun which was in the hands of one R, a servant, and fired at the dog. Unfortunately he missed the animal, but a shot from the gun wounded a man. For this the Petitioner was convicted, under sec. 304A, I. P. C., and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 300 and to detention in Court for one day. The Sessions Judge, on appeal, reduced the fine to Rs. 100.

The Petitioner was then again prosecuted under sec. 19 (f) of Act XI of 1878, convicted and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 5.

Against this conviction and sentence the Petitioner obtained the present rule.

Their Lordships observed :—

"The Petitioner is not liable under the provisions of sec. 19 (f) of the Act. The provisions of sec. 19 (f) do not make the mere possession of a gun punishable; they make possession contrary to the provisions of sec. 14 of that Act punishable; and we agree with the learned Counsel who appears for the Petitioner that the temporary possession which the Petitioner had of the gun when he snatched it up and fired it was not the possession contemplated by sec. 14."

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1396 OF 1907 ADOM SHEIK, Petitioner v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 17th January 1908.

Bad livelihood—Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 110 and 118—Sureties—Whether inability to control the accused is a ground for refusing.

In a proceeding instituted against the Petitioner under sec 110, Cr. P. C., he was ordered under sec. 118, Cr. P. C., to furnish security for good behaviour by entering into a bond for Rs. 200 with two sureties of Rs. 200 each. Thereupon two persons offered themselves to stand sureties for the Petitioner. The trying Deputy Magistrate asked the Police to make enquiries as to their fitness to be sureties. The Police reported that they were men of substance but expressed a doubt as to whether they would be able to keep the Petitioner under control. The Deputy Magistrate on the receipt of this report passed the following order :—

"The accused had been arrested in a dacoity case. He appears to be a dangerous character and I am of opinion that the applicants are not fit persons to be his sureties. The spirit of the rulings in 1895 Allahabad W. R. 143 and I L. R (?) Allahabad 751 forbids acceptance of sureties who would not be able to control the accused—a thing which I do not consider the sureties capable of. Petition rejected."

Against this order an application was made to the Sessions Judge who by his order, dated the 6th June last, declined to interfere.

This rule was issued against the order of the lower Courts refusing to accept the sureties.

It was contended on behalf of the Petitioner that the order of the lower Court is opposed to the rulings of the Calcutta High Court reported in 6 C. W. N. 593 and 4 C. W. N. 797.

Their Lordships held :—

The Magistrate was not justified in refusing the sureties on the ground that they would not be able to control the Petitioner. The rulings of the Allahabad High Court on which the Magistrate relied are opposed to the rulings of the Calcutta High Court reported in 6 C. W. N. 593 and 4 C. W. N. 797.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER NO 68 OF 1907. RAJ KISHORE DE SARKAR, Appellant v. DINA NATH CHANDRA AND ANOTHER, Respondents. 2nd January 1908

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 99—Purchase by decree-holder—Confirmation of sale—Application to set aside—Procedure.

One of the two properties sold was under mortgage to one of the decree-holders and, in contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the properties were sold. That was in 1903. In 1906, the judgment-debtors applied to have the sale set aside and one of the grounds urged on their behalf was that the sale was bad, it having been held in contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Court below disallowed the objection. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Held—That the sale is voidable, if held in contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is not absolutely void. The judgment-debtor whose property is sold may ask for the sale being set aside on the ground that the property was mortgaged to the decree-holder, if he applies before the sale is confirmed. After confirmation of the sale, he would be an applicant under sec. 244 of the Code and, in order to enable him to ask that sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act might be applied, it is necessary for him to show that he had no knowledge of the sale proceedings and that he was prevented from such knowledge by means of fraud. But if he failed to make out a case of fraud or any of grounds which would entitle him to plead the same right which he had before confirmation, the sale could not be set aside.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 158 OF 1907. GOBIND CHUNDER CHANDRA, Appellant v. ABHOY CHURAN BAGCHI AND ANOTHER, Respondents. 2nd January 1908.

Mistake of Court—Power to rectify—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), sec. 244—Sale certificate, mistake in—Possession, delivery of.

Two properties were advertised for sale. The properties were separate and the sale took place of only one of these properties. There was some mistake in the sale certificate as it included both the properties, whereas the second property was not sold at all. Possession was delivered of both the properties in accordance with the sale certificate, but the mistake was afterwards discovered.

An application was made to the Munsif in whose Court the proceeding was pending for the rectification of the error and he directed the rectification. He directed that the sale certificate be produced and amended and he also directed that the delivery of possession of the second property should be cancelled. The District Judge on appeal held that as sec. 244 of the Code did not cover a case like the present disallowed the application. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Held—It is an inherent power of a Court to rectify an apparent error of its own motion. The matter would also come under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the question being one between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and relating to the satisfaction or discharge of the decree. In such a case an application under sec. 244 to set aside the sale is not necessary.

man sells one of his concubines and she takes her children with her, if she has any, so that her sons and daughters possess a father and step-father both living at the same time. . . . . . . Great respect is shown to the condition of motherhood, a wife of low rank with children being of far more importance in the family than even the chief wife should she be childless." In the Kingdom of the Yellow Robe, by Ernest Young, (Constable, 1898), pp. 95, 98 and 99. Women, as well as men, can procure divorce for good cause, widows and divorced wives can remarry. Of the Red Karens (Shans) Mr. Colquhoun writes:—"Marriages are early amongst them and are not binding unless the female has been given away by her parents. . . . . Divorce is easily obtainable if there are no children; but should there be one child the parents are not permitted to separate. Before marriage great license is allowed." Amongst the Shans by A. R. Colquhoun (1885). In Siam at the present day, says Mr. Campbell, "marriage is entirely a matter of arrangement, although the preferences of the young couple are generally considered. . . . Polygamy is permitted; but the principle wife always remains head of her husband's household and the subordinate wives occupy an inferior position." Siam in the Twentieth Century, by J. G. D. Campbell (1902). "Divorce is easily obtainable," Ibid. The Chief Judge was wrong when he said that polygamy among the Buddhist is rare and that it is considered disrespectable. The authorities cited do not support that view. Reference was also made to "Le Peuple Salmais, by Leon de Rosny, (Paris, 1885), pp. 78 and 79. It is submitted that marriage must be presumed in this case.

Even assuming there were no valid marriage, as contended, the second Appellant is entitled, under Buddhist law, to a share in the inheritance, inasmuch as his mother, the first Appellant, lived with and ate out of the same dish as the deceased.

[LORD ROBERTSON.—That point was submitted to neither Court in India]

Mr. Roskill.—The Courts in India considered only the first two issues, but the third issue would cover the point.

After some discussion LORD ROBERTSON announced their Lordships' decision on this last point only that their Lordships would not entertain the point.

Mr. Cowell for the Respondents was not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBERTSON.—The question in this appeal is one of fact; and it has been decided against the Appellants by two Courts. The case, however, deserves attention, for there has been a strong appeal made to the general presumption of marriage arising from cohabitation with habit and repute.

It is necessary, before applying this presumption, to make sure that we have got the conditions necessary for its existence. It is not superfluous to suggest that, first of all, there must be some body of neighbours, many or few, or some sort of public, large or small, before repute can arise. Again, the habit and repute, which alone is effective, is habit and repute of that particular status which, in the country in question, is lawful marriage.

The differences between English and Oriental customs about the relations of the sexes make such caution especially necessary. Among most English people, open cohabitation without marriage is so uncommon that the fact of cohabitation in many classes of society of itself sets up, as matter of fact, a repute of marriage. But, in countries where customs are different it is necessary to be more discriminating, more especially owing to the laxity with which the word "wife" is used by witnesses in regard to connexions not reprobated by opinion, but not constituting marriage.

In the present case the broad facts are these: a domiciled Burman, Maung Gale, has his house and wife at Moulmein in Burma; his business took him to Siam, and there he lived for years with various other women, and with the principal Appellant, Ma Wun Di, who, for shortness, will be called the Appellant. The Appellant has maintained that while the other women were concubines, she was a wife, taken as a second wife, the first wife being all the time in Burma. The opposite contention is that while the Appellant was older than the other women (who all lived in the same house) and had, for that reason and also for reasons of choice, a stronger hold on the man, yet she has not made out the status of a wife. It is a noticeable feature of the case that the Appellant, in her own evidence and in the evidence of other witnesses examined for her, endeavoured to set up a marriage ceremony as having inaugurated the connexion; but her Counsel in the appeal declined to maintain this part of her case, which was represented as resting on habit and repute. Now the first difficulty is that apparently this is a part of the world where there are not many people at all to act the part of neighbours or the public; and at all events there is no tangible evidence of recognition of this woman, in her quality of wife, by people external to the house and independent of it. What evidence she has is that of the people who either speak to the abandoned marriage ceremony or distinguish her position in the house as one of more consequence, and her stay in it as of longer duration, than those of the other women. In truth, when all is said there is little more pointing to marriage than the use of the word "wife" by some of the witnesses; and the most cursory, as well as the most careful, examination of the evidence shows that it is applied to persons whose status is not matrimonial.

Nor has the Appellant, in evidence or in argument, faced the grave difficulty which arises from the existence of the lawful wife in Burma. The following observations of the Chief Judge are apposite and weighty:—

"It is not forbidden to a Burman Buddhist to have two wives at the same time; but it is universally conceded that the leading principle of Buddhism is rather monogamy than polygamy, that polygamy is rare and that it is considered disrespectable. On the contrary, I should be inclined to say that if a woman cohabits with a Burman, whom she knows to be the lawful husband of another woman, the presumption is that she is a mistress and not a wife; and I would add that the presumption is strengthened if, as in the present case, the cohabitation is behind the back and without the knowledge of the first wife."

MA WUN DI v. MA KIN.

There remains to be noticed one point which the Appellants' Counsel treated as part of his case of habit and repute, and which seemed to be regarded as the most substantial item of it. Maung Gale, in 1887, obtained a certificate of nationality as "a British subject, proposing to travel in Siam." In 1891 he renewed it; and as part of the docket of renewal, which is signed by the Acting Vice-Consul, are the words: "Names of female relations living with Maung Gale: (1) Ma Wun Di, wife: (2) I Mun, sister-in-law." The argument upon this document is that the Appellant could only be entitled to be named in this certificate of nationality if, by marriage, she had acquired her husband's certified nationality. On this, however, it is to be observed, first, that this is not evidence of repute at all; the Vice-Consul is not proved to have had any personal knowledge of these people at all, and the most it comes to is that, on this occasion, Maung Gale said that Ma Wun Di was his wife. But, further, any value or relevance which this writing has in the present case is entirely taken away by the addition of the sister-in-law, who on no theory was a naturalised British subject. The truth probably is that the entry is put in merely as an item of information identifying Maung Gale, in addition to those given in the body of the certificate.

The Appellants' Counsel endeavoured to raise the question whether the second Appellant, who is the son of the first Appellant by Maung Gale, was not entitled to a share of Maung Gale's estate, even assuming no marriage to be proved. Whether the third issue in the suit was, in its terms, susceptible of the wider construction thus suggested for it or not, the parties, by their conduct of the case, have construed it in the narrower sense of assuming the existence of a marriage; and the point urged by Mr. Roskill having been submitted in the conduct of the case to neither Court, their Lordships are unable to entertain this question.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed. The Appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

LORD ROBERTSON.	MUSSUMMAT WALIHAN and others,
LORD COLLINS.	Appellants,
SIR ARTHUR WILSON.	v.
1907.	JOGESHWAR
20, November.	NARAYAN and anr., Respondents.

Practice—Suit for possession—Failure of cause of action—Proper decree to be made—Collateral issues, Court's power to decide and pass declaratory decree.

Where the Plaintiffs asked for possession of their mother's property on the ground that she was dead and the Court held that it was not proved that the lady was dead, the only decree that could be made was that the suit be dismissed. The mere circumstance that some of the media concludendi might be the same in other actions did not vest the Court with any right or duty to pronounce upon them.

MUSSUMMAT WALIHAN v. JOGESHWAR NARAYAN.

This was an appeal from a decree of the abovementioned High Court, dated the 25th of June 1903, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bankipur, dated the 31st of March 1900.

One Gopi Nath, the owner of a village called Dhawlpur Akowna, died on 28th November 1859, leaving him surviving a widow, Gend Koer, and a daughter, Kewal Koer, who was subsequently married to a man called Chandan Lal. Gopi Nath's widow succeeded him and on her death in 2nd December 1868 she was succeeded by her daughter, Kewal Koer.

On 2nd June 1868 Gend Koer borrowed Rs. 2,000 from one Wahid Ali, the predecessor-in-title of the present Appellants, on a mortgage of the said village, and on 25th June 1868 obtained another advance of Rs. 3,000.

After the death of Gend Koer, on 2nd December 1868, her daughter, Kewal Koer, borrowed further amounts from Wahid Ali. On 3rd April 1869 she borrowed the sum of Rs. 2,000. On 6th July 1870 she executed a deed for Rs. 5,000 on account of the amount due on the said deed of 3rd April 1869, and on account of another advance.

Then on 25th June 1872 she executed a consolidated deed for Rs. 22,000 on 25th June 1872, which included a small balance due under the deeds executed by Gend Koer, the amount due under the deeds executed by Kewal Koer, and a fresh loan of rather over Rs. 13,000. She was again in need of money, and on 17th February 1873 borrowed Rs. 5,500, and on 2nd September 1873, Rs. 2,000. Eventually on 23rd April 1875 she executed a consolidated deed covering all the previous transactions for a sum of Rs. 30,000 in favour of Tahur Ulhuq (son of Wahid Ali).

The mortgagee, Tahur Ulhuq, put the deed in suit, and on 28th January 1878 obtained a decree thereon from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna. In execution of the said decree the said village was sold and purchased by Tahur Ulhuq on 26th August 1878, and certain minor interests in the village on 15th January 1879 and 18th November 1879.

Various attempts to set aside the said sales proved unsuccessful and the Appellants remained in possession.

On 14th September 1897 Jogeshwar Narayan and Kusheshwar Narayan, alleging to be sons of Kewal Koer, instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna. The Defendants were the Appellants representing the mortgagee and purchaser. The plaint set out that the said village was the property of Gopi Nath, that on his death Gend Koer succeeded to a Hindu widow's estate and on her death Kewal Koer also succeeded to an estate for life. The Plaintiffs alleged "that Mussummat Kewal Koer died on 23rd Magh 1304 corresponding to 10th February 1897 and that is the date from which Plaintiffs' title accrued to the heritage of the said Babu Gopi Nath, their maternal grandfather." They alleged that the mortgages executed by Gend Koer and Kewal Koer, and the sale in pursuance thereof were not binding on them. They accordingly prayed for possession upon adjudication of their title to the said village, mesne profits from the date of suit till delivery of possession with costs and interests and for any other relief that they might be found entitled to.

The Appellants in their written statement denied that Kewal Koer was dead as alleged and that the Plaintiffs were the sons of Kewal Koer and pleaded that the transactions with Gend Koer and Kewal Koer were binding on the Plaintiffs.

The following issues were settled upon the pleadings.

(1) Is Mussummat Kewal Koer dead?

(2) Are the Plaintiffs the sons of Kewal Koer?

(3) According to the law as laid down in the Mitakshara, did Kewal Koer obtain an absolute right in the properties which devolved on her as heir after the death of her mother Gend Koer? If so, are the Plaintiffs precluded from suing?

(4) Were the sums mentioned in the bonds not fully paid?

(5) Were the debts, or any and what portion of them, incurred on account of legal necessities by the widows (or more precisely by the widow and the daughter)?

On 31st March 1900 the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. On the first issue he decided that the alleged death of Kewal Koer was not proved and on the second issue he held that the Plaintiffs were the sons of the Kewal Koer and Chandan Lal. On the third issue he decided that "according to the law of Mitakshara a daughter's estate inherited from her father is, like that of a widow inherited from her husband, a limited and restricted estate." On the fourth and fifth issues he was of opinion that the moneys had been paid to Gend Koer and Kewal Koer, but that the transactions were not justified by legal necessity, so as to be binding on the Plaintiffs. On the above findings he made a decree in the following terms:

"Ordered that this suit be dismissed and it be declared that the Plaintiffs are the sons of Mussummat Kewal Koer, and that the properties in claim were not sold for valid expenses. The Plaintiffs do recover $\frac{5}{8}$ths of their costs from the contending Defendants, and the said Defendants do recover $\frac{3}{8}$ths of their costs from the Plaintiffs. The decretal amount shall carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum till realisation."

Against that decree both parties appealed to the High Court. The said Court on 25th June 1905 disposed of both appeals by one judgment affirming all the findings of fact and law come to by the Subordinate Judge and dismissing the appeals with costs.

In maintaining the portion of the lower Court's decree so far as it declared that the Plaintiffs were the sons of Kewal Koer, and that the properties were sold without legal necessity, the High Court observed as follows:—

"It was contended by Mr. Hill for the Defendants that the suit could not be maintained, the cause of action upon which it was founded, viz., the death of Kewal Koer, having failed. No doubt the suit, so far as it asked that a decree for possession be awarded to the Plaintiffs, must fail, as Kewal Koer is not proved to be dead, but the suit practically sought for two declarations, viz., that the Plaintiffs are the grandsons of Gopi Nath, and that they are not bound by the sales held in execution of the decree against their mother, the loans upon which the decree was obtained not having been for legal necessity. And issues Nos. 2 and 5 involving these questions were raised between the parties in the Court below, and were decided. In these circumstances, it is not desirable that the final decision of those questions should be postponed till after the death of Kewal Koer, when much of the evidence which is now forthcoming, and which was adduced at the trial will have disappeared. The Subordinate Judge has clearly shown how matters really stood."

The Appellants, thereupon, preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. DeGruyther and Mr. G. A. H. Branson for the Appellants.—The cause of action is the alleged death of the mother of the Plaintiffs-Respondents. Both Courts in India have held that this was not proved. The suit ought to have been dismissed for want of cause of action. Courts in India were wrong in making a declaratory decree. The declaration made is inconsistent with the relief sought in the suit. The plaint was never amended before judgment, under sec. 53 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, the only section that deals with amendments of plaints. The amendment, again, if allowed, would have entirely altered the character of the suit. Such an amendment could not have been made under the above section. Mussummat Doolhun Jankee Koer v. Lal Beharee Roy (1). On failure of the right for possession the suit ought to have been dismissed. Ranee Rajessurree Koonwar v. Maharanee Indurjeet Koonwar (2).

The Respondents did not appear.

(1) 19 W. R. 33 (1872).
(2) 6 W. R. 1 (1866).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBERTSON.—Their Lordships are of opinion that this action ought to have been dismissed with costs, and therefore this appeal should be allowed.

The suit was one of the simplest and most plainsailing character, alike in the ground of action and the decree sought. The Plaintiffs (the present Respondents) claimed to have possession of their mother's property on the ground that she was dead. The Courts held that it was not proved that the lady had died (and indeed there was positive evidence that she was alive). The inevitable inference would seem to be that the suit should be dismissed. The Court which tried the case, however, had, very naturally, tried the whole case at once and had to deal with some questions as to the paternity of the Plaintiffs, and also as to the validity of certain gifts by the mother. These, however, were merely argumentative steps towards the only decree sought, viz., possession; they were not presented by the Plaintiffs as separate and substantive questions affecting rights other than that of possession of their (alleged) deceased mother's estate. As regards one of those questions, it is plain that the validity of the gifts, the lady being alive, could only be determined with her as a party to the suit. Again, the Court might quite well have first tried the issue whether the mother was dead; and, reaching, as it did, the conclusion that this essential fact was not proved, it is impossible to suggest that it could then have gone on to take up and try the other questions. Yet the present is really the same question. It appears to their Lordships that the circumstance that some of the media concludendi might be the same in other actions does not vest the Court with any right or duty to pronounce upon them in a suit which has gone by the board because of the failure of the ground of action. It is not surprising that no proposal was made in India to amend the record, and the record presents its original plain simplicity.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be allowed, that the decrees in both Courts below ought to be discharged and that instead thereof the suit ought to be dismissed with costs in both Courts to be paid by the Respondents.

The Respondents will pay the costs of the appeal.

*Hindu Law—Will—Gift of immoveable property to a Hindu widow—Malik—Absolute estate.*

When the question was whether a Hindu widow acquired a right to alienate the property (immoveable) in suit under a deed of gift or testamentary disposition of her late husband, wherein the word used was malik wa khud ikhtiyar, their Lordships held that in order to cut down the full proprietary rights that the word malik imports, something must be found in the context to qualify it and that the fact that the donee was a woman and a widow did not suffice to displace the presumption of absolute ownership implied in the word malik.

The donee in the case of LALIT MOHUN SINGH ROY v. CHUKKUN LAL ROY (4) was a man but the principles of interpretation laid down in that case were of general application.

KOLLANY KOOER v. LUCHMEE PERSHAD (2) referred to.

Appeal from a decree of the above-mentioned High Court, dated 2nd November 1903, affirming a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, dated 11th March 1901.

The principal question raised on the present appeal was whether the first Appellant, Musammat Surajmani, had or had not the power of alienation in regard to the property in suit.

The following pedigree will help to explain the case:—

The property in suit belonged to Ishwar Nath Ojha, who, on 2nd April

1877, executed a document purporting to be a deed of gift of certain immoveable property in favour of his two wives, Musammats Dhan Mati and Surajmani and of his daughter-in-law, Musammat Saraswati, to take effect after his death. The material part of this document is set out in their Lordships' judgment.

Ishwar Nath Ojha died in or about the year 1882, leaving him surviving all the persons whose names appear in the above pedigree except his son, Deo Nath Ojha. Musammat Surajmani, thereafter, took possession of the properties devised to her and on 19th March 1896 she executed a Will by which she devised it to her brother, Ram Narain Ojha, who d'.' prior to the institution of the present suit on 4th September 1900 by the Respondents, Rabi Nath, and Ganga Dhan, against Musammat Surajmani and the sons and heirs of Ram Narain Ojha as Defendants. The Respondents in their plaint after explaining their right to sue as heirs both of Ishwar Nath Ojha and his widow Musammat Surajmani (to whom, it was alleged, possession of the property in suit was given for life only) prayed that it might be declared that the Appellant, Musammat Surajmani, was incompetent to transfer the property in suit and that the Will, dated 19th March 1896, was invalid as against them.

Written statements, in reply to the plaint, were filed on behalf of the Appellants; and (inter alia) it was pleaded therein that the Respondents were not the heirs of Ishwar Nath Ojha, nor of his widow Musammat Surajmani, and that the Will of Ishwar Nath Ojha conferred upon Musammat Surajmani a heritable and alienable estate, which she was competent to transfer by her Will.

The Subordinate Judge fixed the following issues:—

1. Are the Plaintiffs heirs of Ishwar Nath and Surajmani?

2. Whether the Will of Ishwar Nath conferred on Surajmani only a limited widow's estate for life or a heritable and an alienable estate?

3. Can the Plaintiffs sue during the life of their mother and grandmother?

On 11th March 1901 the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment deciding the three issues in favour of the Respondents and made a decree granting them the declaration prayed for. With reference to the second issue he held that, as the Will of Ishwar Nath Ojha conferred on his widow Musammat Surajmani only a limited widow's estate for life and not an alienable estate, she was not competent to transfer the property in suit, and that the Will, dated 19th March 1896 executed by her, was invalid as against the Respondents.

Against that decree the Appellants appealed to the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, and on 3rd March 1903 the High Court delivered its judgment and decided that in the case of a gift of immoveable property by a husband to his wife the wife had no power of alienation unless conferred upon her in express terms. In the result a decree was made dismissing the appeal with costs.

gift executed by Ishwar Nath Ojha are "that during my lifetime I shall remain in possession of the said property as heretofore—that after my death they (donees) shall . . .—remain in possession as owners with proprietary powers." The lower Courts have held that the devisee took in this case a life estate. Mr. Mayne in his Hindu Law and Usage (7th Ed.), p. 890, sec. 664, says "Immoveable property when given or devised by a husband to his wife, is never at her disposal, even after his death. It is her stridhan so far that it passes to her heirs, not to his heirs." The learned Judges who decided the case of Jeewun Punda v. Mussamat Sona (5) laid down the law that "If a Hindu make a gift of land to his wife, without any express power of alienation it may be contended that he does so knowing, that under the law she takes no interest which she could alienate; if, on the other hand, he makes such a gift, accompanied with an express power, it may be contended with even greater reason that, knowing the disability which by law would attach to a simple gift, he desired to clothe her with larger powers than those to which she would by the operation of the law be entitled." That decision is not right and does not apply to this case. The lower Courts were wrong in following it. The law as stated by Mr. Mayne is right. The word used in making the gift is malik, which means proprietor and gives power of alienation. The Courts in India were wrong in holding that the deed here did not give the donees full rights of proprietorship including power of alienation. The donee was the proprietor with the power of alienation and he made a condition in the deed that he was to remain as such owner during his lifetime as heretofore and after his death he gave the donees exactly what he stipulated to retain for himself, that is, proprietorship or ownership with power to alienate. It has been held that the effect of the word malik in a testamentary gift is to confer upon the donee an heritable and alienable estate in the absence of a context which indicates a different meaning. Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (4). There is nothing in the context here to indicate that the donees are to take any estate other than that conferred upon them by the use of the word malik. The donees in this case took an heritable and alienable estate. In a recent case when a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara Law devised immoveable property to his wife stating that she would be the malik of the property after his death, the very High Court, whose judgment is under appeal, held that the word malik imported an absolute proprietary interest, and that in the absence of any indication of a contrary intention on the part of the testator, the widow took an absolute, and not thereby a life estate in the property devised. Padam Lal v. Tek Singh (1). In this case the question is the same and it is submitted that the decision under appeal is wrong and that the decision in Padam Lal v. Tek Singh (1) is right.

Mr. Ross for the Respondents.—The document in this case contains no words, such as heirs, issues, sons, or grandsons to show that an estate of inheritance was devised. Where an owner of immoveable property devised that "the wife of my son shall be regarded as owner after my death," it was held that the devisee must be taken to convey an estate for life only and not the absolute ownership: Mathura Das v. Bhiklan Mal (6). Again where a Hindu devised that "after my death my wife is to be the person in possession and ownership in place of me," it was held that the intention of the testator was to leave the property to his widow as her stridhan, to descend to her heirs: Janki v. Bhairon (7). Similarly the widow, the donee in this case, took only a limited estate, because the word malik means owner, and not absolute owner as contended, and khud ikhtiyar means independent with exclusive rights. The lower Courts were right in holding that the widow here took only a life estate. In case of immoveables bestowed on her by her husband, a woman has no power of alienation by gift or the like: Stoke's Hindu Law Books, the Dayabhaga, Ch. 4, sect. 1, placitum 23, p. 241. What has been given by an affectionate husband to his wife, she may consume as she pleases, when he is dead, may give it away, excepting immoveable properties: Stoke's Hindu Law Books, the Mitakshara, Ch. 1, sect. 1, placitum 20, p. 373. When a Hindu by his Will directed that after his death his wife was to take possession of and enjoy his property, and in another passage declared that "just as he was the owner so she was to be the owner," it was held that the wife took only a life interest in the property, and that the Courts have always leaned against such a construction of the Will of a Hindu testator as would give to the widow unqualified control over his property: Harilal v. Bai Rewa (8). Reference was made to Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage (7th Ed.), p. 527, sec. 397 and to Moulvie Mahomed Shamsool Hooda v. Shewukram (9), Rajnarain Bhadury v. Ashutosh Chukerbutty (10) and Rajnarain Bhadury v. Katyayani Dabee (11).

Mr. DeGruyther, in reply, referred to Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage (6th Ed.), p. 509 and to Moulvie Mahomed Shamsool Hooda v. Shewukram (9) and contended that the construction put on the word malik by Mitter, J., in Mussammat Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Pershad (2) was the right construction. He asked their Lordships to decide that the decision in Padam Lal v. Tek Singh (1) was right.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD COLLINS.—This is an appeal from the High Court at Allahabad affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur. The question is whether the first Appellant, Musammat Surajmani, acquired a right to alienate the property now in suit under a deed of gift or testamentary instrument of her late husband, Ishwar Nath Ojha. The material part of the document is as follows:—

"I now of my own free will and accord while in a sound state of mind and in enjoyment of my senses make a gift of the entire village Dwarkapur Naokar in tappa Asuari and half of the village Telpurwa in tappa Pachhar to Musammat Dhanmati, my first wife, the entire village Doharia Khurd in tappa Banjarha and half of Mauza Telpurwa aforesaid to Musammat Surajmani, my second wife, and half of Mauza Jamla Jot, i.e., an eight anna share in it, in tappa Barikpar to Musammat Sarsuti, my daughter-in-law, out of the aforesaid property without consideration on the conditions that during my lifetime I shall remain in possession of the said property as heretofore, and my name shall remain recorded in respect of it in the public records and the Musammats aforesaid shall be maintained by me, that after my death they shall under this document get their names recorded in the public records in respect of their respective properties given to them and remain in possession as owners with proprietary powers; and that if perchance I have a male issue hereafter, this deed of gift shall be considered null and void as against him."

The words translated "as owners with proprietary powers" are in the original malik wa khud ikhtiyar. The Appellants contend that these words are amply sufficient to confer an alienable estate. The Respondents on the other hand contended, and the Courts below have held, that under these words the lady took no more than the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow, which is inalienable except in special conditions which are not alleged to exist in this case.

After the death of her husband Musammat Surajmani entered into possession of the property given to her and has purported to dispose of it by Will in favour of her brother, Ram Narain Ojha. The present suit is brought by the Plaintiffs (Respondents) as heirs of Ishwar Nath and of Surajmani for a declaration that the latter was incompetent to execute the said Will, and it is against the decision in their favour that this appeal is brought. The effect of the word malik in testamentary gifts has been often discussed in cases decided in the different Courts in India where there has been apparently some fluctuation of opinion. For instance, since this case was decided in the High Court of Allahabad, the same Court, differently constituted, has refused to follow it and expressed the opinion that the words in question passed the absolute estate, Padam Lal v. Tek Singh (1).

In the present case the Subordinate Judge seemed to recognize that the trend of the decisions of the Calcutta Courts was opposed to his view, but felt bound to follow what he thought was the result of the Allahabad cases, which were binding upon him.

In Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Pershad (2) decided in 1875, Mitter, J., in dealing with the case of a Will where the donees were the widow and daughter of the testator, and the word "malik" was used, thus expresses himself (at p. 396):—

"As far as the words go, I think it is plain that the testator intended to make an absolute gift of his property in favour of his widow and daughter. He says that after his death they shall be (maliks) proprietors and his entire estate shall devolve upon them. In Jotendro Mohun Tagore v Ganendro Mohun Tagore (3) the Judicial Committee say (at p. 365): 'If an estate were given to a man simply without express words of inheritance, it would, in the absence of a conflicting context, carry by Hindu law (as under the present state of the law it does by will in England) an estate of inheritance.' In the testamentary instrument under our consideration, from the context it does not appear that the testator intended a limited gift in favour of Bani Kooer and Uma Kooer. Therefore adopting the rule of construction above quoted we must hold that the gift in question was an absolute gift unless it can be shewn that by the Hindu law gift to a female means a limited gift or carries with it the effect of creating an estate exactly similar to the 'widows' estate' under the law of inheritance. I am not aware of any such provision in the Hindu law nor have we been referred to any authority in support of it."

The question as to the effect of the word malik came before this Board in 1897 in the case of Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (4). The donee in that case was a man but the principles of interpretation laid down were of general application. Referring to the donee the testator said :—

"If no children are born to me . . . or if at the time of my death they are not alive, then . . . my nephew . . . . becoming on my death my sthalabhishikta and becoming owner malik of all my estates and properties, &c, shall, remaining my sthalabhishikta, obtaining the management of the Iswarshebas . . enjoy with son, grandson, and so on in succession the proceeds of my estate . . . The minor, on reaching majority, shall exercise ownership (malikatwa) over all the properties."

In delivering the judgment Lord Davey at p. 88 says :

"It was not disputed . . that the son of the testator if there had been one, or his daughter, if there had been one, would have taken an absolute heritable and alienable estate . . . Nor was it disputed that the words of gift to the Appellant were such as to confer on him also an heritable and alienable estate. The words 'become owner malik of all my estates and properties' would, unless the context indicated a different meaning, be sufficient for that purpose even without the words 'enjoy with son, grandson, and so on in succession' which latter words are frequently used in Hindu wills and have acquired the force of technical words conveying an heritable and alienable estate."

This case seems to adopt and apply the same view of the word malik as was taken in the Calcutta case in the Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Perskad (2) above cited, with the result that in order to cut down the full proprietary rights that the word imports something must be found in the context to qualify it. Nothing has been found in the context here or the surrounding circumstances or is relied upon by the Respondents but the fact that the donee is a woman and a widow, which was expressly decided in the last-mentioned case not to suffice. But while there is nothing in the context or surrounding facts to displace the presumption of absolute ownership implied in the word malik, the context does seem to strengthen the presumption that the intention was that malik should bear its proper technical meaning. It is to be observed that the gift to the testator's daughter-in-law, Musammat Saraswati, is made in precisely the same terms. The learned Counsel for the Respondents was unable to adduce any reason for holding that in her case the gift should be cut down to anything less than a full proprietary right, and, if this be admitted, the Respondents have to contend for two contradictory interpretations of the same phrase.

In the result, therefore, with the greatest respect for the learned Judges in the Courts below, their Lordships are unable to agree with their decision. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed and the decrees of both Courts below dis-

KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARJYA CHOWDHURY
v.
RADHIKA MOHUN ROY.

Administrator pendente lite, position of, after suit—Interference—Executor de son tort —Applicability of principle to Hindus.

On the termination of the appointment of an administrator pendente lite in respect of the property of a Hindu, if he continues to hold and deal with the property in the same way as he did prior to the date when his appointment came to an end he can be sued as a quasi executor de son tort.

This was an appeal from the judgment (vide 10 C. W. N. 566) and decree of Bodilly, J., preferred by one Kshitish Chandra Acharjya Chowdhury who was substituted in the presence of the Plaintiff as Appellant by an order of the High Court.

The facts material to the report are as follows :—

One Dakshina Mohun Roy, who died on 6th June 1901, borrowed, not long before his death, from his brother Radhika, the Plaintiff in the present litigation, a sum of Rs. 10,000 After the death of Dakshina two Wills of the deceased were sought to be set up—one of 2nd May 1901, propounded by Radhika and the other of 31st May 1901, propounded by other two brothers—and suits were instituted. Radhika and Dakshina's widow entered caveats to the Will of 31st May and the brothers and Dakshina's widow entered caveats in respect of the Will of 2nd May. Mr. Beeby was on the 25th July 1901 appointed administrator of the property pendente lite and the suit respecting the Will of 31st May was determined on 10th March 1903, the Court finding it to be a forgery. On 21st May 1903 Mr. Beeby was appointed administrator pendente lite in respect of the suit regarding the Will propounded by the Plaintiff Radhika, and he continued in that appointment till 8th December 1903 when he was discharged and Mr. Shelly Bonnerjee was substituted in his place. This suit was settled on 22nd March 1904, Radhika receiving Rs. 50,000 from the widow to withdraw the Will, and an order to that effect was made in the action.

The present suit for the recovery of the above Rs. 10,000 was filed in the District Court of Alipore on 13th January 1904, and on the application made by the Defendant, Mr. Bonnerjee, on 19th December 1904, describing himself as administrator pendente lite, was removed to the High Court. An order for amendment of the plaint by adding an alternative claim against Mr. Bonnerjee as a quasi executor de son tort was obtained from the Court of first instance by the Plaintiff

KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARJYA CHOWDHURY v. RADHIKA MOHUN ROY.

Radhika, but through some mistake the amendment did not appear on the record.

Messrs. Garth and Chackravarti for the Appellant.—Mr. Bonnerjee could not be sued as administrator pendente lite, his rights as such having come to an end with the end of the litigation in connection with the Will of 2nd May. If he continued to deal with the property after that, then the question is whether he could be sued as an executor de son tort. I submit he could not be sued as an executor de son tort. The principle of executor de son tort of the English law is not applicable to Hindus.

Messrs. S. P. Sinha and C. R. Das for the Respondent.—The decree was against the estate and so the administrator pendente lite came in. He was as a matter of fact an administrator pendente lite when this suit was filed. If he is not liable as administrator pendente lite, he is liable as executor of his own wrong. An administrator pendente lite may be in the same way as a General Administrator. A creditor can bring an action against an administrator pendente lite for a debt [In re Toleman Westwood v. Booker (3)]. A creditor cannot sue an executor named in the Will unless he has administered the estate or obtained probate. [Mohamidu Mohideen Hadjiar v. Pitchey (4)].

I can sue administrator pendente lite in possession apart from the question whether he was administrator pendente lite or not [Magaluri Garudiah v. Narayana Rungiah (2)].

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a suit by one Radhika Mohun Roy to recover from the estate of his deceased brother, Dhakhina Mohun Roy, who died on the 6th June 1901, the sum of Rs. 13,000 and interest. The Defendant in the suit was Mr. Bonnerjee, who is a member of the Bar and the Official Receiver of this Court, and who was appointed administrator pendente lite to the estate of Dakshina.

The case of the Plaintiff is that on the 2nd of May 1901 Radhika lent his brother Dakshina, who was speculating at the time in Government paper a Government note for Rs. 10,000 his case being that Dakshina required this note in order that he might deposit it with his bankers as cover for any differences in his speculations in such paper. The rest of the claim is made up of the following alleged loans:—on the 15th of May 1901, Rs. 1,500; on the 19th of May 1901, Rs. 200; on the 5th of June, Rs. 1,000; on the 6th of June 1901, Rs. 200; and on the 8th of June 1901, Rs. 100. The Plaintiff says that Rs. 1,000 was advanced for the purpose of paying off the doctors who had attended Dakshina during his last illness.

The case of the Defendant is that at the time of the institution of the suit he was no longer administrator pendente lite and he, at the instance of the widow of Dakshina, submits as a matter of law whether the suit is maintainable as against him. It is, however, conceded that after Mr. Bonnerjee ceased to be administrator pendente lite he continued to hold and deal with the property precisely in the same way as he did prior to the date when his appointment as administrator pendente lite came to an end. Mr. Bonnerjee has not appealed but the appeal has been conducted by the person beneficially interested in the estate, who in the presence of the Plaintiff was substituted as Appellant by an order of this Court. His case on the merits is that, as this is a claim against a dead man's estate, it must be most strictly proved by the Plaintiff, and that, as the Plaintiff is apparently not a very reputable gentleman, the Court cannot act upon his story without adequate corroboration. It appears in these circumstances that an application was made to the Court of first instance to allow the plaint to be amended by adding an alternative claim against Mr. Bonnerjee as a quasi executor de son tort; and that application was granted by the Court of first instance. But so far as the record shows the amendment never seems to have been made. This would appear to indicate some carelessness on the part of those who were responsible in the matter.

It would be, perhaps, convenient before dealing with the merits, to deal with the question of whether Mr. Bonnerjee can be sued as a quasi executor de son tort.

The contention of the Appellants is that as the Indian Succession Act does not apply to Hindus, and the sections of that Act dealing with the question of an executor de son tort have not been incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act, the fact of their not having been so incorporated indicates that the principle was not to apply to the estate of Hindus: Mr. Justice Phear in Jogender Narain v. Emily Temple (1) held,—I need not repeat the passage cited by Mr. Justice Bodilly,—that a creditor here, as in England, might sue a person who is dealing with the assets of the deceased: and I find in the case of Magaluri Garudiah v. Narayana Rungiah (2) the following passage at page 363:—"The question as to whether or not there has been misjoinder depends on the answer to the question whether or not the Appellants have so conducted themselves in respect of the property of the deceased, that a creditor is entitled to sue them as quasi representatives of the deceased. It is a common feature of Hindu and English law that persons who take the property of the deceased person subject themselves to liability for the debts of the deceased. A person who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person is known to English law as an executor de son tort, and in that character an action will lie against him for a debt due by the deceased, and where there are several co-obligors he may be sued as a co debtor." One of the Judges who was a party to that decision was a Hindu Judge of great experience, and he says:—"It is a common feature of Hindu and English law that persons who take the property of the deceased person subject themselves to liability for the debts of the deceased." That case was decided in the year 1881, and so far as I am aware the principle involved in that decision has not been subsequently challenged.

I, therefore, agree with the Judge in the Court of first instance that the suit can properly proceed against Mr. Bonnerjee.

(2) I. L. R. 3 Mad. 359 (1881).

KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARJYA CHOWDHURY v. RADHIKA MOHUN ROY.

I now pass to the merits and I will deal with each item separately.

As regards the claim for Rs. 10,000, is there sufficient corroboration of the Plaintiff's story ? I agree with the Court of first instance that there is. Before the 2nd of May of 1901 there had been transactions between the brothers of a character practically similar to that now under discussion: and the story of the Plaintiff gains very substantial support from the Government promissory note itself. The promissory note shows that it was undoubtedly the property of Radhika, that it was endorsed over to his brother Dakshina; and the Bankers' Book shows that it was on the 2nd of May 1901 paid by Dakshina into his loan account at the Bank. Dakshina was only credited in that account with Rs. 1,000 in respect of the Rs. 10,000 Government note; the balance was apparently held by the Bank as cover for the speculation in Government paper in which Dakshina was then concerned. The suggestion that the transaction was an out and out sale by Radhika to Dakshina seems to me to be one that is not supported by the evidence in the case. We have further the feature that this claim was treated by the then administrator pendente lite as a debt due from the estate:—In annexure B. of Mr. Beeby's affidavit of valuation (he was then administrator pendente lite) Radhika appears as a creditor of the estate to that extent. Upon this question of fact I agree with the view taken by the Court of first instance that the Plaintiff has proved his case as regards the Rs. 10,000. I now pass to the other items.

I will deal first with the alleged loan of Rs. 1,000 on the 5th of June 1901. The Plaintiff's case is that this sum was advanced to pay the doctor's fees. It is a feature of this part of the case that presumably the doctors have been paid, for they have made no claim against this estate. The question then is who paid them? It seems pretty clear that at this time there was no money in Dakshina's house, and as the doctors appear to have been paid, if the Plaintiff did not advance the Rs. 1,000 to pay them, it is difficult to see where the money came from. We think there is sufficient corroboration of the Plaintiff's story in respect of this claim for Rs. 1,000; at any rate, there is not sufficient to warrant us in saying that the conclusion of the learned Judge was wrong on this point.

I now pass to the sum of Rs. 1,500 which is alleged to have been advanced on the 15th of May 1901. The evidence of corroboration does not appear to us to be sufficient. According to the Plaintiff he drew a cheque for this sum payable to one Sarat Chandra Bhattacherjee. The Plaintiff was asked why this cheque was not drawn in favour of his brother Dakshina. The suggestion is, as the Plaintiff says, "My brother wanted cash from me. He asked me to get it cashed." That cheque is not put in nor is Radhika's pass book: and, except the oral statements of the Plaintiff and one Annada Charan Shomaddar who was Dakshina's amlah, both of whom are witnesses who were discredited by the Court of first instance, there is nothing to shew that this money ever reached Dakshina. Reliance has been placed upon the evidence of Prosonna Coomar

KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARJYA CHOWDHURY v. RADHIKA MOHUN ROY.

Roy. But his evidence comes to nothing more than this, that he heard a conversation at some Railway Station, between the two brothers in which Dakshina asked Radhika for a loan of Rs. 1,500. He says he did not see the money paid by Radhika, but that Dakshina told Annada to go and get it. I do not think that is a sufficient corroboration to substantiate the claim against a dead man's estate, the more so as the Court of first instance does not treat either the Plaintiff or Annada as reliable witnesses. We, therefore, think that the claim for this sum of Rs. 1,500 ought not to be allowed.

As regards the alleged loan of Rs. 200 on the 19th of May 1901, it is not suggested that there is any corroboration whatever. We, therefore, cannot allow it.

As regards the sums of Rs. 200 and Rs. 100 alleged to have been advanced on the 6th and 8th June 1901, for funeral expenses, except the fact that at the instance of the Plaintiff these sums were entered by Annada Shomoddar in the household books of Dakshina there is really no corroboration.

As the Judge in the Court of first instance says that he cannot act on the Plaintiff's evidence without corroboration and that Annada Shomoddar gave his evidence in a most unsatisfactory manner and as regards a portion of it was undoubtedly lying, I do not think that these claims should have been admitted. They must be disallowed.

There is only one other small point. It was suggested that as these monies, other than the Rs. 10,000 were advanc in Calcutta the Alipore Court had jurisdiction to deal with the case. I need not say anything about this as Mr. Garth in reply, conceded that there is nothing in it.

The appeal, therefore, fails as regards the claim for Rs. 10,000 and Rs, 1,000 and succeeds as regards the balance of Rs. 2,000. There will be, therefore, a decree for Rs. 11,000 with proportionate interest.

As each party has partially succeeded there will be proportionate costs of this appeal.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 2530 OF 1905.

HENDERSON, J.	THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL,
MITRA, J.	Petitioner,
1905.	v.
Heard, 2, August.	THE LAND ACQUISITION COLLECTOR, 24-Pergs.,
Judgment, 22, August.	Opposite Party.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec. 18 (1)—Award—Application for reference to the Civil Court—Collector's order refusing—Judicial order—High Court's power to revise.

In rejecting an application made under sec. 18, cl. (1) of the Land Acquisition Act asking for a reference to the Civil Court, the Collector acts judicially, and his order is subject to revision by the High Court.

EZRA v. SECRETARY OF STATE (1) referred to.

(1) 9 C W. N. 454: S. C. I L R, 32 Cal. 605 (1905).

THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL v. THE LAND ACQUISITION COLLECTOR.

This was a rule granted on the 17th of July 1905, against an order of Babu Bangsidhar Banerjee, Deputy Collector, under the Land Acquisition Act, for the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 23rd of February 1905, refusing to refer the matter to the Civil Court under sec. 18 of the Act on the ground of limitation.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

It appears that under declaration 1621 L. R., dated 11th March 1902, the Seven Tanks Estate belonging to the late Nundo Lal Mullik was acquired by Government on payment of Rs. 1,35,000.

On the 4th December 1903 at the time of making over possession of the estate to the Commanding Royal Engineer, Ishapore Factory, it was found that outside the wall of the garden was tenanted land comprised in the Seven Tanks Estate, but to the tenants no compensation had been paid for their huts. In order to legalise the acquisition of this plot and to pay compensation to the tenants for their huts, etc., a separate declaration, dated 30th July 1904, was published.

Notices purporting to have been issued under secs. 9 and 10 of the Act were issued to the Administrator General as tenure-holder and Srimati Matangini Dasi, zemindar, requesting them to appear and file statements of claim on 16th September 1904. This notice was, however, actually served on the Administrator-General on the 9th September. The Administrator-General did not enter appearance and, after adjournment, award was made on the 26th September 1904, Rs. 46 being awarded to the zemindar, Srimati Matangini. No notice of the award, as required by sec. 2, sub-sec. (2) of the Act, was however given to the Administrator-General. Subsequently on the 16th October 1904 the Administrator-General having got information from other sources appeared and on his representation the Collector fixed the 1st of November within which to file his objections. The matter was heard by the Collector on the 17th November. On the 1st December the Collector endorsed an order on the back of the petition of the Administrator-General, rejecting it on the merits, and this order was communicated to the applicant on the 14th December. On 23rd February 1905, a petition was presented by the Administrator General praying for a copy of the award and of the order passed on the statement of claim of 1st November 1904 and that the matter might be referred to the Land Acquisition Judge and that 3 weeks time might be allowed within which to file objections to the award.

The Collector rejected the application for a reference on the ground that as it was presented after the lapse of six weeks from the date when the award of 26th September 1904 was communicated to the Administrator-General or even from the date when the order on his statement of claim of 1st November 1904 was communicated to him.

The Administrator-General thereupon presented this application for the revision of the Collector's order and obtained this rule.

Mr. Hill and Babu Ganesh Chundra Chander for the Petitioner.

Mr. O'Kinealy (Advocate-General) and Babu Ram Charan Mitra for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The proceedings before the Collector in this matter were marked with the greatest irregularity. The declaration under sec. 6 of Act I of 1894 is dated the 30th July 1904 and it was for the acquisition of 9 bighas, 10 cottas and odd chittacks, more or less, of land within defined boundaries and not of the interest of any particular person or persons in occupation of it. A plan of the land had been made before the declaration. The Collector was bound to cause a public notice to be given under sec. 9, sub-sec. (1) of the Act, inviting claimants to compensations for all interests in the land, and under sub sec. (2) such notice should be published not earlier than 15 days before the date fixed for the persons interested to appear and claim compensation. The notice in the present case was not published before the 26th August 1904, though the first day fixed for the hearing of claims was the 8th September. The notice on the Administrator-General of Bengal was served on the 9th September, the date for presenting claims being the 16th September. The notice again was not such as is prescribed by sub-sec. (2) of sec. 9. It did not require the Administrator-General to state the nature of his interest in the land to be acquired and the amount and particulars of his claim to compensation but it expressly stated that the price of two of the plots had already been given and no further compensation was payable. The notices issued under sec. 9 were clearly bad and were not served in due time. On the 26th September 1904 the Collector made his award under sec. 11 of the Act. The Administrator-General was unrepresented on that day. But the award was not in accordance with the requirements of sec. 11. It contained no statement of the compensation which in the opinion of the Collector should be allowed for the land and there was no proper apportionment of such compensation. The case made for the Collector is that the Government had already acquired the right which the Administrator-General had in the entire land. The Administrator-General denies it. The proper award to make under sec. 11 would have been one which would contain a statement of the compensation for the lands and if the Administrator-General's interest had passed to the Government the amount payable, in the opinion of the Collector to the Administrator General on apportionment, should have been stated as payable to the Government. No notice of the award as required by sec. 12, sub-sec. (2) was given to the Administrator-General. The Administrator-General came subsequently to know of it on enquiry by him, i.e., on the 11th October 1904.

Though the award was made on the 26th September and according to the contention before us the Collector's administrative functions under Part II of the Act, except as to taking of possession, ceased on that date, the Collector on the 11th October on the representation of the Administrator-General allowed time up to the 1st November following to file his statement of claim. The Collector had taken possession on the previous day. It is inconceivable how if his administrative functions had ceased the Collector could on the 11th October allow time up to the 1st November to file a statement of claim, having already made and filed his award under secs. 11 and 12 of the Act. The statement of claim was actually filed on the the 1st November, it was duly received and the 17th November was fixed for hearing. The matter was heard by the Collector on the 17th November but no order was made until the 1st December following when the Collector endorsed on the back of the petition of the 1st November his order apparently in the absence of the Administrator-General to the effect that the latter was not entitled to any compensation, his rights having already been acquired by the Government. The petition was rejected not on the ground of the absence of power of the Collector to re-open the proceedings, but on the merits of the Administrator-General's claim, the Collector coming to the finding that the land had already been acquired by the Government. The Administrator-General received notice of this order on the 14th December by the Collector's letter of that date. It is quite clear from the proceedings that the Collector did not think his award of the 26th September to be final. It had the character of finality on the 1st December when the Administrator-General's claim for compensation was refused on adjudication on the merits of his claim. It is also quite clear that there were grounds of dispute as to apportionment between the Government and the Administrator-General which might legitimately be the subject of adjudication by the Court under Part III of the Act.

Under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act any person interested may require that the matters covered by the award be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court provided that the application is made, if the person was present or represented before the Collector at the time when he made the award, within 6 weeks from the date of the Collector's award, or in other cases, within 6 weeks of the receipt of the notice under sec. 12, sub-sec. (2) or within 6 months from the date of the Collector's award, whichever period shall first expire.

No notice as required by sec. 12, cl. 2 of the Act in cases where the persons interested are not present personally or by their representatives when the award is made, was, as we have seen, served upon the Administrator-General.

On the 23rd February 1905, the Petitioner applied under sec. 18 (1) for a reference to the Civil Court but the Collector by his order of the same date refused to refer the matter on the ground that the application had been made more than 6 weeks after the date of the communication of the order of the 26th September to the Petitioner. Upon that a rule was issued to the Collector to show cause why the order of the 23rd February should not be set aside.

If the period allowed by the proviso to sec. 18 of the Act for presenting a petition for reference to the Court be calculated either from the 26th September or the 14th December allowing 6 months in the first case and 6 weeks in the second case, the application for reference was in time. Besides the delay, if any, in applying for a reference was entirely due to the irregular mode in which the Collector conducted his proceedings.

But it seems to us that the Collector aving allowed his award of the 26th September to be re-opened, an award made in his administrative capacity, and notice of his final order having been given on the 14th December by a letter which should be taken to be a notice under sec. 12 of the Act, the Administrator-General was entitled to 6 weeks time from the latter date to file his application for reference.

Assuming, however, that the Collector's proceedings after the filing of the award on the 26th September were not warranted by the law, and that he was incompetent to re-open his original award, the Administrator-General could make his application for reference with 6 months of the date of the original award. In either view of the case the Collector was bound, as enjoined by sec. 18, to initiate the judicial proceedings contemplated by Part III of the Act.

The next question which arises is whether this Court has jurisdiction under sec. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure or sec. 15 of 24 and 25 Victoria, C. 104 to interfere.

It is admitted that up to and including the time of making his award the Collector was in no sense a judicial officer and that the proceedings before him were not judicial proceedings [Ezra v. Secretary of State (1)] and however irregular his proceedings were, we cannot interfere with his award made under sec. 11 of the Act.

But when an application is made to the Collector requiring him to refer the matter to the Civil Court, the Collector may have to determine and, it seems to us, determine judicially whether the person making the application was represented or not when the award was made, or whether a notice had been served upon the applicant under sec. 12 (2) and what period of limitation applies and whether the application is under the circumstances made within time. The Collector's functions under Part III of the Act are clearly distinguishable from those under Part II. Part III of the Act relates to proceedings in Court. In our opinion the Collector in rejecting the application was a Court and acting judicially and his order is subject to revision by this Court. To hold otherwise would be to give finality to an award under sec. 11 even in cases in which the Collector acts irregularly and contrary to law and then refuses on insufficient grounds to make a reference under Part III of the Act. The party aggrieved may be left without remedy which is implied by a judicial trial before the Judge.

An attempt was made before us to show that the entire piece of land now acquired had already been acquired under a previous declaration by the local Government and the Administrator-General had received his share of the compensation. This however is a matter to be decided by the Judge on a reference and we cannot express any opinion on it.

We, therefore, make the rule absolute and set aside the Collector's order of the 23rd February 1905 and direct him to proceed according to law. The opposite party must pay the Petitioner's costs which we assess at 5 gold mohurs.

REV. No. 1337 OF 1907.

RAMPINI, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1907.
3, December.

LIAKAT HOSSEIN, Petitioner,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 487—Applicability to Presidency Magistrates—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 188—Retrial, High Court when to order.

Under sec. 487 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Chief Presidency Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try a person for an offence under sec. 188, I. P. C., for disobedience of his own order.

The terms of sec. 487, Cr. P. C., as contained in the Code of 1898, are wide enough to include Presidency Magistrates.

It is not ordinarily the duty of the High Court to order a retrial of a person whose conviction is set aside by the High Court on account of an illegality in his trial.

When the conviction and the sentence passed upon an accused is set aside by the High Court on the ground that the Magistrate who tried him had no jurisdiction to do so, the order of the High Court setting aside the conviction and sentence is no obstacle to the accused being retried on the same charge at the instance of the prosecution.

This was a rule granted on the 27th of November 1907, against an order of Mr. D. H. Kingsford, Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 4th of November 1907, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 188, I. P. C., and sentencing him to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts of the case so far as they are material to the report are shortly these :—

On the 5th October 1907, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, applied for an order under sec. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, prohibiting the Petitioner, Liakat Hossein, from addressing public meetings or forming and leading processions in the town of Calcutta. The Chief Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Kingsford, issued a notice under sec. 144 directing the Petitioner to refrain from leading, or taking any part in, processions and from holding or addressing meetings in Calcutta.

On the 26th of October 1907, a Daroga of the Calcutta Police applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate for sanction to prosecute the Petitioner under sec. 188, Indian Penal Code, for disobedience of the order issued under sec. 144, C. Cr. P., by leading a procession in Bechoo Chatterjee's Street, Calcutta, on the 25th October 1907. The prosecution was sanctioned by the Chief Presidency Magistrate with the result that the Petitioner was tried by the same Presidency Magistrate and convicted under sec. 188, I. P. C., and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. This rule was issued for setting aside the conviction and sentence.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri and Babu Narendra Kumar Bose for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. P. Sinha for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to show cause why his order, dated the 4th November 1907, convicting the Petitioner, Liakat Hossein, under sec. 188, LIAKAT HOSSEIN v. THE EMPEROR.

I. P. C., and sentencing him to six months' rigorous imprisonment, should not be set aside, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to deal with a case of disobedience of his own order, in contravention of the terms of sec. 487, C. Cr. P.

The facts of the case are these: The Petitioner has been tried, under sec. 188, I. P. C., for disobedience of the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, issued under sec. 144, C. Cr. P., directing him to refrain from leading, or taking part in, processions along the public streets of Calcutta and from holding and addressing meetings in Calcutta. This order was issued by Mr. Kingsford, the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and subsequently the Petitioner was charged with having disobeyed it, and, after being tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, he was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

A rule was asked for by Mr. Chaudhuri on the following grounds, namely, first, that the order, under sec. 144, C. Cr. P., was passed ex parte, and did not purport to have been passed in an emergency; secondly, that the Petitioner was not allowed to show cause against the order; and, thirdly, that there is nothing on the record to prove that the disobedience of the order tended to cause a riot, or an affray, or danger to human safety.

We heard Mr. Chaudhuri in support of these pleas and considered the matter. But we did not think these pleas sufficient to justify us in issuing a rule. It is not necessary for us to give our reasons for rejecting the three pleas cited above, because we come to the conclusion, after examining the proceedings, that a rule should be issued on another ground, namely, that the order under sec. 144, C. Cr. P., having been issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, he had no jurisdiction to try the Petitioner for disobedience of it, and that, consequently, his order, being in contravention of sec. 487, C. Cr. P., is without jurisdiction.

Mr. Sinha appears before us to-day on behalf of the Crown and states that he has no cause to show against the rule being made absolute. But he prays that an order may be passed by us for the retrial of the Petitioner.

We think that the learned Standing Counsel has taken a proper view of the matter. It seems impossible to resist the conclusion that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had, under sec. 487, C. Cr. P., no authority to try a case of disobedience of his own order, because sec. 487 expressly lays down that no Magistrate can try a case of disobedience of his own order.

It appears to us that the terms of sec. 487, C. Cr. P., as contained in the Code of 1898, are wide enough to include Presidency Magistrates. The word in the section is "magistrate;" and that must include a Presidency Magistrate, unless the definition of Magistrate excludes Presidency Magistrate, which, it appears to us, it does not. No doubt, in the Code of 1882, the provisions of sec. 487 were different, and 487 of that Code gave express power to Presidency Magistrates to try cases of disobedience of their own order. That section was modified in the Code of 1898, and no such power is given in sec. 487 of the Code now in force. For these reasons we think that Mr. Kingsford's order is without jurisdiction.

We therefore make the rule absolute and direct that the Petitioner be set at liberty.

Mr. Sinha asks us to order the retrial of the accused. We do not, however, think it is ordinarily our duty to order the retrial of any person. But we will observe that the order we now pass setting aside the conviction and sentence is no obstacle, in our opinion, to the accused being retried, if the prosecution thinks it advisable to retry him.

REV. No. 1141 OF 1907.

CASPERSZ, J. CHITTY, J. 1907. 28, October.	RAJ KUMAR SINGHA, Petitioner, v. TINCOWRI MAZUMDAR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 195 (6), 421 and 440—Sanction to prosecute—Application for revocation—Summary rejection without hearing the applicant—Illegality.

An application under sec. 195 (6), Cr. P. C., for the revocation of a sanction for prosecution is made by way of appeal, and under sec. 421, Cr. P. C., such an application ought not to be summarily rejected without giving the applicant a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same.

The provisions of sec. 440, Cr. P. C., do not apply to such a case.

This was a rule granted on the 24th of September 1907, against an order of S. K. Ghose, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Barrackpur, dated the 16th of August 1907, granting sanction to the opposite party to prosecute the Petitioner under sec. $\frac{211}{193}$, I. P. C., an application for the revision of which order was rejected by Mr. J. G. Cumming, District Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs, on the 31st of August 1907.

The facts of the case material to the report are briefly these:—

The Petitioner, Raj Kumar Singha, brought a charge of assault against Tincowri Mazumdar, the opposite party, and another under sec. 323, I. P. C., which after a regular trial was declared to be intentionally false. Tincowri then applied for sanction to prosecute Raj Kumar under sec. 211, I. P. C. A notice was issued upon Raj Kumar and after hearing his pleader, sanction was granted for his prosecution under sec. $\frac{211}{193}$, I. P. C.

The Petitioner then applied to the District Magistrate for revocation of the sanction. This application according to a standing order of the District Magistrate was filed before the Joint Magistrate. Subsequently the District Magistrate without giving an opportunity to the Petitioner being heard in support of his application, summarily rejected the same by the following order:—"The application for the exercise of my power under sec. 195 (6), Cr. P. C., of revoking the sanction given by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate is summarily rejected."

The Petitioner moved the High Court against this order of the District Magistrate and obtained this rule.

NOTES

IT IS WITH PLEASURE THAT WE NOTE THAT MR. Lalmohan Das, a leading vakil of the Calcutta High Court, has been appointed to officiate on the Bench in the place of Mr. Justice Mookerjee during the period of the latter's deputation. Mr. Lalmohan Das has a good record behind him both at the University and as a vakil of the High Court. His Tagore Lectures on "Alluvian, Diluvian and Riparian Rights" have spread his fame as a learned lawyer beyond the Presidency of Bengal The work referred to is the standard Indian treatise on the subject. Mr. Das enjoyed a good practice and is a practical lawyer of mature experience. We are sure that the new Judge will be of valuable assistance to his colleagues in the interpretation of law. Qualities such as decision, judgment, fairness and firmness are as essential on the Bench as learning and experience. We feel confident that the Mr. Justice Das will prove equal to the responsible position to which he has been raised from the ranks of a profession which in the past has supplied judges who have uniformly upheld the best traditions of the Bench.

THE MADRAS PUBLIC MUST BE CONGRATULATED FOR the honour they have done to Sir Subramania Iyer to whom both as a judge and a man such honour is due. A public meeting in, which all sections of the community, both Indian and European, joined hands and the Governor of the Province took part, not merely in a private capacity but in his official capacity, is unique in itself. The occasion, moreover, is one of great public importance having regard to the fact that the executive head of the Government came to honour a retiring judge not for any subserviency but for independence and the other stirling qualities of the mind and character which are so essential in a judge. This is as it should be and it would be a happy day for India when other heads of administration would be as ready to honour a judge for his fearless devotion to duty as His Excellency the Governor of Madras. The qualities of Sir Subramania Iyer that had won for him such public and also official admiration are thus described by Sir Arthur Lawley. His Excellency said "It has been hard to know which of the qualities of Sir Subramania Iyer to admire most—the brilliancy of his intellect, the profundity of his knowledge, the fearlessness of his courage, or the independency of his judgment." That such a judge deserved a public memorial and special recognition by the State is beyond doubt. After the high public tribute paid to this great judge we have little to add We must, however, say that the appreciation of his career is not peculiar to Madras but is general throughout India

Review.

INSTITUTES OF MUSSALMAN LAW. A treatise on Personal Law according to the Hanafite School, with reference to Original Arabic Sources and decided Cases from 1795 to 1906. By Nawab A. F. M. Abdur Rahman, Barrister-at-Law, and Judge, Presidency Court of Small Causes, Calcutta. Thacker, Spink & Co.

The present work is founded on the Droit Musulman of Kadir Pacha, a work of high authority on Mahomedan law as it prevails in Egypt. This, it may be premised, is the Sunni-Hanafite law which is also the law governing the generality of Mahomedans in this country. The Droit Musulman purports to be a Code of Mahomedan law (in its Sunni-Hanafite branch) and was prepared under the auspices of the Egyptian Government by a Council of leading Ulemas of the University of Al Azhar in Cairo. The Code takes its name from the President of this Council, Kadir Pacha, who was a Judge of the mixed tribunal at Cairo. So far as we are aware this is the only Code of Mahomedan law prepared on modern lines, and it does not speak much for the enterprise of the legal profession of this country that no similar work has yet been undertaken in India. To the present author belongs the credit of doing the next best thing in the same line, viz., introducing this work in India and adapting it to the requirements of the Courts and the profession in this country. To state more particularly, what the author has done in the present work is that he has not merely translated the Egyptian Code into English but under each proposition of law rendered into English he has noted the original Arabic sources from which it has been derived. The Arabic texts have been reproduced for purposes of reference in an appendix. Further, he has woven into the materials of the code the Indian case-law bearing on the subjects dealt with. He has also furnished references to the recognised English text-books in use in this country. Nothing has, in fact, been omitted to make it a most useful and exhaustive book of reference relating to all that concerns the Sunni-Hanafite law. The case-law bearing on the Shia system has also been noted to show in a general way the divergence between the two systems. The present volume does not exhaust the whole subject. It deals only with the law of marriage, dower, divorce, the law relating to children and the law of gifts, wills and executors. If the present volume is well received the author intends to deal with the rest of the subject. The work done by the author is very commendable and he deserves every encouragement for continuing it.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—West Leigh Colliery Company (Ld.) v. Tunnicliffe and Hampson (Ld). Before LORD LOREBURN, L. C., and LORDS ASHBOURNE, MACNAGHTEN, JAMES OF HEREFORD and ATKINSON. 2nd December 1907.

Damages for actual subsidence—Depreciation in value of site, no cause of action.

In this action brought by the Respondents, owners of cotton mills, against the Appellants, Colliery Company, for damages for subsidence caused by the mining operations carried on by the latter, the Court of Appeal had held reversing a judgment of Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady, that the damages ought to include compensation for the depreciation of the selling value of the property of the Respondents.

LORD MACNAGHTEN in allowing the appeal observed that the case was concluded by authority (Backhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. C. 503 and Darby Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, 11 App. Cas. 127). "The surface owner has no cause of action against the owner of a subjacent stratum until and unless actual damage results from the removal of minerals. The Statute of Limitations is no bar however long it may be since the removal was completed, nor, is it any answer to a surface owner's claim to say that he has already brought one or more actions and obtained compensation once and again for other damage resulting from the same excavation. The depreciation in the value of the surface owner's property brought about by the apprehension of future damage gives no cause of action by itself."

LORD ASHBOURNE added "the owner can bring fresh action for damage caused by each fresh subsidence, but he cannot recover anything for the risk of future damage."

Mr. C. A. Russell, K. C., Mr. Jessel, K. C., and Mr. Leslie Scott for the Appellants.

Mr. Cripps, K. C, Mr. Langdon, K. C., and Mr. F. L. Wright for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Dibden v. Skirrow. Before LORDS JUSTICES COZENS HARDY, M. R. FLETCHER MOULTON and FARWELL. 5th November 1907.

Ferry, interference with—Building bridge across stream.

In the suit out of which this appeal arose, Plaintiff alleged inter alia that he and his predecessors-in-title had enjoyed and maintained from time immemorial a ferry for foot-passengers across the river Wye at Brockwier in Glouscestershire and that the Defendants by building a bridge across the river, about 60 yards below the ferry was interfering with and injuring the said ferry and the Plaintiff sought to restrain them from constructing the bridge. The appeal was against the decision of Neville, J., dismissing the claim.

The Court of Appeal relying on Hopkins v. Great Northern Ry Co., 2 Q. B. D. 224, decided that the grant of a ferry did not carry with it the exclusive right of carrying passengers and goods across the stream by any means whatever but only by means of the ferry. Relief could be granted only when the ferry rights were interfered with by a passage of the river in boats. There was no such interference in this case.

Mr. Bailhache for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., and Mr. F. Thompson for the Defendants were not called upon.

Appeal dismissed.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS]

LORD HALSBURY. LORD MACNAGHTEN. LORD ATKINSON. LORD COLLINS. SIR ARTHUR WILSON. 1907. 10th December.	KOCHERIAKOTA VENKATA KRISHNA RAO and others, Petitioners, Appellants, v. KANDIMALLA SETHARAMIAH GARU and others, Respondents

Leave to appeal—" Substantial question of law" —Date on which the period of limitation commences to run

This was an application for special leave to appeal under the following circumstances:—

The estate of Gopalapur originally belonged to Raja Venkatarayanam Garu, who died in the year 1832 and was succeeded by his posthumous son Sreewarthu Venkataraju Garu. On his death in 1833 his mother, Lakshmidavamma Garu, succeeded him. On 17th and 18th December 1836 that lady entered into a transaction of mortgage with Kandimalla Narayya Garu and three others. The form the transaction took was that on 17th December 1836 that lady presented a petition to the Collector of the District stating that she had sold ⅘ths share in the estate to those four persons for the sum of Rs. 20,000; while on 18th December 1836 the mortgagees executed an agreement reciting the presentation of the said petition, and containing the following stipulations:—

"1 Whenever you may pay us in full the said Rs. 20,000 and the interest thereon at Re. 1 (one rupee) per Rs. 100 per month by the 18th December 1841, we shall then transfer our shares in Gopalapur Mutta to you or any one else you desire.

"2. For the five years (i.e., the period) up to the 18th December 1841 the due date for your paying us the money and getting a re-transfer to your name of our four-fifths in the said Mutta it is settled that you shall yourself be liable for the profits or losses in respect of our four-fifths share of villages, so you shall yourself manage the business of the entire Mutta after paying the said charges, and the sirkar kists as well as the interest accrued at the end of every year on the Rs. 20,000 paid by us, any money that may be left shall be taken by you.

"3. If within the 18th December 1841, the Mutta collections are not realised owing to acts of God or of the State, or owing to excess or want of rain, and if therefore any portion of the sirkar kists remain due till the 30th Vysakha Bahula of the respective Faslis, or if any portion of the interest for any Fasli on the said Rs. 20,000 lent by us remain due not being paid in full till 11th July the end of that Fasli, that money shall be separately sent for and paid by you. In default of such payment we shall without any concern for the stipulated period of 5 years till the 18th December 1841, consider this as a sale from the date of either of the said two defaults that may happen and shall enjoy our ⅘ths in the said Mutta villages as a permanent zemindari.

"It is settled that if you act according to terms within the period mentioned in this kararnama and pay us Rs. 20,000 (twenty thousand rupees) and the interest thereon in the order of the dates of payment our ⅘ths of the villages of the said Mutta shall be retransferred to you."

The said lady did not pay the principal of the mortgage money prior to 18th December 1841, and in consequence the mortgagees took possession of the mortgaged estate.

The said lady died in the year 1883, and the Petitioners on her death succeeded to the estate as the next reversioners of her son, the last male-holder, and on 18th December 1901 they instituted in the Court of the District Judge of Godavari to redeem the said mortgage, alleging also that the said lady did not execute the same for necessity under the Hindu law.

Of the 15 Defendants Nos. 1 to 13 represented the original mortgagees and did not contest the claim. Defendants Nos. 14 and 15 pleaded that the transaction in question was not a mortgage but a sale, that they had acquired title by purchase at a sale for arrears of revenue, and that the suit was barred by limitation. They also denied the pedigree put forward by the Petitioners.

On 12th September 1903 the District Judge delivered his judgment. He decided that the pedigree was proved, that the transaction was a mortgage, that the Defendants Nos. 14 and 15 had acquired a good title by the revenue sale, and that the purchase was not benami for the mortgagees. He was of opinion that the mortgage was one by conditional sale, and that on the expiry of the term fixed no equity of redemption was left outstanding and that the suit was barred by limitation under Act XV of 1877, Sch. II, Art. 144. A decree was accordingly made dismissing the suit with costs.

Against that decree the Petitioners appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Madras. On 27th September 1906 that Court made a decree dismissing the appeal. The High Court decided only one point, viz., that the suit was barred under Art. 158 of the Limitation Act being of opinion that the cause of action to redeem in accordance with the provisions of the said deed of mortgage accrued on any day after the execution of the instrument.

On 15th July 1907 the High Court refused the Petitioners' application for leave to appeal against its decree to His Majesty in Council by an order in terms following:—

"Our decision cofirmed the decision of the lower Court and we think there is no substantial question of law which would justify us in certifying."

Mr. DeGruyther for the Petitioners.—The Petitioners are entitled to appeal as of right under sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because the subject-matter of the suit and of the appeal to His Majesty in Council exceeds in value the sum of Rs. 10,000 and because the suit involves substantial questions of law, viz., firstly whether the suit is barred under Act XV of 1877, Sch. II, Art. 148; secondly, whether on the true construction of the said deed of mortgage the right to redeem did not accrue on 18th December 1841; thirdly, whether a receipt for interest due on the said mortgage, dated 5th December 1841, signed by the mortgagees and registered by their pleader on 5th March 1842, did not operate to give a new period of limitation under secs. 19 and 20 of Act XV of 1877. (The High Court held that primâ facie the pleader had no authority except to register the instrument.) From what date the period of limitation started to run is a substantial question of law. If a point is arguable, which is submitted is the case here, the Petitioners ought to have leave.

Application refused.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 2116 OF 1907. OMAR ALI MAJHI, Appellant v. BASIRUDDI AHMED, Respondent. Heard, 2nd and 3rd January 1908. Judgment, 3rd January 1908.

Occupancy holding, purchaser of a portion of—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), secs. 244, 310A—Deposit.

The Appellant was a purchaser of a portion of an occupancy holding. Whether it was transferable or not was immaterial. The holding was sold for it own arrears. He put in the amount of the decree with the usual costs under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure. An objection was raised that he had no locus standi. He was the purchaser of a portion of the holding and, as against the judgment-debtors, the original tenants, he had a subsisting interest and he was in possession. The Munsif allowed the deposit to be made and set aside the sale.

The lower Appellate Court came to a different conclusion. It decided that the evidence was insufficient for a finding of transferability of the occupancy holding according to custom; and, having come to that conclusion, he held that, notwithstanding that the Appellant was a purchaser of a portion of the occupancy holding, he had no locus standi.

On appeal to the High Court

Held—That as the question between the parties was one that came under cl. (c) of sec. 244 of the Code, an appeal and a second appeal lay.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 432 OF 1906. BAYANULLAH, Appellant v. NAYEB-ULLAH AKANDA AND OTHERS, Respondents. 3rd January 1908.

Remand—Entire evidence to be gone into—Parties, adding of—Mistake.

After remand by the lower Appellate Court, B and G were added as Defendants in the suit and the plaint was accordingly amended. On appeal to the High Court it was contended that the order of remand was erroneous inasmuch as there was no authority in the Code for such a remand, and that as B and G were known to the Plaintiff to have been in possession of the property they ought to have been made parties in the suit as originally framed.

Held—That as the entire evidence had to be gone into in the presence of B and G, the lower Appellate Court had no alternative but to remand the whole case.

The Court should allow persons to be added who were by mistake not made parties.

RAJ KUMAR SINGHA v. TINCOWRI MAZUMDAR.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We think the learned District Magistrate was in error in not hearing the pleader in the matter of the application by way of appeal preferred by the Petitioner under sec. 195 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The principle laid down in the second paragraph of sec. 421 of the Code appears to be a salutory principle in a case like this, and we do not think that sec. 440 of the Code is one on which reliance can be placed. It is obvious that an order of rejection should not have been passed without hearing the pleader, who might have placed matters before the learned District Magistrate and explained them to him in a way which he may not have considered before the order of rejection was passed; and we think that the Petitioner was entitled, as of right, to be heard through his pleader.

We, accordingly, set aside the order of the District Magistrate, dated the 31st August 1907, and direct that he do restore the case to his file and dispose of the same in accordance with law after hearing the Petitioner's pleader on a date to be fixed by the District Magistrate.

The rule is made absolute.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD ROBERTSON. LORD COLLINS. SIR ARTHUR WILSON. 1907. 11, December.	RAJA PRAMADA NATH ROY, Appellant, v. RAJA RAMANI KANTA ROY and ors., Respondents.

Co-sharer landlords—Separate collection—Right of sharer to sue for whole rent making co-sharers Defendants—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 188—"Required or authorised to do" under the Act—Filing of suit—General principles of legal procedure.

Agreement either expressly proved or implied by the conduct of the parties may establish the right of co-sharer landlords to sue separately for the shares of rent receivable by them. But such an arrangement merely affects the right to sue separately for rent, and in no other respect modifies the terms of the holding. The right to bring the tenure to sale for arrears of rent remains intact, as also the right of one sharer to sue, making his co-sharers Defendants when they will not join as Plaintiffs.

The filing of a suit is not a thing which the landlord is, under the Bengal Tenancy Act, required or authorised to do: and sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is no bar to a sharer suing (under the general rules of legal procedure) for the whole rent of the tenure making his co-sharers who refuse to join as Plaintiffs, Defendants in the suit Appeal from a decree of the above-mentioned High Court, dated the 3rd of June 1904, affirming a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 17th of December 1900.

The principal question involved in the appeal was whether the Appellant as one of the co-sharers in the zemindari interest in an estate known as Dihi Haloti was entitled to sue for the whole rent due from the putnidars of that estate, making his co-sharers in the zemindari interest parties to the suit as Defendants.

In the year 1837 one Raja Ram Chandra Bahadur was the sole owner of a separate 8 annas share in the above-mentioned estate. On 23rd April 1857 he made a putni settlement of his 8 anna share with one C. I. Abbott on a yearly rental of Rs. 6,349-6-10.

That 8 anna share of the zemindari interest was subsequently split up. In April 1895 the Plaintiff-Appellant purchased a 2 anna share, which had passed into the ownership of Brojo Nath Roy and Krishna Lal Roy, and in June of the same year he purchased a 4 anna share from Rani Mina Kumari. Of the remaining 2 anna share, 1 anna share was purchased by Jadab Chandra Bagchi, the father of the Defendants Nos. 18 and 19 (Respondents Nos. 14 and 15), and the other 1 anna share, which had become the property of Uma Sankar Sen and Rajoni Kant Sen, passed to the ownership of the Defendants Nos. 20, 21 and 22 (Respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 16), Bhuban Mohan Moitra, Sarada Mohan Moitra and Kali Mohan Moitra. Thus at the time of the intstitution of the suit the zemindari interest was held as follows :—

The Appellant ...	...	6 annas.
Respondents Nos 14 & 15 ...		1 anna.
Respondents Nos. 2, 3 & 16...		1 anna

The putni interest of Mr. Abbott passed into the hands of one Nur Mahomed Khan Chaudhuri and at the time of the present suit was in the ownership of the various Defendants numbered 1 to 16 inclusive. The Defendant No. 17 (Respondent No. 1), Raja Ramani Kanta Roy, had purchased on 15th April 1898 the interest of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 8. The Defendant No. 22 (Respondent No. 16), Kali Mohan Moitra, who as aforesaid was the owner of a share in the zemindari right, had purchased the interest of the Defendants Nos. 12, 13 and 16 in the putni tenure.

In the year 1891 Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur, the husband of the above-mentioned Rani Mina Kumari (the predecessor-in-title of the Appellant), had brought a rent suit (No. 171 of 1891) for the balance of rent due in respect of a 4 anna share of the putni tenure against the then putnidar the above-mentioned Nur Mahomed Khan Chaudhuri, whose predecessor, it was alleged, "took settlement of a 4 anna share of Dihi Haloti under kabuliyat." On 25th July 1891 an ex parte decree had been made in favour of the Plaintiff in that suit.

In the year 1893 the above mentioned Uma Sankar Sen and Rajoni Kant Sen had sued (Suit No. 2 of 1893) the putnidar Nur Mahomed Khan Chaudhuri for his 1 anna share of the rent due and had obtained an ex parte decree in their favour.

In the year 1896 the Appellant and his vendor, the above-mentioned Rani Mina Kumari, had brought a rent suit (No. 7 of 1396) against the putnidars and co sharer zemindars as Defendants. The claim was for the recovery of the entire rent due in respect of the whole putni tenure for the years 1299 to 1302, B. S. (April 1892 to April 1895) as well as for a declaration of their right to separately recover rent for the 6 anna share they owned. The suit as far as the rent of the whole putni tenure was concerned was dismissed, but a decree was made for the 6 anna share of the rent.

RAJA PRAMADA NATH ROY v. RAJA RAMANI KANTA ROY.

To the Respondent zemindars the putnidars paid nearly the whole of the portion of the rent they were entitled to. To the Appellant they paid no rent at all. He gave notice to the other zemindars asking them to join him in a suit for the arrears of rent due, and on their failure to do so, he instituted the present suit on 17th April 1900 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye making all the putnidars and the co-sharer zemindars Defendants thereto, and claiming a decree for the whole rent due on the putni amounting to Rs. 27,324-3-9½. The plaint stated inter alia "that the Plaintiff is entitled to realise separately his share of the money; but under the terms of the putni kabuliyat and according to the provisions of Act VIII of 1885 he is, according to law, entitled to bring suit together with the co-sharer Defendants for the whole of the rent and road-cess, &c., as mentioned in the putni kabuliyat. On account of his realizing the amounts in proportion to his share no departure has been made from the terms of the original kabuliyat." The Appellant prayed in the alternative "that if for any valid reason a decree for the whole of the arrears of rent, &c., due to the Plaintiff and the co-sharer pro formâ Defendants could not be passed, then, a decree may be passed for Rs. 27,139-0-8½ due to the Plaintiff's share with costs, &c."

Respondents Nos. 1 and 4 filed written statements in answer to the suit and pleaded inter alia that "as the respective predecessors of the Plaintiff and of the pro formâ Defendants brought separate suits for arrears of rent, and acquired decrees on account of their respective shares and also amicably realized the same by separately granting dakhilas in respect of the putni described in the plaint, the suit for arrears of rent brought by the Plaintiff in its present form cannot proceed."

Of the issues fixed the following portion of the first issue is alone material for the purpose of this report:—"Is the Plaintiff, who has hitherto received the rents in proportion to his share, competent to bring a suit for the whole rent which is due to all the shareholders?"

On 17th December 1900 the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment and made a decree in favour of the Appellant for his share of the arrears of rent due. On the issue set out above his decision was as follows:—

"It appears from the decrees put in evidence by the Defendants that the collection of the Plaintiff's share is separate. This separated collection therefore gives rises to the presumption that by some arrangement which has been consented to by the co-sharers and the tenants, separate payment of a particular share of the rent has hitherto been made to the Plaintiff. That being so, so long as the agreement continues, the Plaintiff is not competent to sue for the whole rent, even though the co-sharers are made parties to the suit. It is not the Plaintiff's case that the arrangement has been put an end to by the consent of all the parties who originally concurred in it. Until this is done, the Plaintiff is not entitled to bring a suit for the whole rent. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of parties, because the original contract in respect to the entire rent has not been put an end to. The Plaintiff is, however, entitled to have a 6 anna share of the rent which he is in the habit of collecting separately from the tenant Defendants."

Against that decree the Appellant appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The appeal was heard by Ghose and Geidt, JJ. On 28th April 1904, Ghose, J, delivered his judgment affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, while Geidt, J., delivered judgment reversing that decree. He was of opinion that the Appellant was entitled to a decree in a suit properly framed for the whole rent due as the only method by which he could enforce the statutory right conferred by the Bengal Tenancy Act of bringing the tenure itself to sale for the recovery of the arrears of rent due therefor. In consequence of the difference of opinion the appeal was sent to Brett, J, for final disposal. On 3rd June 1904 he delivered judgment, and agreed with the judgment of Ghose, J. A decree was accordingly made dismissing the appeal with costs.

For the full text of the judgments, see 9 C. W. N. 34.

The Appellant, thereupon, appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Atkin, K. C., and Mr. DeGruyther for the Appellant.—Under sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) the landlord has no right to eject his tenant for arrears of rent, but the tenant's tenure or holding is liable to sale in execution of a decree for rent thereof and the rent is made a first charge on the tenure or holding. Why should one co-sharer landlord abandon this statutory right of his? Here there is no dispute as to the fact of the rent being in arrears. Sec. 170 (1) of that Act enacts that secs. 278 to 285 (both inclusive) of the Civil Procedure Code shall not apply to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears of rent thereon. Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act (sec. 159 and the following sections) provides a method by which landlords after obtaining a decree for the rent can bring the tenure itself to sale in satisfaction of their decree, but in order to bring the tenure itself to sale all the landlords must be parties to the suit and that the rent sued for must be the rent due in respect of the entire tenure and not in respect of a portion due to any particular shareholder. Both these conditions have been fulfilled here. But it is contended by the other side that the suit would have been perfectly in order were it not for the subsisting arrangement between the tenants and the landlords whereby the tenants have been paying rents to the landlords in proportion to the latter's share in the property.

[LORD ROBERTSON.—The Subordinate Judge infers from various suits that there was an arrangement, but there is nothing in evidence to show what that arrangement is.]

Mr. Atkins.—That is so, my Lord. If this contention were to prevail and the decision upheld, the arrangement would defeat the statutory right, because in execution of a decree obtained by a fractional co-sharer for his share of the rent, only the right, title and interest of the tenant can be sold. But there is really no evidence of the terms of this arrangement. Its existence has been merely inferred from the decrees showing that rent had been from time to time recovered separately. The arrangement, if any, only means that the tenants have agreed to pay separately to the various landlords the fractions of the rent proportioned to their respective interests in the property and that the landlords have agreed to accept the rent paid in this manner. It does not amount to anything more. It refers to the method of payment only and does affect the rights and liabilities arising out of the kabuliyat under which the tenants hold their tenure. The cancellation and determination of the original lease ought not to be presumed from the mere fact of a separate payment of rent to one or more of the co-sharers: Guni Mahomed v. Moran (1). It is conceded by the learned Judges below that if all the landlords concurred in bringing the suit, the Appellant could sue for the whole rent in respect of the tenure in spite of the arrangement. That shows that the arrangement does not interfere with the principle of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Appellant's right thereunder. Then, the question is 'can the arrangement prevent the Appellant from suing when the other landlords do not consent.' It is submitted not. It is a general rule of the law of procedure that one co-sharer can bring his co-sharers in the suit as Defendants upon their refusal to join him as co-Plaintiffs. Here the co-sharers refused to join the Appellant and consequently he has joined them as Defendants. Reference was also made to Ramcoomar Ghose v. Kali Krishna Tagore (2); Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (VIII of 1869), B. C., secs. 22, 59 and 14; Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 188 Zemindari Revenue Sale Law (Bengal Act XI of 1859), secs. 6, 10 and 11; and Arrears of Revenue Act (Bengal Act VII of 1868), secs. 9, 11 and 13.

RAJA PRAMADA NATH ROY v. RAJA RAMANI KANTA ROY.

Mr. Arathoon for the contesting Respondents.—I do not disagree with much of what the other side said. But the question, which is a much narrower one, is that so long as the agreement exists, the Appellant could not sue in the present form, because until it is rescinded he is legally bound by it. It is true that the agreement does not get rid of the tenure, but the question is 'can the landlord enforce his rights under the Bengal Tenancy Act while the arrangement exists?' It is submitted that he could not. There is no question of harassing the tenant with several suits, as under the arrangement there could only be one suit, while under the Bengal Tenancy Act there would be several suits. So long as the arrangement is in existence, the landlord could not come down suddenly upon the tenant and sue him for the whole rent of the tenure. The evidence shows that two different landlords sued two different tenants under two different arrangements for their separate shares of rents and obtained decrees. One of the suits was brought against the predecessor of the contending Respondent, Raja Ramani Kanta Roy, and the claim, which was successful, was made under a kabuliyat, which means a written agreement. Again the evidence shows that the Appellant had already brought in 1896 a suit for arrears of rent claiming that the putni tenure was liable for it. A decree was passed in it for the rent due to the Appellant's share and the Court held that the putni tenure could not be held liable for the Appellant's claim for rent, and that the Appellant had no power to bring any suit for the rent due in the 8 anna share. The present suit really raises the same question over again. It is submitted that the decision in that suit and also the decisions of the lower Courts in this suit are right. The decree in Sheikh Naimuddin v. Srimanta Ghose (3) was considered only a money decree.

[SIR ARTHUR WILSON.—Because other landlords were not parties to the suit.]

If the appeal were allowed, the result would be that the landlord would have two concurrent rights, which the legislature never intended at any time to give to the landlord. Is there any provision under the Bengal Tenancy Act, which gives the landlord the right claimed in spite of the arrangement without giving to the tenant any notice to rescind the arrangement? It is submitted that there is no such provision in that Act. Reference was also made to : Raj Narain Mitter v. Ekadashi Bag (4), Beni Madhub Roy v. Jaod Ali Sircar (5) and Gopal Chunder Das v. Umesh Narain Chowdhry (6).

Mr. Atkin replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR ARTHUR WILSON.—This appeal raises a question upon the construction and effect of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a short question, but one which may be of considerable importance wherever that Act applies.

The facts of the case are not in dispute, and are simple. In the year 1837 the then owner of the zemindari interest in an 8 annas share in Dihi Haloti created a putni tenure in those 8 annas in favour of one Abbott, at a rent reserved. The zemindari and the putni interests both underwent subsequent devolutions, and at the time which is now material, the present Plaintiff (Appellant) held 6 annas of the zemindari interest, Respondents 14 and 15 held 1 anna, and Respondents 2, 3 and 16 one anna. The putni interest was held by the remaining Respondents, and also by Respondent 16. The last-mentioned, therefore, was interested both in the zemindari and in the putni. The putni rent fell into arrear so far as the share which should have come to the Appellant was concerned.

The Appellant thereupon brought the present suit on the 17th April 1900 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye. He made the putnidars Defendants, and he joined as co-Defendants his co-sharers in the zemindari on the ground that they refused to join him as Plaintiffs. The suit was framed as one under the Bengal Tenancy Act to recover the whole rent of the tenure, and for that purpose to bring to sale the tenure itself. But the plaint asked in the alternative for a decree for the Plaintiff's share of the rent.

The Subordinate Judge refused to make a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act for the whole putni rent, and gave a decree only for the Plaintiff's share of the rent. On appeal, the case came before two Judges of the High Court, Ghose and Geidt, JJ., who differed in opinion, Ghose, J., holding that the view of the Subordinate Judge was correct, Geidt, J., being of the contrary opinion. In consequence of this difference the case was referred to a third Judge, Brett, J., who agreed with Ghose, J., with the result that the appeal was dismissed. Against that decision the present appeal has been brought, and it lies upon their Lordships to determine which of the views taken by the learned Judges ought to prevail.

Sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act enacts that:—

"Where a tenant is a permanent tenure holder . . . he shall not be liable to ejectment for arrears of rent, but his tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the the rent thereof, and the rent shall be a first charge thereon."

Sec. 159 and the following sections provide the means and procedure for so bringing the tenure to sale, and for the cancellation of incumbrances thereupon. The only other section which it is necessary to refer to is sec. 188, which says that:—

"Where two or more persons are joint landlords, anything which the landlord is under this Act required or authorized to do must be done either by both or all those persons acting together, or by an agent authorized to act on behalf of both or all of them."

By the express terms of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in the event of rent being unpaid, the owners of the zemindari interest are entitled, by suit under that Act to bring a putni to sale, with the consequences prescribed by the Act. And it is a general rule—a rule not derived from the Bengal Tenancy Act, but from quite another branch of law, namely, the general principles of legal procedure—that a sharer, whose co-sharers refuse to join him as Plaintiffs, can bring them into the suit as Defendants, and sue for the whole rent of the tenure. This must apparently be the law applicable to the present case, unless there be something to exclude the case from the operation of these general rules.

For the purpose of this exclusion, what was relied on was this: it was said that, by express or implied agreement between the zemindars and the putnidars, the shares in the putni rent of the several zemindars were to be paid, and so far as they were paid at all, were, in fact, paid separately; and it was contended that that agreement, on the one hand, entitled the separate zemindars to sue for their separate shares, and to bring to sale the right, title and interest of the putnidars, but, on the other hand, either precluded the zemindars altogether from obtaining a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act for the rent as a whole, or at any rate prevented one of the zemindars from doing so by making his co-sharers Defendants.

This was the contention which prevailed with the Subordinate Judge and with two out of the three Judges in the High Court.

The evidence of the alleged agreement consisted of certain decrees, which seemed to show that the shares of the rent had been from time to time separately recovered. It has long been held in Bengal that agreement, either expressly proved or implied by the conduct of the parties, may establish the right to sue separately for the shares of rent receivable by the separate share-holders; and their Lordships have no inclination to question that course of rulings.

RAJA PRAMADA NATH ROY v. RAJA RAMANI KANTA ROY.

But it has been equally clearly laid down in Bengal that such an arrangement, expressed or implied, merely affects the right to sue separately for rent, and in no other respect modifies the terms of the holding; and their Lordships think that this is clearly a sound view of the law. And it appears to their Lordships to be sufficient ground upon which to decide this appeal, for it follows, from the propositions referred to, that the right to bring the tenure to sale for arrears of rent remains intact, and also the right of one sharer to sue, making his co-sharers Defendants when they will not join as Plaintiffs.

It only remains to notice sec. 188 cited above. It was suggested in argument that this section precludes a suit under the Act, for the aggregate rent of the tenure, unless all those entitled to share in the rent join as Plaintiffs. Their Lordships are not impressed by this argument. The filing of a suit is not a thing which the landlord is, under the Act, required or authorised to do. It is an application to the Court for relief against an alleged grievance, which the Plaintiff is entitled to submit, not by reason of any provision of the Tenancy Act, but under the general law.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decrees of both Courts in India should be discharged, and that instead thereof it ought to be declared that the Appellant is competent to bring a suit, under the Bengal Tenancy Act, for the whole rent due in respect of the property in suit, that the case ought to be remitted to the High Court to take the necessary steps for the disposal thereof on the footing of the above declaration, and that the Respondents who defended the appeal to the High Court ought to pay the costs thereof, and that the costs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge ought to be dealt with by that Judge on the above footing.

The Respondents who defended this appeal will pay the costs of it.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 369 OF 1906.

BRETT, J. HOLMWOOD, J. 1907. Heard, 20 & 21, November. Judgment, 11, December.	BHAWAL SAHU and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. BAIJ NATH PERTAB NARAIN SINGH, Defendant, Respondent.

Guardian and minor—Bond by guardian—Liability of minor—Necessaries—Bond to keep alive debt due for necessaries, when binds minor's estate—Limitation—Personal liability.

The proposition that a guardian of a minor cannot bind his ward personally by a simple contract debt, by a covenant or by any promise to pay money or damages, is subject to the modification that the promise will not bind the minor unless it has been made merely to keep alive a debt for which the ward's property was liable.

SUBRAMANIA AYYAR v. ARUMUGA CHETTI (7) referred to.

Where the promise is to pay money which has been expended for necessaries the estate of the minor may be liable not on the promise but because the money has been supplied.

SUNDARARAJA AYYANGAR v. PATTANTHUSAMI TEVER (9) referred to.

It is established law that a guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it.

MOHARANA SHRI RANMAL SINGJI v. VADILAL VAKHAT CHAND (3) referred to.

When a third person enters into dealings with the guardian of a minor and advances money for necessaries for the minor or for the benefit of his estate and takes a bond for the debt from the guardian, the responsibility rests on him to take care that the bond is so drawn as to render the estate of the minor in law liable for the debt.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of March 1906, against the decree of E. P. Chapman, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Mozufferpur, dated the 12th of January 1906, reversing that of Babu Nalini Nath Mitra, Subordinate Judge, first Court of that district, dated the 31st of July 1905.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Plaintiff-Appellant brought an action to recover a sum of money due on a bond executed in his favour by the Defendant No. 2 as mother and guardian of Defendant No. 1. The bond was executed on the 24th March 1901 and renewed a previous bond executed on the 24th August 1894. Defendant No. 1 came of age on the 29th May 1901 and the suit was instituted on the 1st October 1904 to recover the money due on the bond out of the estate of the Defendant No. 1, or for a joint decree against both Defendants.

The Court of first instance held that the money due on the bond had been borrowed by Defendant No. 2 as his guardian for the benefit of the estate of Defendant No. 1, and gave the Plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed, to be realised out of the estate of the Defendant No. 1, at the same time declaring that Defendant No. 1 was not personally liable for the debt due under the decree.

On appeal the District Judge has reversed the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance and has dimissed the Plaintiff's suit in its entirety. The Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the bond in suit was duly executed by the Defendant No. 2 for consideration and that it was valid and genuine. He also held that it was executed by the Defendant No. 2 in her capacity as guardian and on behalf of Defendant No. 1 who was at the time of its execution a minor. He dismissed the suit, however, disagreeing with the Subordinate Judge on the following grounds:—He held that as it is settled law that a guardian cannot bind a minor by a personal covenant therefore the suit on the contract must fail, and in support of this view relied on several rulings which he mentions in his judgment. He further held that though the Plaintiffs might have succeeded in a suit upon the ground of necessaries supplied, or benefits rendered, there was no evidence except as to the sum of Rs. 1,000, that any portion of the money was borrowed by Defendant No. 2 for either of these purposes, and that as regards the sum of Rs. 1,000 which was borrowed on the registered bond of the 24th August 1894 the claim was barred by limitation as the guardian Defendant No. 2 had not done any act within 3 or 6 years from the date of that bond to extend the period of limitation so as to bind the Defendant No. 1.

The Plaintiffs have appealed.

In support of the appeal it has been argued that the authorities on which the District Judge has relied do not go so far as to support the general proposition which he appears to lay down that under no circumstances whatever can a guardian bind a minor's estate by a contract entered into on his behalf. The learned pleader for the Appellant points out that in the plaint no relief was sought against the Defendant No. 1 personally, but only against his estate, and that the decree given by the Subordinate Judge was against the estate of the nor and expressly relieved him from personal liability. He further argues that in this country where the pleadings are not artistically drawn a liberal construction should be given to them and that they should be construed as a whole and not piecemeal. He contends that from the plaint thus construed the preceding paragraphs being read in connection with paragraph 8, and from the written statement filed by the Defendant No. 1, who alone contested the suit, it is clear that the Plaintiff based his claim on the bond against the estate of Defendant No. 1 on the ground that the money due under the bond had been borrowed by the Defendant No. 2 as guardian of Defendant No. 1 for necessaries and for the benefit of the estate of the latter: and that being so the rulings relied on by the District Judge do not support his general conclusion that under no circumstances could the guardian by a contract entered into on behalf of the minor bind the estate of the latter. Dealing seriatim with the rulings referred to by the District Judge he points out that the case of Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masludin (1) does not support the conclusion. In the case of Indur Chunder v. Radha Kishore (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council did not go further than to say that the contract, which in that case was a lease with onerous covenants, could not bind the minor personally, and that there was no claim against the minor's estate. In the case of Moharana Shri Ranmal v. Vadi Lal (3) the Judges of the Bombay High Court express at page

70 opinions which go far from supporting the general proposition laid down by the District Judge. They say "while holding however that a minor cannot be bound personally by contracts entered into by a guardian which do not purport to charge his estate we do not think that he is necessarily free from liability. Marlow v. Pitfield (4) If the debts were incurred for necessaries he would, we believe, be bound to pay them on the general principle embodied in sec. 68 of the Contract Act (IV of 1872) as his liability would not probably be affected by the fact that the loans were advanced at the instance of the guardian. See Juggessur v. Nilambar (5). Her contract on his behalf might be ineffectual like one entered into by himself but the liability to discharge debts incurred for necessaries would remain. See Walter v. Edward (6). The necessity for them would determine whether he was bound to repay them, and not, we think, the reasonable belief of the borrower that they were for necessary purposes." In the case of Subramania Ayyar v. Arumuga Chetti (7) the Judges of the Madras High Court held that in a case where a mother of a minor had executed as his guardian a promissory note in respect of a debt for which the son's share in an ancestral estate was liable at the time the minor was liable on the note to the extent of his ancestral estate, and that the guardian had authority to acknowledge the liability provided it was not barred by limitation. In the case of Annapagauda v. Sangadi Gyapa (8), it was held by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court that a guardian appointed under the Guardian and Wards Act (VII of 1890) can sign an acknowledgment of liability in respect of, or pay part of the principal of, a debt so as to extend the period of limitation against the ward in accordance with secs. 19 and and 20 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, provided it be shown in each case that the guardian's act was for the protection or benefit of the minor's property, and the learned Chief Justice in delivering judgment remarked (see page 232) "It is no objection, I think, to the view, that a guardian cannot impose a personal liability on a ward by contract, for an acknowledgment under a statute is fundamentally distinct from a fresh contract, though it may in some respects have similar results." In Sundararaja v. Pattanthusami (9), it was simply held that there was no necessity proved for the promissory note executed on behalf of a minor by his guardian in favour of a vakil for past professional services.

The learned pleader, therefore, contends that the first ground on which the District Judge dismissed the Plaintiff's claim is not good in law.

Dealing with the second ground on which the District Judge has dismissed the claim of the Plaintiff the learned pleader contends that the whole basis of the suit in which the Plaintiff sought to recover the money due on the bond from the estate of the Plaintiff, was that the money was borrowed by the guardian for the minor for necessaries and for the benefit of the minor's estate. That this was recognised in the defence set up by the Defendant No. 1, who alone contested the suit, in his written statement, and was the matter on contest in the Court of 1st instance, and the Subordinate Judge arived at distinct findings on the points and that those findings have not been displaced by the District Judge. The learned pleader, therefore, contends that the case should be remanded to the District Judge for distinct findings on the evidence on the issue whether any and how much of the money claimed under the bond was borrowed by the guardian for the minor for necessaries or for the benefit of his estate, so as to make the estate liable for the debt.

Further he contends that the District Judge erred in law in holding that the claim to the Rs. 1,000 was barred by limitation. The due date for the bond of the 24th May 1894 was the 9th May 1895 and the bond of the 24th March 1901 was executed within 6 years from that date, and he argues that there is nothing under the law to prevent a guardian from borrowing money on credit for a minor. Next he contends that a guardian is an agent of the minor within the meaning of secs. 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act. He points out that the decision of the Bombay and Madras High Courts in the cases of Annapagauda v. Sangadi Gyapa (8) and of Subhanadri v. Sriramulu (10) and the decision of this Court in the case of Narendra Nath Sarkar v. Rai Charan Haldar (11) are authority for the contention that a guardian can make an acknowledgment of a debt on behalf of a ward so as to give a creditor a fresh start for the period of limitation if the act of the guardian be for the protection and benefit of the minor's property, the case of Wajibun v. Kadir Buksh (12) which lays down the contrary view being dissented from in those decisions and not having been followed. He argues that it is clear from the recitals in the second bond that it was executed in acknowledgment of the previous debt to save the minor's estate from loss by litigation or sale, and therefore that it bound the minor's estate.

The learned pleader has also argued that under the doctrine of subrogation the Plaintiffs have a right to claim against the estate of the minor any indemnity which the guardian could claim against it, and in support of this contention he relies on the case of Madden v. Bridge (13) and Raybould v. Turner (14).

For the Respondent the learned Counsel has argued that the view taken by the District Judge is correct so far as the personal liability of the minor is concerned. He does not dispute that the guardian could bind the estate of the minor for a debt incurred for necessaries or for its benefit, or that the guardian could create a statutory liability binding on the ward by an acknowledgment of a debt contracted for necessaries supplied for the benefit of the ward's estate. See Mohon Bibi v. Dharmadas (15). But he contends that, in the present suit, before the estate of the minor can be held to be liable for any portion of the debt claimed, it must be found (1) that the money was borrowed for the supply of necessaries for the infant or for the benefit of his estate and (2) that it was borrowed within the period of limitation. He argues that the District Judge has found that the Plaintiffs have failed to prove that any part of the Rs. 1,000 borrowed on the bond of the 24th August 1894 was taken for necessaries supplied to the minor, that under the provisions of Arts. 61 and 120 of the Limitation Act the liability was barred before the execution of the second bond and at the time when the suit was instituted. He points out that the second bond was executed on the 24th March 1901, two months only before the minor attained majority on the 29th May 1901. He contends that the statement made in the recitals of the bonds cannot bind the minor in the absence of evidence aliunde, and that a bond which extended the period of limitation by which it was agreed to pay interest at 13¼ per cent. on unpaid interest could not be regarded as one executed for the interest of the minor. Further he argues that under the bond itself it was not intended to bind any one but the Defendant No. 2, that the frame of the plaint supports that view, there being no allegation in it that the debt was incurred for necessaries, and that the bond does not purport to create any charge on the estate of the ward or to provide that the debt was payable out of the estate. The guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it, and he argues that the law as to powers of guardians is correctly laid down by Trevelyan in his edition of the Law Relating to Minors (page 199, 3rd Edn.).

He contends that in this case the Plaintiff cannot claim the right of subrogation, as the whole foundation on which the right could be based is wanting. He refers to the case of Strickland v. Symons (16) as laying down the circumstances under which such a right could be claimed, and points out that the doctrine as thus laid down was explained by this Court in the case of In the matter of Shard (17) and was followed in the case of Madden v. Bridge (13) on which the pleader for the Appellant relies. In the present case it would have to be proved that the guardian was entitled to indemnity against the estate of the infant for the whole of the transactions of her guardianship.

In determining the present appeal we have to decide not merely what was the intention of the Plaintiff in bringing the suit but also whether on the suit as framed and on the bond which forms the basis of the suit the Plaintiffs are in law entitled to relief against the estate of Defendant No. 1. In dealing with the pleadings we have no doubt to follow the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Indur Chunder Singh v. Radha Kishore Ghose (2) that while a liberal costruction should be given to pleadings so as to give effect to the meaning to be collected from the whole tenour they ought to be expressed with sufficient definiteness to enable the opposite party to understand the case he is called on to meet. Applying that rule we think that the argument advanced by the learned pleader for the Appellant is sound, that in fact the suit was intended to be a suit to recover the sum due under the bond from the estate of Defendant No. 1 on the ground that the debt recoverable under the bond had been incurred by the Defendant No. 2 as mother and guardian of Defendant No. 1 for necessaries and for the benefit of the estate. This seems to us to be clear from paragraph 8 of the plaint read with the preceding paragraph and from the nature of the relief claimed. Moreover it seems to us also clear from the written statement filed by Defendant No. 1 that he fully understood that such was the nature of the case which he had to meet. The judgment of the Judge of the Court of first instance leaves no doubt that the main contest before him was whether the debt covered by the bond was incurred by the guardian for necessaries supplied to the minor or for the benefit of his estate. The learned District Judge has agreed with the Judge of the Court of first instance in holding that the bonds were actually signed by the mother in her capacity as guardian and on behalf of the minor, but he is of opinion that the suit on the bond must fail because the guardian could not bind her ward by a personal covenant.

The learned pleader for the Appellant is no doubt correct in his argument that if the amount claimed by the Plaintiff be found to be a debt incurred for necessaries for which the estate of the minor would be liable the District Judge erred in the broad conclusion at which he arrived that the suit must be dismissed simply because a guardian cannot bind his ward by a personal covenant. The rulings relied on by the District Judge lay down that a guardian cannot bind his ward personally by a simple contract debt, by a covenant, or by any promise to pay money or damages, but this broad proposition is subject to the modification that the promise will not bind the minor unless it has been made merely to keep alive a debt for which the ward's property was liable [Subramania Ayyar v. Arumuga Chetti (7)]. Where the promise is to pay money which has been expended for necessaries the estate of the minor may be liable not on the promise but because the money has been supplied [Sundararaja Ayyangar v. Pattanthusami Tever (9) and Act IX of 1872, sec. 68].

In the present case, therefore, the learned pleader is right in contending that if the District Judge held that the debt claimed was one incurred for necessaries and if we should hold that as it was a debt which was recoverable out of the estate of the minor it was necessary for the Judge to come to distinct findings how much of the debt was incurred for necessaries or for the benefit of the estate of the minor.

The most important point in the case then remain for our determination and that is whether under the first bond of the 24th August 1894 and under the later bond of the 24th March 1901, which in fact renewed the former bond, the guardian bound the estate of the ward. It is established law that a guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it [Moharana Shri Ranmal Singji v. Vadilal Vakhat Chand (3)] and we have to decide whether these two bonds purport to bind the estate of the minor. The bonds have been translated and placed before us. It is true that at the head of each bond the mother, Defendant No. 2, is described as the mother guardian and next friend of Defendant No. 1 but in neither of the two bonds is it distinctly stated, or are words used from which it could be possible to draw only the one inference that the debts were incurred for the benefit of the estate of the minor. So far as the sum of Rs. 1,000 is concerned which no doubt is said to have been borrowed under urgent necessity for looking after the case brought by Tej Narain Singh there is no distinct recital that the estate of the minor was in such a state as to be in need of the money. It is merely stated that the executrix was personally under the necessity of borrowing the money. The promise to repay the money in each bond is a personal promise and there is nothing in either of the bonds to indicate that in the event of her failure the estate of the minor would be liable, or that by the bond she purported to bind the minor's estate. It is not open to us in this case to go beyond the terms of the bonds themselves for the purpose of construing them. In these circumstances we are unable to hold that the bond, on which the present suit is brought, purported to bind the estate of the minor so as to entitle the Plaintiff to relief against that estate. In our opinion when a third person enters into dealings with the guardian of a minor, and advances money for necessaries for the minor or for the benefit of the estate and takes a bond for the debt from the guardian the responsibility rests on him to take care that the bond is so drawn as to render the estate of the minor in law liable for the debt. In the present case the Plaintiffs have failed to take this necessary precaution and their suit to recover the money due on the bond must fail on the ground that the terms of the bond fail to disclose that it purported to bind the estate of the minor.

The claim on the bond failing, the District Judge is right in holding that the Plaintiffs are barred by limitation from recovering otherwise the sums, if any, which they may have paid to the guardian for necessaries or for the benefit of the minor's estate.

On these grounds we are of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with a costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), secs. 9, 25 (2)—Jurisdiction—Compensation—Award.

Where no claim pursuant to a notice under sec. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act was made by a party interested to make a claim,

Held—That the Land Acquisition Judge under sec. 25, sub-sec. (2) had no power to make an award for an amount exceeding that awarded by the Collector, unless the claimant satisfied him that he had sufficient reason for refraining from making his claim in due time.

The Judge should state his reasons for allowing such a person to prefer his claim.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of February 1906, against the decree of Babu Hari Nath Roy, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zilla Dacca, dated the 26th of September 1906.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, second Court, Dacca, dated the 26th September 1905, in a land acquisition case.

The facts are as follows : There is a plot of land, the area of which is 4 cottahs, 12 dhurs, which the Government has acquired, under the Land Acquisition Act, in Tantibazar in Dacca. The persons interested are two in number, Gobind Lal Basak and Keshab Lal Basak. The Collector took proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act and issued notices with reference to the said plot, under sec. 9 of the Act, on the 23rd March 1903. Neither of the persons interested appeared before him in accordance with the terms of the notices under sec. 9, or preferred any claim for compensation. The Collector thereupon made his award on the 24th April 1903, giving compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per bigha for the land acquired. As neither of the parties interested had appeared before him, he gave them notice of the award on the 9th May 1903. Then one of the persons interested Gobind Lal Basak, applied to the Collector on the 16th June 1903. He objected to the rate awarded and claimed compensation at the rate of not less than Rs. 4,500 per bigha: and he prayed that the case might be sent to the Court of the District Judge. The Collector made the reference to the District Judge on the 3rd July 1903, under sec. 18 of the Act. Up to this time Keshab Lal Basak, the other person interested, had not appeared. But while the reference was pending before the District Judge he on the date fixed for hearing, namely, the 12th September 1903, applied to be made a party. On the 16th July 1904, the Subordinate Judge affirmed the award of the Collector. He subsequently granted a review; and finally on the 26th September 1905 he awarded compensation to the claimants at the rate of Rs. 5,000 per bigha.

The Secretary of State now appeals and on his behalf two grounds of appeal have been urged, first, that as no claim pursuant to the notices under sec. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act was made by either of the opposite parties, the lower Court under sec. 25, sub-sec. (2), had no power to make an award for an amount exceeding that awarded by the Collector, and, secondly, that there was no sufficient reason for the claimants not having made any claim before the Collector and therefore the lower Court had no right to make the award which it has done.

We think that these pleas must prevail.

It is clear that the first claimant, Gobind Lal Basak, made no claim pursuant to the notice issued to him, under sec. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act, because he did not make any claim for compensation within the time specified in the notice. We do not know exactly what the period specified in the notice was. But the period allowed could not have been less than 15 days from the issue of the notice and it must have expired some day previous to the award, which was made on the 24th April 1903. Hence the claim which Gobind Lal Basak made on the 16th June 1903 cannot be regarded as a claim made pursuant to the notice under sec. 9 of the Act.

As for the other claimant, Keshab Lal Basak, he made no claim at all, either before the Collector, or before the District Judge.

In these circumstances it is clear that the Subordinate Judge was debarred by the terms of sec. 25, sub-sec. (2) of the Land Acquisition Act from awarding to the claimants an amount exceeding that which was awarded by the Collector, unless the claimants satisfied him that they had sufficient reason for refraining from making their claim in due time. Now, the learned Subordinate Judge has not said a word on this point. He has not alluded to this matter at all. He has not explained why he has allowed the claimants to make a claim before him which they did not make pursuant to the notices under sec. 9 of the Act; and, therefore, it appears to us that he was not justified in making the award which he has made exceeding that of the Collector. It will be observed that under sec. 25, sub-sec. (2) it is necessary, if the Judge allows a claimant, who has not made a claim pursuant to the notice under sec. 9, to make a claim before him, that he should expressly allow him to do so; and we understand that this implies that he must expressly allow him and must state his reasons for so allowing to make a claim. That has not been done in this case; and no explanation has been offered to us of the Gobind Lal Basak's making a claim till the 16th June 1903, and of Keshab Lal's making no claim at all. We, therefore, do not think that the award made by the Subordinate Judge can be sustained.

The pleader for the Respondents argues that the case is covered by the provisions of sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But we do not consider that this is so, because the points now raised before us relate both to the merits of the case as well as to the jurisdiction of the Court.

This appeal is accordingly decreed with costs of both Courts. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2272 OF 1905.

MACLEAN, C. J.
HOLMWOOD, J.

23, May.

JADU NATH SARKAR and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
MAHENDRA NATH RAI CHOWDHURY and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec 21, cls. (1) and (3), sec. 32 (5) and sec. 157—Admission by Plaintiff when admissible in his favour—Statement in previous deposition.

When the Plaintiffs sought to establish their relation by proving inter alia that A and B were brothers,

Held—That a statement to that effect made by one of the Plaintiffs in a deposition given long before the controversy in suit arose was admissible in evidence.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of November 1905, against the decision of R. R. Pope, Esq., Additional District Judge of 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 14th of August 1905, reversing the decision of Babu Amrita Lal Mukherjee, Munsif of Basirhat, dated the 26th of September 1904.

The appeal arose out of a suit by the Plaintiffs who claimed as the reversionary heirs of one Nabadwip Chandra Sircar upon the death of his widow Bindu Basini, for the recovery of possession of certain immoveable properties from the Defendants who were alleged to be in possession under a collurable and fraudulent purchase from the said Bindu Basini. The Plaintiffs' case on the question of their relationship to Nabadwip was that Nabadwip was the son of one Shyam Kishore and that the present Plaintiffs are descended from Jugul Kishore the brother of Shyam Kishore.

The Munsif found that Jugul Kishore and Shyam Kishore were uterine brothers and in arriving at this conclusion he relied inter alia on Ex 7 which was a deposition of Plaintiff No. 2, given in a Land Registration case in 1878 in which Plaintiff No. 2 made a statement to the effect that Jugul Kishore and Shyam Kishore were uterine brothers. The Munsif held this statement to be admissible in evidence under sec. 21, sub secs. (1) and (3), sec. 32, cl (5) and sec. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act. He observed that at the time these statements were made, Plaintiff No. 2 "had no selfish motive to give such a description." Hence I hold that this document strongly corroborates the present evidence on the Plaintiffs' side. He doubted whether the potta and kobala executed by Bindu Basini in favour of the Defendants were executed for valuable consideration; and was of opinion that in any event there was no legal necessity for them. He accordingly decreed the suit.

On appeal, the District Judge held that the evidence was insufficient to establish the alleged relationship of the Plaintiffs with Nabadwip. As regards the deposition, Ex. 7, in particular, he observed that he did not see how an admission made by a Plaintiff in his own favour could be used as evidence on his own behalf. He accordingly reversed the judgment and decree of the Munsif and dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury for the Appellants.

JADU NATH SARKAR v. MAHENDRA NATH RAI CHOWDHURY.

Babus Lal Mohan Das and Biraj Mohan Majumdar for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The only question on this appeal is whether the District Judge was right in rejecting Ex. 7, which was a statement made by Plaintiff No. 2 in a case in 1878 in which he stated that Jugul Kishore and Shyam Kishore were brothers. Whether they were brothers or not is, as I understand, the real issue in this case. The learned Munsif admitted that statement in evidence having regard to sec. 21, sub sec. (1), sec. 32, sub-sec. (5) and sec. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act. The District Judge refused to accept it as any evidence. We think this statement was admissible, but what weight can properly be attached to it we cannot say—that is a matter for the Judge trying the case. We think, therefore, that there must be a remand and the case must be dealt with in accordance with this intimation of our opinion as to the admissibility of the statement.

The cost of this appeal will abide the result.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 1264 OF 1907.

RAMPINI, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1907.
16, December

KAMINI KUMAR BISWAS, Petitioner,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 133—Bonâ fide claim of right—Competency of the Magistrate to decide whether the claim is barred by limitation.

In a proceeding under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., the Petitioner raised a claim of proprietary right to the land in dispute and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that if the Petitioner had any right it was barred by limitation. He however stayed the passing of final order for one month in order to allow the Petitioner an opportunity of establishing his right by a civil suit and subsequently more than two months after the expiration of that period, made his order absolute.

Held—That the order of the Magistrate under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., was bad in law. The Magistrate should have refrained from exercising jurisdiction when a bonâ fide claim to the land was raised and he was not competent to decide whether the claim was barred by limitation.

This was a rule granted on the 1st of November 1907, against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Habigunj, dated the 10th of September 1907, making absolute his order under sec. 133, Cr. P. C.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment of the lower Court which was as follows :—

"This is an application under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., for restraining the Defendants from cultivating and obstructing with fences certain land known as Dewalkuri which is alleged to be commonly used by the villagers as a place for the burning and burial of dead. Defendants Kamini Kumar Biswas and Raman Biswas claim proprietary rights over the land. They have filed documents purporting to show that out of 2 taluks within which the nd is admittedly situated, they own th whole of one and half of the other. I understand that the first party alleges that some of the land appertains to other taluks also. I have not, however, gone into this question nor into the puestion whether the Defendants are entitled to cultivate the lands appertaining to the taluk of which they own only a half share. Good evidence has been adduced before me by the first party, proving that the land has from time immemorial been used for the purpose of burying and burning dead. It is admitted by the Defendants that the land has been waste until quite recently. It is therefore a ground left unoccupied for sanitary purposes and a public place within the meaning of sec. 133, Cr. P. C. The fact that it is not the only such ground appertaining to the village, does not, I think, matter. Relying on the opinion of the Honourable Judges of the High Court recorded in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (1), I do not also think that it matters that it is the alleged rights of the villagers and not of the general public which are at stake.

"Defendants urge that as they have set up a bonâ fide claim of title to the land, this Court has no jurisdiction to proceed under sec. 133, Cr. P. C. I am a little bit doubtful whether their claim so far as it may be bonâ fide extends to the whole of the land in question but I do not wish to emphasise this doubt now. I only record my opinion that, in view of the proved facts of immemorial usage of the land by the villagers for sanitary purposes, the Defendants claim is as far as I can judge barred by limitation. A claim which is barred by limitation may yet I suppose, possibly be regarded as bonâ fide, I cannot however think that it can be regarded by any Court as well-founded.

"Relying, therefore, on the last part of the ruling cited on Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (1), I suspend this proceeding for one month from to-day, to allow the Defendants an opportunity of establishing their claims in the Civil Court."

Subsequently on the 10th of September 1907, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate made his order absolute after serving a a notice on the Petitioners. The Petitioners appeared and asked for a postponement, on the ground that they had not witnesses present, which was refused.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal for the Petitioner urged that on the findings of the lower Court the order under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., was unjustifiable and that the case did not come within the purview of sec. 133 does not contemplate the use or closing of a burial or burning ground. Vide Sheo Saran Lal v. Lal Mohamad Lal (2).

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury for the Opposite Party.—The case in Sheo Saran Lal v. Lal Mohamad Lal (2) can have no application to the present case in which no order is passed prohibiting the use of a burning ground. As to bonâ fide claim he referred to Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (1) and Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (3).

KAMINI KUMAR BISWAS v. THE EMPEROR.

As the Petitioner was given a month's time to establish his title by a suit and the Magistrate made his order absolute on the expiry of that period, he acted strictly in accordance with the rulings in these two cases.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule, calling upon the District Magistrate of Sylhet to show cause why the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Habigunj, dated the 10th September last, making absolute his order, under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., should not be set aside, on the grounds (1) that sec. 133, I. P. C., does not apply to burial or burning grounds, and (2) that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has not decided the question of bonâ fides raised by the Petitioner.

It is unnecessary for us to enter into the first of these grounds.

As regards the second ground, we think that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has not come to a proper finding as to the question of bonâ fides. It is clear to us that, as admitted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, the Petitioner raised a claim of right to the land. He said he had a proprietary right in it ; and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has come to the conclusion that if he has any right it is barred by limitation, so far as he is able to judge. And he adds :—"a claim which is barred by limitation may yet I suppose possibly be regarded as bonâ fide. I cannot, however, think that it can be regarded by any Court as well-founded."

We find it difficult to understand the meaning of the above two sentences. It appears to us that if the Petitioner has a claim to the land (and he seems to have one) there is no reason to suppose that it is not a bonâ fide one. We cannot tell whether it is barred by limitation or not ; and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was not, we think, competent to decide this question and has not decided it to our satisfaction. We do not feel certain from the observations made by the Magistrate, that the Petitioner's claim is barred ; and we therefore do not see why he should not have a bonâ fide claim to the land. In these circumstances the Sub-Divisional Magistrate should have refrained from exercising jurisdiction.

We therefore make the rule absolute and set aside the order complained of.

v.
DOCHHI STRI, Opposite Party.

Trespass—Civil not Criminal—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 448—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 522, applicability of.

When during the absence of the complainant, the accused took possession of the house in her occupation and established there a boy alleged to be the adopted son of the complainant's father,

Held—That the accused could not be convicted of an offence under sec. 448, I. P. C., as the house trespass which they committed was not a criminal, but a civil trespass ;

SOITA BISWAL v. DOCHHI STRI.

Held also—That no order could be passed by the trying Magistrate under sec. 522, C. Cr. P., for the delivery of possession of the house to the complainant as the accused had not been convicted by the Magistrate of any offence attended by criminal force and that the house should be restored to the accused who were found in possession of it.

This was a rule issued on the 15th of August 1907, calling on the District Magistrate, Puri, as well as on the complainant to show cause why the order passed by Mr. D. N. De, Deputy Magistrate of Puri, on the 21st day of June 1907, convicting the said Petitioners under sec. 448 of the I. P. C., and sentencing them each to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or in default to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment, and directing delivery of possession of the house and property to the opposite party should not be set aside.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Tara Prosonna Chatterjee for the Petitioners.

No one appeared for the Opposite party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Puri as also upon the complainant to show cause why the conviction of and sentences passed on the Petitioners as well as the order complained of by them should not be set aside.

The Petitioners have been convicted under sec. 448, I. P. C., and each sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. The Deputy Magistrate has also ordered delivery of possession of the house in dispute as also of certain property recovered t be made over to the complainant.

The facts of the case are these :—The complainant is a woman of the name of Dochhi. She went off to Puri on a visit and in her absence certain persons took possession of the house and established there a boy, alleged to be the adopted son of the father of the complainant. Dochhi complained to the Deputy Magistrate of house trespass and theft and the Deputy Magistrate convicted the Petitioners of house trespass and sentenced them as mentioned above. It is clear that the case is one, not of criminal but of civil trespass. The Petitioners took possession of the house for the alleged adopted son and are now in possession. The complainant says that certain articles of her property were removed. But the accused have not been convicted of theft. On the contrary, the Deputy Magistrate says the things carried off are not identifiable and he has abstained from convicting them of theft. He says the things recovered could not be satisfactorily identified. Notwithstanding this, he has ordered possession to be given to the complainant, although he records in his proceeding that the accused have all claimed the things found in their possession as their own. Now, it is extraordinary that the Deputy Magistrate who says that the things cannot be identified, should have ordered them to be delivered to the complainant. Finally, he has ordered possession of the house to be made over to the complainant. We suppose he has passed the order under sec. 522, C. Cr. P. But the provisions of that section do not warrant his doing so, because the Petitioners have not been convicted of any offence attended by criminal force.

We set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

The property in possession of the Petitioners must be returned to them and possession of the house restored to the persons found in possession of it.

THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA, Opposite Party.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III, B. C. of 1899), secs. 372, 383 and 449 (1)—Demolition of a building erected without sanction—Notice under sec. 383, whether condition precedent to the passing of order for demolition.

No notice under sec. 383 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (III, B. C. of 1899) is necessary before an order under sec. 449 (1) of the Act directing the demolition of a building erected without sanction in contravention of sec. 372, can be passed.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. AMRITA LAL MUKERJEE (1) followed.

This was a rule granted on the 28th of November 1907, against an order of Babu Amrita Lal Mukerjee, Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 5th of August 1907, directing under sec. 449 (1) of Act III (B. C.) of 1899 demolition of a corrugated iron shed within a month from the date of the order.

(1) 7 C. W. N. 554 (1903).

The facts material to the case as they appear from the judgment of the Municipal Magistrate are as follows:—

The General Committee of the Calcutta Corporation applied to the Municipal Magistrate under secs. 449 and 450 of the Municipal Act for an order upon the Petitioner to demolish a corrugated iron shed with mat-walls which the Petitioner had erected without the sanction of the Corporation. The Petitioner appeared before the Magistrate, admitted the erection of the building but urged that as it was erected long ago and it did not cause inconvenience to the public, the Magistrate should not order its demolition. On behalf of the Corporation it was proved that a notice under sec. 383 of the Act was served upon the Petitioner, but it was not replied to. On behalf of the Petitioner it was shown that the notice was replied to and acknowledgment of the receipt of the reply admittedly signed by a clerk in the office was filed.

The Magistrate found after a local inquiry that the building caused inconvenience to the public and as to the delay of the Corporation in taking action, he observed that as the matter related to a public place of worship, it was discussed at great length by the Corporation before the application for demolition was made. The Magistrate held that the building contravened the provisions of sec. 368 inasmuch as its external walls were made of mats and directed its demolition under sec. 449 (1) of the Calcutta Municipal Act. Against this order of the Magistrate the present rule was issued.

SRIMATTY SUSARMOYEE DEBI v. THE CORPORATION CALCUTTA.

Babu Debendra Chandra Mullick for the Oppsite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule to show cause why an order of the Municipal Magistrate, directing the demolition of a shed erected by the Petitioner without the sanction of the Corporation should not be set aside.

The General Committee appears to have applied to the Municipal Magistrate under sec. 449 (1) for an order for the demolition of the shed, which comes within the definition of "building." The Magistrate has found that it was erected without sanction, which is indeed admitted by the Petitioner. He has therefore passed the order complained of.

We can see no reason why the Magistrate's order is illegal. It seems to be in accordance with the provisions of secs. 372 and 449 (1) of the Calcutta Municipal Act.

The learned pleader for the Petitioner contends that the Corporation issued a notice to his client under sec. 383, that the Petitioner replied to this notice and was not given an opportunity of showing cause or of appealing to the General Committee. The learned pleader who appears for the Corporation urges that even if this be so, this would only invalidate an order directing the building to be constructed of non-inflammable materials and that no such order has been passed. He further argues that no notice under sec. 383 is necessary before an order under sec. 449 (1) directing the demolition of the building can be passed. This would appear to be the case.

Nothing in the Municipal Act has been pointed out to us which prohibits the passing of an order under sec. 449 (1) for the demolition of a building erected without sanction in contravention of the provisions of sec. 372 without the precedent issue of a notice under sec. 383 and it has been expressly held in Corporation of Calcutta v. Amrita Lal Mukherjee (1) that the issue of a notice under sec. 383 is not a condition precedent to a proceeding under sec. 449 (1).

The rule is accordingly discharged.

NOTES

IN THE CASE OF Raja Pramada Nath Roy v. Raja Ramani Kant Roy (12 C. W. N. 249) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee overruling the judgment of the Calcutta High Court (9 C. W. N. 34) have held that although co-sharer landlords may be in the habit of collecting their shares of the rent separately and that they may have a right to do so, yet any one of them may recover a decree for the entire rent by making the other co-sharers parties Defendants and the tenure may be sold in execution of such a decree. The reason is obvious; for, separate collection of rent does not create distinct tenancies, or as their Lordships say "that such an arrangement, expressed or implied, merely affects the right to sue separately for rent, and in no other respect modifies the terms of the holding." This decision will be greatly appreciated by the landholders. Before this decision co-sharer landlords in separate receipt of rent had no means of bringing a defaulting tenure to sale. In fact a co-sharer landlord of a non-transferable raiyati holding was practically without any means of realizing his rent by suit.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE CASE OF Pindi Prolu Soorapara ju v Pindi Prolu Veera Bhadrudu, reported at p. 486, I. L. R. 30 Madras. The facts were briefly these:—Three brothers S. R. and K. and their father made an arrangement which amounted to a division of the family properties. The father and R and K, continued to live together and S, separated from them. The father died and then R, died leaving him surviving a widow and a daughter. These two females did not claim R.'s share but were content with maintenance. But it appears that the widow did not surrender her rights to the property of R. The two surviving brothers S. and K. entered into an agreement between themselves to the effect that K. should enjoy R.'s share and maintain the widow and daughter of R, and that after the widow's death S. would get half of R.'s share. After the agreement the daughter died unmarried and then S. and after his death the widow died in 1891. In 1901 the son of S. brought a suit to recover half of R.'s share by virtue of the agreement which his father S. entered with his uncle K.

THERE WAS A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN White, C. J., and Willis, J., as to the maintainability of the suit. The Chief Justice held that the agreement was in effect to divide the reversion when it should fall in and as the rights of presumptive reversionary heirs could not be transferred, the agreement did not operate to vest any property in S, therefore the son of S. could not maintain the suit. Willis, J., held that the widow not having claimed her husband's share and having contented herself with maintenance, S. and K. were not actually in the position of expectant heirs, so the agreement operated to give S. a vested interest in a half share of R.'s property to take effect in possession on the widow's death and the suit was therefore maintainable. The case being referred to a third

Judge, it was decided by him that the agreement only gave a right to claim specific performance thereof when the reversion fell in but that right was barred by limitation. According to the view of this learned Judge the agreement was not void ab initio but it was not enforceable until the reversion in.

IT MIGHT BE URGED WHETHER THE MERE CHANCE OF a reversioner to succeed to a property on the death of a widow could in any way be bound by an agreement. According to the observations of the Privy Council in the case of Sham Sunder Lal v. Achan Kunwar, 2 C. W. N. 729, the reversioner could not "by Hindu law make a disposition of or bind their expectant interests." So it would seem to follow that such an agreement was incapable of specific performance even when the reversion fell in. If the expectant interests were not in any way bound by the agreement at the time when it was made, how could the same agreement be operative after the reversion had fallen in. We may also in this connection refer to the case reported in I. L. R. 31 Bom. 165 which also lends support to the view that such an agreement is void of any effect.

IT IS HOWEVER WORTHY OF CONSIDERATION WHETHER, under the circumstances of the case, the right of S. and K. to the property left by R during the lifetime of R's widow was really that of expectant heirs or something more. On the death of R., his widow might have claimed his share, but she did not do so. She remained content with maintenance given her by K. who in his turn enjoyed the share of R. So when the agreement was entered into between K. and his brother S., K. was actually in possession of the share of R. Of course his possession might have been put an end to by the widow's refusing to take the maintenance and claiming the share of her husband. But until that was done the share of R. which K. enjoyed might be regarded as property in the possession of K. which was capable of transfer. If that was so, the agreement between K. and S. did operate to give S. a vested interest in a half share of the lands left by R. to take effect in possession on the widow's death.

IN ANOTHER COLUMN WE REPRODUCE FROM THE Harvard Law Review for January, an interesting discussion on the question of the propriety of joining in one suit a number of distinct claims by or against different individuals with a view to avoid a multiplicity of suits. Such a question recently arose in Aldridge v. Barrow (11 C. W. N. 680) and may arise again. Such cases when they arise here have to be decided on general principles as they do not seem to be covered by the provisions of the Code. The extract shows how the question is viewed by American lawyers.

JURISDICTION OF EQUITY TO AVOID A MULTIPLICITY OF SUITS WHEN ONE IS ARRAYED AGAINST MANY.

Recently there came before the Wisconsin court an interesting case involving equity's jurisdiction to avoid a multiplicity of suits. Illinois Steel Co. v. Schroeder, 113 N. W. 51. Eighty-four squatters claimed titled to the Plaintiff's land through their adverse possession tacked to that of M, under whom each claimed. The Plaintiff denied M's possession, and had recovered in ejectment against one holding under the same claim. To avoid having to bring eighty-four identical suits, he sought to join all the Defendants in one equitable suit and to have the matter set at rest. The Defendants interposed a demurrer, which was sustained. First it must be noticed that the Plaintiff had no other ground for getting into equity, so that there was a problem apart from joinder of parties in equity,—a distinction frequently overlooked in judicial discussions. The initial difficulty of the Court was the lack of privity among the Defendants; that is, they had no common title or community of interest in the subject-matter. Some courts have insisted strenuously on this requirement, but the weight of authority is now clearly the other way. Carlton v. Newman, 77 Me. 408; Hale v. Allinson, 188 U. S. 56, 77. Tribette v. Illinois Central R. R, 70 Miss. 182, the leading case contra, no longer represents Mississippi law. Crawford v. Mobile, etc., R. R., 83 Miss 708, 117. The basis of the bill is to afford the Plaintiff a more nearly adequate remedy than he has at law, and to promote the convenience of the public and of the court by the having one suit instead of many. Smith v. Bank of New England, 69 N. H. 254. Privity seems entirely foreign to these conceptions, and to require it would considerably narrow a beneficent relief which Kent called a favourite one with equity. Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 139, 151. In the following discussion it will be assumed that lack of privity is not an objection.

Suppose the bill asked only for a declaration as to M's possession. It would raise a question of law and fact common to all Defendants. Such a declaration would make this question res adjudicata in subsequent ejectment suits by the Plaintiff, thus saving for the courts much time, and for the Plaintiff the burden of repeated proof. The bill, however, would be professedly not to prevent a multitude of suits, but to aid the Plaintiff in bringing them. Equity has not reached the point of allowing such bills. Such a bill was allowed in a recent case without any discussion or reasoning. Blumer v. Ulmer, 44 So. 161 (Miss.). Next, suppose each of many persons claimed under a statute part of a tract of land possessed by A, and started individual ejectment suits. A would come to equity to show all his opponents' claims to be groundless by proving the statute unconstitutional, and to have them accordingly enjoined. The bill, if proved would prevent many suits, while if not proved, would cause a saving in future legal suits. Equity would allow such a bill. Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeomans, I. R. 2 Ch. 8; Albert Lea v. Nielsen, 83 Minn. 346. Thirdly, suppose A brings separate ejectment suits against several parties in possession, who seek to enjoin him because of the unconstitutionality of the statute under which he claims. Here each Plaintiff would have only one suit to fight at law, but the element of saving the court's time would still be present, and the bill would be allowed. Chicago v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445. But see Turner v. Mobile, 135 Ala. 73. 125. Fourthly, suppose many passengers were injured in a collision caused by the negligence of a railroad company, and they come into equity for damages. There would be the common question of the company's negligence, but another element would enter. The ascertainment of the relief to be given would raise a question concerning each Plaintiff, and the result would be a number of issues, each involving only one party. Equity would draw the line here, and refuse damages whether sought alone or with other relief. Tompkins v. Craig, 93 Fed. 885; Smith v. Bivens, 56 Fed. 352; Foreman v. Boyle, 88 Cal. 290; State v. Sunapee Dam Co., 72 N. H. 114, 143. The result would be the same if one sought damages from many. Tompkins v. Craig, 93 Fed. 885; Smith v. Bivens, 56 Fed. 352; Foreman v. Boyle, 88 Cal. 290; State v. Sunapee Dam Co., 72 N. H. 114, 143. But when the damages are liquidated, so that the ascertainment of relief as to each party is a negligible consideration, the reason fails and the relief is given. German, etc., Co. v. Van Cleave, 191 Ill. 410; Smith v. Bank of New England, supra. Similarly in the case before the Wisconsin court the ascertainment of the affirmative legal relief against each Defendant would be a negligible consideration, since it would be only a decree to surrender up possession. There is a common question here, for if the Plaintiff can eliminate M's possession, the claims of all Defendants must fail. All the elements in previous case in which the bill was allowed are present; there is the saving to both the court and the Plaintiff; and it would seem that the demurrer should have been overruled. The bill may be demurrable because the Plaintiff also asked for damages, which would be unliquidated; but this point was untouched by the court. See Foreman v. Boyle, supra.—(Harvard Law Review).

Where a part of the consideration of a mortgage was a decretal debt and the decree did not allow any interest but the mortgage stipulated for payment of interest, held that having regard to sec. 257A, C. P. C., the provision relating to the decretal debt was void, but the other portions of the mortgage bond were enforceable at law.

It is the right of each of two or more co-widows to partition their husband's estate; it is a necessary corollary from that that she can assign it to any one she chooses. On her death her interest in the property ceases and the share goes to the surviving co-widow or co-widows, as the case may be. But it is good as long she lives.

THE LAW OF MARRIED WOMEN'S CONTRACTS. By Mr. R. Emanuel, M. A., B. C. L., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, London. Butterworth & Co., 11 and 12 Bell Yard, Temple Bar W. C. Law Publishers. 1907.

The complexities of the law of married women's contracts in England have not been reduced, if they have not actually been made more complicated, by the Married Women's Property Acts. In such circumstance, a hand-book in which all that has been laid down either by the Legislature or by the law Courts relating to contracts of married women, have been collected and arranged in a manner most suitable for use by practitioners cannot but be useful. In enunciating the principles laid down by the Courts, the author has taken care, whereever possible, to do so in the language of the Judges themselves. He has also drawn on the general principles of the law of agency where no reported cases bearing on the relation of husband and wife have been available. In an appendix are given the Married Women's Property Acts of 1882 and 1893.

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE, Act XLV of 1860, (with all amendments up to date) and Notes, Analyses and Commentaries thereon. By Reginald A. Nelson, M. A., LL.M., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Principal of the Madras Law College and Advocate of the High Court of Madras. Fourth Edition. Madras Srinivasa Varadachari & Co. London, Sweet and Maxwell, Ld. 1908.

Mr. Nelson is the author of several works on Indian law which are intended to serve the double purpose of text-books for students and hand-books for practitioners. His annotations have the advantage over the ordinary case noted codes inasmuch as they embody in brief a commentary on the sections which will help both the student and the lawyer in the proper comprehension of their scope. References to case law are also up-to-date. The only defect we have noticed is that references to the recent Indian decisions are not to the original reports but to compilations which are not available to everybody. To make the book more useful to practitioners, this defect ought to be remedied. If it is not too late we would suggest the issue of a revised table of cases giving references to the original reports.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Emanuel and others v. Symon. Before LORD CHIEF JUSTICE ALVERSTONE, LORDS JUSTICES BUCKLEY and KENNEDY. 15th November 1907.

Foreign judgment—Jurisdiction of Court over foreigner—Entering into partnership or holding real property if gives jurisdiction.

In 1895 the Defendant verbally entered into partnership with certain persons to work a gold mine in West Australia, all parties being then resident in that Colony. In 1901, the Plaintiffs as representing the interest of the other partners instituted a suit in the Colony for dissolution and account. The Defendant had left the Colony in 1899 and had ceased to reside and carry on business in the Colony and had taken up residence in England when the action was commenced and the writ was served on him in England, but he did not appear or take part in the proceedings. This action was brought to recover from the Defendant the sum of £1,281 4*s.* 11*d.* on the judgment obtained in the Supreme Court of West Australia, or in the alternative on accounts taken on the dissolution of partnership. Channell, J., held, "that the Defendant by joining the partnership for the working of the mine in West Australia must be taken to have contracted that all partnership disputes, if any, should be determined by the Courts of that county and thereby subjected himseif to the jurisdiction of those Court."

The Court of Appeal in allowing the appeal referred to Sirdar Gurdyal Singh v. Rajah of Faridkote, (1894) A. C. 670, and held that the above proposition of Channell, J., was too wide and contrary to the decisions of some eminent judges. The fact that the Defendant had been the owner of real property in West Australia did not also give the Courts in Australia a general jurisdiction over the owner of the property, though it could not be disputed that possession of real property did in certain cases subject a person to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court.

Mr. McCall, K. C., and Mr. A. W. Groser for the Defendant, Appellant.

Mr. Holman Gregory for the Plaintiff, Respondent.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Corsellis and others v. London County Council. Before LORDS JUSTICES COZENS HARDY, M. R., FLETCHER MOULTON and FARWELL. 11th November 1907.

Dedication to public use—Right of lessee for term.

The Plaintiff, Corsellis, took a lease for a term of 82 years of a piece of land fronting York Road in the borough of Wandsworth. On part of this land one Lewry, under a building agreement with Corsellis, built 15 houses with shops, leaving a strip of land 3 ft. wide immediately in front of them Lewry after submitting his plan to the Wandsworth Board of Works had written to the surveyor of the Board "I shall feel greatly obliged if you can arrange for the paving to be done in front of my shops close up to the building line, as I think it would make the appearance of the street much better." Upon that the Board passed a resolution that "upon the ground separating the new shops in York Road from the public way, being given up to form part of such public way, the foot-way be paved, &c." Notice to this effect was sent to Lewry but he did not reply. The Board thereafter had the paving done up to the foot of the buildings. Upon the completion of the buildings, Corsellis granted Lewry separate underleases of each building with the strip in front. The present Plaintiffs other than Corsellis became entitled to the several under-leases by purchase. In this suit the Plaintiffs sought inter alia for a declaration of their title to the 3 feet strip to which the Defendants set up title under the above arrangement with Lewry.

The Court of Appeal now affirmed the judgment Neville, J., that the evidence was not sufficient to establish dedication and that there was no such thing known to law as a dedication of a way for a term, it being necessary that a dedication should be in perpetuity. The Court of Appeal observed that it may be that as against Mr. Lewry the local authority might have been in a position to insist that the strip should be given up to the use of the public during his term either on the ground of estoppel or actual contract. But even if this were so it could not avail against the Plaintiffs who were bonâ fide purchasers of the legal interests which belong to them without notice of the claim of the local authority.

The judgment of Neville, J., affirmed on this part of the case, but set aside as regards another portion not material to this report.

Mr. Jenkins, K. C., and Mr. J. Tanner for the Appellants, County Council.

Mr. Peterson, K. C., and Mr. C. E. Allan for the Plaintiffs, Respondents.

KING'S BENCH.—Mansell v. Griffin. Before JUSTICES PHILLIMORE and WALTON. 9th November 1907.

Master and pupil—Infliction of corporeal punishment—Privilege.

This case came on appeal by the Defendant from an order of the County Court Judge sitting at Gloucester directing a new trial, on the grounds, (1) that the verdict of the jury upon which a judgment had been entered in favour of the Defendant was against the weight of evidence, and (2) that the Plaintiff had not had a fair trial owing to the bias of the jury and the undue influence brought to bear upon them. The action was brought by a scholar in one of the local schools against an assistant schoolmistress for an alleged assault. The allegation was that the child had been struck on the arm with the edge of a boxwood ruler. The jury's answer to the questions left to them were (1) that the punishment inflicted was in the circumstances of a case moderate. (2) The instrument used was an improper one having regard to the rules made by the city of Gloucester Education Committee that only the birch or cane should be used, but that the instrument used was not as hurtful as the birch or cane, (3) but the fact that the child was suffering from cartilagenous tumours was not known to the Defendant; (4) that the Defendant had exceeded her authority under the above-mentioned regulations by striking the child without the authority of the head mistress; and (5) that the school regulations had not been brought to the Defendant's knowledge.

Their Lordships held that it was no doubt true that as a matter of the internal government of the school, the teacher, though she did not know it, was prohibited, not from ordering but from administering corporal punishment, and it was also true that the only weapon authorised to be used was a cane or birch. It did not therefore necessarily follow that when it became a question of an action brought for assault, or of an indictment for assault she was without defence. Considering the general relation of pupil and teacher, the teacher of the class was entitled to use ordinary means of preserving discipline; and as between the parent of the child and the teacher—the question being one of delegation of authority by a parent to those who stood in loco parentis—it was enough for the teacher to say that the punishment administered was moderate, was not dictated by a bad motive and was such as is usually administered in schools and such as the parents might expect a child to receive. The authority extends not to the head teacher only but to the responsible teachers who have charge of a class.

Mr. Hugh Sturges for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Lynn for the Defendant.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Mayor &c. of Tenby v. Mason. Before MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH. 22nd November 1907.

Borough Council—Right of public to attend at its meetings.

The Defendant was proprietor of the Tenby observer and claimed a right to be present at the meetings of the Council other than Committee Meetings, of the borough of Tenby (1) as a ratepayer, (2) as a reporter of the Tenby Observer, (3) or as a member of the public. The Council from time to time permitted newspaper representatives to be present at the meetings, but in consequence of a report which appeared of one of their meetings in his paper passed a resolution that he would not be permitted to attend personally as reporter to his own paper until he should prove himself to the satisfaction of the Council to be an efficient shorthand writer. The Defendant in assertion of his alleged right attended a Council meeting on 4th March 1907. The Council of the borough of Tenby now sought for a declaration that it had a right to exclude all persons not members of the Council from its meetings and also an injunction to restrain Defendent from entering the Council Chamber without the Council's permission.

Held—That the Council was entitled to the declaration and injunction.

Mr. P. O. Lawrence, K. C., and Mr. A. A. Bethune for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Jessel, K. C., and Mr. Ellis Griffith for the Defendant.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Lord Chesterfield v. Harris. Before MR JUSTICE NEVILLE. 19th November 1907.

Prescription—Grant—Right of free-holders of manor to take fish for sale from nontidal river.

The oral evidence in this case showed inter alia that the Defendants and others have openly fished in the waters of the Wye (a non-tidal river) opposite the banks of the river owned by the Plaintiffs under claim of right as free-holders within the manor of Wormelow without interruption for a period of upwards of 100 years. The fish was taken for purposes of sale.

His Lordship observed that if the evidence rested here, he would have thought that the enjoyment of the right had been exercised so long and pointed so strongly to the existence of a legal right, that he would be bound to attribute to it a legal origin, if indeed, it be a right which could be legally created. Moreover, taking the documentary evidence as a whole, he found nothing inconsistent with the right set up by the Defendants. It rather confirmed the view that the modern user was in accordance with an ancient right. He was of opinion that a grant of a right to fish in common with the other freeholders within the manor would be a good grant to an individual and might properly be presumed to have accompanied each original grant of a freehold.

Mr. Warmington, K. C., Mr. T. T. Method and Mr. H. S. Moore for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Micklem, K. C., and Mr. Ellis Griffith for the Defendants.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.—E. v. E. Before JUSTICE BARGRAVE DEAN. 9th November 1907.

Suit for divorce—Interrogatories.

In this suit by the wife seeking for divorce on the ground of cruelty and adultery a summons was taken out by the wife that the Respondent should show cause why he should not answer the following interrogatories:

"(1) Were you in some and what period of the years 1903 and 1904, suffering from any and what form of venereal disease; (2) Did you not consult Dr. H—— of Paris or any other, or what doctor, in relation to such disease and were you not under his care and treatment in relation thereto for any and what periods during the said years 1903 and 1904." The cruelty alleged consisted of wilful communication of venereal disease in 1903 and the adultery alleged was of the same date with a woman unknown from which he contracted the disease.

His Lordship held that the interrogatories were not admissible.

Mr. Bayford for the Petitioner.

Mr. Murphy for the Respondent.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 30 OF 1908. PARBUTTY CHURAN RAY AND ORS, 2nd Party, Petitioners v. SUJJAD ALI AHMAD CHOWDHURY, 1st Party, Opposite Party 29th January 1908

Review of judgment—Power of the Criminal Court to grant—Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 145.

A proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., was instituted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jangipur, and the 19th of December 1907 was fixed for hearing the case. On that date the case was called out at 11 A. M., 12 o'clock, and 1 P. M., successively; but no one on behalf of the 1st party appeared; and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate having examined a witness on behalf of the 2nd party delivered a judgment declaring the 2nd party to be retained in possession until evicted in due course of law. Subsequently on the 21st December, the 1st party put in a petition for review of the judgment, whereupon the Sub-Divisional Officer issued a notice on the 2nd party to shew cause on the 3rd January 1908, why the review should not be granted. On the said date the Sub-Divisional Magistrate made the following order:—"I have heard both the parties. It appears that an order under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., is not a judgment within the meaning of sec. 369, Cr. P. C., and so I hold that it can be reviewed. I therefore review the case and direct both parties to put in fresh written statements on 10th January 1908. In the meantime Receiver will retain possession. This order is to be communicated to the Receiver and the Police by a special messenger today."

(Sd.) A. ISLAM.

Against this order the Petitioners moved the High Court and obtained the present rule to set it aside.

Their Lordships held:—That a Criminal Court has no power to review its own judgment, and that the final order under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., cannot be set aside on review by the Magistrate, who passed that order. The order of the Magistrate of 3rd January 1908, by which his previous order, declaring the possession of the 2nd party, was reviewed and set aside, is without jurisdiction.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MACLEAN, C. J., and COXE, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER NO. 478 OF 1906 HAFEZUDDIN MONDOL AND ANOTHER, Defendants, Appellants v. JODU NATH SAHA AND OTHERS, executors to the estate of the late KALI KRISTO CHOWDHRY, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 17th January 1908.

Account, suit for—Relief claimed—Properties mortgaged—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 89, 132.

This was a suit for accounts by the executors of the estate of a deceased principal against his gomasta who was Defendant No. 1 and his surety, Defendant

No. 2. The Plaintiff asked for an account simply upon the footing of principal and agent. Both Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 hypothecated certain properties, to secure the moneys due from the agent, by two documents, a security kabuliyat and a saminnama, and charged those properties with the payment of what might be found due on taking such accounts; and by the third prayer of his plaint, the Plaintiff asked that if in the event of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 failing to pay within the time fixed by Court, any money be found due to the Plaintiff at the time of nikas (that is, the accounts) an order might be passed directing recovery thereof from the property pledged by them and on its proving insufficient from the person and other properties of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation, holding that Art. 89 of the Sch. II to the Limitation Act applied. The District Judge reversed that decision, holding that the case fell within Art. 116. The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Held—That had the suit been simply by the principal against the agent Art. 89 of the Sch. II to the Limitation Act would have applied.

Asghar Alikhan v. Khursud Alikhan (I. L. R. 27 Mad. 27), Jogendra Nath Roy v. Deb Nath Chatterji (8 C. W. N. 113), Madhub Chunder Roy Chuckerbutty v. Debendra Nath Dey (1 C. L. J 147) and Shib Chunder Roy v. Chunder Narain Mukerji (1 C. L J. 232) referred to.

Moti Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattapadhya (1 C. L. J. 211) dissented from.

To ascertain which article of the schedule to the Limitation Act applies, it is to be seen what is the relief which the Plaintiff claimed.

The case falls within Art. 132 of the Sch. II to the Limitation Act.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 2751 OF 1907. NADIAR CHAND SHAHA, Plaintiff, Petitioner v. MR WOOD, Defendant, Opposite Party. 28th November 1907.

Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), secs. 77, 140—Notice, service of—"May."

A suit was instituted in the Court of Small Causes by the Plaintiff for recovery of damages from the Assam Bengal Railway Company for short delivery on different dates of goods carried by the Railway Company under risk notes.

The Defendant who was the agent of the Assam Bengal Railway Company denied the receipt of proper notices and also denied the liability of the company even if the notices were duly served.

The Small Cause Court Judge came to the conclusion that the alleged notices of claim were insufficient, they admittedly having been served on the Traffic Manager and not on the Agent of the Railway Company.

The Plaintiff moved the High Court and contended that the notice to the Traffic Manager was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of secs. 77 and 140 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890).

Held—That the services of notice under sec. 77 of the Indian Railways Act must, in order to be effective, be served in the form and manner indicated in sec. 140.

The word "may" in sec. 140 must be construed as meaning must, and that if a Plaintiff is desirous of serving an effective notice of claim the notice must be directed to the Manager or Agent as the case may be.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURITDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 405 OF 1905 MOULVI ABDUL KASEM, Appellant v. BENODE LAL DHONE AND ANOTHER, Respondents. Heard, 21st November 1907 and 6th January 1908. Judgment, 6th January 1908.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 274, 289—Sale proclamation—Separate process for different portions, if necessary.

Certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor were sold in execution of a decree obtained by one of the Respondents. The properties were described as lot Mirzapore, a two storied house and lot Laskardighi. The judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside under the provisions of sec. 311, C. P. C. The application was opposed; but the lower Court held that the sale of the properties Nos. 1 and 2 should be set aside and passed an order accordingly; it confirmed the sale of lot Laskardighi. The purchaser appealed to the High Court. His appeal was confined to lot Mirzapore only.

Lot Mirzapore was a putni taluk owned by the judgment-debtor. Five of the villages were let out in dur-putni, whereas the sixth village Dhoba was held in dur-putni by another person. Dhoba was on the other side of the river and was at a little distance from the other five villages. The contention, therefore, was raised that the sale proclamation ought to have been served separately on each of the villages. The Court below came to the conclusion that the non-publication of the sale proclamation in each of the villages was an irregularity.

Held—The word "property" in sec. 274, C. P. C, refers to each lot to be sold separately from the rest. It cannot refer to different parts of property which is advertised for sale. If the separate villages constituting a property be so far distant from each other that there is no likelihood of knowledge of the sale proclamation being carried on from one village to another, it would be more judicious to have the sale proclamation served in each of the villages.

Tripura Sundari v. Durga Charan Pal (I. L. R. 11 cal. 74) referred to.

There was no infringement of the provisions of the sec. 289, C. P. C., on account of the mere fact that separate processes were not served on each portion of the property advertised for sale.

Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), secs. 244, 278—Personal decree against shebait—Claim on behalf of Thakur—Party to the suit.

A decree was passed against the Appellants personally. In execution of that decree attachment was issued. The Appellants contended that the property did not belong to them, but that it belonged to them as shebaits of an idol, and as such was not liable to attachment. The made two applications, one under sec. 244, the other under sec 278. Both were dismissed. The judgment debtors appealed to the High Court.

Held—That as the Appellants were parties to the suit the case fell within sec. 244, C. P. C.

Punchanan Bandopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (I. L. R. 17 Cal. 711) referred to.

Held further—That the Appellants had not lost any rights qua their application under sec. 244 because they made a mistake in applying under sec. 278.

Possession, suit for—Tenure-holder—Onus—Non-permanent tenure—Transferibility.

The suit was for khas possession. The Plaintiffs were the owners of the disputed land. The Appellant claimed to be a tenure-holder of the land under them. The land was the jama of one B who sold it to the Appellant. The Plaintiffs stated that B was only an occupancy raiyat and had no transferable right. The Appellant said he was a permanent tenure-holder, and that the tenure was transferable. Both Courts found, under the statutory presumption of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the land being over 100 bighas in extent, that the tenancy was a tenure and not an occupancy holding. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that it was not a permanent tenure, and so not transferable, and consequently gave the Plaintiff a decree for khas possession.

The Defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held—That it lay on the Appellant, when the Plaintiffs satisfactorily proved that they were the owners of the land, to show that she was entitled to remain there, in other words to make out her alleged title as a tenure holder.

Held further—The tenure being created in 1864, the right to transfer a non-permanent tenure was not created by the Transfer of Property Act.

Hari Nath Karmokar v. Raj Chunder Karmokar (2 C W. N. 122) referred to.

Sec. 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act seems to import that non-permanent tenures were not to be regarded as transferable.

PROBHAT CHANDRA CHOWDHURY v. THE EMPEROR.

The facts material to the report appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Baikuntha Nath Das for the Petitioner.

No one appeared for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Goalpara to show cause why the conviction of and sentence passed on the Petitioner should not be set aside, on the ground that he was not in possession of the gun within the meaning of the Arms Act.

The Petitioner has been convicted under sec. 19 (f) of the Arms Act (XI of 1878) and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 5.

The facts are these: The gun used by the Petitioner belongs to a gentleman named Rajendra Narain Chowdry, who has been exempted from the operation of the Arms Act. This gentleman is now in England. His gun seems to have been left by him with his brother, Jotindra Narain Chowdry. The Petitioner is a cousin of these two gentlemen. On the 30th March last a mad dog entered the compound of the bari of the Petitioner; and he seized the gun, which was in the hands of one Rajeswar, a servant, and fired at the dog. Unfortunately he missed the animal, but a shot from the gun wounded a man named Thanda Rajbunsi. For this he was convicted, under sec. 304A, I. P. C., and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 300 and to detention in Court for one day. The Sessions Judge, on appeal, reduced the fine to Rs. 100.

Now the Petitioner has been again prosecuted under sec. 19 (f) of Act XI of 1878. As regards this second prosecution we think, in the first place, that it was unnecessary and, in the next place, that the Petitioner is not liable under the provisions of sec. 19 (f) of the Act. The provisions of sec. 19 (f) do not make the mere possession of a gun punishable; they make possession, contrary to the provisions of sec. 14 of that Act, punishable; and we agree with the learned Counsel who appears for the Petitioner that the temporary possession which the Petitioner had of the gun when he snatched it up and fired it was not the possession contemplated by sec. 14.

We accordingly make the rule absolute and set aside the conviction and sentence.

The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

B. C. Rule made absolute.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 164 OF 1906.

MOOKERJEE, J.
CASPERSZ, J.
1907.
Heard, 23, & 26, August.
Judgment, 29, August.

MIRZA SHAMSHER BAHADUR and ors., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
MUNSHI KUNJ BEHARI LAL and others, Respondents.

Possession, suit for—Onus of proof—Nature of evidence to be adduced by either party—Title, proof of, effect of—Presumption of possession—Constructive possession—Survey map, value of, as evidence.

In respect of jungle and hilly land possession must be presumed to be with the rightful owner.

Plaintiff in an action for ejectment must not only prove his title but also his possession, actual or constructive, within 12 years of suit. When Plaintiff has established his title it is not necessary for the Defendant to prove a better title or establish that he has acquired a good title by adverse possession which has extinguished the title of the Plaintiff but Plaintiff must prove his possession also within 12 years.

Nature of evidence required in such cases discussed.

Revenue Survey Maps are evidence of title and possession. They are not conclusive and may be shewn to be wrong but in the absence of evidence to the contrary they may be properly and judicially received in evidence as correct when made.

The doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of the rightful owner and must not, as a rule, be extended to the wrong-doer whose possession must be confined to land of which he is actually in possession.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th of February 1906, against the decree of C. E. Pittar, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Gya, dated the 9th of November 1905, modifying the decree of Babu Annada Prosad Bagchi, Subordinate Judge of Gya, 1st Court, dated the 23rd of January 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. Caspersz, Babus Umakali Mukherjee and Kulwant Sahay for the Appellants.

Mr. O'Kinealy (Advocate-General), Babus Lal Mohan Das, Ram Charan Mitra, Chandra Sekhar Pershad Singh and Prokash Chandra Sircar for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The subject-matter of the litigation giving rise to this appeal consists of three large tracts of lands in the kitas called Bharkalwar, Bhaya Bigha and Gordag, which are claimed by the Plaintiffs-Respondents as included within their Mouzah Ballari. 1345 bighas out of the disputed lands are said to be covered by hills and jungle and the remainder, about 200 bighas, are under cultivation. Out of the latter area, 138 bighas are situated in Bharkalwar and 62 bighas in Gordag.

The Plaintiffs alleged that at the time of the settlement proceedings, the Defendants claimed possession of all these lands under a deed of gift executed in their favour, on the 28th April 1875, by the Maharaja of Deo, a neighbouring zemindar now represented by the 5th and 6th Defendants to this suit. The Settlement Officer held that although according to the Revenue Survey Maps, the lands of Bharkalwar and Gordag were included in Mouzah Ballari, they were in the actual occupation of the Defendants. The Plaintiffs contend that the effect of this decision of the Settlement Officer was practically to place them out of possession. They consequently commenced this action for declaration of title and for recovery of possession. The claim was resisted on various grounds amongst which it is sufficient to mention the pleas of limitation and denial of the title of the Plaintiffs. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the whole of the disputed area was situated within the zemindari of the Plaintiffs. Upon the question of limitation that Court held that as regards the lands covered by hills and jungles the Plaintiffs were in possession, actual or constructive, within 12 years of the suit. As regards the cultivated lands, the Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiffs were in possession of the 62 bighas in Gordag within the statutory period, and that the cultivation by the Defendants of these lands commenced about six years before the suit. As regards the 138 bighas in Bharkalwar however the Subordinate Judge found that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove their possession within 12 years and that the undisputed documentary evidence justified the conclusion that these lands had been under cultivation from a period antecedent to 12 years before the suit. In this view of the matter the Subordinate Judge made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs for the jungle and hilly lands of Bhaya Bigha and the cultivated lands of Gordag but dismissed the suit in respect of the cultivated lands of Bharkalwar.

The Plaintiffs as well as the Defendants appealed against this decree, the former in respect of the lands the claim to which had been dismissed, and the latter in respect of the lands for which the claim had been allowed. The whole question of title and possession therefore was re-opened in the appeal. At the hearing before the District Judge it was admitted on behalf of the Defendants that in default of other evidence of title the Revenue Survey Maps must be accepted as evidence of title and possession, and that according to these maps the lands in dispute appertained to Mouzah Ballari which was admittedly the property of the Plaintiffs. The District Judge therefore held that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge upon the question of title to all the disputed lands must be affirmed. Upon the question of possession the District Judge held that in respect of the jungle and hilly lands the possession must be presumed to be with the original owner, especially as the evidence of the Defendants was inadequate to prove any actual possession over such lands. In respect of the cultivated lands of Gordag the District Judge held that the Defendants were in possession for about 6 or 7 years, and that the Plaintiffs had been previously in possession thereof. As regards the cultivated lands of Bharkalwar the District Judge held that the onus was upon the Defendants to prove adverse possession for more than 12 years, and, as they had failed to do so, and as the possession of the Plaintiffs must be presumed to have continued until the Defendants came into occupation, the title of the Plaintiffs to these lands could not be taken to have been extinguished. In this view of the matter the District Judge allowed the appeal of the Plaintiffs and dismissed the appeal of the Defendants. The result was that the entire claim of the Plaintiffs was allowed.

Against this decree the Defendants have appealed to this Court. On their behalf the decision of the District Judge has been assailed substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the question of title has not been properly investigated inasmuch as the District Judge misunderstood the legal effect of the admission which was made before him, and, secondly, that upon the question of limitation he ought not to have thrown the burden of proof upon the Defendants in respect of any portion of the claim.

In support of his first contention, learned Counsel for the Appellants has contended that there was no intention on the part of the Defendants to abandon the question of title and that the District Judge ought to have determined that point upon the whole of the evidence in the record. It is clear however on the judgment of the District Judge that the Defendants admitted that in default of other evidence of title, the Revenue Survey Map of 1843 must be accepted as evidence of title and possession, and that according to these maps, the lands in dispute appertained to the zemindari of the Plaintiffs. As to factum of the admission it is not open to the Defendants to challenge the accuracy of the statement contained in the judgment of the District Judge. If the admission was not as a matter of fact made, or if it was substantially different from what it was taken by the District Judge to be, the proper course for the Defendants was to apply for a review of judgment because the District Judge and he alone was competent to state with any approach to accuracy, what was the precise admission which had been made before him.

We must therefore proceed on the assumption that the admission stated in the judgment of the District Judge was as a matter of fact made. This admission, it will be observed, is divisible into two parts. The first branch of the admission is that in default of other evidence of title the Revenue Survey Maps must be accepted as evidence of title and possession. This admission is in accordance with what must now be taken to be the settled law as pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Moharaj Jagadindra v. The Secretary of State (1) where their Lordships affirmed the view taken by this Court in the case of Satcowri Ghosh v. The Secretary of State (2) that Revenue Survey Maps are admissible as evidence of possession and consequently of title. The Privy Council state that maps and surveys made in India for revenue purposes are official documents prepared by competent persons and with such publicity and notice to persons as to be admissible and valuable evidence of the state of things at the time they are made. They are not conclusive and may be shown to be wrong, but in the absence of evidence to the contrary, they may be properly and judicially received in evidence as correct when made. When therefore in the Court below it was admitted on behalf of the Defendants that the Revenue Survey Maps must be accepted as evidence of title and possession, the admission was in accordance with settled law. Even if such admission had not been made, the District Judge would have been perfectly justified in his conclusion that the Revenue Survey maps are evidence of title and possession, and that till that evidence was rebutted by other evidence of title, effect must be given to the state of things as indicated by the Revenue Survey Maps.

The second branch of the admission was that the lands in dispute are shown by the Revenue Survey Map of 1843 to appertain to Mouzah Ballari. This was an admission upon a question of fact. It has not been suggested before this Court that the Revenue Survey Map of 1843 does not bear out this statement. We must take it therefore that the admission upon this part of the case was correct and that the Revenue Survey Map of 1843 does show that the disputed lands were at the time found to appertain to the zemindari of the Plaintiffs. The conclusion therefore seems to us to be irresistible that the finding of the District Judge upon the question of title cannot be assailed, and we must proceed on the assumption that the Plaintiffs have established their title to the whole of the lands in controversy.

The second ground urged on behalf of the Appellants relates to the question of limitation. So far as this question touches the jungle and hilly lands of Bhaya Bigha and the cultivated lands of Gordag, we are of opinion that the judgment of the District Judge cannot be successfully assailed. In respect of the jungle and hilly lands, possession must be presumed to be with the rightful owner, that is, with the Plaintiffs in this case. This view is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Mahamad Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (3) and by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder (4). As regards the cultivated lands of Gordag, the District Judge has found that the evidence of the Defendants themselves establishes that they had no possession of these lands at a period earlier than 6 or 7 years before the institution of this suit. The Plaintiffs therefore have not lost possession of the cultivated lands in Gordag for more than 6 or 7 years. There is consequently no bar to their recovery of possession so far as these lands are concerned.

As regards the cultivated lands of Bharkalwar, however, the position is different. The District Judge holds that in respect of these lands the Defendants are bound to prove adverse possession for more than 12 years, because the plea that the title of the Plaintiffs has been extinguished by adverse possession, is taken by the Defendants and it is for them to establish it. In our opinion, this view cannot be sustained. It is now firmly settled, beyond all possibility of controversy, that the Plaintiff in an action for ejectment must not only prove his title but also his possession within 12 years of the suit. This is clear from the cases of Saheb Pershad Sein v. Rajendra Krishore Singh (5) and Nitrasur Singh v. Nund Loll Singh (6). The same view was subsequently affirmed by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Mahamad Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (3). Subsequent to the decision of the Full Bench, the same view has been reaffirmed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Mohima Chandra Mazumdar v. Mohesh Chandra Neoghi (7) and Nawab Mahammud Amanulla Khan v. Budan Singh (8).

It was argued however by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Respondents that the decisions of the Judicial Committee in the cases to which reference has been made do not lay down any general rule of law and must be restricted in their application to the particular circumstances of the case then before the Court. He further suggested that as a matter of principle, a Plaintiff who has established his title ought to succeed unless the Defendant can prove a better title or establish that he has acquired a good title by adverse possession which has extinguished the title of the Plaintiff. We are unable to accept either branch of this contention. There can be no question that the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee is of general applicability and in our opinion there is good reason for it. The Plaintiff who brings an action for ejectment has to establish, not merely that he had title at some remote period antecedent to the suit. In order to entitle him to succeed, he must establish that he had a valid subsisting title at the date of the institution of the suit, in other words he has to prove not only that he has title but also that he has been in possession within 12 years before the suit.

This view may at first sight seem to be not quite consistent with what is implied in the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Innasimuttu Udayan v. Upakarath Udayan (9). In that case, the Plaintiff who sued to eject the Defendant admitted the possession of the latter for seven years next before the suit and the Defendant produced documentary evidence of possession during the preceding five years, which was exactly similar in kind to the evidence which accompanied his possession during the seven years. In these circumstances, Counsel of the Defendant before the Judicial Committee, appears to have taken upon himself to prove that there was primâ facie evidence of the possession of the Defendant for 12 years, and to have contended that this shifted the onus upon the Plaintiff to show that possession of the Defendant began within 12 years of the suit. It was in these circumstances, that the Judicial Committee held that the documentary evidence of possession exactly similar in character to what accompanied the admitted possession went back far behind the 12 years in question, and that this was sufficient to throw on the Plaintiff the burden of rebutting the inference arising from the fact of possession accompanied by these documents. Their Lordships held upon an estimate of the conflicting evidence that this burden had not been sustained by the Plaintiff. In fact, the case for the Defendant was so strong that it was not necessary for him to contend that the fact of the admitted possession of the Defendant for 7 years was sufficient to throw the burden upon the Plaintiff to prove that he had been in possession within 12 years of the suit. This decision of the Judicial Committee cannot, consequently, be taken, to weaken, in any way the effect of the earlier decisions to which we have already referred. We hold, therefore, that in an action for ejectment, the onus is on the Plaintiff to prove his title, and to show that he was in possession and was dispossessed of the disputed property within 12 years before the date when he filed the suit.

The question may, however, and does in fact frequently, arise as to what is necessary for the Plaintiff to prove, in order to establish his possession within 12 years of the suit. The character and value of the property, the suitable and natural mode of using it, the course of conduct which the proprietor might reasonably be expected to follow with a due regard to his own interests, all these matters greatly varying, as they must, under various conditions, are to be taken into account in determining the sufficiency and effectiveness of possession. For instance, where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual mode at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue until 12 years before the suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the Plaintiffs' possession continued also until the contrary is shown. See Mahamad Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (3). In substance, therefore, we have arrived at the conclusion that the Plaintiff in an action for ejectment must prove possession actual or constructive, within 12 years before suit. If the condition of the disputed property was such that it did not admit of actual occupation, the presumption is that legal possession continued with the rightful owner, and it is sufficient for the Plaintiff to prove either that the property continued in such state within 12 years of the suit, or that the condition continued up to a date so near the 12 years that the natural and probable inference is that the condition of the property was similar up to a date within 12 years of the suit. If this is established by the Plaintiff, the presumption would be that the possession of the Plaintiff also continued within 12 years of the suit. This presumption, however, is rebuttable and the Defendant may show that he has been in actual occupation of the property or of any portion thereof, for more than 12 years before suit. If the presumption is thus rebutted and the adverse possession of the Defendant is proved in respect of any portion of the property, the suit of the Plaintiff must fail to that extent.

Now in the case before us, the District Judge has not found what was the condition of the land in Bharkalwar at a period about 12 years before the date of the institution of the suit. All that he has found, is that the Survey Map of 1843 shows that at the time of the survey the lands were jungle. This however does not necessarily lead to the presumption that the lands continued to be jungle up to the 11th April 1892, within 12 years of which date the present action was commenced. We start with the possession of the Plaintiffs over jungle lands in 1843 but there is no finding as to the subsequent condition of the property.

In these circumstances, it is impossible to support the decision of the District Judge upon this part of the case. The presumption which he raised in favour of the Plaintiff would be available, only so long as the lands continued to be jungle. The presumption, however, would cease to be operative after the land was cleared of jungle, and was brought under cultivation. This part of the case, therefore, must be retried.

(3) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 744 (1883).

The District Judge must in the first instance direct his attention to the condition of the land at a period 12 years antecedent to the suit. If he finds that the land at that time was covered with jungle or that at a period not very remote from that time, the land was jungle so as to justify the inference that the same condition continued at a time just within 12 years of the suit the Plaintiffs are entitled to the benefit of the presumption that they had constructive possession as rightful owners. When the District Judge deals with this part of the case, he may, if the state of the evidence justifies it, apply the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ranjit Ram Pandey v. Goberdhan Ram Pandey (10), namely, where the evidence of possession is equally unsatisfactory on both sides, the presumption may be made that possession was with the true owner. If the District Judge comes to the conclusion that the Plaintiff has made out a primâ facie case and is therefore entitled to the benefit of the presumption, he will next consider whether the Defendants have been able to rebut that case by their evidence. When he deals with this part of the case, regard must be had to the principle of law that a trespasser is not entitled to the benefit of constructive possession. It was ruled by this Court in the case of Mohini Mohan Roy v. Promoda Nath Roy (11), that the doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of the rightful owner, and must not, as a rule, be extended to the wrong-doer, whose possession must be confined to land of which he is actually in possession.

This rule is substantially identical with the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Clark v. Elphinstone (12), Agency Company v. Short (13) and Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta (14). In the first of these cases it was held that as against the rightful owner, the possession of a trespasser is available only when there is actual possession of the disputed land or overt, or physical act of ownership done upon it. The true owner is not affected by ideal possession of the land or possession which exists only in the imagination of the parties. In the second case, the Judicial Committee held that when an intruder has relinquished possession, the possession so abandoned, leaves the original owner in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. In the third case the Judicial Committee held that when land in the possession of a trespasser is submerged the possession reverts in the eye of law, to the original owner.

The principle upon which this rule of law is based, was elaborately examined by Mr. Justice Storey in Clarke v. Courteney (15) in which that eminent Judge observed that the reason for the rule is plain. Both parties cannot be seised at the same time of the same land under different titles, and the law therefore adjudges the seisin of all which is not in the actual occupancy of the adverse party, to him who has the better title. If a man enters into land having title, his seisin is not bounded by his occupancy but is held to be co-extensive with his title; but if a man enters without title his seisin is confined to his possession by metes and bounds. Where two persons are in possession of land at the same time under different titles, the law adjudges him to have the seisin of the estate who has a better title. Both cannot be seised. Their seisin follows the title. If therefore a mere trespasser without any claim or pretence of title, enters into the land and holds the same adversely to the title of the true owner, it is an ouster or disseisin of the latter, but in such cases the possession of the trespasser is bounded by his actual occupancy, and consequently the true owner is not disseised except as to the portion so occupied. It follows consequently that if the true owner be in possession of a part of the land, claiming title to the whole, then his seisin extends by construction of law to all land which is not in the actual possession or occupancy by enclosure or otherwise of the party claiming adversely as a trespasser, or under a defective deed or title. This principle has been repeatedly affirmed, see Hunny Cutt v. Peyton (16), De Burton v. Young (17) and Smith v. Gale (18). It follows consequently that if a Plaintiff establishes by evidence, direct or presumptive, his possession actual or constructive, of the disputed land in Bharkalwar within 12 years of the suit, and if the Defendants are called upon to prove their case of adverse possession for over 12 years, in respect of any portion of those lands, the evidence as to their possession must be carefully scrutinized. It must be found in respect of each parcel of land whether the possession of the Defendants has extended over 12 years, and such possession, if any, must be actual occupation.

The result therefore is that this appeal must be allowed in part, and the decree of the District Judge modified. So far as the 1345 bighas of jungle and bill lands and 62 bighas of cultivated lands in Gordag are concerned, the appeal must be dismissed, and the decree of the District Judge affirmed. So far as the 138 bighas of cultivated lands in Bharkalwar are concerned, the appeal must be allowed and the decree of the District Judge reversed. The case in so far as it relates to these 138 bighas, will be remanded to the District Judge in order that he may rehear the appeal in accordance with the observations contained in this judgment.

As regards the cost of this appeal, the Respondents have succeeded to a substantial extent. They will therefore have half the cost of this appeal the other half of the costs of this appeal will abide the ultimate result.

Let the records be sent down at once.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th of March 1907, against an order of A. Goodeve, Esqr, District Judge of Zillah Birbhum, dated the 7th of January 1907, affirming that of Babu Durga Das Chakrabutti, Munsif, 2nd Court at Rampur Hat, dated the 4th of September 1906.

(5) 4 C. W. N. 474 (1900).
(6) 8 C. W. N. 102 (1903).

The appeal arose out of an application purporting to be made under secs. 244 and 258, C. P. C. The Petitioners borrowed Rs. 149 from the opposite party in Assar 1304 and executed a mortgage-bond agreeing to pay interest and compound interest upon it as stipulated. A suit was brought on the basis of the bond and the opposite party got a decree for Rs. 313 and costs. The mortgaged property was then advertised for sale and 19th June 1906 was fixed for the sale to take place. On that date, the Petitioners paid Rs. 39 to the opposite party and sale was postponed till 19th July with his consent. On the 20th July (the case having been put up for other urgent matters) the opposite party filed a petition stating receipt of Rs. 136 from Petitioners in the meantime, and sale was postponed till 20th August. On the 21st Petitioners filed the present petition claiming part satisfaction of the decree, their case being that they had requested the opposite party to grant them instalments but he had refused but said that if they could pay Rs. 136 to him on 10th Assar he would give up the amount decreed for compound interest and Rs. 80 in addition, and the said amount of Rs. 136 was accordingly paid.

Both the lower Courts found that the adjustment alleged by the Petitioners had in fact taken place, and an order was made directing execution for the balance of the decretal amount left after such adjustment.

The decree-holder preferred this second appeal.

HARISH CHANDRA MONDOL v. JAGABANDHU DUTTA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

STEPHEN, J.—This is an appeal against the dismissal by the District Judge of Birbhoom of an appeal against an order by a Munsif ordering an adjustment under secs. 244, 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts are simple. The Appellant before us was decree-holder in a mortgage suit brought against the Respondent who was mortgagor. The suit had proceeded as far as the making an order absolute for sale under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, but no sale had actually been made, when the decree-holder accepted two sums of Rs. 39 and Rs. 136 from the mortgagor on the terms he would give up his claim for compound interest and a sum of Rs. 80 in addition. The only point raised in the Court below was that no order could be made under those portions of the Civil Procedure Code that are not embodied in the Transfer of Property Act by means of rules under sec. 104.

In this Court the Appellant contends that the decree having been made absolute under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act the only way in which a legal effect could be given to the payment of money in respect of debt on which the decree was founded was by a certified payment or adjustment under sec. 258 of the Code, and that the authorities show that this section does not apply to such a decree.

The first part of this contention seems to me unsound. It has been laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in Bibijan Bibee v. Sachi Bewa (1) that a mortgagor does not lose his right to redeem when an order for sale is made absolute under sec. 89, Transfer of Property Act, but retains it till the sale has actually taken place. If he can redeem in full, there seems to be no reason why he should not redeem in part. It may be that the account taken under sec. 86 cannot be reopened; but there is nothing in the Act to prevent the exercise of the Court's equitable powers to make allowance on the basis of the account for any payment made by the mortgagee while it is still open to him to make such a payment. If this is so, the Munsif had power to make the order in this case irrespectively of secs. 244 and 258 of the Code; and it becomes unnecessary for me to consider the question whether the present order can be supported under these sections which are not embodied in the rules made under sec. 104, Transfer of Property Act. I need not, therefore, discuss the authorities that have been quoted before us to show the effect to be given to the provision of the Code in the application of the Act. Though the order in the Court below is correct it must not be taken that I approve of the reasons there given. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal from an order made in the course of a proceeding for the enforcement of a mortgage decree. The question in controversy between the parties was as to the amount for the realization of which the decree-holder was entitled to take out execution. It was alleged on behalf of the judgment-debtors that in the course of a previous execution some payments had been made in partial satisfaction of the decree and that the parties had come to an adjustment under which the decree-holder had agreed to give up his claim for compound interest and to allow a certain remission. It has been found by the Courts below that the adjustment alleged by the judgment-debtors is established by the evidence and this finding is not challenged before this Court. But it is argued that the Courts below had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter of adjustment inasmuch as sec. 258, C. C. P., has not been made applicable to the execution proceedings on the basis of mortgage decrees by the rules framed by this Court under sec. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act. This contention which has been overruled by the Courts below is sought to be supported by a reference to the decision of this Court in the cases of Kedar Nath v. Kali Charan (2) and Sham Kissen v. Sunder Koer (3). It is broadly contended that as sec. 258, C. P. C., is not mentioned in the rules framed by the High Court it is not applicable to proceedings in execution of a mortgage decree and that consequently the Court has no power to deal with the question of adjustment alleged by the judgment-debtors. There may perhaps be some expression in the judgment of this Court in the case of Kedar Nath v. Kali Charan (2) which may lend some apparent support to the argument, but in my opinion the contention is unfounded. It is conceded by the learned vakil for the Appellant that if his contention is carried to its legitimate conclusion he would not be entitled to be heard before this Court at all, for sec. 244, C. P. C., is not one of the sections mentioned in the rules and unless the order of which the Appellant complains is treated as one made under that section, the appeal is incompetent. It is not necessary for the purposes of the present appeal to consider the scope of sec. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act or the effect of the rules framed thereunder. Upon this point there has been some difference of judicial opinion, see Mulika Gunnoda v. Linga Murli (4) and Kedar Nath v. Kali Charan (2). It is quite clear, however, that the powers of the Court which are called upon to execute a mortgage decree are not confined within the four corners of the rules framed under sec 104 of the Transfer of Property Act. As explained in Dakshina Mohan v. Basumati Debi (5) sec. 104 is an enabling section and the rules made by the High Court under the provisions of that section do not limit the applicability of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as regards sales held in execution of mortgage decrees. It may be pointed out that the contrary view put forward on behalf of the Appellant would lead to the anomaly that as rules were not framed till 1892, that is, more than 10 years after the Transfer of Property Act had been passed, there could not have been in the interval any execution of mortgage decrees. Much stress was laid on behalf of the Appellant upon the decision of this Court in the case of Hatem Ali v. Abdul Gaffur Khan (6)

in which the learned Judges appear to have expressed an opinion that sec. 258, C. P. C., is not applicable to applications under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. Upon closer examination, however, it is plain that the decision relied upon is of no assistance to the Appellant. The learned Judges held that the execution Court has full power to ascertain what balance of the mortgage debt is really outstanding at the time of the application and to make the order absolute for the realisation of that amount only. It seems to me to be obvious that a Court which is competent to execute a mortgage decree is not only competent, but that it is also its duty, to determine how much is due and realisable under the decree at the time when execution is sought. If an adjustment is pleaded it raises a question relating to the execution or satisfaction, partial or otherwise, of the decree and no intelligible principle has been suggested why the powers of the execution Court should be deemed to be so restricted as not to cover an enquiry of this description. As pointed out by this Court in the case of Bibijan Bibee v. Sachi Bewa (1) a mortgagor has the right to redeem at any time until the sale of the mortgaged property has been completed and sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act does not prohibit the exercise of such right after the passing of an order absolute for sale and before the sale under such order has really taken place. If so, it is indisputable that the Court is competent after the order absolute has been made and before the sale actually takes place, to investigate whether the decree has or has not been adjusted in whole or in part. It follows, therefore, that whether sec. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure be or be not treated as applicable to proceedings in execution of mortgage decrees, it was quite competent to the Courts below to deal with the matter of adjustment under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and sec. 244 of the Code, Ram Kamlessuri v. Sukhan Singh (7). In this view of the matter the decision of the Courts below is manifestly right and ought to be affirmed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 492 OF 1905.

MITRA, J. CASPERSZ, J. 1907. Heard, 2 and 3, December. Judgment, 11, December.	IJATULLA BHUYAN and ors., Judgment-debtors, Appellants, v. CHANDRA MOHAN BANERJEE, Decree-holder, Respondent.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 211—Mesne profits—*Khamar land—Interest.

In determining the amount of mesne profits payable in respect of khamar land, 5 per cent. on the value of the actual produce was held to be a sufficient allowance to meet the costs of supervision and any other incidental charges for which a proprietor who is not an ordinary cultivator of his khamar land may be liable.

Principle upon which mesne profits of khamar land should be assessed discussed.

IJATULLA BHUYAN v. CHANDRA MOHAN BANERJEE.

Interest as forming a part of the mesne profits or damages cannot be allowed for any period subsequent to that limited by sec. 211, C. P. C.

Interest at 6 per cent. and not 12 per cent. was allowed on mesne profits after possession was delivered.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th of November 1905, against the order of Babu Ananda Nath Mojumdar, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 8th of August 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, Joy Gopal Ghosh, Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy and Mohini Mohan Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Babus Tara Kishore Chowdhury, Nogendra Nath Mitter, Chandra Kant Ghose and Bidhu Bhusan Ganguly for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

CASPERSZ, J.—This appeal arises out of an application by the decree holder Respondent for the judicial ascertainment of mesne profits of certain lands for the period extending from 29th March 1893 up to 27th or 28th December 1899 being the date of delivery of possession. The decree-holder obtained a decree for 5 annas 5 gundas share of a certain revenue-paying taluk. It was not determined what the boundaries of the taluk were, but it was held that a purchaser in the position of the Plaintiff was not bound to recognise any previous partition not made by the Collector. The Plaintiff, therefore, obtained a decree for an undivided share, together with mesne profits, and the Defendant's alleged sikmi taluk was set aside. The decree of the first Court was affirmed on appeal by the High Court on the 20th June 1899. Proceedings in execution were taken in due course, and on the 21st April 1903, a Division Bench of this Court (Rampini and Handley, JJ.) interpreted the decree so as to secure to the decree-holder possession of certain specific plots of land as appurtenant to the share of 5 annas 5 gundas decreed to him. We cannot, in any way, discuss or vary the interpretation so arrived at. In the assessment of mesne profits, two different principles must be adopted, one applicable to the case of the rent-paying lands, or jote lands, and the other applicable to the case of the specific plots which we have mentioned and which we may call the khamar lands.

A Civil Court Amin was deputed to make the necessary local enquiries. His report is before us, and we have, also, referred to the ekwal, or abstract, prepared by him. The Civil Court Amin found that the total amount of mesne profits, including the rents for the jote lands and the price of the produce of the khamar lands, came up to Rs. 16,304-8 as. 0 pice 13½ krants. From this sum he deducted on account of expenditure, that is to say, collection charges at 10 per cent. and the costs of cultivation, Rs. 5,358-6-5-13½, the resultant amount of mesne profits being Rs. 10,946-1-7. These conclusions have been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge in his order from which the present appeal has been preferred. But the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge brings up the amount of mesne profits to Rs. 22,335-7-7-11 which figure has been calculated so as to include interest at 12 per cent. on the various sums accruing for the successive years from 29th March 1893 to 7th August 1905 the latter date being the day preceding the day on which the decree was made.

The judgment-debtors have appealed against the decree awarding mesne profits for the amount we have mentioned, and the contention before us are four in number; first, as to the true principle of assessment to be adopted; secondly, as to the apportionment of the total sum between the several judgment-debtors; thirdly, as to the deductions that should be made from the value of the produce of the khamar lands on account of the risk and supervision of the cultivation carried on by persons in the position of the decree holder; and, fourthly, as to the rate of interest at 12 per cent. allowed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

With regard to the first contention, we observe that the only difficulty that arises is in respect of the khamar lands. The contention, as we understand it, is that the decree-holder, not being himself a cultivator, should not be allowed mesne profits calculated on the price of the actual produce. Our attention has been called to the cases of Surji Pershad Narain v. Reid (1) and Laljee Shahay v Walker (2), and it has been further urged on the authority of the case of Raghu Nandan Jha v. Jalpa Pattap (3) that a decree-holder in the position of the present Respondent cannot equitably obtain more than a fair and reasonable rent for the lands, if those lands had been let out to tenants during the period of unlawful occupation by the judgment-debtors. The true principle, as it seems to us, deducible from the authorities is that, on the facts of the present litigation, the decree-holder must be regarded as the potential, and therefore the actual cultivator of the specific plots which were cultivated by the judgment-debtors from whom he succeeded in obtaining possession. The occupation of khamar lands in the direct cultivation of the maliks very nearly approximates to the occupation of raiyati lands held by ordinary cultivators. In some instances the proprietor cultivates his khamar land by means of his own ploughs, utilizing the labour of his servants; in other cases, he may not take so much personal interest in the cultivation of such lands, and may prefer to employ hired labour and to exercise the necessary supervision over the cultivation by means of paid agents or factors. It does not, however, make any difference as to the principle upon which a proprietor is equitably entitled to receive mesne profits for khamar lands which have been in the wrongful cultivation of others and from which they did not get anything in the shape of rent. The judgment-debtors withheld their papers, and the utmost that they can urge on the facts of the present case, is that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have deducted some percentage, in addition to the ordinary costs of cultivation which have been allowed by the Civil Court Amin. That percentage, we think, may fairly be calculated, in the case of khamar lands, at half the usual rate on account of collection charges allowed in the case of rent-paying or jote lands. The term 'collection charges,' in the latter case, would include a larger establishment, and it would be much more elastic than the ordinary cost of supervising what may be called home-cultivation. We think that 5 per cent. on the value of the actual produce of the khamar lands may be regarded as a sufficient allowance to meet the costs of supervision and any other incidental charges for which a proprietor, who is not an ordinary cultivator of his khamar lands, may be liable, and to that extent the judgment-debtors may benefit in the calculation of the mesne-profits which they should be called upon to pay. These observations dispose of the first and third contentions on behalf of the judgment-debtors.

There is no force in the second contention, that is, as regards the apportionment which the judgment-debtors urge should be made as between themselves. The case cannot be sent back to the lower Court at this stage for an enquiry to be held into the different degrees of interest they possessed in the different plots held by them, in virtue of their alleged sikimi right, before possession was delivered to the decree-holder. The decree was passed against all the judgment-debtors jointly; their sikimi was not set aside; and we entertain no doubt that the possession of a 5 annas 5 gundas share in the taluk carries with it a right to obtain mesne profits not merely from the individual sikimidars, but from the entire body of the judgment-debtors who were in possession of that share. The sikimi taluk set up by the judgment-debtors extended to that share, the specific plots—in respect of which mesne profits have been calculated on the basis of actual produce—were integral parts of the share purchased by the decree-holder; and this view having been affirmed by this Court on appeal, the question is no longer open to discussion. The Defendants other than Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 29 and 30 are not also before us, the latter four Defendants having appealed against the Plaintiff without making the other Defendants parties to the appeal, and we cannot make any order affecting their interest in their absence.

The remaining contention, however, is one which ought to prevail. We may observe that no objection was taken in the Court below or before us with regard to the period limited by the terms of sec. 211 of the Code and the extended period of over six years for which mesne profits have been allowed in the present case. No doubt, a claim for mesne profits includes, and must include, interest on such mesne profits. This was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Girish Chandra Lahiri v. Sasi Sekhareswar Roy (4). Interest as forming a part of the mesne profits or damages cannot be allowed for any period subsequent to that limited by sec. 211 of the Code, and, in the exercise of a proper discretion, the higher rate of 12 per cent. should, in our opinion, cease after December 1899 when possession was obtained by the decree-holder. The annual rate of interest allowed by the Court on money decreed and pending realization by process or awaiting enquiry in ascertainment conducted by order of, or before, the Court is 6 per cent. only, and the account must be taken to have been made up, as against the judgment-debtors, from the date when the decree-holder superseded them in possession of the lands decreed. In other words, the penal rate, as we may call it, of 12 per cent. should terminate when the wrong doing of the Defendants came to an end and, thereafter, the usual Court rate should be allowed.

The result is that mesne profits must be ascertained on the principles which we have indicated and which were the principles adopted by the lower Court, but subject to a deduction of 5 per cent. on the produce of the khamar lands. In making the calculation of interest, the higher rate of 12 per cent. will be limited to the annual amounts accruing from the 29th March 1893 up to the end of December 1899, year by year, and the lower rate of 6 per cent. will be applied from the 1st January 1900 up to 7th August 1905, the dates being taken from the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Costs will be in proportion to the success of the judgment-debtor Appellants and the decree-holder Respondents.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES
NOS. 201 AND 318 OF 1906.

BRETT, J. CHITTY, J. 1908. Heard, 3, January Judgment, 13, January.	MOULVIE ABDUS SUBHAN and ors., Defendants, Appellants, v. KURBAN ALI and ors., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Mahomedan law—Wahabis, right of, to worship at Sunni mosques—Restrictions to its exercise—Special dedication of mosque for use of a particular sect—Validity

Quære—Whether according to the Mahomedan Ecclesiastical law, a mosque can be specially dedicated for the use exclusively of the Hanafi sect of Sunni Mahomedans.

Persons belonging to the amil-bil-hadi (or Wahabi) sect of Mahomedans are entitled to worship at mosques chiefly used by the Hanafi sect and use the loud toned amin and raise the hands above the knee during worship.

MOULVIE ABDUS SUBHAN v. KURBAN ALI.

Babu Joy Proshad Pandey, Munsif, Patna, dated the 27th of May 1905.

The appeals arose out of a dispute relating to the right claimed by the Plaintiffs who belonged to the amil-bil-hadi sect of Sunni Musulmans to worship at certain mosques, built by Musulmans of the Hanafi sect of Sunnis primarily for the use of members of that sect. The difference between the two sects lay chiefly in certain matters of ritual, and is noted in the judgment. The District Judge before whom the case came on the Plaintiffs' appeal from the decision of the Munsif passed a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs declaring their right to worship, but in view of the fact that the right declared might be abused made the declaration subject to the proviso "that in the exercise of their rights the Plaintiffs are subject to the general law of the land"

The Defendants preferred this second appeal.

Moulvies Syed Shamsul Huda and Mahomed Ishfaq for the Appellants.

Moulvies Mahomed Yusuf, Abdul Jawad and Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar for the Respondants.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These are two appeals from decrees of the District Judge of Patna reversing (except as to the Defendant Abdul Karim) decrees of the Munsif of Patna and granting the Plaintiffs the reliefs claimed by them in their respective plaints but declaring that in the exercise of their rights the Plaintiffs are subject to the general law of the land. The suits were brought to establish the Plaintiffs' rights to say their prayers and perform other religious duties in two mosques, one in Mohalla Mahamedpur, Shahganj, and the other in Mohalla Bak-sariatola, Chowki Sultanganj, Patna, and further to restrain the Defendants from interfering with such rights. The questions at issue are common to both suits, and were disposed of, both in the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court, in one judgment. The same course may be conveniently followed with regard to these two appeals. The Appellants before us are Defendants 1 to 4, 6, 7 and 8, and the active Respondents are the Plaintiffs. A number of issues were raised in the Court of first instance relating to limitation, procedure, joinder of parties and so forth. These were decided in the Plaintiffs' favour. The lower Appellate Court declined to consider them, on the ground that they were not made the subject of a cross-appeal. They have been again put forward in the grounds of appeal before us, but no argument has been addressed to us in respect of them. The sole question laid before us has been as to the right of the Plaintiffs to worship at these mosques, and that is the only point for our determination.

The findings of fact which we must accept are shortly these :—The mosques in question appear to have been built by Musulmans of the Hanafi sect primarily for the use of members of their own sect. They have been used by Hanafis and as a general rule by Hanafis only. The lower Appellate Court has declined to find that either or both the mosques were expressly reserved for the use of the Hanafis. Such an inference could not properly be drawn from the evidence on the record. It might also be questioned whether such a special dedication would be in accordance with Mahomedan Ecclesiastical law. The Plaintiffs and Defendants all belong to the Sunni sect of Musulmans. The Plaintiffs, however, belong to a school known as amil-bil-hadis or as their opponents style them Wahabis and are regarded unorthodox by the general body of Hanafis to which the Defendants belong. The difference between them is not so much (if at all) in matters of belief, as of ritual. The amil-bil-hadis employ the loud toned 'amin' and the raising of hands (rafaa eddain), while the others pronounce the 'amin' in a low tone and do not raise the hands above the knee. These points of ritual though seemingly unimportant in themselves have led to much difference of opinion among Musulmans and consequent litigation. The earliest reported case was a criminal one, Empress v. Ramzan (1). In that case Mahmood, J., expressed an opinion that the accused was at liberty to say 'amin' in a loud tone and was justified in entering the mosque and worshipping with the congregation, even though he used the loud toned 'amin.' The question in that case was whether there had been an offence under sec. 296, I. P. C., and the majority of the Full Bench concurred in remanding the case for further enquiry as to the facts.

The question came again before the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ata-ullah v. Azim-ullah (2). There the Full Bench held that members of the Wahabi sect (as are the Plaintiffs here) were Mahammadans and as such entitled to perform their devotions in a mosque though they might differ from the majority of Sunnis on certain points. Those points were the same as are in issue in this case. The learned Chief Justice there expressed an opinion that a Mahammadan would bring himself within the grasp of the criminal law who not in the bonâ fide performance of his devotions but malâ fide for the purpose of disturbing others engaged in their devotions made any demonstration, oral or otherwise, in a mosque and disturbance was the result.

Lastly in an appeal from this Court in the case of Fazl Karim v. Moula Baksh (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld the right of an Imam to officiate in a mosque even though he belonged to the amil-bil-hadis or Wahabis, and adopted the loud toned 'amin' and the raising of hands (rafaa eddain). It appears clear from these decisions that the Plaintiffs have the right to worship in the mosques in question and that they cannot be debarred from the exercise of such right on the ground of their views in the matter of ritual. This was not seriously contested by the Appellants. What they chiefly desire is that some restriction should be placed upon the Plaintiffs by the Court in declaring their right so as to prevent, so far as may be possible, a breach of the peace or unseemly disturbance in the mosques. This appears to us reasonable. The granting of declaratory relief is discretionary with the Court and there seems no reason why it should not make the declaration in such a form as will grant the relief claimed and yet provide against n abuse of the right accorded. The learned District Judge has taken this view but we think that his declaration that "in the exercise of their rights the Plaintiffs are subject to the general law of the land" is too vague to be of much practical assistance to the Appellants. We think that if the declaration in avour of the Plaintiffs be accompanied by the proviso that the Plaintiffs in the exercise of their rights of worship do not interrupt or disturb the worship of others it will meet the requirements of the case. We may say that we entirely agree with the dictum of the learned Chief Justice of Allahabad to which we have above referred. With this modification the decrees of the lower Appellate Court will be confirmed. We think that each party should bear their own costs of these appeals.

A purchased village S in execution of a decree obtained by him against C in the Small Cause Court. Subsequently A through B instituted a mortgage suit against C and in execution of the decree obtained therein purchased some lands in the same village S. C instituted two suits, one to set aside the sale in execution of the Small Cause Court decree and the other to set aside the decree and sale in the mortgage suit. The latter suit was dismissed for default, but the former succeeded. In this suit, A did not set up as a ground of his defence the title obtained by him at the mortgage sale, Per BRETT, J.—*Expl. II of sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code refers to the title litigated in the former suit as distinguished from the relief claimed. When several independent grounds of action are available, a party is not bound to unite them all in one suit though he is bound to bring before the Court all grounds of attack available to him with reference to the title which is made the ground of action. The Plaintiffs in this suit were certain persons who may be conveniently described as the Tewaris. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 were the sons and Plaintiffs Nos. 5 to 7 were the grandsons of one Mussummat Bihansa Koer deceased.

There was a mortgage-bond in her favour executed by Budhan and Mahabir and Mahadeo, who may be described as the predecessors-in-title of the Defendants in this suit. The mortgage was for Rs. 1,200, and under the deed, bighas 49-10 of land in Mouzah Sugin Bal (?) out of the milkiat of the mortgagors, was hypothecated. A suit on this mortgage bond was instituted by Bihansa Koer and it was contested by Mussummat Lachminia Koer, Sheo Gobind and others, the heirs of the original mortgagors: a mortgage decree however was passed in favour of Mussummut Bihansa on the 27th February 1890, and this was confirmed on appeal on the 7th October 1890. In execution of the mortgage decree, the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder herself on the 7th January 1897. Possession however was not taken till 1st July 1900.

Sheo Gobind and others, the heirs of the original mortgagor, then brought a suit to set aside Bihansa Koer's sale on the mortgage decree. That suit was dismissed for default on 7th May 1901.

The Defendant No. 1, Purbhoo Nath Chowbey, was the purchaser of Mouzah Sugin Bal, under a kobala, dated 5th May 1903. On the death of Mussummat Bihansa the Plaintiffs as her heirs applied to have their names registered in the Collectorate with respect to a certain share of Mouzah Sugin Bal respecting the bighas 49-10 of the milkiat land. On Purbhoo Nath Chowbey's objection, the Collector disallowed the application for registration, setting aside the Deputy Collector's order directing registration. The Collector's order was upheld by the Commissioner. Hence, the present suit for a declaration that the Plaintiffs were entitled to have their names registered with respect to the bighas 49-10 or such share in Mouzah Sugin Bal as was represented by or equivalent to that area.

The principal defence set up was that the suit was res judicata under the following circumstance: That Sheobaran Tewari, the brother of the present Plaintiffs, brought a suit on a simple mortgage-bond for Rs. 99, dated 30th Ashar 1291, purporting to have been executed by the predecessors of the Defendants and recovered a money-decree in the Small Cause Court on the 21st March 1888. In execution of that decree, Sheobaran caused the entire Mouzah Sugin Bal to be sold and purchased it himself. On 30th September 1899 the Defendants instituted a suit to set aside the above sale on the ground of fraud, &c., and this suit was decreed. In that suit Mussamat Bihansa was not made a party. It was however alleged by the Defendants that in the mortgage suit Bihansa was merely the benamdar of the Tewaris, that the Tewaris having failed, in the Defendants' suit to set aside the sale in execution of the above Small Cause Court decree, to put forward their title based on the said mortgage sale, their present claim was barred under Expl. II of sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the Plaintiffs' suit. But his decision was reversed on appeal before the District Judge.

Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

BRETT, J.—The present appeal arises out of a suit brought by the present Plaintiffs Appellants to have their right declared in 49½ bighas of land in village Sajibala, and to have their names registered in the Collectorate as proprietors of those 49½ bighas. It appears that they had applied in the Land Registration Department of the Arrah Collectorate in July 1903 to have their names registered as proprietors of this property claiming title as purchasers in execution of a mortgage decree at a sale held on the 3rd January 1897. The Deputy Collector allowed the application but on appeal the order of the Deputy Collector was set aside by the Collector of Arrah and the decision of the Collector was confirmed by the Commissioner of the Division on the 18th June 1904.

The only point urged in defence which is of importance for the purpose of this appeal was that the Plaintiffs were barred by the doctrine of res judicata under the provisions of sec. 13, Expl. (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The explanation runs as follows :—"Any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit."

The Plaintiffs-Appellants all form members of one family of Tewaris descended from one Mussummat Bihansa Koer and her husband Hanker Singh Tewari. The Defendants on the other hand are members of a family of Singhs descended from Mussummat Lachminia Koer and her husband Babu Bhugwan Singh.

On the 1st March 1888 a suit was brought by Sheobaran Tewari, the father of Plaintiffs Nos. 5, 6 and 7, and the brother of the other Plaintiffs, in the Small Cause Court against Mohabir Singh and Budhan Singh, the father of Defendants Nos. 4, 2 and 3, on a bond for Rs. 100 said to have been executed by these two persons in favour of Sheobaran Tewari, on the 8th July 1884. An ex parte decree was obtained on the 21st March 1888 and in execution of the same the decree-holder Sheobaran Singh sold the whole village Sujibal on the 7th May 1890 and purchased it himself.

On the 2nd May 1884 a mortgage-bond for Rs. 1,000 is said to have been executed in favour of Bihansa Koer, ancestors of the Plaintiffs, by the predecessor of Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 by which 49½ bighas of Mouzah Sujibal were hypothecated as security for the debt. A suit was instituted in 1889 (No. 91 of 1888) by Bihansa Koer against the present Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, and a decree was obtained on the 27th February 1890: The Defendants appealed but their appeal was dismissed on the 7th October 1890. On the 3rd January 1897 the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder, Bihansa Koer.

On the 30th September 1899 a suit was brought by the present Defendants (2, 3 and 4) to have set aside the ex parte Small Cause Court decree of the 21st March 1888 and the sale under that decree held on 7th May 1890 on the ground that the bond and the proceedings based on that bond were fraudulent.

On the 13th January 1900 the same Defendants brought another suit to have the mortgage decree of the 27th February 1890 and the sale under that decree of the 3rd January 1897 set aside on the ground that the mortgage-bond and the proceedings based on that bond were fraudulent. This latter suit was dismissed for default on the 7th May 1901. Bihansa Koer, it is to be observed, had died in January or February 1901.

The suit to set aside the Small Cause Court decree and the sale thereunder was decreed in favour of the then Plaintiffs, the present Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, on the 20th December 1900, and that decision was affirmed on appeal on the 12th June 1903.

The present suit was instituted on the 27th September 1904 and the main ground of defence taken by the Defendants was that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed in the suit because they had failed in their defence in the suit instituted on the 30th September 1899 to set aside the Small Cause Court decree to set up the title under which in the present suit the Plaintiffs seek to have their right declared in the 49½ bighas of land in Mouzah Sujibal.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the Plaintiffs' suit, but on appeal the District Judge set aside the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim on the ground that it was barred by the provisions of sec. 13, Expl. (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In support of the appeal it has been argued, first, that the subject-matter of the suit brought on the 20th September 1899 by the Defendants to set aside the Small Cause Court decree did not cover the property in claim in the present suit and therefore sec. 13, Expl. (2) did not impose on the present Plaintiffs-Appellants any duty in that suit to set up as part of their defence the title which they claimed under the sale in execution of the mortgage decree; secondly, that even though it may be a matter which they might have pleaded in their defence in that suit, it was not a matter which it can be held that they ought to have pleaded in their defence; and, thirdly, that even assuming that it is now open to the present Defendants to raise the objection which they have raised in their defence, still as they were parties to the previous mortgage suit which was decided against them and as they failed in that suit which they instituted to have that mortgage decree and the sale thereunder set aside they are estopped from now setting up the plea which they have raised.

On behalf of the Defendants it has been argued that the conduct of the Plaintiffs in the previous litigation was such as to render it compulsory on them to set up in their defence in the suit brought to set aside the Small Cause Court decree the title on which they are now relying in support of the present suit. In that litigation the present Plaintiffs all along repudiated the idea that they had any right under the mortgage deed and asserted that Bihansa Koer was in that suit acting entirely on her own account and that they had no concern with her. In the present case it has been found that the position taken up by the Plaintiffs in that litigation was a false position, and that in fact they were the persons principally interested in the mortgage, and Bihansa Koer was merely acting as their representative in the litigation. It has further been pointed out that the Defendant Sheo Gobind did not attain majority till 1897 and that the other Defendants are younger than him and, therefore, that in the previous litigation all those Defendants were minors. If the findings in the present suit be accepted the Plaintiffs had purchased the whole of the mouzah in execution of the Small Cause Court decree on the 7th May 1890 whereas the purchase in execution of the mortgage decree was not made till January 1897. If the Plaintiffs relied on their title under the two purchases, then when the suit was brought on the 30th September 1899 to set aside the sale of the whole mouzah and to obtain possession of the whole mouzah from the present Plaintiffs, they were bound to set up every title which they had in the mouzah which they could put forward to defeat the claim then made by the present Defendants. They were not entitled to keep back the secret title under which they now claim under the mortgage decree and to bring it forward in the present suit. In support of this contention we have been referred to a long series of rulings commencing with the case reported in Wafeah v. Sahuba (1), and ending with the cases in Kameswar Prosad v. Raj Kumari Ratan Koer (2) and Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (3). None of these cases however are exactly analogous to the present, the decision of which must depend on its own circumstances.

For the Appellants reliance was mainly placed on the case of Koilash Chandra Mondal v. Ram Narain Gir (4) and Ramaswami Aiyar v. Vithinati Aiyar (5) also on the passage in the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Kameswar Prosad v. Raj Kumari Ratan Koer (2), occurring at p. 238, which explains the meaning of the word 'ought' as used in the Expl. (2) of the sec. 13 of Code of Civil Procedure. It has been argued on their behalf that the causes of action based on the title acquired by the purchase in execution of the mortgage decree and on the title acquired by the sale in execution of the Small Cause Court decree were essentially different and that the mere fact that the two titles claimed relate one to a portion of the mouzah and the other to the whole mouzah would not render it obligatory on the present Plaintiffs to have pleaded as a defence to

THE PRESENT LAW RELATING TO THE SETTING ASIDE of execution sales can hardly be regarded as satisfactory. To have a sale set aside, the judgment-debtor has to establish not only that there was irregularity in the proceedings leading up to the sale but also substantial injury resulting directly from such irregularity, and these conditions are not satisfied by merely proving the existence of irregularities coupled with inadequacy of price. So it is not at all unusual to find a judgment-debtor who has succeeded in proving that the attachment processes and the sale proclamation were not served on him and that the property was sold for inadequate price, still without a remedy unless he can also prove fraud. The onus thus thrown on the judgment-debtor is very heavy.

COMPARING THIS WITH THE PROCEDURE FOR SETTING aside sales under the Revenue Sale Law and the Putni Regulation, it will be seen that a revenue sale may be set aside by the Commissioner on mere proof of irregularity and he may also recommend to the Board of Revenue to set aside a sale on the ground of hardship. A putni sale also may be set aside on mere proof of irregularity. The ground urged against a relaxation of the conditions for setting aside a Court sale is that if such sales are allowed to be set aside on slight grounds bidders will not come forward to bid at such sales and the judgment-debtors themselves will suffer in the long run. There is undoubtedly a great deal of force in this argument.

THE ONLY RELAXATION SO FAR INTRODUCED IS THE provision of sec. 310A which enables a judgment-debtor to set aside a sale by depositing within 30 days the amount specified in the sale proclamation together with a percentage on the purchase-money by way of compensation to the purchaser. The procedure however is of no avail in the large majority of cases where the sale has been brought about without notice to the judgment-debtor and the judgment-debtor does not come to know of the sale till long after the 30 days have expired. We would therefore suggest for the consideration of the Select Committee in charge of the Civil Procedure Bill whether it may not be possible to provide in the amending Rule No. 88, Order XXI, that a judgment-debtor may, on proof of non-service on him of the processes of attachment and sale, make the deposit within 30 days of his coming to know of the sale. What we wish to impress on the Committee is that a law which causes so much general hardship, as the existing law admittedly does, cannot be good law and should be modified.

THE LAW WORKS HARDSHIP ON THE JUDGMENT-DEBTOR in another way and this also deserves careful consideration. A sale may take place during the pendency of an appeal by the judgment-debtor. In such a case if the purchaser happens to be a third party and not the decree-holder himself the sale will not be set aside. The judgment-debtor's appeal, even if successful, may thus prove infructuous. The principle embodied in sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, may well be extended to these cases also. When a third party is a purchaser, it may not involve any serious hardship on him if he has to forego his purchase upon receiving his purchase-money with costs and interests and a percentage on the purchase-money by way of compensation.

THE PROVISIONS OF RULE 4 OF ORDER XL, IN THE Civil Procedure Bill, seem to be very hard and open to objection. This rule amongst other matters provides that for failure on the part of a Receiver to submit his accounts in proper time and in such form as the Court directs, the Court may order the Receiver to be detained in the civil prison for a term not exceeding six months unless in the meantime the Court directs his release. This provision is new. We do not see the necessity of such a rule. By Rule 3 of Order XL the Receiver is required to furnish security and according to cl. (2) of Rule 4 there is sufficient provision to make good any amount which may be found to be due from him. There is, thus, ample provision for protecting the interests of the beneficiary.

MOREOVER, THE PURPOSE OF THE RULE MAY BE equally served by authorising Courts to issue a commission to a fit person to take account from the Receiver; or, in a fit case, to impose a pecuniary penalty of a particular sum a day (or week) so long as the account is not forthcoming. The effect of such a stringent rule as the one proposed will be either that it will be a dead letter or if it is enforced too freely no respectable and competent person will be found willing to accept appointment as Receiver.

THE ONLY GROUND UPON WHICH SUCH A RULE MAY be supported is that every such default may be considered to constitute the offence of contempt of Court. Assuming that a failure to furnish accounts when asked will in many instances constitute a contempt, the penalty provided for it seems to be too severe. In the management of estates in this country it is a matter of every day experience that however anxious the Receiver may be to render the account delay is sometimes inevitable in obtaining the collection papers and other accounts from his mofussil subordinates. Any one who has experience of the mofussil knows this. The sins of the "amlahs" should not be visited on the Receiver who may be as anxious to obtain the accounts as the Court. We would therefore like to see the provision omitted.

THE CASES OF Amar Chand Kundu v. Nani Gopal Mukherjee, 12 C. W. N. 308 and Jogendra Nath Sarkar v Gobinda Chandra Dutta, 12 C. W. N. 310, reported in this number, seem to lay down conflicting rules of procedure for putting forward a claim to attached property on behalf of an Idol, when the decree appears to have been obtained against the shebait personally. The former lays down that the matter must be contested in a suit whilst in the latter the procedure indicated is an application under sec 244, C. P. C. The later of the two decisions (that at p. 310) purports to be based on the authority of the Full Bench in Punchanon v. Rabia, I. L R. 17 Cal. 711. But in a previous case, Ram Krishna v. Mohunt Padmacharan, 6 C. W. N. 663, the opinion prevailed that the Full Bench decision had no application to a case of this kind. Whilst not unmindful of the analogy which undoubtedly exists between these cases and the case of a legal representative of a judgment debtor setting up a claim to the attached property in his own rights, we think the difference is sufficiently marked to justify the view taken in the last-mentioned case. The question is one of frequent occurrence in the mofussil and the difficulties created by this conflict of decisions are seriously felt. In the case reported at p 310, the Petitioner was advised to file two petitions in the alternative, one under sec. 244 and the other under sec 278. The case of Haradhan v. Purna Chandra, 11 C. W. N. 145, is another illustration of the practical difficulties experienced on account of this uncertainty in the law. We think an early opportunity ought to be taken to remove this uncertainty by a reference to a Full Bench.

TRANSFER OF CASE FROM ONE MAGISTRATE TO ANOTHER AND DE NOVO TRIAL.

In the case of The Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghose, reported at page 140 of the current volume of our reports, their Lordships Mitra and Holmwood, JJ., held that sec. 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not cover cases of change of trying Magistrates occasioned by the transfer of a case from one Magistrate to another. Their Lordships observed, the "section, it seems to us, is capable of the interpretation that it covers all cases of change of trying Magistrates whether on account of the first trying Magistrate being transferred to another district or on account of a transfer of a case under Chap. XLIV of the Code." But having regard to some reported cases their Lordships were disposed to put a limited construction on the section.

This section no doubt lays down an exception to the general principle that judgment must be declared by the Judge who has heard the evidence, and in this view it should be strictly construed. There is a risk of miscarriage of justice when a Court which has not heard the evidence in a case and observed the demeanour of the witnesses, is called upon to pronounce judgment. But in exceptional cases the Legislature seems to have thought that the general rule may be modified when the accused consents to the modification. Now when in the midst of a case the trying Magistrate is removed by death or transfer to a different district, an exceptional case no doubt arises which inevitably necessitates the change of the trying Magistrate. To meet such a case, it might be urged, the Legislature for the purpose of saving time and expenses enacted sec 350, with the necessary provisos (vide (a) and (b) of sec. 350) to guard against any possibe prejudice to the accused. But when the Magistrate who has "heard and recorded the whole or any part of the evidence" is not removed by death or transfer to a different district, the occasions for the change of the trying Magistrate will be very few, if any at all. The only other way in which a change of trying Magistrates will arise is when the part-heard inquiry or trial will be transferred to another Magistrate by the District Magitrate or the High Court. But part-heard cases are not or should not be transferred by the District Magistrate or the High Court under Chap. XLIV, Cr. P. C., unless there are exceptionally strong grounds for the transfer. That this is the intention of the Legislature is evident from the fact that in cl. (8) of sec. 526 it is provided that the person who wants the transfer of a case should notify his intention to the Court before the commencement of the hearing. As the occasions for the transfer of part-heard cases under Chap. XLIV will be very few, it stands to reason to suppose that the Legislature did not think it necessary to enact any rule similar to that laid down in sec. 350, Cr. P. C., in respect of those case. Some support is lent to this view by the fact that sec. 350 does not cover all cases of change of Courts, for instance it has no application when there is a change of Sessions Judges in the trial of a case. Also under sec. 346, Cr. P. C., when a part-heard case is submitted by the trying Magistrate to another Magistrate, there too no doubt is a change of the trying Magistrates, but in a such case the second Magistrate who pronounces judgment has to try the case de novo. Sec. 350 does not cover such a case, vide Adapa Venkanna, 4 Mad. 327 and Kullian Singh (2 N.-W. P., 468). An argument in favour of this view may also be based upon the words "and is succeeded by another Magistrate," in sec 350, but this argument does not appear to us to be of much force.

On the other hand it may be said that the language of sec. 350 shows that its provisions covers all cases of change of trying Magistrates. The words are "ceases to exercise jurisdiction therein (i.e., in the inquiry or trial), and is succeeded by another Magistrate who has and who exercises such jurisdiction," that is to say, the succession spoken of is succession in the hearing of the case. Moreover it may be urged that whether a change of trying Magistrates takes place on account of the removal of a Magistrate or the transfer of the case from the the file of one Magistrate to another, the effect is the same, e.g., one Magistrate after hearing and recording evidence ceases to try the case it is then tried by another Magistrate. Then why should a distinction be made between a change of trying Magistrates due to the removal of the first Magistrate and the change on account of the transfer of the case from one trying Magistrate to another. As regards Sessions cases, it may be urged that as those cases involve very serious consequences, the economical considerations which prompted the Legislature in enacting sec. 350, did not, in the opinion of the Legislature, justify a departure from the general principle in Sessions cases. It may also be argued that cl. (2) of sec. 350, which enacts "nothing in this section applies to cases in which proceedings have been stayed under sec. 346," shows that sec. 350 applies to cases of transfer giving rise to a change of trying Magistrates; otherwise there would be no necessity of enacting cl. (2) whose object is to restrict the operative part of sec. 350.

The question as to whether sec. 350 covers changes of trying Magistrates on account of transfer of part-heard cases is no doubt a difficult one. But if one has to construe the section on its language it seems to us the provisions of the section include all cases of change of trying Magistrates, whether due to the removal of the first Magistrate or the transfer of a criminal case from one Magistrate to another under Chap. XLIV.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—De La Bere v. C. Arthur Pearson (Limited). Before LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, JUSTICES SIR GORELL BARNES P. and BIGHAM. 22nd November 1907.

Negligence—Damages—Crime, intervention of—Remoteness.

The Defendants had advertised offering to give advice with reference to investments. The Plaintiff accepting the offer, asked for the name of a good stock-broker. In the opinion of the Court this constituted (under the circumstances) a contract for good consideration, under which the Defendants undertook to use reasonable care in the nomination of broker though it did not amount to a warranty of the character or conduct of the broker. The Court further found that the Defendants did not make reasonable enquiries when they recommended a certain outside broker who unknown to the Defendants was an undischarged bankrupt The Plaintiff sent £800 and a further sum of £600 to the broker for investment, but the latter misappropriated it and did not invest it. In this action against the Defendants for damages, the Lord Chief Justice had awarded £1,100 as damages to the Plaintiff. On appeal, the Court upheld that judgment holding that the intervention of the crime which caused the damage did not make the damage too remote.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re Harrison and another. Before MR. JUSTICE PARKER. 21st November 1907.

Bar etiquette—Solicitor briefing counsel contrary to client's instruction—Taxation—Attorney and client.

In this case after proceedings had been commenced in the Probate Court but prior to the issue of the writ, the solicitors consulted in conference a certain King's Counsel who advised, if not adversely, at any rate with considerable hesitation as to whether the case of his clients was really a good one. The clients thereupon objected to the solicitors employing him as their Counsel at the trial and they communicated their desire to employ another eminent Counsel. The solicitors nevertheless briefed the same Counsel and paid him, being of opinion that under Resolution 20 as to Bar etiquette they were bound to brief Counsel who had advised. The taxing officer allowed the fees paid to him as between solicitor and client notwithstanding the client's objection.

On the present application to review the taxation, his Lordship observed that the rules of etiquette as between members of the profession can have no operation outside and beyond the relations inter se of members of the profession on both its branches. If the rules are enforceable at all, they are only enforceable because the members of the profession choose to govern their conduct by reference to them. If a client positively instructs his solicitor not to brief a Counsel he is not bound to brief that Counsel as between himself and his client so as to saddle his client with the liability for briefing the Counsel, merely because under the rules of etiquette which have been sanctioned by both branches of the profession the Counsel is said to be entitled to the brief. Held—That the fees ought to be disallowed and also all incidental costs of copying the documents with the particular brief, &c.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 33 OF 1908 IN THE MATTER OF BILASH CHANDRA MISTRY AND TWO OTHERS, Petitioners. 31st January 1908.

Trespass—Whether Civil or Criminal—Indian Penal Code, sec 447.

The Petitioners, Bilash Chandra Mistry and others, obtained a rule upon the District Magistrate of Backergunge to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed upon them by the Deputy Magistrate of Patuakhally under sec 447, I. P C., should not be set aside. The complaint was that the complainant had taken settlement of some land from the Court of Wards on payment of salami but on his going to take possession of it, he was driven out by the Petitioners. The Petitioners stated in their defence that the land had been settled with them by the proprietors; that they got a decree for the land in the Civil Court against the predecessor of the complainant and that the Court of Wards had realised rent from them by certificate proceedings, and that they were in possession of it. The trying Magistrate found that as the term of the Petitioners' lease had expired and the Court of Wards had taken formal possession and settled with the complainant, the Petitioners were guilty of criminal trespass.

Their Lordships held that the case was one of civil nature and not of criminal trespass.

The Petitioners were therefore not guilty under sec. 447, I. P. C. The conviction and sentence were set aside.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDIDTOIN. Before MACLEAN, C. J., and COXE, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No 497 OF 1906. KUMAR BANWARI MUKUND DEB BAHADUR, Defendant No. 2, Appellant v. BIDHU SUNDAR THAKUR AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, RANI HARI PRIYA SHAHEBA AND ANOTHER, Defendants, Respondents. 22nd January 1908.

Possession, suit for—Chakran land—Resumption—Putni—Specific performance of contract.

Under a pattah, dated 1823, the then zemindar granted to the predecessors-in-title to the Plaintiffs a putni giving them possession of a certain mouzah including the chakran lands. At the time of the putni the zemindar was the owner of the chakran lands and those lands were included and covered by the putni. The chakran lands were subsequently transferred to the zemindar who took the transfer, subject to the provisions of sec 51 of the Village Chowkidari Act (VI of 1870, B. C) The Plaintiffs brought the present suit to recover possession of those chakran lands. Plaintiffs Nos 1 to 8 were entitled to an one-third share under the putni; Plaintiff No. 9 to another third; and Defendant No. 3 to the remaining third, who let out his interest in dur-putni to Plaintiff No. 10

The Courts below decreed the suit. Defendant No 2 appealed to the High Court.

Held—This was not an action for specific performance of contract, but for possession of chakran lands included in the putni. The putni was a concluded contract and there was no agreement of which specific performance could be granted.

MOHABIR TEWARI v. PURBHOO NATH CHOWBEY.

the suit to set aside the Small Cause Court decree and sale what would have been a defence to the other suit which was brought to set aside the mortgage decree. It is contended that in interpreting the provisions of sec. 13, Expl. (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure the Madras High Court has in the case to which we have been referred rightly laid down that "the real test is whether the cause of action or transaction on which two suits are based is the same and not whether the transaction is sought to be established in different modes or by different means." Reliance was also placed on the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kameswar Prosad v. Raj Kumari Ratan Koer (2), which lays down "that where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion the construction of the word 'ought' would be important." It is pointed out that when the present Defendants instituted a suit on the 30th September 1899 to set aside the Small Cause Court decree they were fully aware that that decree covered so much of Mouzah Sujibal as was excluded from the mortgage decree which had been obtained by Bihansa Koer for 49½ bighas, and this is clear from the fact that on the 13th January 1900 they instituted the second suit to have the mortgage decree and the sale in execution of the same set aside. It has also been pointed out that in the written statement filed in the suit brought by the present Defendants to set aside the Small Cause Court decree the present Plaintiffs who were the Defendants in that suit in their written statement filed on the 18th January 1900 expressly stated the fact that 49½ bighas had been sold in satisfaction of the mortgage decree. It is idle, therefore, for the Defendants in the present suit now to allege that at the time when they instituted the suit to set aside the Small Cause Court decree they were not aware of the existence of the mortgage decree; and it is further clear from the fact that they instituted two suits that the property in respect of which the suit to set aside the Small Cause Court decree was brought did not cover the 49½ bighas included in the mortgage decree. It is, therefore, not open to them, especially after they have failed in their suit to get the mortgage decree set aside now to object to the Plaintiffs' claim on the ground that they are setting up a secret title which they ought to have put forward in defence of the suit brought to set aside the Small Cause Court decree.

In my opinion the arguments which have been advanced in support of the appeal ought to prevail. I think it is clear from the facts on the record that the present Defendants were fully aware when they brought the suit to set aside the Small Cause Court decree that there was outstanding the decree obtained on the mortgage against the 49½ bighas included in the mouzah and there seems no doubt that the scope of the suit brought to set aside the Small Cause Court decree did not extend over the 49½ bighas. The causes of action in the two suits brought one on the 30th September 1899 to set aside the Small Cause Court decree and the other brought on the 13th January 1900 to set aside the mortgage decree were in my opinion distinct and were such as could not have been joined in one suit and that being the case as the present Defendants who were the Plaintiffs in that suit would have been precluded from joining the two causes of action together in one suit by way of attack, I am of opinion that it is impossible to hold that the present Plaintiffs as Defendants in that suit were bound under the law to put forward in defence to the suit brought to set aside the Small Cause Court decree, the title which they had under the mortgage decree. To hold otherwise would be to decide that it was open to the present Plaintiffs as Defendants in that suit to bring on the record Bibansa Koer who was a third party and not included in the Small Cause Court suit and to obtain a decision with regard to a cause of action which it was not competent for the Plaintiffs in that suit to raise in support of their claim. I think that such a view is impossible and that it would certainly tend to lead to such confusion as is referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kameswar Prosad v. Raj Kumari Ratan Koer (2).

In the case of Ramaswami Aiyar v. Vithinati Aiyar (5) the law as laid down in secs. 43 and 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure is very fully discussed. After pointing out that their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Pittapur Raja v. Venkata Mahipati Surya (6) when referring to sec. 7 of Act VIII of 1859 which corresponds with sec. 43 of the present Code of Civil Procedure observed that "that section does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action or every claim which a party has, but every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action meaning the cause of action on which the suit is brought," the learned Judges of the Madras Court express their agreement with the view taken by the Judges of the same Court in the case of Allunni v. Kunjusha (7) in dealing with Expl. (2) of sec. 13 of the present Code, namely, that "it refers to the title litigated in the former suit as distinguished from the relief claimed. When several independent grounds of action are available a party is not bound to unite them all in one suit though he is bound to bring before the Court all grounds of attack available to him with reference to the title which is made the ground of action." In this view of the law I agree and I hold that it equally applies to the converse case of a Defendant when pleading in his defence.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the title which the Plaintiffs set up in the present suit was not one which they ought to have made a ground of defence in the former suit and therefore they are not precluded under the provisions of sec. 13, Expl. (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure from obtaining relief in the present suit. The subject-matters of the suit which was brought to set aside the mortgage decree and the suit which was brought to set aside the Small Cause Court decree were dissimilar and distinct and under these circumstances I think that the present Plaintiffs would not have been entitled under the law to set up as a ground of defence in the suit brought to set aside the Small Cause Court decree the title which they now seek to establish in the present suit.

I hold therefore that the view taken by the District Judge is incorrect and that his judgment and decree cannot be maintained. The conclusion at which the Court of first instance has arrived is in my opinion in accordance with law and I therefore set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—I am not satisfied that the Defendants have made out the plea which was urged It is doubtful whether the Appellants might have raised the question now debated in the previous litigation. However this may be, I do not think that they were under the circumstances of the case obliged to raise it. As to this I do not think it necessary to say more as each case must in this respect be decided with reference to its own particular circumstances. I agree therefore that the appeal should be decreed in the terms proposed by my learned brother.

When a proceeding under sec. 110, Cr. P. A case under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., can be transferred by a District Magistrate as he is competent under sec. 192, Cr. P. C., to transfer any case cognizable by a Criminal Court and his power of transfer is not restricted to criminal cases only.

When a Magistrate having no power to transfer a case under sec. 110, Cr. P. Where in consequence of a series of dacoities having taken place in certain villages, a proceeding under sec. 110, Cr. P. When a witness is called by the Court under sec. 540, Cr. P. C., his cross-examination by the parties cannot, under the law, be restricted to the points on which he has been examined by the Court.

This is a rule issued on the 17th of July 1907, calling on the District Magistrate, Purnea, to show cause why the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Arariah, dated the 12th of July 1906, which order was on appeal affirmed on 20th of April 1907 by the Sessions Judge of Hughly to whose file the appeal had been transferred by order of the High Court, should not be set aside.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

(2) I. L. R. 23 Cal. 621 (1895).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule to show cause why an order under sec 118, Cr. P. C., passed against the Petitioner, Chintamon Singh, a resident of village Matihari within the jurisdiction of the Forbesgunj Thana of the Araria Sub-Division of the District of Purnea, should not be set aside.

The order complained of is dated the 12th July 1906 and requires the Appellant to execute a bond for Rs. 500 with two sureties for Rs. 500 each, to be of good behaviour for a period of three years. The Sessions Judge has by his order, dated the 20th April 1907, affirmed the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate. We are now asked to revise these orders on the following grounds :—

(1) That the information on which Mr. Lea, the District Magistrate of Purnea, passed an order under sec. 112, Cr. P. C., does not give the necessary details ;

(2) That the enquiry having been begun by Mr. Lea, he had no jurisdiction, after the examination of 109 witnesses, to transfer the case to the file of Mr. Reid, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Araria ;

(3) That the trying Magistrate was wrong in not allowing the defence, in accordance with the provisions of sec. 256, Cr. P. C., to recall and recross-examine the prosecution witnesses ;

(4) That the Petitioner was not allowed to cross examine two Police officers, viz, Mr. Macnamara and Babu Ram Sadoy Mukherjee, who were summoned by the Appellate Court under sec. 540, Cr. P. C., on matters not referred to in their examination-in-chief ;

CHINTAMON SINGH v THE EMPEROR.

(5) That the trying Magistrate was wrong in restricting the examination-in-chief of the defence witnesses, after 46 witnesses had been examined, to 30 hours time;

(6) That the trying Magistrate was wrong in refusing to examine about 1,000 witnesses whom the Petitioner desired to cite and examine;

(7) That the evidence of repute given by the witnesses for the prosecution is not of a nature to justify the order passed, and

(8) That mere association with a number of supposed bad characters cannot justify an order under sec 118, unless the associates are themselves shown to be men of bad character and suspected of committing the dacoities the Petitioner is alleged to have instigated

Other minor points were raised in the course of argument, but they appeared to us to be of no importance.

The Petitioner is an employee of Mr. Forbes, an influential landholder of the District of Purnea, and holds the position of a sirman or rent collector on the Sultanpur Estate, which Mr. Forbes manages as executor under the Will of the late Mr. A. J. Forbes.

The proceedings against the Petitioner were initiated as follows:—A report (Ex. F/V), dated the 2nd August 1904, was made by a Police officer, Mr. Tucker, to Mr. G. H Lea, the District Magistrate of Purnea, on receipt of which the latter recorded an order under sec. 112, Cr. P. C., to the effect that he had received information from the Assistant Superintendent of Police, Araria, that the Petitioner was by habit a robber, that he habitually protected and harboured dacoits and habitually committed mischief and extortion and abetted the commission of these offences and that he was of so desperate and dangerous a character as to render his being at large without security being required of him hazardous to the community. The order accordingly directed him to show cause why he should not be called upon to execute a bond of Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 500 each for his good behaviour for a period of three years.

The hearing of the case began before the District Magistrate, who, after the examination-in chief of a number of witnesses, postponed the case, on the application of the Petitioner, who had moved this Court. for a transfer of his case from the file of that officer. A rule was issued, but it was discharged on the 28th September 1904, and the case was resumed by the District Magistrate on the 10th November. The District Magistrate after the examination-in chief of 109 prosecution witnesses and the cross-examination of one of them on the 6th February 1905, transferred the case to the file of Mr. C. H. Reid, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Araria.

It was proceeded with regularly by Mr. Reid from the 19th June 1905, till the 12th July 1906.

By the 30th September 1905, the prosecution had examined altogether 52 witnesses. The prosecution then presented a petition stating that it did not desire to examine any more witnesses in consequence of the extreme length of the cross-examination to which the witnesses already examined had been subjected. The prosecution closed its case on the 15th November 1905, Mr. Forbes, the employer and counsel of the Petitioner, objected that the Court could not put his client on his defence before he had again cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution. The Magistrate, Mr. Reid, refused to allow the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses on the ground that Mr. Forbes's application was made only for the purpose of vexation and delay and to defeat the ends of justice. Mr. Forbes then announced that he intended to apply on the following Monday for an adjournment in order to move the High Court for a transfer of the case. An application to quash the proceedings or in the alternative to transfer the case was subsequently made to this Court and refused on the 5th December 1905.

The examination-in-chief of the defence witnesses commenced on the 7th December 1905, and in the course of 68 sittings the evidence of 48 witnesses was recorded. On the 2nd February 1906, the trying Magistrate passed an order limiting the time for the examination-in-chief of further witnesses for the defence to 30 hours, i.e., to 6 or 7 days more.

The reason for this order was that Mr. Forbes for his client had put in a list of 1760 witnesses, out of which altogether 741 witnesses were examined. It may be mentioned as showing to what an extent the proceedings in this comparatively unimportant case were protracted that the District Magistrate held 9 sittings and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate 228 sittings. There were thus altogether 237 sittings. The record has swollen to most portentous dimensions. The evidence recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate alone covers 6500 foolscap pages. The case proceeded before Mr. Reid for over 14 months and a period of nearly two years elapsed from the beginning of the proceedings till the final order of the Magistrate. The appeal to the Sessions Judge lasted 17 days. Mr. Forbes not only conducted the defence in the Magistrate's Court but himself gave evidence for the defence, 5 days being occupied in recording his deposition. He appears to have so identified himself with the case of his client that it is impossible to resist the conclusion that he regarded the institution of proceedings against Chintamon Singh as a personal affront to himself and as derogatory to his prestige. This seems to us to account for the great length of these proceedings which were protracted to the extent they have been only for the purpose of preventing any final order being passed. We now proceed to discuss the points of law urged by Mr. Hill. The first is as to the want of the necessary materials in the order of the District Magistrate under sec. 112, Cr. P. C. We consider that the order of the Magistrate gives all the necessary information required by the section. This section enacts that when a Magistrate, acting under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., deems it necessary to require any person to show cause, he shall make an order in writing setting forth (1) the substance of the information received, (2) the amount of the bond to be executed, (3) the term for which it is to be in force and (4) the number, character and class of the sureties required. All the above four matters are distinctly stated in the order in question. It has been contended that no list of witnesses is to be found either in the report to the Magistrate or in the order of the Magistrate under sec. 112, Cr. P. C. The law nowhere requires that any list of witnesses should be so given.

Mr. Hill's second plea impugns the power of the District Magistrate to transfer the case. Secs. 192 and 528, Cr. P. C., deal with the powers of a District Magistrate to transfer and withdraw "any case" to and from the file of any Subordinate Magistrate. It is to be observed that the expression used in sec. 192, cl (1), Cr. P. C., is "any case," and not any "criminal case." It has been contended that sec. 192, Cr. P. C, applies only to criminal cases, as it is part of a chapter which deals with offences, and the preceding section relates to the cognizance of offences. The words are, however, quite wide enough to include cases under Chap. VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code. We may also point out that in the Code of 1872, sec. 41 which is the section corresponding to sec. 192 of the present Code, provided only for the transfer of "criminal cases." By the amending Act XI of 1874 the word "criminal" was struck out and it has been omitted from all subsequent enactments. The words "criminal case" are intended to be used in a limited sense and not to apply to every case cognizable by a Criminal Court. But when the words "criminal case" have been altered to "any case," it is clear that the Legislature intended that the power of transfer should not be restricted to criminal cases only, and extended the power of transfer to cases of every description. We, therefore, think that the District Magistrate had ample power to transfer this case to the file of Mr. Reid under sec. 192, Cr. P. C. If the objection with regard to the transfer had any force, even then it could not be regarded as vitiating the whole proceedings; as the action of the Magistrate in transferring the case could only amount to an irregularity which would be covered by the provisions of sec. 529, cl. (f), Cr. P. C. [See Akbar Ali Khan v. Domi Lal (1)].

Mr. Hill's third plea is as to the right of cross-examination under sec. 256, Cr. P. C. The claim set up by the defence for a second cross-examination of all the prosecution witnesses appears to us most unreasonable, considering the inordinately lengthy cross examination of those witnesses before that claim was made. The unreasonably protracted cross-examination of these witnesses relates to so many irrelevant matters that the inference is unavoidable that as observed by the Sessions Judge "even if Mr Forbes was not deliberately manœuvring to drive the Court to fix some time limit, he certainly deliberately omitted to call any important witness in those thirty hours." Apart from the consideration as to whether the application for a second cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was or was not for the purpose of vexation or delay or to defeat the ends of justice, we consider that sec. 256, Cr. P. C., has no application to the present case. Sec. 256 occurs in Chap. XXI of the Code, which relates to the trial of warrant cases. Sec 251 of that chapter provides that "following procedure shall be observed by the Magistrates in the trial of warrant cases" Sec. 252 relates to the evidence for the prosecution, sec. 253 to the discharge of the accused, sec. 254 to the framing of the charge, sec. 255 to the plea of the accused and sec. 256 to the defence of the accused. No doubt, under sec. 117, Cr. P. C, the enquiry into bad livelihood cases should be made as nearly as may be practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in warrant cases. But we do not think that the provisions of sec. 256, Cr. P. C., indicate that the person called upon to show cause under sec 110, Cr. P. C., has a right to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses under sec. 256, Cr. P. C, inasmuch as the provisions of this section relate to cases where a formal charge, as required by sec 251, has been drawn up and the accused has been called upon to meet that charge. In cases under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., the order of the Magistrate under sec. 112, Cr. P. C, is equivalent to a charge. The object in giving the substance of the information in an order under sec 112, Cr. P. C., is that the person called upon to show cause may clearly understand the matter that he has to meet in his defence, and a Magistrate has no power to go beyond the requirements of his order under sec. 112, Cr. P. C. In warrant cases a charge sheet is prepared for similar purposes. In the above view the cross-examination of witnesses in a proceeding under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., is tantamount to their cross-examination after charge. It cannot be contended that in the present instance the Appellant had no information as to the matters which he would be required to meet. In trials of warrant cases, it is when a charge sheet is drawn up that the accused is for the first time informed as to the offences that have appeared from the evidence against him to have been committed by him, and, hence, it is only right that the accused should in warrant cases be given an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after a charge has been framed. In summons cases the accused is informed in the summons as to the charges against him and hence the Legislature does not require the preparation of any formal charge, as in warrant cases, nor any second cross-examination. For the above reasons we think that the Petitioner had no right to any further cross-examination, especially when the prosecution witnesses had already been cross-examined to a very unreasonable length.

The Petitioner's fourth plea relates to the limits put on the cross examination of Mr Macnamara and Babu Ram Sadoy Mukherjee in the Sessions Court. These witnesses were summoned by the Appellate Court under sec. 540, Cr. P. C., as Court witnesses and as such both parties were equally entitled to a full cross-examination of these witnesses on matters relevant to the enquiry. From the record of their evidence we find that both parties were allowed to cross-examine them. In the recorded evidence of Babu Ram Sadoy Mukherjee we find the following note near the end of the cross-examination by Mr Norton for Crown: "The cross examination is to be confined to the subjects on which I examined the witnesses" There is no such note in the cross-examination of this witness by Mr. Gregory, counsel for the defence The above order of the Sessions Judge may have reference to the whole cross-examination of that witness But no such restriction appears to have been made with reference to the cross-examination of Mr. Macnamara. At all events there is no such note by the Sessions Judge, as we find in the cross-examination of the other witnesses. We have already observed that such restriction is not allowed by law. It is urged that the Appellant has been prejudiced by this restriction. But in the first place, it was the cross-examination by the counsel for the prosecution that appears to have been restricted. In the second place, the evidence of Mr. Macnamara and Babu Ram Sadoy Mukherjee relates only to the manner in which the evidence of repute was collected, and what they say cannot be treated as any evidence of bad repute. If their evidence were eliminated from the record, there would still remain abundance of evidence as to the reputed character of the Appellant

The fifth and sixth objections are as to the trying Magistrate having restricted the examination-in chief of a number of defence witnesses to a limit of 30 hours and to his not allowing the whole 1760 witnesses named for the defence to be called The demand to examine 1760 witnesses for the defence is in our opinion preposterous. But the trying Magistrate did not reject this demand, until it was obvious that an attempt was being made to protract the examination of the defence witnesses to a most unnecessary extent so as to delay, if not to prevent, the final termination of the proceedings. Under these circumstances the trying Magistrate was not unreasonable in fixing some limit of time within which the defence should close its case. We find that inspite of this apparently small limit of time for the examination of the defence witnesses, it was ample ; for we observe that seven hundred witnesses were examined-in-chief during those thirty hours (i.e, 6 or 7 days time) allowed. But it cannot be fairly said, we think, that the defence has been prejudiced by the fact that they were not able to examine all the 1760 witnesses they had summoned. It is the quality and not the quantity of evidence that goes to establish a point Under the circumstances the Petitioner has no reason to complain because he was not allowed to examine more witnesses It is also made a grievance that Mr. Forbes was called on to sum up his client's case in one hour's time. But this was after he had been arguing for 15 days.

The seventh objection is that the evidence of repute is not sufficient to justify the order. It appears that out of the witnesses examined for the prosecution the lower Appellate Court has believed the evidence of 10 witnesses who prove the association of the Petitioner with bad characters at various times, especially in most cases immediately before the occurrence of a dacoity.

There had been a series of dacoities in the month of July 1902 and in consequence of this Babu Ram Sadoy Mukherjee was deputed to the Araria Sub-Division to trace out the dacoities, as the local Police had been unable to detect them. Mr Tucker was at that time Superintendent of Police, Purnea, and he sent Babu Ram Sadoy Mukherjee, an Inspector of Police of the Detective Department, to Mr. Duff, Manager of the Sultanpur Estate, for assistance in the enquiries that Babu Ram Sadoy was going to set on foot. Mr. Duff deputed the Petitioner, Chintamon Singh, and another man, Janak Lal Missir, to give the required assistance to Babu Ram Sadoy Mukherjee The first result of these enquiries appears to have been the discovery of a gang known as the Barfi Singh gang. On the 5th February 1903, Inspector Sital Prosad drew up a first information report, naming about 150 persons as members of the above gang. The names of the Petitioner, Chintamon Singh, and of Janak Lal Misser appear among the names of the accused in the first information report. But a case was instituted against only 23, for want of sufficient evidence against the rest. During the progress of this enquiry, two other dacoities took place—one at Pathordeva and the other at Balahi. These two were immediately followed by a third dacoity at Sonapur, in which one man was killed and another very seriously wounded. In 1903 there were no less than 19 dacoities, and the present Petitioner is alleged to have been connected with them.

The Petitioner, owing to his position as sirman of a rich estate and the protege of an influential zemindar like Mr. Forbes, who is also a Barrister-at-Law, appears to have been dreaded by the villagers and they were naturally afraid to publicly denounce him as one of the instigators of those dacoities. Had it not been for the arrival of Ram Sadoy Mukherjee and his energetic enquiries, no trace would have been obtained of the dacoities. The energy with which these enquiries were conducted and the presence of European Police officers anxious to discover the dacoits evidently emboldened the villagers to open their mouths. Mr. Macnamara, apparently not blindly trusting his subordinates in the enquiry into the present case, seems to have made up his mind to hear with his own ears what Chintamon Singh's reputation was in the vicinity of Forbesgunj. Mr Macnamara was engaged for three days in making those enquiries. The common people appear to have refused to give evidence unless the headmen gave evidence also. And on the 24th July 1904, Mr. Macnamara examined the headmen of Sonapur, Mirgunj and other villages. The statements made by the villagers and headmen to Mr Macnamara disclosed the fact that Chintamon Singh was the leader of the dacoits.

By the evidence of 40 witnesses it is proved beyond all possible doubt that about the end of July 1901, Chintamon Singh had the reputation of being a leader of dacoits. This reputation prevailed amongst the people in whose villages the dacoities had taken place. Under sec. 117, cl. (iii), Cr. P C., the fact that a person is a habitual offender may be proved by evidence of general repute. In dealing with cases under Chap. VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code Magistrates ought, especially where no conviction is proved, (as in the present case), to take great care to test the evidence for the prosecution We find that the two lower Courts in their careful and elaborate judgments have concurrently found that the evidence of general repute in the present case has satisfactorily proved that Chintamon Singh is a habitual offender. In cases like the present there should appear clear evidence that the party called upon to show cause is known to have associated with criminals; to have frequently been seen near the places where thefts and other offences have been committed, and that, immediately after his being found associated with criminals, thefts, etc., have taken place. There is abundance of evidence on the record to show that the associates of the Petitioner are criminals, that he has been seen near places where dacoities took place and that immediately after or almost immediately after his meeting with his associates these dacoities occurred.

Our attention has been drawn to the case of Rai Isri Pershad v. Queen-Empress (2) and it has been contended that in accordance with this Court's rulings in that case a man's general reputation is that which he bears amongst all the townsmen in the place in which he lives and that if the state of things is that the body of his fellow townsmen who know him look upon him as a dangerous man and a man of bad habits, that is strong evidence that he is a man of bad character. In that case acts of extortion were said to have been committed in the neighbourhood of the place where Isri Prosad resided. It was therefore necessary that there should have been reliable evidence of bad repute given by the people amidst whom he lived. In the present case the evidence of general reputation comes from people of villages where the dacoities had taken place and in such a case this evidence is certainly to be treated as evidence of general repute as required by sec. 117, Cr. P. C.

It is of no avail to say that the villagers who have been examined in this case did not volunteer their evidence and that they were silent for such a length of time. In all bad livelihood cases where the accused is either himself a person of influence or is under the protection of such a person, no villager would dare to mention the name of such a man for the fear of bringing retribution down on his own head.

The Petitioner's eighth plea is that his associates have not been proved to have been bad characters themselves, or to have been suspected of being connected with the dacoities of 1903. But that is not so. It appears from the evidence that there are at least 20 associates of the Petitioner who had been convicted before the proceedings were drawn up against him. These convictions had taken place during the period of association. Some of these associates had been convicted once, some twice, some thrice and some four times. These convictions have been either under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., or for dacoity and theft. In one instance, one of his associates, named Dodlu Dosadh, was hanged and six others transported for life, two have been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment and the rest for smaller terms. A man who associates with criminals of this class can hardly be regarded as a man of good character.

It is contended that there is no evidence on the record to show that the associates of the Petitioner had ever been suspected of any of the dacoities. But this is not so, as it appears from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses Mukund Lal, Doman, Talak Chand Sahu, Achay Lal Bhagat Kusdas and others that Chintamon's associates and he himself were always suspected of being concerned in the dacoities.

We may add that the Petitioner's first two pleas relate to preliminary matters. They should have been taken before Mr Lea and Mr Reid. It appears from the judgment of Mr. Lea that he had afforded the defence before the commencement of the case facilities for putting forward any legal point Then, in his motion to the High Court on the 5th December 1905, the Petitioner had a further opportunity of pressing these objections. In his first motion to the High Court in September 1904, the first objection raised here was not urged at all. In his motion to the High Court in December 1905, these objections were urged, but this Court declined to interfere. It is futile now to set up these objections after the Petitioner failed to urge them or urged them unsuccessfully in the preliminary stages of the proceedings.

We have been asked to go into the merits of the case in detail, but the concurrent findings of facts by both the Courts below render it unnecessary for us to consider the evidence at greater length than we have done. We have heard the comments made by counsel on both sides on the evidence and we consider that the lower Appellate Court was right in excluding the evidence of some of the witnesses for the prosecution as untrustworthy and acting on the evidence of others. We in no way differ from his views on this subject.

For the above reasons we decline to interfere with the order of the Magistrate complained of in this case, and discharge the rule.

AMAR CHAND KUNDU and others, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
NANI GOPAL MUKERJEE and anr., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs 244 and 278—Personal decree against shebait—Execution against debutter property—Suit to declare property debutter, if maintainable.

A suit instituted by the shebait of an idol to have it declared that property sought to be sold in execution of a personal decree against the Plaintiff is the endowed property of the idol is maintainable.

RAM KRISHNA MAHAPATRA v. MOHANT PADMA CHARAN DEB (1) followed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 14th of November 1905, against the decree of Moulvi Abdul Barry, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Hughly, dated the 9th of August 1905, affirming the decree of Babu Sarada Prosad Bakshi, Munsif, 2nd Court of Hughly, dated the 22nd of February 1904.

It appears that in execution of a personal decree against the present Plaintiffs the disputed properties were attached.

The present Plaintiffs applied under sec. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code alleging that these properties belonged to certain family Thakurs and that they were mere shebaits of those Thakurs.

The claim of the present Plaintiffs was disallowed and the disputed properties were sold and purchased by the decree-holders.

This regular suit was thereupon instituted by the Plaintiffs for a declaration that the disputed properties were the endowed properties of the Thakurs.

The Defendants pleaded that the value of the subject-matter of the suit exceeded Rs. 1,000 and that consequently the suit was not triable by the Munsif, that the suit was bad for non-joinder and misjoinder of parties and causes of action, that a regular suit was not maintainable, that the Plaintiffs' claim was barred by estoppel, that this suit was an infringement of the rule against perpetuity, that with regard to property ka the Plaintiffs' mother was benamdar of her husband and that consequently she had no right to make an endowment of it, and generally, that the disputed properties were not debutter.

The learned Munsif overruling all these objections decreed the Plaintiffs' case.

An appeal against the decree of the Munsif was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The Defendants preferred this second appeal.

Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Aukshoy Kumar Banerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakrabutty (for Babu Monindra Nath Bhattacharjee) for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit to have it declared that certain property is the endowed property of certain idols, and cannot be sold in execution of a personal decree passed against the Plaintiffs, the shebaits of the idols. Both the lower Courts have decreed the suit. The Defendants appeal. It is urged (1) that a separate suit is not maintainable, (2) that the property is not entirely debutter and (3) that the Munsif had no jurisdiction, as the decretal amount exceeded Rs. 1,000.

These pleas in our opinion must all fail. The Plaintiffs sue as shebaits on behalf of the idols. They are as such different persons from themselves as judgment-debtors, under the decree given against them in their personal capacity. The suit is therefore not barred by sec. 244, C. P. C. The case of Ram Krishna Mahapatra v. Mahant Padma Charan Deb (1) is sufficient authority for this proposition. No ruling exactly contrary to this has been been shown us.

We have examined the terms of the arpannama. It appears to us to be a valid dedication of the property to the worship of the idols named therein.

There can be no doubt that the Munsif had jurisdiction to decide the suit. The value of the property has been held by the .Subordidate Judge to be less than Rs. 500.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 244 and 278 – Decree, personal, against shebait—Claim to attached property on behalf of idol, if may be tried in execution proceedings.

When immoveable property is attached in execution of a decree passed against a shebait personally, the latter can object to the attachment on the ground of the property being debutter and, the claim is triable under sec 244 of the Civil Procedure Code.

PUNCHANON BANDOPADHYA v. RABIA BIBI (1) followed in principle.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of July 1907, against an order of F. Roe, Esq., District Judge of Hughly, dated the 17th of April 1907, affirming the order of Babu Sripati Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Hughly, dated the 13th of February 1907.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

One Ramani Dasi instituted Suit No. 24 of 1900 for arrears of rent of a dur-putni taluk against the original dur putnidars, Purna Chandra Chakraburty and others, making the present Respondent who was her co-sharer a party pro formâ Defendant in the suit. Subsequently the Respondent, Gobinda Chandra, was made a co-Plaintiff with his consent and the present Appellants, Jogendra Nath Sirkar and others, were made Defendants on their own application in which they stated that the dur-putni had been purchased by their father Kenaram Sirkar, deceased, from the Chakraburties. A decree was passed against the present Appellants for the whole rent and a declaration was made therein that half of the rents was due to Ramani Dasi and the other half to the present Respondent. Ramani Dasi put the decree in execution in Execution-Case No 48 of 1902 and attached the dur-putni and proclaimed it for sale. But after various proceedings her dues were satisfied. Thereafter Gobinda Chandra applied for execution to recover his dues under the decree by attachment and sale of the dur-pŭtni taluk. At this stage the present Appellants took the objection that the dur-putni was acquired by their father for the benefit of the Thakur Kasinath and as the Thakur was not made a Defendant in the suit the taluk could not be seized in execution. They preferred this objection in two applications drawn up in similar terms one purporting to be made under sec. 244, C. P. C, in their capacity as judgment debtors and the other under sec. 278, C. P. C., as shebait of the Thakur.

The learned Subordinate Judge rejected both applications, the application under sec. 278, C. P. C., on the ground that the decree was a rent decree, and the application under sec. 244, C. P. C., first, because he was not satisfied that the taluk was really the property of the Thakur and, secondly, because the judgment-debtors allowed themselves to be made parties to the suit in their personal capacity and so it did not lie in their mouth to say that the dur-putni was not their property, but the property of the Jogendra Nath Sirkar v. Gobinda Chandra Dutta.

Thakur. He observed that by coming up with an objection like the present they really wanted to impugn the decree which they could not be allowed to do under sec. 244, C. P. C.

The judgment-debtors then preferred an appeal before the District Judge who observed as follows :—

'The judgment-debtors are not at liberty in their personal capacity to say that the property is debutter property. If there is any allegation to this effect, it must be made specifically by the idol who will then be responsible for costs if he fails." The learned District Judge was further of opinion that the decree was a money decree inasmuch as it gave a specific share of the rent to each co-sharer. But he thought that the question did not arise. He dismissed the appeal.

The judgment-debtors thereupon preferred this second appeal.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Krishna Prosad Sarbadhikary) for the Appellants relied on Beg Raj v. Sreemutty Kundali (2) and Punchanon v. Rabia Bibi (1), which was a Full Bench case. Ram Krishna Mohapatra v. Mohunt Padma Charan (3) and Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levvai Marakayar (4) were against him, but they were not consistent with the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakrabutty for the Respondents relied on Bhajahari Pal v. Ram Lal Das (5), Ram Krishna Mahapatra v. Mohunt Padma Charan (3), an reported judgment in Amar Chand Kundu v. Nani Gopal Mookerjee (6). Punchanon v. Rabia Bibi (1) and Beg Raj v. Sreemutty Kundali (2) are distinguishable. In the former the claim was by the judgment debtor of the attached property as his own property. In the latter case also, part of the property in dispute was claimed as the judgment-debtor's own private property. See Murigeya v. Hayat Saheb (7).' The reasons given in Ram Krishna Mahapatra v. Mohunt Padma Charan (3) are conclusive of the present case

Maclean, C. J.—It is not very easy from the terms of the judgment of the District Judge to ascertain what the appeal is about. But from the terms of the grounds of appeal and the arguments addressed to us the question appears to be whether the Appellants could properly raise the question they desired to raise, on an application under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that a decree in the suit was passed against them personally, that in execution of that decree attachment was issued, or was about to be issued against certain property. The Appellants say that property does not belong to them personally, but that it belongs to them as shebaits of an idol : that, as such, it is not liable to attachment, and they contend that this question is properly triable under sec.

244. They made two applications, one under sec. 244, the other under sec. 278. There appears to be some inconsistency, in making these two applications. Both have been dismissed. So far as the order was made under sec. 278, admittedly there is no appeal but they say that, so far as it was an application under sec. 244 there is an appeal. This is what we have to decide, and the question is whether the question could be determined under sec. 244. As the Appellants were parties to the suit, we think the case fell within sec. 244. There has been some difference of judicial opinion upon the point, but we need not go through the cases as the question seems to be concluded, in principle, by the Full Bench decision of this Court, in the case of Punchanon Bandopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (1).

I do not consider that the Appellants have lost any right quâ their application under sec. 244 because they made a mistake in applying under sec. 278.

The appeal must be allowed with costs and the case must go back to be tried out on its merits. I have assumed throughout that the Appellants are the only shebaits.

We assess the hearing fee at 3 gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs 138, 139, 584—Documents not mentioned in list filed with plaint—Discretion of Court in excluding—Certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings—Erroneous exclusion—Second appeal.

When a Plaintiff seeks to produce documents at the trial which he had failed to mention in the list annexed to the plaint the Court has clearly a discretion under sec 139 of the Civil Procedure Code whether to receive or reject them. But in exercising this discretion the Court has to bear in mind that the section was enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and not to shut out formal evidence beyond suspicion such as certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings.

This was an appeal preferred on the 9th of April 1906, against the decree of Babu Annada Prosad Bagchi, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Gya, dated the 18th of December 1905, affirming the decree of Babu D. C Mazumdar, Munsif, 1st Court of that place, dated the 19th of May 1905.

The facts of the case material to this report appear from the judgment.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Kulwant Sahay for the Appellants

Babu Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The subject-matter of the litigation out of which this appeal arises is an estate which was sold for arrears of cesses, under the Public Demands Recovery Act, on the 30th September, 1891. The Plaintiffs allege that the effect of the sale has not been to affect their interest in the property and that consequently they are entitled to recover possession from the auction purchaser. The purchaser resisted the claim mainly on the ground that the Plaintiffs had no interest whatsoever in the property. The substantial question in controversy between the parties therefore was whether the estate was the property of the judgment-debtor Sangam Lal alone or whether it was the property of a joint family of which the judgment-debtor as well as the Plaintiffs were members. The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that the Plaintiffs have failed to prove that they formed members of a joint family with the judgment-debtor at the time when the properties were acquired.

The Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and it has been contended by their learned vakil that the decision of the Courts below is vitiated by reason of improper exclusion of important documentary evidence tendered on their behalf in the Court of first instance. The suit was commenced on the 16th September 1901 and to the plaint was attached a list of documents which the Plaintiffs stated would be produced later on The first hearing of the case took place on the 8th December 1904, on which date the issues were settled and the 24th January was fixed for hearing. It was stated before this Court on behalf of both the parties when this appeal was argued, that on that date the Plaintiffs were not called upon by the Court to produce their documentary evidence. On the 22nd December following, documentary evidence was filed on behalf of the Defendants. On the 6th January 1905 the Plaintiffs put in a petition and filed along with it their documentary evidence; this petition explained the reasons for the delay. The order of the Court upon the petition was that it should be filed. The case was taken up for disposal on the 19th April 1905. The hearing proceeded and on the 27th April the Plaintiffs asked for permission to use the documents, most of which had been mentioned in the list annexed to the plaint and all of which had been filed in Court along with the petition of the 6th January 1905 The pleader for the Defendants however took objection to the reception of the documents on the ground that they had not been filed in time and that they should be excluded under sec 139 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Court of first instance gave effect to this objection. Evidence was then taken and the case disposed of on the merits. It was found, first, that upon the evidence on the record as it stood the Plaintiffs had not been able to establish that the disputed property had been acquired at a time when they formed members of a joint family with Sangam Lal, secondly, that they had failed to prove that they had any share in the estate in controversy, and, thirdly, that they had failed to prove their possession within twelve years of the suit. In this view of the matter, the suit was dismissed. The Plaintiffs then appealed to the Subordinate Judge and urged their objection that their documentary evidence ought not to have been excluded. The Subordinate Judge overruled this contention and upon the evidence on the record affirmed the conclusion of the Court of first instance that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove their title and possession

The Plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court and on their behalf it has been argued that their documentary evidence has been improperly excluded. In our opinion this contention is well-founded and ought to prevail. The documents which have been excluded may be divided into two classes. There are some which were mentioned in the list annexed to the plaint and there are others which were produced for the first time in Court on the 6th January 1905. As regards the first class of documents it is clear that there is no good ground for their exclusion. The learned vakil for the Appellants invited our attention to the provisions of secs. 59 and 63 of the Code. Sec. 59 provides that "if a Plaintiff sues upon a document in his possession or power he shall produce it in Court when the plaint is presented, and shall at the same time deliver the document or a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint. But if he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his claim, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint." Sec. 63 then lays down that "a document which ought to be produced in Court by the Plaintiff when the plaint is presented, or to be entered in the list to be added or annexed to the plaint, and which is not produced or entered accordingly, shall not without the leave of the Court, be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit." In the case before us the documents were not such as ought to have been produced in Court when the plaint was presented. It was therefore only necessary for the Plaintiffs to enter them in the list which they annexed to the plaint. This was done. At the first hearing therefore when the issues were framed, it was not obligatory on the Plaintiffs to produce them unless they were called upon to do so. This is clear from the decision of this Court in the case of Mahbub Hossein v. Patasu Kumari (1) and Gour Hurree Chowdhury v. Pranhuree Laha (2). So far therefore as the documents mentioned in the list annexed to the plaint are concerned there is no case for their exclusion. It is now stated, however, on behalf of the Respondents, that when the issues were drawn up, a note was added at the foot thereof that the parties should produce their documents. If this was communicated to the Plaintiffs, it would be their duty to file the documents mentioned in the list annexed to the plaint. Failure to do so, would not, however, necessarily lead to their exclusion, as will presently be shown.

As regards the other documents which were produced in Court for the first time on the 6th January 1905 and which had not been mentioned in the list annexed to the plaint, the Court of first instance clearly had a discretion, whether to receive or to reject them. Now under sec. 139, C. P. C., no documentary evidence in the possession or power of any party which should have been, but has not been, produced in accordance with the requirements of sec. 138 shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceeding, unless good cause be shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. No doubt the Plaintiffs have brought themselves within the scope of this section, and it was for the Court of first instance to decide whether the documents which ought to have been mentioned in the original list, or ought to have been produced earlier, were not so produced for good and sufficient reasons. At the same time, we must remember the object which the Legislature had in view in enacting sec. 139, C. P. C. It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Syed Ikram Hossien v. Ram Lochun Dutt (3) and by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in the case of Ranchhod Hirabhai v The Secretary of State (4) that sec 138 of the Code was enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents, and not to shut out formal evidence beyond suspicion such as certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings. Now on an examination of the documents which the Plaintiffs seek to produce at a late stage of this case, it turns out that by far the majority of them are copies of public documents. They are in most instances copies of judicial proceedings as to the genuineness of which there could not be any possible controversy. There is only one document which does not fall within this description. It is a kabuliyat executed on the 26th January 1889 by Bharosi Singh in favour of Sangam Lal. We have not been informed whether this document was registered. If it was a registered document, it could not be suggested that there was any prejudice to the Defendants by reason of delay in its production; it could not be said that the Plaintiffs wanted time to manufacture it. Under these circumstances we must hold that the documents which were not mentioned in the list of 6th January 1905 should also be received in evidence except this kabuliyat which may be received in evidence if it is a registered document, otherwise it will be excluded

The learned vakil for the Respondents strenuously contended that even in the view that these documents have been improperly excluded, there is no cause for a remand, because upon the facts found by both the Courts below, the claim of the Plaintiffs is obviously barred by limitation. We are unable to accede to this contention. The documents which have been excluded relate not only to the question of title but also to the question of possession and it is conceivable that if these documents had been received and acted upon the conclusion of the Courts below upon the question of limitation might have been in favour of the Plaintiffs. We must therefore hold that the Plaintiffs are entitled to have their case tried out after these documents have been received in evidence. There can be no possible question that when a Subordinate Court has refused in the erroneous exercise of its discretion to receive documentary evidence which ought to have been accepted the High Court has ample power to interfere under sec. 584, C. P. C, see Moni Lal Bandopadhya* v. Khiroda Dasi (5), Devidas Jagjivan* v. Pirjada Begam (6) and Minakshi v. Velu (7).

(7) I. L. R. 8 Mad. 373 (1885).

The result therefore is that this appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the Courts below discharged and the case remanded to the Court of first instance in order that the evidence which has been excluded may be received as directed above. The Plaintiffs will be at liberty to prove such of these documents as are required by law to be proved and the Defendants will be at liberty to adduce rebutting evidence.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

(1) I L. R. 7 Cal. 196 (1881).

SM. INDRA BIBEE v. JAIN SARDAR AHIRI.

May 1907, dismissing the Plaintiff's suit with costs.

The facts of this case appear fully from the two judgments of Chitty, J, which are as follows :—

"The Plaintiff in this case is the administratrix of the estate of her late husband, Bisseswar Das, and sues for a declaration of a charge on the estate of one Sitab Chand Ahiri, deceased. The Defendant is the administrator of the estate of Sitab Chand Ahiri and the sole beneficiary is Dhunwa Bibee, grand-daughter of the Defendant.

"The Plaintiff claims that her husband advanced moneys amounting to about Rs. 5,000 to the Defendant for purposes of the administration of the estate of Sitab Chand Ahiri, and these advances are not denied by the Defendant. It is also admitted that on the 5th August 1898 the Defendant executed in favour of Bisseswar Das a general power-of-attorney to enable him to recover the rents and profits of the properties of which the Defendant is the administrator in order to recoup himself for the advances which he had made.

"It is by virtue of this power of-attorney that the Plaintiff claims to have a charge upon the estate of Sitab Chand Ahiri. It is admitted that no leave of the Court was obtained before the power-of attorney was executed and if a charge was thereby created upon the property there was a breach of the provisions of sec. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881.

"The estate has been represented in this suit so far by the Defendant alone and under ordinary circumstances, no doubt, an administrator is fully competent to represent an estate the administration of which has been entrusted to him by the Court. There are, however, cases in which the estate cannot be said to be fully and properly represented by the administrator, and it appears to me that this is one of such cases. However strongly the administrator may argue that no charge has been created or that no charge could be created against the estate, it must always be apparent that in so doing he is arguing against the validity of his own acts.

"It is also obvious that in a case like the present one where the Plaintiff seeks to charge the estate, and the estate alone, and does not seek to fix the Defendant administrator with any personal liability, there is no real interest in the administrator to dispute the charge. On the contrary, it is rather to his interest to allow the Plaintiff to proceed against the estate than against himself. Under these circumstances it appears to me that it is highly advisable and indeed necessary that the person really interested in the estate that is to say Dhunwa Bibee should be before the Court, and should be heard before any order is passed which may be to her detriment.

"The fact that she is or may be a minor seems to me of no importance, she can be represented here if necessary by a guardian ad litem.

"Three questions arise in the case :—

'Firstly—Whether the power-of attorney did in fact create a charge.

'Secondly—Whether that charge would be valid and thirdly to what extent it ought to be enforced against the estate. I do not profess at this stage to express any opinion on these three points as I think the case ought to be argued a fresh when the beneficiary has been brought before the Court.'

"I therefore propose to order that she be added as party Defendant and be served with summons and that if she does appear the case will be reargued. The order will be made under sec. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure and it is in accordance with the provisions of sec. 437, which says that the Court may if it thinks fit, order persons insterested in the estate to be made parties to the suit.

"The question of costs of this suit up to to-day must be reserved.

"If the application is not made by the Plaintiff for the necessary summons upon her within three weeks the suit will be put down for disposal."

Later on Chitty, J., delivered the following judgment dismissing the suit.

"In this suit by my judgment, dated 19th February 1907, I directed that Dhunwa Bibi the sole beneficiary of the estate of Sitab Chand Ahiri should be made a party before I could determine whether the power-of-attorney, dated 5th August 1898, in the plaint mentioned, did in fact create a charge in favour of the Plaintiff on the said estate and, if so, to what extent. That judgment should be read as part of this judgment; Dhunwa Bibi has now been added as a party Defendant and the matter has been more fully argued before me. The only question to be decided at the present stage is whether as claimed in para. 11 of the plaint, this power-of-attorney constitutes a charge upon the estate which this Court can enforce. There is no doubt that in England powers-of-attorney of a similar character have been held to constitute an equitable mortgage, see Bennett v. Cooper (2), In re Parkinson (3) and Abbott v. Stratton (4). In India however the question is subject to different considerations. In the first place it is not so easy to draw the line of distinction between a mortgage and a charge; secondly, we are here confronted with the provisions of the Stamp and Registration Acts which have to be strictly observed. Now in this case it is not suggested that there was any other contract between Jain Sardar Ahiri and Bisseswar Lal Pagulia than that contained in this power-of-attorney. If a charge was created it was created by that document alone. I will assume for the moment that that document did not amount to a mortgage as defined by sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, but merely operated to create a charge in favour of Bisseswar Lal Pagulia. It would nevertheless come within the definition of a mortgage deed as given in the Stamp Act (I of 1879) (the Act governing this case), and would therefore require a stamp of Rs. 50. It would also require registration under sec. 17 of the Registration Act, as purporting or operating to create, declare or assign a right, title or interest in immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100. The document was no doubt stamped and registered in Book IV as a power-of-attorney but it was neither sufficiently stamped nor was it registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act as a document affecting immoveable property. It did not contain a description of the property said to be affected sufficient to identify the same; (sec. 21) nor was it entered in Book I (sec. 51). Having regard to these facts I can only conclude either that the parties did not intend that the document should operate as a charge, or that, so intending, they did not take the proper and necessary steps to give effect to that intention. The provisions of the Registration Act are imperative and the intention of the Legislature must have been that no document not properly registered should directly or indirectly operate to create an interest in immoveable property. Sec. 49 prohibits the receipt of such a document as evidence of any transaction affecting the property [see Bengal Banking Corporation v. Macketich (5)]. For these reasons I am of opinion that this power-of-attorney cannot be received as evidence of the charge, and as no other evidence is admissible the Plaintiff's suit must fail. It is therefore unnecessary for me to go further into the case.

"The suit is dismissed with costs on scale 2 including reserved costs.'

The power-of attorney which the Plaintiff contended operated to create a charge was in these terms :—

"Know all men by these presents that I Jain Sirdar Ahiri son of Lochmun Sirdar Ahiri, deceased, in the District of Gya, but at present residing at No. 54 Brajo Bandu Doctor's Lane, in the town of Calcutta, the administrator to the property and credits of Sitab Chand Ahiri, deceased, in order to enable Bisseswar Das Pagulia hereinafter named to recoup himself of the several sums of money which he has obtained for the maintenance and residence suitable to the position of Dhunwa Bibee the infant daughter of the said deceased and for the obtaining of Letters of Administration whereby I have become such administrator as aforesaid and for the costs of the suit instituted by Rohshun Lal Khettry against me and others being Suit No. 69 of 1898 in the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta Original Side do hereby constitute and appoint Bisseswar Das Pagulia, son of Buktwar Chand Pagulia, residing at No. 26 Ram Prosad Saha's Lane Sindurlaputty in the town of Calcutta aforesaid, my true and lawful attorney for the purposes hereinafter expressed that is to say, to receive the rents and profits of and manage all the messuages lands hereditaments and tenements of or to which I as such administrator as aforesad now am or at any time or times hereafter shall or may become seized possessed or entitled with liberty in the course of such management to let or demise the said premises or any part thereof either from year to year or for any term or number of years not exceeding five years or for any less period than a year at such rents and either with or without any fine or premium and subject to such covenants and conditions as my said attorney shall think fit and with liberty to make allowances to and arrangements with lessees tenants and others to repair and rebuild houses or other buildings to repair fences drain or otherwise the said premises or any part thereof to appoint and employ agents servants and others to assist in the management of the said premises and to remove them and appoint others in their

IN THE CASE OF Thaman Bandi v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram reported at I. L. R. 29 All. p. 593, a Divisional Bench of the Allahabad High Court (Aikman and Griffin, JJ.,) held that possession acquired during the continuance of a lease will not ordinarily be adverse possession as against the lessor until at any rate such time as the lessor becomes entitled to possession. In this case the Plaintiff granted a lease for a term of years to a certain person and during the continuance of the lease the Defendants got possession of some plots of the demised land and continued to be in adverse possession for the statutory period. The Plaintiff some two years before the expiry of the lease brought a suit to eject the Defendant from the plots. The Court of first instance found that the Defendants established a right by adverse possession and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit but the High Court of Allahabad agreeing with the Subordinate Judge decreed the Plaintiff's suit holding that the possession of the Defendants during the continuance of the lease was not adverse to the Plaintiff, the lessor. The reasons given are "it would be unjust to hold that a lessor, who was regularly in receipt of the rent reserved by the lease for a long term of years, who therefore had nothing to put him on enquiry, might find at the expiration of the term of his lease that a considerable portion, it may be, of his property has passed out of his hands by a trespasser taking possession of it without his knowledge."

IT MIGHT BE SAID THAT BY THE ACT OF THE TRESPASSER only the lessee was dispossessed but so long as the lessor continued to receive his rent from the lessee, there was no dispossession as against the lessor. The view of law taken by their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court is no doubt in accordance with the view of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sharat Sundari Debia v. Bhobo Pershad Khan Chowdhuri, I. L. R. 13 Cal. 101, Krishna Govinda Dhur v. Hari Charan Dhur, I. L. R. 9 Cal. 367 and the recent case of Kishwar Nath Sahai Deo v. Kali Sankar Sahai, 10 C. W. N. 343.

WE HAVE NOTHING TO SAY AGAINST THIS DECISION of the Allahabad Bench. But in the concluding portion of the judgment their Lordships (Aikman and Griffin, JJ.) of the Allahabad High Court expressed a doubt as to the correctness of the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Gobinda Nath Shaha v. Surja Kantha, I. L. R. 26 Cal. 460, in these words, "we are quite unable to appreciate the reasoning of the learned Judges who decided the latest case in the Calcutta High Court namely Gobinda Nath Shaha v. Surja Kantha." Now the case of Gobinda Nath Shaha v. Surja Kantha was a case of relinquishment of a putni and dar-putni interest by the lessees and the question which was decided in that case was that the title by adverse possession acquired by a trespasser against the putnidar and dar-putnidar would be operative as against the zemindar who got khas possession by the relinquishment of the putni and dar-putni. The zemindar was not bound to accept the relinquishment when he found that his lessee had lost title to some of the lands by the adverse possession of others. Indeed in this case it might be said that the zemindar derived his right to sue from or through the relinquishing putnidar and dar putnidar.

IF THE RELINQUISHMENT HAD NOT TAKEN PLACE THE zemindar would have no right to sue the trespassers, because so long as the putni tenure subsisted his rights were not affected in the least. If the putni came to an end on account of a sale under the Putni Regulation or some other law, the zemindar would have been able to oust the trespassers on the ground that their adverse possessions were incumbrances. The Calcutta High Court would have come to a quite different conclusion if the putni had not come to an end by a relinquishment which is nothing but a contract between the putnidar and the zemindar to put an end to the putni. At page 164 I. L. R. 26 Cal., their Lordships observe, "it cannot be said that the zemindar became entitled to khas possession by reason of the putni having come to an end otherwise than by the voluntary act of the putnidar. Again on the same page, "in the present case the Plaintiffs became entitled to khas possession by the relinquishment of the putnidar and dar-putnidars, and so they must be held to be affected by adverse possession that was taken against the putnidars and dar-putnidars, whose rights they had acquired through their voluntary relinquishment."

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Ogden v. Ogden. Before LORDS JUSTICES COZENS-HARDY M. R., SIR GORELL BARNES P. and KENNEDY, 18th November 1907.

Marriage of English woman with foreigner—Incapacity according to law of domicile—Lex loci contractus governs.

The Respondent, then Miss Williams, an English woman and aged 25, in 1899, went through the ceremony of marriage with a Frenchman, Leon Phillip, aged 19 who had come over to England temporarily. The marriage took place without the knowledge of the father of either party. After the marriage the parties co-habited in England for a short time and the Respondent became pregnant and a child was born. The father of Leon Philip coming to know subsequently of this marriage took away his son to France and in July 1899 instituted proceedings in the French Courts for a decree of nullity on the ground that his son was under age (25) at the time of marriage and the consent of the parents had not been given. The French Courts declared the marriage to be invalid. Later on Leon Phillip having married in France, the Respondent brought an action against him for divorce and her Counsel at the hearing before Sir Francis Jeune asked for a decree of divorce or an order that the French decree was a valid and effective decree. That learned Judge refused to make a decree of divorce on the ground of jurisdiction because the Petitioner came before him as the wife of a domiciled Frenchman and therefore as a domiciled Frenchwoman. The other prayer also he refused as no decree for nullity was asked for but he was only asked to say that the French decree was operative. "I am not going to disturb that decree, but you do not ask me to deal with it upon the point of English law." In October 1904, she married Mr. Ogden in Lancashire according to English rites and she lived with him for some time and had a child by him. Mr Ogden having subsequently ascertained the true facts of the case brought this suit to have it declared that his marriage with the Respondent was bad on the ground that she was according to English law still the lawful wife of Leon Philip.

MR. JUSTICE BARGRAVE DEANE gave judgment in favour of Mr. Ogden, holding that the lex loci contractus must prevail over the lex domicilii and the English law must prevail.

In this appeal by the Respondent SIR GORELL BARNES delivered the Court's judgment, dismissing the appeal. The lex loci contractus applied and the decision of the French Court was not binding on Courts in England.

Sir Edward Clarke, K. C., and Mr. Bayford for the Respondent.

Mr. Middleton for Mr. Ogden.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Curtice v. London City & Midland Bank. Before LORDS JUSTICES COZENS-HARDY, M. R., FLETCHER MOULTON and FARWELL. 11th December 1907.

Cheque—Countermand by telegram—Negligence.

A cheque was drawn by the Plaintiff upon the Bank to a third person. On the same day after banking hours a telegram was sent by the Plaintiff to the bank countermanding payment of the cheque. It was found that the telegram reached the Bank's office on 31st October after the Bank was closed and was put into the Bank letter box, but that it did not come into the hands of the Bank officials until morning of November 2nd under circumstances which seemed to show negligence on the part of the Bank. There was a difference of opinion in the Divisional Court (Darling and Lawrence, JJ.). On appeal Lawrence J.'s opinion prevailed. The Master of the Rolls observed that "a telegram may reasonably and in the ordinary course of business be acted upon by the Bank, at least to the extent of postponing the honouring of the cheque until further enquiry can be made." But he was not satisfied that the Bank would be bound as matter of law to accept an unauthenticated telegram as sufficient authority for the serious step of refusing to pay a cheque. "Countermand is really a question of fact." It means much more than a change of purpose on the part of the customer. "There was no such thing as a constructive countermand in a commercial transaction of this kind."

COURT OF APPEAL.—Williams v. Midland Ry Co. Before the EARL OF HALSBURY, SIR GORELL BARNES, P. and BIGHAM, J. 9th December 1907.

Contract with railway company—Special rate for special risk—Reasonableness.

A dog consigned by the Plaintiff for carriage by the Defendant Company was lost owing to the negligence of the company. The value of the dog was agreed to be £300. But the Plaintiff had signed a special contract by which the Defendant was not to be responsible for "dogs, deers or goats beyond £2 each unless a higher value was declared at the time of delivery to the company and a percentage of 1½ p. c. (minimum 3*l.*) paid upon the excess value declared." No declaration of value and no excess payment had been made, the Plaintiff having paid the ordinary rate for any distance, namely 4*s* The question was, was the contract just and reasonable within sec. 7 of the Railway Coy.'s Traffic Act 1851.

On this appeal, by the Defendant against whom judgment had been entered in the first instance by Walton, J., the Court of Appeal held that the evidence showed that the contract was reasonable. LORD HALSBURY observed : "No doubt the question whether a rule was reasonable or not was a difficult question as it was based upon opinion and opinion on such a question might well vary from time to time. But he could not himself see why it should be said that the rate here was unreasonable."

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., Mr. B. Francis Williams, K. C., Mr. J. D. Crawford and Mr. W. O. Hodges for the Defendant.

Mr. S. T. Evans, K. C., and Mr. Rhys Williams for the Plaintiff.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION Before CASPERSZ and COXE, JJ CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 13 OF 1908. KASHI NATH KAIBARTA DAS AND ANOTHER, Appellants v. THE EMPEROR. 25th January 1908.

Indian Penal Code, sec. 201—Applicability of.

The Appellants were charged with murdering one Ram Kumar Dam and also with causing the disappearance of his corpse with the intention of screening the murderers from punishment. There were also minor charges. The jury acquitted the Appellants of the offence of murder and of the minor offences, but they convicted them under sec. 201, I. P C, and the Judge passed sentence of 2 years' rigorous imprisonment on each Appellant. This appeal was preferred by the prisoners from jail and was disposed of in Chambers.

Their Lordships observed :--

"We are of opinion that the verdict cannot be upheld and that the conviction and sentence must be set aside. The Judge overlooked the wording of sec. 201 and the case of Taiap Ali v. Queen Empress, I L R. 22 Cal 638 in which the law was explained and the authorities were considered As in that case, the evidence here is to the effect that the murder was committed by the accused themselves and not by other persons We find no suggestion that Ram Kumar Dam was murdered by persons other than the Appellants or their accomplices In these circumstances, having regard to the case of Taiap Ali, we think that the conviction of the Appellant cannot be sustained.

We have considered whether there should be a retrial, but after examining the evidence, we are of opinion that no jury could convict the Appellants of murder or any other offence. The corpse of the deceased being decomposed the medical officer could not form an opinion as to the cause of death The eye-witnesses prove very little beyond the fact that the dead body was removed"

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION Before STEPHEN and DASS, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 748 OF 1906 MOHARAJADHIRAJ BIJOY CHAND MOHATAP BAHADUR, Plaintiff, Appellant v. ISHAN CHANDRA MAITI, Defendant, Respondent. 24th January 1908.

Mesne profits—Collection charges—Wrong-doer—Deduction—Onus of proof.

The Plaintiff was the auction-purchaser of the [illegible]fendant's putni tenure in land held under him as [illegible] He was in possession of the putni tenure [illegible]ction sale for the year 1309. A suit [illegible] set aside the sale which was set aside on a compromise. The Plaintiff then sued for rent from 1309 to 1311. The Defendant set up his right to deduct from that claim as mesne-profits, the rent collected in his tenure in respect of 1309. That claim was not disputed but the Plaintiff replied that he was entitled to deduct from that rent the charges of his collection. This claim was disallowed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the Plaintiff was a wrong-doer in acting on his rights under the auction purchase.

Held—That the right to deduct collection charges from mesne-profits is an ordinary incident of the law and the Plaintiff, could not be held to be a wrong-doer in such a way as to deprive him of this right when he was the purchaser in an auction sale.

It is for the Defendant to show that the ordinary law allowing the Plaintiff to deduct collection charges from mesne-profits which he had to pay was abrogated by the terms of the solenama.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 557 OF 1906 JAMINI KANT SEN AND ANOTHER, Appellants v ALI AHMED MIA AND OTHERS, Respondents. 27th January 1908

Limitation—Execution of Decree—Step in aid of execution—Benefit derived from other decree-holder's execution.

The question in the appeal was: "Was the decree in execution barred between the years 1897 and 1903?". The decree was passed on the 27th August 1891. The first application for execution was made early in 1897; the second application was made on the 27th December 1897; but the application was struck off on the 19th March 1898 During the pendency of the proceeding, an order was issued for attachment of a decree pending in another Court, i.e. at S. Nothing, however, was done by the decree-holders from the 19th March 1898 until the 11th September 1903, when they made their third application for execution.

Another decree-holder J executed the decree in the Court of S and he realized the full amount of the decree in 1901. During the whole of that interval, the present decree-holders did not present any application to the Court of S or take any steps to realise any portions of the money covered by the decree.

Held—That the decree-holders could not take advantage of the steps taken by another decree-holder, though they might have got some benefit by the execution of the decree.

embankment in question was 250 feet long and 2½ feet high. The trying Magistrate has found that there was an old embankment there before and that the Petitioners have merely added to or repaired this bundh by throwing earth on it and that the Sub-overseers and peons both saw them do this. In these circumstances we think that the Petitioners have committed an offence within the meaning of sec. 76 of Act II of 1882 (B. C.) because that section prohibits not only the construction of new bundhs but adding to old bundhs so as to obstruct the flow of water. And this was done in a prohibited area which was to be left unoccupied for spill purposes. It stands to reason that if persons construct a bundh in a prohibited area they must interfere with and obstruct the flow of the water.

It is unnecessary, therefore, for us to interfere and we discharge this rule.

Their Lordships upheld the concurrent finding of both the lower Courts that under the mortgage deed in this case the mortgagee was entitled to get from the mortgagor over and above the usufruct of the mortgaged property the amount paid by him on account of maintenance and enhanced Government revenue.

terms of this document, without raising any objection of law such as limitation, etc., I, the mortgagor, shall have power to redeem the mortgaged property," their Lordships agreed with the lower Courts that the mortgagee was entitled against the mortgagor to arrears of rent due from tenants even when such arrears were statute barred as against the tenants.

The mortgagee had previously brought a suit against the mortgagor alleging that at the date of the suit there was due to him a sum of Rs. 33,087-13-3½ and praying for a decree for possession of the property or in the alternative for recovery of that sum with further interest. A Commissioner appointed to make up the accounts reported that Rs. 33,087-9-8½ were due to the mortgagee at the date of the suit. The Court in giving judgment held that there was no necessity for passing an order as to the amount due under the mortgage beyond saying that the account was correct and then proceeded to give the mortgagee a decree for possession. The amount alleged to be due by the mortgagee and found due by the Commissioner was arrived at by calculating compound interest on unpaid instalments of interest. It was contended by the mortgagee in a subsequent suit brought against him by the mortgagor for redemption of the mortgaged property that the decree in the previous suit must be accepted as settling the amount due to the mortgagee on the date of that suit,

Held by their Lordships, who adopted the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court, that nothing had occurred in the previous suit to raise an estoppel against the mortgagor and therefore he might in the subsequent suit show if he could that under the terms of the deed compound interest was not payable.

The mortgagee was not entitled to recover the costs of the previous suit in the absence of any provision in that behalf in the mortgage deed.

A point not taken by a party before either of the lower Courts was not open to it at the time of the hearing of the appeal before their Lordships.

Consolidated appeals from two decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 27th July of 1904, which varied a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki, dated the 29th November of 1902.

The principal question involved in the case was the settlement of the terms on which the above named Muhammad Naseem, hereinafter called the Appellant, was entitled to redeem a mortgage dated 30th September 1885. The said mortgage was executed by Chaudri Imdad Ashroff in favour of the above named Mirza Muhammad Abbas Ali Khan, hereinafter called the Respondent. The property mortgaged was the whole village of Ilyaspur, an 8 anna share in the villages of Husainabad, Patti Yakub and Karmenan, and a 6 annas share in the village of Olhepur. The term of the mortgage was for 10 years, the amount of the mortgage money was Rs. 29,000 and the rate of interest payable was Rs 0-13-4 per mensem, i.e., 10 per centum per annum. The material clauses of the mortgage deed were the following.

"II. The gross rental of the entire village and the shares in the villages that are mortgaged amount to Rs. 6,003-8-6 according to the (zemindari) assesment (taradud) of 1293 fasli, and after deducting Government revenue and other expenses the net profits of the said villages and shares amount to Rs. 3,640-5-6.

"III. As the said mortgagee has entered into this mortgage transaction on the faith of the statements made by me, the mortgagor, without himself making any enquiry into the rental, &c., of the mortgaged villages and shares, he shall have the right to realize before the expiry of the term of the mortgage, by aid of the Court, the entire amount of principal with interest from me (personally) as well as from the mortgaged property and every other moveable and immoveable property of any kind belonging to me, together with costs and future interest at the rate stipulated for in this deed, if on enquiry by the mortgagee, made now or in future, the rental, expenses and profits stated by me, be found to be deficient, or in excess, (i.e., the rental and profits be deficient and the expenses in excess).

"IV. That without making any excuse based on earthly and heavenly calamities, or of drought, or hail-storm, &c., the mortgagor shall pay the interest every year at the rate of 13 annas 4 pies per centum per mensem amounting to Rs. 2,900 per annum, by two equal instalments payable every 6 months to the mortgagee at Lucknow, till the redemption of the mortgage. In case of default in payment by me of the instalment of interest at the time herein appointed, the mortgagee shall have, immediately on such default, power either to recover the whole of the principal interest, and sud mazid munafa mazkura further interest on the said interest according to the rate herein fixed, by aid of the Courts from myself as well as from the mortgaged property and from my other properties of every description, moveable and immoveable, together with costs of the suit, future interest at the fixed rate of 13 annas 4 pies as provided for in this document, and interest accruing due during the pendency of the suit till liquidation of the whole demand in the Execution Department at the aforesaid rate, without waiting for the expiration of the term of 10 years, provided for in this document, to which I and my representatives shall have no objection; or the said mortgagee shall in default of payment of the instalment or instalments of interest aforesaid take possession of the mortgaged property.

"V That in the case of taking possession of the mortgaged property the mortgagee aforesaid shall have power immediately to have his name recorded in the revenue papers in place of mine by mutation proceedings, costs of the proceedings being payable by me.

"VI. That after coming in possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee shall have power as my representative in interest, to manage the property, to collect all the income of the village and shares mortgaged, viz., rent mal, sewai, and zemindari dues, to eject tenants, to enhance and reduce rents, to make wells, to build houses of tenants, to advance takavi, to let the mortgaged property on thika, and to dismiss and appoint Patwaris and Chowkidars.

"VII. That while in possession of the mortgaged property the mortgagee aforesaid, shall after payment of Government Revenue and other amounts assessed by the Government which may hereafter be assessed or fixed by the Government, as well as the village expenses, pay off the establishment kept for making collections in the mortgaged property, costs of litigations, expenses incurred in settling tenants, building their houses and making wells and takavi advances, etc., appropriate the balance towards the interest of the mortgage money, irrespective of the fact that such balance exceeds the amount of interest due at the rate aforesaid, but if the said balance fall short of interest at the rate fixed by this deed, I shall be liable for the deficiency.

"VIII. That the zemindari dues which the said mortgagee realizes as my representative while in possession of the mortgaged property shall be disregarded in ascertaining the amount of interest received by the mortgagee and the declarant shall not call upon him to account for the same.

"IX. That if during the time that the mortgagee is in possession the income of the mortgaged property is reduced or lost (entirely) owing to droughts, hail storms, new settlements, or other accidents, or if the mortgagee has to pay the Government revenue, etc., from his own pockect, or if any rights or interests in the mortgaged property are attached and proclaimed for sale in execution of any decree, or if the whole, or any part of the mortgaged property passes out of my ownership on the claim of any person under the orders of the Government, then in all such cases the mortgagee shall have the right to recover the principal and interest together with other expenses specified in this deed from me personally and from the mortgaged property, as well as from my other properties of any description. I and my representatives shall have no objection to pay the same.

"X. That whenever after the term of mortgage, or during the said term I pay to the mortgagee in any khali fasl (fallow season) i.e, the month of Jeth, the whole of the mortgage money and the whole of the interest together with Government revenue, arrears of rent, and takavi advances due from the tenants, and other expenses incurred under the terms of this document, without raising any objection of law such as limitation, etc., I, the mortgagor shall have power to redeem the mortgaged property.

"XI. That I shall have power to pay the principal mortgage money within the term of the mortgage by instalments provided the amount of such instalment is not less than 1,000 rupees, and interest on the instalments paid shall be credited to me in the account.

"XII. That during the continuance of the mortgage and after the redemption of the mortgaged property, I, and my representatives shall have no claim to any income, profits or damages of any description against the mortgagee or his representatives."

On 4th November 1886 the mortgagor paid Rs. 2,699-8 on account of principal, and from 4th April 1886 to 29th May 1892 he paid various sums amounting to Rs. 13,461 on account of interest.

On 15th September 1892 the mortgagee sued the mortgagor, who had failed to pay the instalment of interest in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed, for possession of the mortgaged property. On 18th September 1893, his claim was decreed with costs amounting to Rs. 1,765-2 by the District judge of Fyzabad and on 27th January 1894 the mortgagee obtained possession of the mortgaged property. The following were the issues fixed in that suit:—

"(1) Is the account filed by the Plaintiff correct?

"(2) If not what sum is due to Plaintiff, or rather what sum is due to Plaintiff under mortgage deed."

The judgment of the District Judge of Fyzabed ran as follows:—

"Claim for possession of the property mortgaged, specified in the margin, entire village Ilyaspur and half of the shares in villages Husainabad, Patti Yakub, Karmeman, and of 6 annas share in village Olhepur, Pargana and Tahsil Haidergarh, district Bara Banki, or for Rs. 33,088-13-3½ principal Rs. 26,300-8 and interest Rs. 6,788-5-3½ on a bond, dated 30th September 1885.

"As to the issues fixed, the Defendant agreed to accept the oath of Har Parshad. Har Parshad has taken the oath adversely to the Defendant, so the accounts as filed by Plaintiff (i.e., as corrected by the Commissioner) must be regarded as accurate.

"As Plaintiff sues for possession, I give a decree for possession of the mortgaged property as claimed. There is no necessity for passing any order as to the amount due under the mortgage to Plaintiff, beyond saying that the account filed by Plaintiff after the correction reported by the Commissioner is correct.

"Decree for possession of property in suit in favour of Plaintiff with costs."

On 11th June 1894 the same District Judge dismissed with costs amounting to Rs. 201-6 an application for review of judgment which had been filed by the mortgagor.

The mortgagor on 21st December 1899 sold the village of Ilyaspur to the Appellant, who on 5th June 1900 tendered a sum of Rs. 37,000 to the mortgagee in redemption of the mortgage. The tender was refused. On 12th June 1900, the mortgagor and the Appellant instituted against the Respondent the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki for redemption on judgment of Rs. 27,289-1 5 in accordance with accounts annexed to the plaint. In defence the Respondent filed a written statement. He did not deny the right to redeem, but claimed that he was entitled to receive on redemption over Rs. 50,000. The points in dispute are sufficiently indicated by the issues, which were as follows:—

(1) Has the amount due to the Defendant been settled in a former suit, in Mirza Muhammad Abbas Ali Khan v. Chaudri Imdad Ashraf.

(2) If so, is the matter res judicata?

(3) Is the Defendant entitled to (a) interest and (b) compound interest on the amount due to him on the date he obtained possession?

(4) If so, at what rate?

(5) Has Defendant cut down any trees, and if so, of what value?

(6) Is the Defendant liable to be debited with such value?

(7) Are there any, and what arrears of rent due from tenant? and is Defendant entitled to the same?

(8) Is Defendant entitled to get from Plaintiff over and above the usufruct of the mortgaged property, the amount paid by him on account of guzara and enhanced Government rental?

(9) What amount is Defendant entitled to get before Plaintiff can obtain redemption?

(10) Did Plaintiff tender Rs. 37,000 to the Defendant on the 5th June 1900, and was the tender proper and sufficient to pay off the mortgage?

(11) If so, what is the effect of Defendants' refusal to receive the amount?

On 29th November 1902, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. He decided the 1st and 2nd issues in favour of the Plaintiffs. On the 3rd and 4th issues he decided that on the true construction of cl. 4 of the mortgaged deed compound interest was payable at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. On the 5th and 6th issues, he allowed the mortgagor a sum of Rs. 100. On the 7th he held that Rs. 225-3-3 should be allowed to the mortgagee for arrears of rent. He decided the 8th issue in favour of the mortgagee in the following terms.

"The guzara item the Plaintiffs have already allowed in their abstract of accounts annexed to their plaint. This matter is not under controversy and as to the question of Government Revenue at the enhanced rate, think the Defendant is entitled to charge it on the Plaintiffs. cl. 4 of the mortgage deed supports his demand and I answer this issue in the affirmative."

On the 9th issue he allowed the mortgagor credit for rent on plots of land cultivated by the mortgagee. He decided the 10th and 11th issues in favour of the Plaintiffs. By his decree he ordered an account to be taken on the basis of the above findings and decreed redemption on payment of the amount determined by the account.

Both parties, thereupon, appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which Court heard the two appeals together and delivered judgment on 22nd February 1904. It held that on the true construction of the mortgage deed compound interest was not payable in the event of the mortgagee taking possession of the mortgaged property, for the following reasons:—

"It was contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs that the expression sud mazid munafa mazkura ka, in cl. 4 does not mean compound interest at all. I cannot accept this contention. The word munafa is used in the deed as a euphemism for interest and the literal translation of these words is. 'Further interest of (or on) the interest.' It appears to me quite clear that if the mortgagee had not taken possession under the last part of cl. 4, he would have been entitled to claim compound interest, but this clause gives the mortgagee two alternatives, he he may either sue for principal, interest, and compound interest and costs, etc. or take possession of the property, but he cannot do both. Upon taking possession the rights of the mortgagor and himself are regulated by cls. (5) to (10) and as nothing is said about compound interest in any of these clauses, the mortgagee cannot claim compound interest in case the net profits fall short of the interest. The provision in cl. 7 that the mortgagee may take the balance or net profit in lieu of interest seems to mean that he may take in lieu of simple interest on the amount of the principal for the time being remaining unpaid, and not as contended by the mortgagee interest upon the principal and interest due at the time when the mortgagee took possession. The effect of cls. 7 and 10 taken together is that upon redemption in case the net profits have been less than the simple interest payable under the deed, an account must be taken of these profits for the period during which the mortgagee was in possession, but in case the net profits have been equal to or greater than the simple interest then no account need be taken of them for the period. In both cases the mortgagor must upon redemption pay to the mortgagee the amount due from the tenants on account of rent or advances, the amount of any additional revenue imposed by Government on a re-settlement of the land, and any sums decreed against the property and paid by the mortgagee The Subordinate Judge held that compound interest was payable up to the date on which the mortgagee took possession, because he did not see why the stipulation for compound interest should apply only if the mortgagee sued for his money and not if he took possession. But the answer to this view is that the mortgagee is clearly given a choice of two remedies and having elected to take possession he cannot claim the benefits of the other alternative. The terms of the contract so construed may seem rather strange, but the contract must be interpreted as it is and not according to any notion of what would have been a reasonable arrangement. The deed as it stands provides for compound interest only in the case of a suit brought by the mortgagee on the occurence of a default in payment of interest.

"Mr. Jackson on behalf of the mortgagee admitted that according to the construction of the deed, which I have adopted, the interest due to the mortgagee while in possession has been recovered out of the profits and he said that an account should not be taken for that period."

The Court of Judicial Commissioner upheld the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the first and second issues relating to res judicata for the following reasons:—

"On 15th September 1892, the mortgagee brought a suit against the mortgagor alleging that there was then due to him a sum of Rs. 33,087-13-3½ and praying for a decree for possession of the property or in the alternative for recovery of that sum with further interest. A Commissioner appointed to make up the accounts reported that Rs 33,087-9-3½ were due to the mortgagees at the date of the suit. The Court in giving judgment held that there was no necessity for passing any order as to the amount due under the mortgage beyond saying that the account was correct and then proceeded to give the mortgagee a decree for possession. The amount alleged to be due by the mortgagee and found due by the Commissioner was arrived at by calculating compound interest on unpaid instalments of interest. It is contended by the mortgagee in the present suit that the decree in the previous suit must be accepted as settling the amount due to the mortgagee on 15th September 1892. It has often been held that when a mortgagee sues for possession as a mortgagee, the Court should not determine the amount then due, but should leave the accounts to be settled when the mortgagee sues for sale or foreclosure or the mortgagor sues for redemption. It appears to me quite clear that the Court did not in the suit brought by the mortgagee decide the question of the amount due to the mortgagee. It expressly refrained from doing so. It may be that the mortgagor did not in that suit dispute the right of the mortgagee to compound interest, but nothing has occurred to raise an estoppel against him and therefore he may now show if he can that under the terms of the deed compound interest is not payable."

The finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the value of the trees was accepted, and it was not disputed that rent for land cultivated by the mortgagee was properly allowed. The motgagee was also allowed credit for the amount paid by him for maintenance, for enhanced Government revenue and for mutation of names, and also for costs of the previous suit. An order was made remanding the case to the Court of the Subordinate Judge to report. "What amount was due to the mortgagee on the date of the tender, and if the amount tendered was insufficient, what amount would be due to the mortgagee on the 15th June 1904 and if the amount tendered was sufficient, and the Plaintiffs so desired, what amount was due to the mortgagee after debiting him with the gross profits for the period subsequent to the tender." On 7th April 1904 the Subordinate Judge returned his finding. He decided that the tender was insufficient and that on the 5th June 1904 the sum due to the mortgagee was Rs. 41,040-6-3 and in addition the arrears due from tenants the amount of which could not be ascertained and that the same amount would be due to the mortgagee on the 15th June 1904.

The judgment proceeded as follows:—

"It is admitted on behalf of the parties that the mortgagee did not advance any money as takavi. It was further admitted that at the end of 1307 Fasli the amount due from the tenants on account of arrears of rent was Rs. 301-2-9, out of which the recovery of Rs. 190 3 was barred by limitation while the recovery of the the remaining sum of Rs. 110-5 9 was not so barred.

"It was contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs that the mortgagee could get Rs. 110-5-9 only.

"The provision of the mortgage deed in question runs thus:

"When in the Jeth fallow season whether within the specified term or after it has expired I pay to the said martgagee the whole principal and interest with the revenue and amounts due from the tenants on account of advances or arrears of rent or other expenses according to the terms of this deed without legal objection as to limitation etc., (bila uzr a qanooni hadde samact whaghaira ke), then I shall be entitled to redeem the mortgaged property."

"I am, therefore, of opinion that the mortgagee is entitled to get the money due to him from the tenants on account of arrears of rent, whether its recovery is barred by limitations or not."

In the mean time both parties had applied to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh for a review of judgment. The following is the material portion the order of the Court passed on the Plaintiffs' application :—

"The 1st, 2nd and 3rd paragraphs of the application refer to the costs decreed to the mortgagee in the previous suit. We held that the amount of these costs should be taken into consideration in calculating the amount due to the mortgagee. It is said that the mortgagee did not claim these costs in the present suit, and the reason may be as the applicants allege, that the mortgagee has taken out execution of the decree which he obtained.

"In writing the judgment I certainly omitted to notice this. I would admit this application as regards the costs in question.

"The 4th, 5th and 6th paragraphs of the application challenge our decision that the mortgagee is entitled to receive from the mortgagor the amount paid by him on account of enhanced revenue, and the amounts paid on account of maintenance. It is contended that this question was not raised at the hearing, but our notes show that it was raised. Mr. Jackson on behalf of the mortgagee distinctly urged that his client was entitled to these sums For the applicants it is urged that the 7th clause of the deed has not been correctly translated in the judgment. The clause was not translated as literally as it might have been. It might be translated thus :—"In case he takes possession of the mortgaged property the mortgagee may after paying the Government revenue and other sums assessed by Government, which may hereafter be assessed or fixed by Government."

It is said that the words "which may hereafter be assessed or fixed by Government," refer to additional revenue which might be assessed, but the construction of the sentence shows that this is not the meaning and cl. 9 of the deed supports this construction, because it provides that an enhancement of the revenue at a re-settlement and a consequent shrinkage of the profits shall give the mortgagee a cause of action. Taking the various clauses of the deed together, I think there can be no doubt that the intention was that the mortgagee should be entitled to be paid the amount of any enhancement of the revenue. A provision that a mortgagee may after defraying certain expenses take the profits remaining in lieu of the interest even if they exceed the interest, and that the mortgagor shall pay unexpected charges such as enhancements of revenue is commonly found in mortgage deeds and the validity of such a provision has never been challenged.

"As regards the sums paid on account of maintenance the position is still clearer. It cannot have been intended that the mortgagees should pay those sums out of the profits and have no right to recover them from the mortgagor. Indeed Mr. Lincoln who appeared for the applicants, was unable to point to anything to the deed to justify his contention except the word waghaira in cl. 7.

"In my opinion except in regard to the costs of the previous suit no sufficient ground has been established for a review of the judgment of this Court. As regards those costs, I would admit the application, and direct that notice be issued to the mortgagee Muhammed Abbas Ali Khan.

MUHAMMAD NASEEM v. MIRZA MUHAMMAD ABBAS ALI KHAN.

"The date fixed for the hearing should be the same as that fixed for the disposal of the appeal after the findings of the Court below have been received."

The two appeals were finally disposed of on 27th July 1904. The mortgagee was not allowed credit for costs of the previous suit, nor for the cost of the office and well. He was allowed credit for arrears of rent whether barred by limitation or not. In the result two decrees were made in the two appeals, which directed redemption on payment of Rs. 39,871-6-3 The material portion of the judgment was asfollow :—

"The question of the costs incurred by the mortgagee in the previous suit must now be decided. Mr. Jackson on behalf of the mortgagee contends that the costs of the previous suit were properly incurred by his client in enforcing his security, and he has referred to some English authorities which seem to show that in England the mortgagee would certainly be entitled to add such a sum of money to the mortgage money. There seems to be no Indian authority on the question. Sec 92 of the Transfer of Property Act provides only for the taking of an account of the mortgage money, and of the costs of the suit for redemption. The mortgage deed does not provide that the mortgagee may add to the mortgage money the costs of the suit for possession brought under cl 4 of the deed. These costs were claimed by the mortgagee in his written statement, but the claim does not seem to have been pressed in the Court below It was not put forward in the memorandum of appeal and it was not mentioned in the course of the argument in this Court.

"Upon further consideration I think that the costs of the previous suit should not be allowed. The law does not provide for them, nor does the contract between the parties: and as a matter of fact the mortgagee endeavoured to realize those costs in execution of the decree which he obtained. As regards these costs then I think that the application for review snould be allowed. . . . . .

"On behalf of the mortgagor it is contended that the Subordinate Judge in ascertaining the amount due at the date of the tender was wrong in taking into account arrears of rent the recovery of which was barred by limitation at the date of the tender. But in my opinion the 10th clause of the deed is perfectly clear. It provides that the mortgagor shall upon redemption pay amongst other items the amounts due from tenants on account of advances takavi or arrears of rent, whether recovery of such amounts is barred by limitation or not. I cannot accept the argument that this provision applies only to sums claimed on account of enhancements of revenue and other expenses (ikhrajat) ; no question of limitation should arise as to them ; whereas a question of limitation might arise and in fact has arisen with regard to the arrears of rent. Therefore in my opinion in considering whether the sum tendered on 5th June, 1900, was or was not sufficient ; the whole amount then due from tenants on account of rent or advances, namely, Rs. 301-2-9 should be allowed."

The Appellant, thereupon, preferred two appeals which were consolidated, to His Majesty in Council. The Respondent, on the other hand, filed a cross-appeal by special leave of His Majesty in Council for the following 'reasons':—

1. Because the amount due to the mortgagee was determined in the previous suit, and the parties are bound by the finding of the Court on that question

2. Because the Respondent is entitled to compound interest after the date up to which the interest and the compound interest were included in the account taken in the previous suit.

3. Because, owing to the non-production of the original sale deed executed by the mortgagor in favour of the Plaintiff, the suit of the Plaintiff should have been dismissed.

4. Because the costs of the previous suit should have been added to the amount awarded to the Defendant in the present suit, with interest thereon.

5. Because the Respondent is entitled (a) to interests on the costs of the mutation proceedings, (b) the costs of preparation of the well and the thana with interest thereon, (c) interest on the amount paid on account of maintenance and the enhanced revenue.

Mr. DeGruyther, for the Appellant, at the outset referred to the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) secs. 83 and 96 (i) and to clauses 10, 4 and 2 of the mortgage deed and contended that the mortgagee had no right to compound interest. The Subordinate Judge found that compound interest was due up to the date of possession but not later. That finding was not right, because the mortgagee had got the option of charging compound interest or taking possession. He exercised that option and preferred to take possession. He could not, therefore, have compound interest. The decision of the Judicial Commissioner on that point was right.

As to costs of the previous suit there was no provision in the deed itself for that. That point was not open to the mortgagee, who after claiming those costs in his written statement, did not press that claim before the Subordinate Judge. He did not put that claim in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court and did not mention it in the course of the argument before that Court, whose finding, it was submitted, was right.

The mortgagor was not liable to be charged for the enhanced Government Revenue, which was provided for in the deed, unless the profits were less than the interest payable to the mortgagee. That sum was wrongly charged. The charge for maintenance could not be made under clause 7, of the mortgage deed. The Courts were wrong on that point.

After referring to sec 72 of the Transfer of Property Act it was submitted that the mortgagee was not entitled to arrears of rent, the recovery of which was barred by limitation. The mortgagee was not entitled to credit for the whole of the profits of the mortgaged property as interest on a portion only of the mortgage debt. The Appellant was, on the taking of account, entitled to interest on payments made by him in discharge of the principal. On the true construction of the mortgage deed and a true account, the amount due to the mortgagee on 5th June 1901, did not exceed Rs. 37,000.

[SIR ARTHUR WILSON.—The tender has no effect except on interest.]

Mr. DeGruyther—The tender made on that date being sufficient, the Appellant was entitled to the gross profits as from 5th June 1904.

Mr. Ross for the Respondent —The concurrent finding of the lower Courts that the tender made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, was not sufficient to pay off the amount due to the mortgagee was right. As to maintenance charge the lower Courts concurred in allowing that to the mortgagee, and it was submitted that they were right. The Subordinate Judge said in his judgment that the maintenance item was not disputed before him In the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court no exception was taken to that remark, and the item was not pressed before that Court on the hearing of the appeal. That point was not open to the Appellant at that stage of the case Both Courts in India were right in charging the mortgagor for the enhanced Government revenue. The mortgagee was entitled to all arrears of rent whether statute-barred or otherwise. It was a matter of construction of the deed, and the Courts below had rightly decided that in favour of the mortgagee. After referring to sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code and the issues fixed in the mortgagee's suit for possession in 1892 it was contended that the amount due to the mortgagee at the time of the institution of that suit was determined in the previous suit and the parties were bound by the finding of the Court in that suit.

[LORD COLLINS.—Where is the account?]

Mr. Ross.—Not on record, my Lord. But one of the issues was: "Is the account filed by the Plaintiff correct?" The Court held that "the account filed by the Plaintiff after the correction reported by the Commissioner is correct." The Civil Procedure Code expressly says "issue" and the question of accounts was an issue in that suit. It was submitted that the account then found correct could not be questioned now. In that account compound interest was allowed. The Respondent was entitled to compound interest after the date of that account. The mortgagee was entitled to recover costs of previous suits under sec. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act, and also under the mortgage deed, cl. 4 of which refers, to taking possession, an act which would entail costs. The costs in dispute were incurred in the suit brought for taking possession. The Respondent was entitled under sec. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act to recover what he claims under the 5th reason of his cross-appeal.

Mr. DeGruyther, in reply, after referring to secs. 9 and 11 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) contended that there was no evidence on record to show what was the precise conclusion in the previous suit. The judgment in that case says:—"There is no necessity for passing any order as to the amount due under the mortgage" to the mortgagee. There was no finding as to the amount then due to the mortgagee and consequently the question was not res judicata as contended. As to the statute-barred arrears of rent cl. 10 of the mortgage deed could not mean that the mortgagee could sue third persons for arrears. The mortgagor simply undertook not to raise the question of limitation but he could not give any undertaking on the part of third persons. The Respondent claim under the 5th "reason" of his cross-appeal did not fall under sec. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD COLLINS.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The principal Appellant obtained leave to appeal in India in the usual way. The Cross Appellant obtained from His Majesty in council special leave to appeal.

The questions in these appeals turn upon the construction of a deed of mortgage and relate to the terms upon which the mortgagor was entitled to redeem The mortgage was executed by one Chaudhri Imdad Ashraf in favour of the Respondent on 30th September 1885. The material parts of the deed are set out in the Record and are abstracted in the judgments below, and need not be here repeated. The mortgage money was Rs. 29,000, and the rate of interest 10 per cent, per annum, By the 15th September 1902 the mortgagor had paid in all Rs. 13,461 on account of interest. On the 4th of November 1886 he paid Rs. 2,699 on account of principal. Afterwards he made default in paying interest, and the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession, and on 18th September 1893 got a decree under which he was put in possession on the 27th January 1894. The mortgagor on 21st December 1899 sold a portion of the mortgaged property to the Appellant, Chaudhri Muhammad Naseem, who, on the 5th June 1900, tendered to the mortgagee a sum of Rs. 37,000 in redemption of the mortgage. The tender was refused, and this suit for redemption was instituted by the Appellant and the mortgagor. One of the chief matters in controversy was whether compound interest was in the circumstances payable by the mortgagor. This point was decided by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the mortgagee, but on appeal the Judicial Commissioners took a different view and disallowed it. There were also other items in the account as to which disputes arose which were decided by both Courts in favour of the mortgagee. The result was that on an account taken on the basis of the interpretation and findings adopted by the Judicial Commissioners, it appeared that the sum of Rs. 37,000, which on the 5th June, 1900 had been tendered by the mortgagor and refused by the mortgagee as the sum payable to entitle the former to redeem, was less than the true amount as ascertained by the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners by about Rs, 200. Against this decision both sides have appealed, after having first been heard on motions to vary in certain respects the terms of the decrees. Naturally, on the hearing of the appeals before this Board, each side tried to vary the account in his favour by attacking particular items so as to establish or destory the sufficiency of the tender.

A number of these controverted items had involved inquiry into the facts in the Court of first instance, and were accordingly reported upon by a Commissioner appointed by the Subordinate Judge, who made the report the basis of his decision. It is, of course, impossible for this Board to review findings of fact on such materials, nor were they invited to do so, but it will be found that the real controversy narrows itself down to some two or three questions of principle, which have been discussed and decided in the Courts below. These questions would appear to be—

1. On the true construction of the agreement, is the mortgagor liable for compound interest since the mortgagee entered into possession of the mortgaged premises?

2. Is the mortgagee entitled to get from the mortgagor over and above the usufruct of the mortgaged property the amount paid by him on account of maintenance and enhanced Goverment revenue?

3. Is the mortgagee entitled against the mortgagor to arrears of rent due from tenants even where such arrears are statute barred as against the tenants?

4. Is the mortgagee entitled to credit for the whole of the profits during the period when, in consequence of part payment, the whole debt was no longer due?

5. Is the mortgagor entitled, on the taking of accounts interest on payments made by him in discharge of the principal?

Their Lordships will consider these points in their order:—

First, as to compound interest. This turns upon the construction of clause 4 of the agreement. On this point their Lordships agree with the reasoning and interpretation of the Judicial Commissioners.

Secondly, as to maintenance and enhanced revenue, even if the point as to maintenance is still open to the mortgagor, which is doubtful, their Lordships adopt the construction of the agreement on these points in which both the Courts below concurred.

Thirdly, as to statute-barred rent, their Lordships agree that this point, as held by the Subordinate Judge, is met by the express language of the 10th clause of the mortgage deed.

Points 4 and 5 were not taken by the mortgagor either before the Subordinate Judge or the Judicial Commissioners, and are not now open to the mortgagors, neither is there anything to be found in the agreement to support them.

With regard to the "reasons" put by the mortgagee for his Cross-Appeal to His Majesty in Council, their Lordships adopt the conclusions and reasons of the Court below on the 1st, 3rd, and 4th of those "reasons." The 2nd reason raises the question of compound interest, which has already been dealt with. The fifth is not open to the mortgagee; the fact that he abstained from taking it is made the subject of comment by the Commissioners.

The result is that, in the opinion of their Lordships, the appeals and the cross-appeal all fail, and they will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that they should be dismissed.

The costs of the appeals will be borne by the respective Appellants.

SHIBU ROUT and others, Appellants,
v.
BABAN ROUT and anr., Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 13—Res judicata.

In order to establish the plea of res judicata the Court which decided the former suit must have been such a Court as would have been competent to try and decide not only the particular matter in issue in the subsequent suit but also the subsequent suit itself in which the issue is subsequently raised.

It is the competency of the original Court which decided the former suit that must be looked to and not that of the Appellate Court in which the suit was ultimately decided on appeal.

RAI CHARAN GHOSE v. KUMUD MOHON DUTT CHOUDHURY (1) and RAM GOPAL MAZUMDER v. PRASANNA KUMAR SANIAL (2) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 2nd of March 1906, against the decree of Mr. J. J. Platel, Officiating District Judge of Zillah Cuttack, dated the 4th of January 1906, affirming that of Babu Bidhu Bhusan Chakrabutty, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 21st of February 1905.

The facts of the case are thus stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court.

"In this case Plaintiff-Respondent sued for declaration of title to an 8 annas share of certain properties, for recovery of joint possession thereof with the principal Defendants and for mesne profits from the date of dispossession in 1896. Plaintiff's case was that the lands in suit formed part of the ancestral holding of one Paramananda Rout who left 3 sons, Nitai, Hari and Arjun, that Hari separated from the rest of the family and that the remaining ⅔ share was managed by Shiba, Defendant No. 1, son of Nitai as karta of the joint family, that Plaintiff is the grandson of Arjun and as such is entitled to an 8 annas share of the properties held by Shiba.

"The defence set up by the contesting Defendants was that Paramananda had only one son Nitai, and that Nitai was not joint with Arjun or Plaintiff. As regards certain portion of the properties in suit the plea of res judicata was raised"

The Court of first instance decreed the suit. The Defendants appealed in the lower Appellate Court.

The question for decision was as follows :—

Has the genealogical tree given by the Plaintiff been proved? Is the plea of res judicata good?

The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal and after discussing the evidence made the following observations :—

(1) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 571 (1897).
(2) 10 C. W. N. 529 (1905).
(3) I. L. R. 5 Cal. 832 (1880)
(4) I. L. R. 28 Cal. 78 (1900).
(13) I. L. R. 8 Mad. 83 (1884).

SHIBU ROUT v. BABAN ROUT.

"I am therefore of opinion that the genealogical tree set up by Plaintiff has been satisfactorily proved. As regards the plea of res judicata it appears that a few years ago when Plaintiff sold some of his lands to one Gobinda Mangraj in the name of Gobinda's uncle, Kripa Sindhu, Defendant No. 1, Shiba, brought a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Kendrapara against the vendor and vendee to set aside the kobalas and recover possession of the conveyed properties. In that suit one of the issues was whether Baban, the present Plaintiff, had any right or interest in the land claimed. The lower Court found that Plaintiff had no right or interest in the land claimed and disbelieved the evidence adduced to prove relationship and joint possession. It is contended on behalf of Appellants that this judgment of the Munsif of Kendrapara operates as res judicata so far as Plaintiff's title to the lands in the present suit are concerned, and in support of this contention the ruling in Toponidhee Dhirj Gir Gosain v. Sreeputty Sahame (3) is cited. That case has not so far as I know, been overruled explicitly, but the ruling in that case is in direct opposition to a long line of rulings from the Privy Council downwards in which the dictum laid down by Peacock, C. J, in Mussummat Edun v. Mussummat Bechun (14) has been followed The dictum is as follows, "concurrency of jurisdiction in two Courts is a necessary part of the rule which creates the estoppel," known as res judicata and that "in order to make the decision of one Court final and conclusive in another Court, it must be the decision of a Court which would have had jurisdiction over the matter in the subsequent suit in which the first decision is given as conclusive." This proposition of law has been followed in Run Bahadur Singh v. Luchoo Koer (6) Ramdayal v. Janki Das (7), Bhavasi v. Sarat Chandra (11) and may now be taken to be settled law. It would therefore follow that the judgment of the Munsif of Kendrapara will not operate as res judicata in the present suit as the Munsif had not jurisdiction to try the present suit.

"This disposes of the two main issues of the case. The appeal was confined to these issues, and as I decide them against Appellants and in favour of Plaintiff, I have nothing more to do than to order that the decree of the lower Court be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs."

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

STEPHEN, J.—In this case the Plaintiff sues for a declaration of his title to an 8 annas share in certain property, for joint possession thereof with the principal Defendants and for mesne profits. In the lower Courts the case was contested chiefly on questions of fact relating to the family genealogy and the history of the property in relation to the family of which all the parties were members, which were decided in the Plaintiff's favour and with which we are not concerned. A point of law was however raised on behalf of the Defendant which has been argued before us on a second appeal. This is that the suit is res judicata, and it arises as follows.

years ago the Plaintiff sold certain lands to one Gobinda Charan Mangraj, and Defendant No. 1 in the present suit, one of the Appellants before us, sued in the Court of the Munsif of Kendrapara for recovery of the possession of the property so conveyed, and to have the Kobala granted by the present Plaintiff to his vendee set aside. He succeeded in the former claim, judgment being given in his favour on the 14th August 1899, on the ground that the present Plaintiff had no share in the disputed land and that the relationship between the Plaintiff and the first Defendant, and consequently the other Defendants, found as proved in the present case did not exist. This decision was affirmed on appeal to this Court. There is no finding before us, as to the identity of the land affected by Munsif's decree with that now in suit, or any part of it. The Kobala granted by the Plaintiff to Gobinda is however on the record and boundaries are given therein which might show that such lands are part of those now sued for. They appear only to be a part because the present suit is not within the jurisdiction of Munsif, and it is not suggested that they are more than a part.

The question before us therefore resolves itself into two parts. First, can the present suit be entertained as to so much of the land in suit as was the subject-matter of the suit in the Munsif's Court Secondly, can the issue whether the Plaintiff is related to the Defendant, as alleged, be tried in the present suit after having been decided before the Munsif The answer of course depends primarily on sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code which runs so far as it is material as follows "No Court shall try any suit or, issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties ......litigating under the same title in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit, or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally determined by such Court." Taking the second point first the truth of the genealogy was an issue before the Munsif and is an issue here: and it follows from the judgment of Banerjee, J. in Rai Charan Ghose v. Kumud Mohon Dutt Choudhury (1) based on the cases there referred to and followed in Ram Gopal Mozumder v. Prasanna Kumar Sanial (2) that what we have to consider is the competency of the Munsiff to try the present suit, not that of the High Court, by whom his decision was affirmed on appeal. This concludes the question as the present suit is beyond the Munsif's jurisdiction. The case of Toponidhee Dhirj Gir Gosain v. Sreeputty Sahame (3) is referred to by the lower Appellate Court, but has not been relied on by the appellant here, as it was decided on the Code repealed by the present Civil Procedure Code, which alters the law on the subject.

On the first point we are invited to follow the decision in Bhugwanbutti Chowdhrani v. Forbes (4) followed in the second case above mentioned. That case is however distinguishable from the present in an essential feature. There the Plaintiff sued before a Subordinate Judge for road and public work cesses, embankment cesses, dâk cesses and other matters designated as "etc." claiming an amount which exceeded that for which he could sue before a Munsif. In a previous suit before a Munsif the Defendant had sued for a refund of what he had paid for road and public work cesses, and the suit was decreed on the ground that the Plaintiff was not liable to pay the cesses at the enhanced rate claimed. It was held that the Plaintiff in the second suit could not join a cause of action on which he had been previously defeated with new causes of action, and that such an action amounted to an evasion of sec. 13 In the present case it was not open to the Plaintiff to devide his cause of action as he might have done in the former case. By sec. 43 he was compelled "to include the whole of the claim which (he was) entitled to make in respect of the cause of action." The land he sued to recover was all held under one title according to his case. He might it is true have omitted the land which was the subject-matter of the action before the Munsif, and it may be argued that this was not land he was entitled to make a claim in respect of. But this argument is not of sufficient force to induce me to extend principle of the decision to a case where the facts differ so essentially. The principle makes an apparent, though not a real, inroad on the meaning of sec 13. To extend it as suggested to this case, would in my opinion be making the inroad a real one. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J —The only substantial question of law which calls for decision in this appeal is, whether the suit is barred by the principle of res judicata The Courts below have concurrently answered this question against the Appellants.

It is argued before this Court that the suit is barred by res judicata, first, because the question of title to the disputed property, which turns upon the relationship of the parties, was directly and substantially in issue in the litigation of 1899 and was then decided in favour of the present Appellants, and, secondly, because the question of title, in so far as it affects that portion of the disputed property which formed the subject-matter of the litigation of 1899, can, in no view of the matter, be re-opened for a fresh adjudication.

In support of the first branch of this argument, reliance is placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Toponidhee v. Sreeputty (3). It is clear, however, that although that decision has never been formally dissented from, the rule laid down therein can no longer be regarded as good law. That case turned upon the construction of sec. 13 of Act

(3) I. L. R. 5 Cal. 832 (1880).

SHIBU ROUT v. BABAN ROUT.

X of 1877, the language of which was materially different from the language of sec. 13 of Act XIV of 1882. In the present Code, the words "competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised" were expressly added, so as to make it clear that the competence required is in respect of the subsequent suit also. This view is amply supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Raghubar Dayal v. Sheo Baksh Singh (5) and Run Bahadur Singh v. Lachoo Koer (6). Under the present Code, in order to establish the plea of res judicata in cases of the description now before us, it has to be shown that the Court of concurrent jurisdiction which decided the former suit, was a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit [see Ramdayal v. Janki Das (7) and Panga v. Unnikutti (8)]. It follows, therefore, that the first branch of the contention of the Appellants cannot be sustained.

The second branch of the contention of the Appellants is that the suit is barred by res judicata at least with respect to that portion of the disputed property which is alleged to have been the subject-matter of the previous litigation. In support of this position, reliance is placed upon the cases of Bhugwanbutti v. Forbes. (4) and Ram Gopal v. Prasanna Kumar (2). The decision of the question raised, however, must depend primarily upon the language of the Code, which seems to me to make it reasonably plain that in order to establish the plea of res judicata the Court which decided the former suit must have been such a Court as would have been competent to try and decide not only the particular matter in issue in the subsequent suit but also the subsequent suit itself in which the issue is subsequently raised. In support of this proposition, it is sufficient to refer to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Gokul Mandar v. Padmanand Singh (9) in which Lord Davey pointed out that sec. 13 of the present Code, which embodied the principle just enunciated, goes in this respect beyond sec. 13 of the previous Code (Act X of 1877) and also beyond the law laid down by the Judges in The Duchess of Kingstone's case (10). Lord Davey further observed that the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction. If the principle thus interpreted by the Judicial Committee is applied to the case before us, there can be no possible controversy that the plea of res judicata cannot be sustained.

It was faintly suggested, however, on behalf of the Appellants that as in the previous litigation the decision of the Court of first instance was subsequently affirmed by this Court, and as in the present litigation also the matter has been carried before this Court, the plea of res judicata ought to be allowed, or, in other words, that the true criterion is the competency of the Court of Appeal to decide the question. In my opinion, this contention is not well-founded. It is now firmly settled that it is the competency of the original Court which decided the former suit that must be looked to and not that of the Appellate Court in which the suit was ultimately decided on appeal. [See Bharasi v. Sarat Chandra (11) Kailash Chandra v. Tarak Nath (12) and Ram Gopal v. Prassana Kumar (2)].

It was argued, further, that the view we take is inconsistent with the decision of this Court in Bhugwanbutti v. Forbes (4). It may be a matter for controversy, whether some of the observations, at any rate, in the decision relied upon may not be difficult to reconcile with the provisions of sec. 13 of the Code as interpreted in the judgment of the Judicial Committee to which reference has been made. This much is clear, however, that the decision turned upon facts and circumstances which are essentially distinguishable from those of the case before us, for the reasons set forth in the judgment of my learned brother.

Reliance was also placed upon the decision of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Pathuma v. Salimamma (13), with reference to which it is only necessary to observe that although it was decided after the present Code had come into force, some of the observations, at any rate, appear to be based upon the law as it was understood to be under the Code of 1877.

On these grounds, I must hold that the second branch of the contention of the Appellants cannot be supported. The appeal consequently fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Mortgage decree—Order for sale—Costs—Costs if can be recovered from the mortgagor personally—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 90.

The costs awarded by a decree directing the sale of mortgaged property form part of the mortgage decree and the decree-holder must proceed to recover the costs by a sale of the mortgaged property in the first instance, and it is only when the mortgaged property is found to be insufficient to satisfy the decree that the decree-holder can proceed against the other properties of the mortgagor in the manner provided by sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act.

MAQBUL FATIMA v. LALTA PROSAD (3) followed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of December 1906, against an order of Babu Sarada Prosad Bose, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Chapra, dated the 18th of August 1906.

This appeal arose out of an application by judgment-creditor in whose favour a mortgage decree (for sale) had been passed praying inter alia for execution of so much of the decree as related to costs against the person and other properties of the judgment-debtor.

The judgment-debtors preferred objections to the application under sec. 244, C. P. C., to the following effect viz., that the decree obtained by the decree-holder was a mortgage decree and the costs the Court awarded to the decree-holder formed part of the mortgage decree. The decree-holder therefore had no right to execute the decree for costs as a money decree against the person and other properties of the judgment-debtors, and his remedy was limited to asking for the sale of the mortgaged property; and it was therefore improper on the part of the decreeholders to put up the other properties in the schedule for sale and to attach the same. Accordingly, the judgment-debtors prayed that the application for execution might be rejected.

The learned Subordinate Judge, rejected the petition of objection relying on the cases reported in Ratnessur Sen v. Jusoda (1) and Damodar Das v. Budh Kuar (2) and held that the decree-holder could execute the decree for costs against the judgment-debtors personally and against their other properties.

The judgment-debtors appealed from this decision.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Appellants.

Babu Harendra Krishna Mukerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The only question we have to decide is whether a decree-holder in executing a mortgage decree, can, for the purpose of recovering the costs awarded by the decree, put up to sale properties other than the mortgaged property. The Subordinate Judge has held that he can: and in support of his view has referred to two cases—one reported in Ratnessur Sen v. Jusoda (1) and and the other in Damodar Das v. Budh Kuar (2). These however were not cases where the decrees had been for sale of the mortgaged properties. They were decrees passed for foreclosure where the mortgage had been by way of condition sale. The present case is similar to one decided by the Allahabad High Court reported in Maqbul Fatima v. Lalta Prosad (3) where it was held that the costs were really part of the amount for which the mortgaged property had been ordered to be sold. We are clearly of opinion that the decree for costs is a part of the mortgage decree and that the decreeholder must proceed in the first instance against the property mortgaged. It is only in the event of the mortgaged property being found insufficient to satisfy the mortgage decree, that a decree-holder can proceed against the other properties in the manner provided by sec. 90, of the Transfer of Property Act.

In this view of the case we allow the appeal, and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge allowing the decree-holder to proceed against properties other than the mortgaged properties.

BENI MADHAL SINGH, Petitioner,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Special constables—Appointment, circumstances justifying—Act V of 1861, secs. 17 and 19—Disobedience of order under sec. 17—No offence under sec. 19.

The circumstances which justify the appointment of special constables under sec. 17 of Act V of 1861 are that a disturbance of the peace is apprehended and that the police force available is insufficient to preserve the peace and protect the inhabitants of the place where the disturbance is apprehended.

In the absence of those circumstances an order under sec. 17 of Act V of 1861 is improper and there should be no conviction of the persons appointed special constables for disobedience of the same.

This was a rule granted on the 28th of November 1907, against an order of Babu B. N. Roy, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad, dated the 28th of September 1907, convicting Petitioners under sec. 19 of Act V of 1861 and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 40.

The facts material to the report will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Hill and Babu Ganesh Dutt Singh for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause against the rule.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These are four rules to show cause why the conviction of and fines imposed on the Petitioners under sec. 19, Act V of 1861 should not be set aside.

The Petitioners were appointed special constables under sec 17, Act V of 1861, neglected to serve as such and had been prosecuted and fined under sec. 19 of the Police Act.

The facts are that a Sub-Inspector of Police reported to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad that there was a dispute about certain land in which the Petitioners were concerned which was likely to lead to a breach of the peace. He therefore recommended that the Petitioners should be appointed special constables and this was done. The Petitioners refused to receive their letters of appointment and on appearing before the Magistrate in the month of August last, he said he did not require their services, as additional Police had now been quartered in the villages where breaches of the peace were apprehended. Notwithstanding this, the Petitioners were subsequently prosecuted under sec. 19, Act V of 1861 and fined Rs. 40 each.

The grounds on which these rules have been supported are that the Police officer who reported to the Magistrate was a Sub-Inspector and not an Inspector, as required by sec 17, Act V of 1861, (2) that the letters of appointment were never delivered to the Petitioners and (3) that their appointment as special constables was inexpedient.

The first two pleas are of a technical nature. But we consider that these rules must be made absolute on the ground that the order under sec. 17 was an improper one and that the conviction of the Petitioners under sec. 19 of the Act is bad. The circumstances which justify an order under sec. 17 are that a disturbance of the peace is apprehended and that the Police force available is insufficient to preserve the peace and protect the inhabitants of the village where disturbances are apprehended.

It is idle to say that in this case any such circumstances existed. We are satisfied they did not. Then the Magistrate after telling the Petitioners that he did not want their services, should not have prosecuted them under sec 19. The Magistrate now says the Petitioners were prosecuted for neglect to serve as special constables during the period antecedent to his order dispensing with their services. But if the Petitioners' services were not required, and we are satisfied they were never required, it was quite unnecessary and improper to prosecute them for disobeying an order which should never have been passed.

We set aside the convictions, and sentences. The fines, if paid, must to be refunded.

B. C. Rule made absolute.

BALAI DEY and ors., Petitioners,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Village Chowkidari Act (VI B. C. of 1870), sec 39, cl. (2)—Daffadar's authority to arrest—Continuing offence—Theft—Offence, how long continues.

Under sec. 39, cl. (2) of Act VI (B. C.) of 1870, a daffadar is only entitled to arrest a person for theft committed in his presence.

One R after having cut down some plantain trees belonging to J with the intention of dishonestly taking them, loaded them in a cart and was driving away the cart. J pursued the cart and on his crying out that R had cut and was taking away his plantain trees, a daffadar came up and arrested R,

Held—That the offence of theft did not continue when the daffadar came up and as the offence of theft was completed before the daffadar came up, and arrested R, the arrest was illegal and therefore the rescue of R from the daffadar's custody was not an offence.

This is a rule granted on the 12th of November 1907, against an order passed by Babu Ashutosh Bagchi, Deputy Magistrate, 1st Court, Kalna, dated the 4th of June 1907.

BALAI DEY v. THE EMPEROR.

The material facts of the case as they appear from the judgment of the Deputy Magistrate are as follows :—

The Complainant who was a daffadar one day at about 7 or 7-30 P. M., heard one Jadu Bagdi crying out that his plantain trees were cut and taken away. He ran to the spot and on the road next to the garden of Jadu Bagdi saw a cart loaded with 5 or 6 plantain trees and being driven by Radha Nath Dey. Jadu Bagdi who was 5 or 6 cubits behind the cart said that Radha Nath had cut the trees from his garden, but that he could not seize him (Radha Nath) because the latter had threatened to cut him with a dao. The daffadar caught hold of Radha Nath and turned the cart back and proceeded a short distance towards the thana, when the Petitioners rushed towards him. Petitioner No. 1 gave order to beat the daffadar and Petitioner No. 2 raised his lathi to strike him but one Sita Nath Mondal who was on the spot averted the blow. Then the Petitioner No. 1 forced Radha Nath away from the hands of the daffadar and gave orders to his companions to turn the cart back which he himself with some others did. The daffadar then proceeded to the thanah and lodged his first information with the Sub-Inspector at about 10-3 P.M. The Sub-Inspector came to the spot the next morning. He found the stumps of 5 newly cut plantain trees in the garden of Jadu Bagdi. The Petitioners were tried by the Deputy Magistrate of Kalna who convicted the Petitioner No. 1 under secs. 225 and $\frac{353}{114}$, I. P. C. the Petitioner No. 2 under secs. 225 and 353, and the Petitioners Nos. 3 and 4 under sec. 225, I. P. C. and sentenced each of the Petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 to a fine of Rs. 50, in default a month's rigorous imprisonment and the Petitioners Nos. 3 and 4, to a fine of Rs. 30 each, in default 15 days rigorous imprisonment.

As to the contention of the defence that the custody of the daffadar was not a legal custody, the Deputy Magistrate observed as follows in his judgment : "It has been argued that the custody of the daffadar was not a legal custody inasmuch as the village Chowkidari Act makes no mention of the appointment of a daffadar. But a daffadar is only a head Chowkidar having the same duties as the Chowkidar. The name is only given to distinguish him from others who have a more limited beat, and there can be no question that he is a Chowkidar under Act VI (B. C. of 1870).

"The offence of theft was continuing at the time when the stolen property was being removed. Under sec. 59, Cr. P. C. even a private person had a right to arrest Radha Nath, who was then committing the theft. The custody in which Radha Nath was detained was therefore certainly legal."

The Petitioners obtained the present rule to set aside the convictions and sentences.

NOTES

WE DRAW ATTENTION TO THE DECISION IN Beni Madhub Singh v. The Emperor, reported at p 366 of this issue. Their Lordships have definitely laid down that when the circumstances required by law to justify the appointment of special constables do not exist, an order appointing any person a special constable is improper and should be set aside. It will be remembered that in the matter of Umes Chandra Gupta and others, Brett and Stephen, JJ. differed in opinion and the matter was referred to Maclean, C. J. But the reference proved infructuous, the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam having withdrawn from the prosecution. The decision we report is of great importance as being the first definite pronouncement that when the services of special constables are not required for the maintainance of peace, it is an abuse of sec. 17 of. Act V of 1861 to enrol people as special constables and to prosecute them subsequently under sec. 19 for alleged disobedience of order. The question of the jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere in cases of prosecution started under sec. 19 is also set at rest by this decision, if not by the earlier decision of Wilson, J. in the case of Gopinath Paryah v. The Empress (10 C. W. N. 82).

THE DECISION OF THE LEARNED CHIEF JUSTICE AND Mr. Justice Coxe in the matter of Babu Nabin Chandra Das, commonly known as the "Bhola pleader's case," is eminently sound and fair. The two points in the decision are firstly that a pleader or vakil can always refuse a brief without giving any reasons. Next, that he cannot be subjected to an examination by any judicial officer or Court for disclosing his reasons for such refusal. In the words of his Lordship the Chief Justice it is idle to say that sec 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act has any application in such cases The learned Chief Justice very rightly suggests that matters of professional etiquette observed amongst English barrister-at-law do not necessarily govern vakils and pleaders.

WE DO NOT PROPOSE TO DISCUSS HERE WHETHER A barrister is bound to accept a brief when he is not previously retained on the opposite side But the one fundamental difference between the two sections of the profession consists in the fact that the professional engagement between a pleader and a client is to all intents and purposes a contract while it is not so in the case of a barrister. A pleader may sue for his fees and also be sued for return of fees or damages for having neglected his duty. But a barrister cannot surely sue or be sued in connection with his professional engagements It is because of this that a set of rules have evolved out of practice which pass under the name of professional etiquette for the breach of which a barrister may be taken to task by members of his own profession or by the High Court under its disciplinary powers. To extend those conventional rules to pleaders and vakils who incur contractual obligations in respect of their professional engagements would be both inappropriate and unjust.

SINCE THE ENGAGEMENT BETWEEN A PLEADER AND HIS client is contractual, it is but fair that he should be left free to accept or reject the offered brief without giving any reasons for it. It is always against public policy to coerce a person to enter into a contract. When a man feels that owing to his ethical, political or personal opinions or having regard to the nature of the case he cannot properly discharge his duties towards his client, it is neither fair to him nor to his client that the Court should compel him to accept the brief. Public policy in law does not mean political policy. The District Judge of Buckergunge seems to have been labouring under a confusion of ideas in this respect. We believe, the judgment of the learned Chief Justice will have a wholesome effect on the subordinate judiciary in correcting an erroneous impression that in some cases they are to take note of the political policy of the executive even in determining personal rights and liberties according to law.

IN THE CASE OF Augora Kunwar v Baba REPORTED at p 638 I. L. R. 29 Allahabad series, it was held by his Lordship Aikman, J, that when a person acting on the erroneous advice of his pleader files an appeal in a wrong Court, and the appeal being returned by that Court, is then filed in the proper Court after the limitation period for filing the appeal has expired, he is entitled to the benefit of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act His Lordship observed in the course of the judgment that although the provisions of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act do not apply to appeals but only to suits, yet the principle of that section should be adopted in applying sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, or in other words the filing of an appeal in a wrong Court on bonâ fide reliance upon an erroneous advice of a legal adviser is a sufficient cause for extending the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal.

THE QUESTION AS TO WHEN A bonâ fide MISTAKE AS to the forum for presenting an appeal will be a sufficient cause for extending the period of limitation under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act has been recently considered by their Lordships Mukerjee and Holmwood, JJ., in the case of Sarat Chandra Bose v. Saraswati Debi, I. L. R. 34 Cal. 221. We may also refer to the case of Karsun Das Dharamsey v. Bai Gungabai, I. L R. 30 Bom. 329, in which their Lordships Jenkins, C. J., and Batty, J., point out that Courts should not apply sec. 5, Limitation Act in favour of an Appellant unless they are satisfied of the justice of the grounds on which the benefit of sec. 5 is asked for. Their Lordships observe, "When the time for appealing is passed a very valuable right is secured to the successful litigant: and the Court must therefore be fully satisfied of the justice of the grounds on which it is sought to obtain an extension of the time for attacking the decree, and then perhaps depriving the successful litigant of the advantage which he has obtained."

THE REVENUE SALE LAW (ACT XI OF 1859) WAS passed about half a century ago. Since then there has been practically no amendment. The working of the Act during this long period has shown that it admits of many alterations which may remove many a hardship of the proprietors of estates without any prejudice to the interests of Government. One of thé chief objects in passing the Act was to afford landholders, particularly absentees, facilities in guarding against the accidental sale of their estates for arrears of revenue by reason of the neglect or fraud of their agents; but it has been found in many cases that the provisions in this respect are not sufficient and that in many cases of hardship they are left without any remedy whatsoever. We therefore suggested sometime ago that provisions similar to those of sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and sec 310A of the Civil Procedure Code should be introduced into the Revenue Sale Law so that sales may be set aside by deposit of the arrears of revenue within thirty days from the date of sale. Babu Jogendra Nath Mukerjee also contributed a series of articles to this journal and made representations to Government in the course of in which be made, among others, the above suggestions. We wonder why the Government has not yet taken any steps for the amendment of the law which has pressed hard on proprietors of revenue-paying estates.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Beswick v. Smith. Before the EARL OF HALSBURY, SIR GORELL BARNES, P., and JUSTICE BIGHAM. 5th December 1907.

Defamation—Innuendo.

This appeal arose upon an application by the Defendant Smith for judgment or a new trial in an action brought against him for damages for libel, &c. The Plaintiff was a commercial traveller formerly in the employ of the Defendant's firm. On 6th July 1906, the Defendant firm circulated among his customers cards in unfastened envelopes with these words on them. "H. Beswick is no longer in our employ. Please give him no order or pay him any money on our account." The Lord Chief Justice before whom the action came up for trial left it to the Jury to say whether the words were libellous and whether the Defendants had acted maliciously in circulating them. The jury assessed damages at £200 and the Lord Chief Justice gave judgment for the Plaintiff.

Upon this appeal, LORD HALSBURY observed that he did not deny that there might be a publication under such circumstances as to make that which was primâ facie not libellous convey in fact a defamatory imputation. That was not the case here. The word taken in their natural sense could not convey to the mind of a person of ordinary intelligence that any imputation had been made. Such an inference as that there was an imputation seemed to him to be the invention of an imagination already tainted with the idea that there was something wrong in the termination of the employment.

KING'S BENCH.—Spiers v. Hunt. Before JUSTICE PHILLIMORE. 12th December 1907.

Promise of marriage by married man—Breach—Public policy and morals.

The Plaintiff claimed damages for breach of promise of marriage by the Defendant. At the time the promise was alleged to have been made the Defendant was a married man to the knowledge of the Plaintiff. The action was brought on the death of the Defendant's wife on 11th July 19 /. Immoral relations appeared to have begun between the parties about March 1899 and continued till 10th March 1904, during which time, Plaintiff bore Defendant several children. The promise was alleged to have been made in February or March 1899.

Held—That the promise made in such circumstances was against public policy and morals and will not be enforced

CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CASPERSZ and COXE, JJ. CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 981 OF 1907. GUHI JENA, Appellant v. THE EMPEROR. 22nd January 1908.

Indian Penal Code, sec. 75, how should be used.

The Appellant was convicted under sec. 379/75, I. P. C. and sentenced to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment and five years police supervision for stealing a gamcha, valued 4 ans., after previous conviction the last of which in 1900 resulted in a sentence of 7 years' rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner appealed to the High Court and the appeal was admitted in Chambers for a consideration of the sentence.

Their Lordships observed .—

The Appellant is not a dangerous criminal, this is evident from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the theft. Sec 75 is not to be used to enhance enormously the heniousness of petty offences, Shamjee Nashyo, 1 C. L R. 481.

We affirm the conviction, but reduce the terms of imprisonment to eighteen months of which 3 months will be passed in solitary confinement. The order for police supervision will stand."

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1418 of 1907. ISLAM MOLLA AND ANOTHER, Petitioner v. THE EMPEROR. 21st January 1908.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 106—Order when to be made.

A boat belonging to the Petitioners was damaged by a steamer and the Petitioners and others climbed on to the steamer and committed the offence of rioting. They were convicted of rioting and sentenced to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment and were also bound down under sec. 106, Cr. P. C. to keep the peace for 6 months. On their application to the High Court for setting aside the conviction and sentence and the order under sec. 106, Cr. P. C. a rule was issued only with respect to the order under sec. 106, Cr. P. C.

Their Lordships observed:—"They (the Petitioners) seem to have gone on board for the purpose of assaulting the Serang and the crew and claiming compensation for damage. They had no right to do this because their boat was damaged owing to an accident. In the circumstances therefore we consider that the conviction and sentence are correct. But we do not think it necessary to affirm the order passed under sec. 106, Cr. P. C., because in our opinion the Petitioners acted upon the impulse of the moment; there is not the slightest likelihood of their repeating the unlawful act."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and CASPERSZ, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 81 OF 1906. SARAT CHUNDER ROY CHOWDHRY, Appellant v. RAJONI MOHAN ROY AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 30th January 1908. Judgment, 10th February 1908.

Administration bond—Surety—Mutual mistake and misrepresentation—Estoppel—Minor.

D, B and H were three brothers, sons of R. D died in July 1898 leaving a son M who was then a minor, and his widow R, mother of M. Shortly after the death of D, a dispute arose as to the share, if any, of B and H, to certain properties they claimed to be the joint properties of the family. On the 5th October 1898 an instrument, in the nature of a family arrangement, was executed by B, H and R on behalf of M, by which M's share was fixed at 8 annas, H's share $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas and that of B's $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas.

Thereafter B applied for the appointment of himself to be the guardian of the property of the minor M. An order was made on the 26th March 1900 by the District Judge appointing him guardian. On appeal to the High Court, the order was set aside on the 28th January 1902 and the High Court expressed an opinion to the effect that an administrator to the estate of the deceased D should be appointed instead of a guardian of the property of the minor. In the proceedings which took place in the lower Court, subsequent to the order of the High Court, the Plaintiff R was appointed administrator. R took possession as such administrator, on the 26th February 1902, of the properties of the minor. Thereafter B submitted his account to the District Judge for the period of his management of the minor's estate, that is, from 18th June 1900 to the 26th February 1902.

The present suit was instituted on the 21st January 1905, by R for the purpose of an enquiry into the correctness of the account submitted by B, for a decree for such sum or sums of money as might be found due on the taking of account and for recovery of the same from B or from other Defendants who had becomes sureties for B, in the proceedings for realization of the debts to the estate of D under Act VII of 1889 or for management of the minor's properties, under Act VIII of 1890.

B was the Defendant No. 1 and the Appellant Defendant No. 2, who executed a bond for Rs. 20,000 as surety of B for his due administration of the estate of the minor. The bond was dated the 13th June 1900. The other Defendants stood sureties for Defendant No. 1, for realization of debts under Act VII of 1889.

The Defendants, other than Defendant No. 2, accepted the judgment of the lower Court directing the account to be taken by a Commissioner according to the directions given in that judgment.

The grounds urged in appeal were that B having been appointed guardian of the property of M, the Appellant, as surety, was responsible only for the conduct of B with respect to such property and not any share of the property which was not covered by that petition, and that the District Judge having found, in the proceeding appointing B as guardian, that the three brothers D, B and H were joint, there was a bar in the nature of estoppel to any claim as against a surety for any money with respect to the share that came to B and H by the deed of 1898.

Held—Bonds executed in proceedings under Act VIII of 1890, as administration bonds generally, must be construed according to the conditions contained in them.

The ground of estoppel cannot be pleaded against an infant. An administration bond can not be invalidated on the ground of mutual mistake and misrepresentation.

Debendra Nath Dutt and Banka Behary Banerji v. The Administrator General of Bengal, I. L. R 33 Cal. 713 referred to.

Hence the appellant was bound to pay for any wrongful conduct of the Defendant No. 1 with respect to all the properties to which the minor was entitled. But if a third person was wrongfully in possession, as H was, of a share of $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas and Defendant No. 1 did not receive the profits with respect to such share, neither he nor his surety would be liable for them.

vivos, so equally there can be an alienation by a shebait by his Will. But the distinction is obvious. There is nothing to pass under the Will, but there is something which can pass by an alienation inter vivos, by the then existing interest of the shebait. I am, therefore, with great respect, unable to concur in that decision, I think that there was nothing which Lalit Mohan could pass by his Will so far as relates to the shebaitship. As the title of the Plaintiff is dependent upon this supposed alienation by Lalit Mohan, his case must fail.

Then it is suggested that there is some usage in the family relating to the particular worship of this idol and to the shebaitship which would justify the alienation by Will. I do not think that is made out. The learned Judge of the Court of first instance did not think so. It appears from the proceedings in this case, that attempts have been made from time to time by certain members of the family to deal with this shebaitship by Will. It is clear from the terms of the decree, dated the 26th of August 1882 referred to in the proceedings that the alienation then made by Will failed. It is suggested that that was a case of alienation made by a Will to a stranger. That may be so: but the alienation in fact failed. As regards the other cases which are referred to, they seem to have been cases in which the bequest,—if I may rightly so call it—was to those who would have been the shebaits in the ordinary course of descent. Consequently, there was no object in challenging the Will on the point. I do not think any usage or established practice in the family has been made out, to justify the alienation.

In my opinion, the view taken by the Court of first instance is right, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MITRA, J.—I am of the same opinion. The case is one of hereditary shebaitship both under the Will of Chitra Dasi and under the general law. The status of Lalit Mohun was that of a shebait and as such he was in the same position as a manager of an infant heir. He had no power to alienate except for necessity or clear benefit to the Thakur. No case of necessity or benefit to the Thakur has, however, been pleaded or attempted to be made out by the evidence. The evidence of a family usage as giving the power to bequeath shebaitship by Will is also very meagre. Lalit Mohan's right to manage as a shebait must cease with his death and he had, in fact, nothing to bequeath.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree that Lalit Mohan could not alienate the office of shebaitship by Will. I wish to express no opinion on the question whether the office of shebaitship may be alienated by transaction inter vivos or, if so, under what conditions and I think that the question of usage does not affect the matter which is now before us. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

No. 1 OF 1907.

MACLEAN, C. J. HARINGTON, J FLETCHER, J. 1907. Heard, 18, November. Judgment, 6, December.	LAKHAN CHUNDER SEN and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. MODHU SUDAN SEN and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Dispossession - Action in ejectment, previous—Issue between Defendants—Original and Appellate judgments, period intervening—Right of action in suspense—Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), secs. 9 and 14, Sch. II, Arts. 142 and 144.

C's heirs brought a suit for possession against the respective heirs of B and M, claiming a certain share in a certain property in the possession of the heirs of B. In the judgment in the action pronounced on the 20th April 1903 upon an issue raised by the Defendants the heirs of B as between themselves and their co-Defendants the heirs of M, it was declared that the latter were entitled to a share in the property. The Appellate Court set aside on the 22nd February 1904 the judgment of the lower Court, so far as it affected M's heirs, on the ground that in a suit in ejectment no decree could be made against a co Defendant. M's heirs, then, on the 14th November 1904, instituted this suit for a declaration of their share in the property, for possession, partition and other reliefs, stating that they had been dispossessed on the 18th January 1892. The lower Court dismissed the suit, holding it to be barred by limitation.

Held on appeal—The Plaintiffs were entitled to deduction of the period between the 20th April 1903 when in the previous suit they obtained a decree in their favour and the 22nd February 1904, the date of the reversal of that decree by the Appellate Court, their right of action having been in suspense in the interval.

PULTENEY v. WARREN (3), EAST INDIA COMPANY v. CAMPION (4) referred to.

This was an action brought by the Plaintiffs for the ascertainment of their share in the property scheduled to the plaint in this suit, for possession, partition and other reliefs. The suit was filed on the 11th November 1904 and the Plaintiffs who were the heirs of one Moni Madhub Sen, alleged in their plaint, that Moni Madhub Sen was dispossessed on the 18th January 1892. The principal contention before the Court of first instance was whether the suit was barred by limitation, as more than 12 years had elapsed from the dispossession and the bringing of the suit. The Court of first instance holding it to be barred dismissed the suit. The Plaintiffs appealed.

The suit was brought under the following circumstances :—

One Guru Charan Sen died intestate

(1) 12 M. I. A. 244 (1868).
(2) 7 M. I. A. 357 (1859)
(3) 6 Vesey 92 (1801).
(4) 11 Bligh 187 (1837).

LAKHAN CHUNDER SEN v. MODHU SUDAN SEN.

on the 12th November 1872 leaving his widow, Sarat Kumari, and 3 sons, namely Bani Madhub Sen, Moni Madhub Sen and Chooni Lall Sen. Chooni Lall died on the 2nd November 1881, leaving a widow and several sons of whom the eldest was one Nemyo Charan Sen. A deed of declaration was executed on the 30th June 1891 in favour of Sarat Kumari by Bani Madhub and Moni Madhub and by that deed it was declared that Sarat Kumari was absolutely seized and possessed of the property in dispute and that she having called upon Bani Madhub and Moni Madhub to hand over the management of the property, they made it over to her. Nemye Charan Sen was an attesting witness to that deed. Sarat Kumari executed on the 18th January 1892 a conveyance of the property in dispute in favour of Bani Madhub, his wife, Nrita Moni Dasi, and his daughter-in law, Sarala Sundari Dasi, appointing them shebaits and conveying the property to them subject to the trusts for the performance of the worship of certain idols named in the indenture of conveyance. Sarat Kumari died on the 18th November 1892.

In 1896 all the sons of Chooni Lall, except Nemye Charan, instituted a suit in the High Court, being Suit No. 882 of 1896, for the possession of their share in the above property and for other reliefs. The Defendants in that suit at first, were, Bani Madhub, Moni Madhub, Nrito Moni, Sarada Sundari and Nemye. During the pendency of that litigation both Bani Madhub and Moni Madhub died and their heirs and representatives were brought on the record. The Plaintiffs in that suit stated in their plaint that the properties belonged to Guru Charan Sen, who was possessed of them up to the time of his death, subject to the worship of 2 idols, being private idols no one outside having any interest or concern in their worship. On Guru Charan's death his 3 sons succeeded to the possession of the properties in dispute and to the shebaitship. Since the execution of the Indenture of Conveyance dated the 18th January 1892 they had been excluded from the use and enjoyment of the above property. It was alleged that the deed of declaration was executed in order to save the said property from the hands of the creditors of Bani Madhub and Moni Madhub who had become heavily involved in debt. The claim of the Plaintiffs in that suit was supported by the heirs of Moni Madhub but was strongly resisted by the heirs of Bani Madhub, the really contesting Defendants. Their contention was that the property belonged to Sarat Kumari, who was seised of it absolutely, and not to Guru Charan, at the time of his death. One of the issues in the case raised at the instance of the heirs of Bani Madhub, as between themselves and the heirs of Moni Madhub, was whether the latter were entitled to any declaration or relief, and if so, then whether they could obtain such declaration without giving up the benefits received by them Henderson, J, who heard the case by his judgment pronounced on the 20 April 1903 held that the property belonged absolutely to Guru Charan Sen at the time of his death, decreed the claim of the Plaintiffs in that suit and declared the heirs of Moni Madhub Sen, the Plaintiffs in the present action, entitled to a $\frac{1}{3}$rd share in the property. The heirs of Bani Madhub appealed from that decision and the Appellate Court on the 22nd February 1904 upheld the judgment of Henderson, J., except so far as it related to the heirs of Moni Madhub. That portion of the judgment of the lower Court was upset on the ground that the action being virtually one of ejectment, the heirs of Moni Madhub were not entitled to get decree for possession as against their co Defendants, or any other decree.

The heirs of Moni Madhub thereupon, brought this action on the 11th November 1904, against the heirs of Bani Madhub and Chooni Lall. Bodilly, J., before whom the case came on dismissed the suit on the question of limitation delivering the following judgment:—

BODILLY, J.—This is an action brought by the Plaintiffs to obtain a declaration of the share in certain property, which he alleges to be joint family property, for partition, mesne-profits and other reliefs.

For the purpose of this judgment, it is only necessary that I should very briefly deal with the facts as they have been very fully dealt with in the judgments of Mr. Justice Henderson and of the Court of Appeal to both of which I shall have later to refer, and they are not of importance in deciding the point. I now, have to consider, which is in the nature of a preliminary objection, that no action will lie, inasmuch as from the pleadings it appears, that the action is barred by the Limitation Act.

One Guru Charan Sen died in the year 1872 leaving a widow, and three sons, Bani Madhub Sen, Moni Madhub Sen and Chuni Lal Sen. The present Plaintiffs are the descendants of Moni Madhub, and the Defendants are the widow and the descendants of the other two brothers.

Guru Charan was, during his lifetime, the owner of considerable immoveable property in this city and elsewhere, but he got into pecuniary difficulties and it is alleged, that for the purpose of protecting his property from the hands of his creditors, he dealt with his properties in various ways, which are very particularly dealt with in the judgment of Mr. Justice Henderson in the suit of Govind Chunder Sen v. Srimutty Nettomoni Dasi and in the appeal from that judgment to the Court of Appeal. That was a suit by the descendants of the youngest brother, Chuni Lal Sen, in ejectment in respect of the properties now in dispute and for a declaration as to their rights and shares. The Plaintiffs succeeded and were held entitled to a five-sixth share. In that suit the present Plaintiffs were made Defendants and in their written statement they supported the claim of the Plaintiffs and asked that a declaration should be made in their favour, that they were also entitled to a share in the disputed properties. The learned Judge made a decree in their favour declaring that they were entitled to $\frac{1}{3}$ share in the disputed properties. This portion of the decree was, however, set aside by the Court of Appeal on the ground, that inasmuch as the action was one in ejectment and not a partition suit, relief could not be given as between two co-Defendants and their Lordships said that the present Plaintiffs must, if so advised, bring a separate action to establish their

Mr. A. Chaudhuri (with him Mr. Mehta) for the 2nd Respondent contended that the document in its terms did not create a charge and that the provisions of the Stamp and Registration Acts (secs. 21, 49 and 80) not having been complied with the instrument could not operate as a charge.

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri for the 1st Respondent not called upon.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The only question we have to decide upon this appeal is whether the power-of-attorney of the 5th of August 1898 created a charge on the properties generally referred to in it, securing to the applicant's husband, whose representative she now is, certain moneys which she says were advanced for the purposes of the estate. I am doubtful, looking into the language of the document, whether it constitutes an equitable charge, seeing that any money to be received by the attorney in whose favour the power was given was to be paid not to himself but into the Bank not in his own name but in the name of the person giving the power. I will, however, assume in favour of the Appellant that the document did constitute an equitable charge in favour of the person to whom the power was given, but even then, the want of registration in compliance with the provisions of the Registration Act is fatal to the Plaintiff's case. It is quite clear under sec. 17 of that Act that if the document was one which purported to affect, or to create any interest in immoveable property, it was bound to be registered. Sec. 49 says that "No document required by sec. 17 to be registered shall affect any immoveable property comprised therein, . . . unless it has been registered in accordance with the provisions of this Act." When we look into the circumstances of this case, it appears that the document in question has not been registered in compliance with the provisions of the Act. It was admittedly stamped only with the stamp required for a power of attorney and not for a document creating an equitable charge and it was, apparently, so presented to the registering officer. If it was an equitable charge it is quite clear that it ought to have been entered in Book I, and certain particulars which are compulsorily required by sec. 21 of the Act relating to immoveable property ought to have been furnished. Sec. 21 says that "No non-testamentary document relating to immoveable property shall be accepted for registration unless it contains a description of such property sufficient to identify the same." That was not the case here—there was no such description—and in point of fact the document was entered not in Book I, which is a register of non-testamentary documents relating to immoveable property but was entered in Book IV which is a Miscellaneous Register. The case of Najibulla Mulla v. Nusir Mistri (1) is akin to the present. But, to my mind, it is sufficient to say that the document was not registered in accordance with the provisions of the Act and, therefore, under sec. 19, it could not affect any immoveable property comprised therein. I, therefore, think that the view taken by Mr. Justice Chitty is quite correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs

HARINGTON, J.—I agree. I will only add the observation that the fact that the parties accepted the document with an endorsement showing that it had not been registered in Book I, and the fact that no leave was obtained under sec. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act lead to the conclusion that the parties did not intend to create a charge by the document which was executed. For these reasons I think the appeal should be dismissed.

FLETCHER, J —I also agree.

ed, and for ascertainment of the rights of the parties thereunder, for a declaration that the Plaintiff was entitled to the turns of worship of the Thakur. Sree Sree Radha Gobind Jew, which was of the said Lalit Mohan Mullick and to the custody of all jewels, articles, etc, belonging to the said Thakur, established by one Chitra Dassee by an ekrarnama, dated the 13th Jaista 1227 with a postscript thereunder, dated the 17th Falgoon 1228.

The facts of the case together with arguments of Counsel and the judgment of Chitty, J., dismissing the Plaintiff's claim have already been fully reported and will appear from 11 C. W. N, p. 782.

The Plaintiff appealed against the decision of the lower Court.

Mr. Garth (with him Messrs. B. Chakravarti and B. K. Lahiri) for the Plaintiff-Appellant pressed the points relied upon in the lower Court.

Mr. Sinha (with him Mr. B. C. Mitter) for the Defendant-Respondent, Gopessur Mullick, not called upon to reply.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The question which arises on this appeal is a very short one; and, I think it may be properly stated thus, whether Lalit Mohan Mullik, who was the shebait of a certain idol was entitled to deal with it by his Will as he purported to do.

It appears that the endowment of the idol was created many years ago by the Will of one Chitra Dasi, and eventually the said Lalit Mohan became the shebait. He purported to bequeath by this Will the shebaitship after his death, first to his widow, and then to his nephew, Rajeswar Mullick, the present Plaintiff. Lalit Mohan died; and, Rajeswar now brings this suit to have it declared that he is entitled to the shebaitship. He is opposed by his brother, Gopeswar Mullick, who says that Lalit Mohan had no power to bequeath the shebaitship by his Will. That is the whole question in the suit.

No doubt, there are cases and authorities for the proposition that a shebait may by an act inter vivos, alienate the shebaitship; but I think I am fairly stating the result of those cases when I say that such alienations are not regarded with much favour, and that somewhat special circumstances must exist to support them. I need not go through the authorities which I think substantiate that proposition. But all of them relate to alienations inter vivos, and with the exception of one authority, to which I will refer in a moment, there is none for the proposition that a shebait can by his Will bequeath the shebaitship. On principle I do not see how he can do so; for, the question at once arises, what has he to bequeath or alienate under his Will? A shebait is a manager or a quasi trustee for the benefit of the idol. His office endures only for his life: his Will only comes into operation on his death. What is, there then for him to alienate by his Will? Nothing. In the case of Mancharam v. Pransankar (1), on which the learned Counsel for the Appellant relies, the alienation no doubt was by Will: but the learned Judges seem to have proceeded on the view, that because in certain cases there may be an alienation by a shebait by act inter rights and that the present Defendants would be at liberty to raise any defence that might be available against them and which were not available as against the Plaintiffs in the former suit

The Plaintiffs' present action is to establish those rights. After the case had been opened by the Counsel for the Plaintiffs, Mr. S. R. Dass, the Counsel for the Defendants, Mr. C. R. Dass raised a preliminary objection that inasmuch as by para. 22 of the plaint, it is admitted that the Plaintiffs were dispossessed on 18th January 1892; and as the present action was not started until 14th November 1901, more than twelve years had elapsed from the dispossession and the bringing of the action and the claim is barred by sec. 9 of the Limitation Act.

Mr. S. R. Dass, on behalf of the Plaintiffs, in answer to the objection, says that inasmuch as the judgment of Mr. Justice Henderson was given in favour of the present Plaintiffs on 20th April 1903, that there was a satisfaction of the Plaintiffs' present cause of action at that time, and that having regard to the decision of the Privy Council, in the case of Mussamat Ranee Surnomoyee v. Soshee Mukhee Burmonia (1), when that decision was reversed a new cause of action arose at the date of the reversal, and alternatively, he says that, even if a new cause of action did not arise, still the statute did not run against his clients during the time the decree in their favour remained unreversed, which was not, until 22nd February 1904, and that, therefore, he is in time.

Mr. S. R Dass has cited in his argument several cases in addition to the one I have named above and noticibly amongst them, are the case of Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (5), and the case of Dindoyal Paramanick v. Radha Kissori Dabee (6) and several others, but I think that they, are all distinguishable from the present case and I will deal with them briefly later on, as I think, they should be only dealt with as being subsidiary to the first point and only arising in case I am wrong in the decision, to which I have come in respect of that point. The point is, was the decision of Mr. Justice Henderson a decree in a suit between two parties to the suit who would be bound by his decree. I do not think it was A decree is defined in sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code as being "the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed" "when such adjudication" "decides the suit" and a decree holder is said to be "any person in whose favour a decree or order capable of execution has been made."

The Court of Appeal having held that inasmuch as the suit, in which the decree was passed, was a suit in ejectment, Mr. Justice Henderson's judgment cannot stand, it being a decree as between two co Defendants, they have held, in my opinion, that the decree is not a valid decree and is one, that Mr. Justice Henderson had no jurisdiction to make, and that it is not merely a question of his wrongly having adjudicated as between the parties, for in the case that he had before him, being one in ejectment, the mere fact that one Defendant raises an issue in his written statement against another Defendant, does not make it a "suit" as between those parties which the Court has jurisdiction to try, and therefore in my opinion, the decree was ultra vires.

The cases in Mussamat Ranee Surnomoyee v. Soshee Mukhee Burmonia (1) and Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (5) that have been quoted by the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff, in my opinion, do not apply to this case, even if I am wrong in the conclusion to which I have just come, for the question in both these cases which are the leading cases in point, was—did the decree or order for the time being in force, "satisfy" the Plaintiff's cause of action?

In the case in Mussamat Ranee Surnomoyee v. Soshee Mukhee Burmonia (1), the facts are shortly these :—The Plaintiff was a zemindar and she granted putni taluks to the Defendants who failed to pay their rents, and consequently she put up the taluk for sale under the regulation then in force, the purchase price greatly exceeded the amount of the rent due and she was paid in full the amount of the rent due. The sale was eventually set aside on the ground of irregularity and she had to refund the amount of the purchase-price to the purchaser, she then sued to recover the arrears of rent and it was held that the cause of action accrued at the time, the sale was set aside and that she could not have sued for the rent before, as she had chosen to adopt the procedure under the Bengal Registration Act VIII of 1819 and although the sale was held to be morbid, owing to an irregularity still until it was set aside and she held the proceeds of it and "she was in the position of a person whose claim had been satisfied and that the suit might have been successfully met by a plea to that effect?"

In the case reported in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (5), the same principle is, I think, applied. The Defendant in that case owed money to the Plaintiff on an account stated, and an arrangement was come to between them, that the Defendant should sell certain land to the Plaintiff, and in respect of the purchase-price, should give credit for the amount due from him to the Plaintiff.

The Defendant refused to complete his bargain and a suit for specific performance having been brought, failed, although it succeeded in the Court of first instance. In an action for the money due on the account stated instituted after the decree in the suit for specific performance had been set aside, the Defendant desired to avail himself of the defence of the statute of limitation, but unsuccessfully, for the Privy Council held that whilst the contract was in existence between the parties, the Plaintiff was in a position of a person whose claim was satisfied and he could not, during that time, have sued to recover the money.

There are other cases that have been cited to me, but they do not in my opinion, vary the principle that has been laid down by the Privy Council in these two cases, i.e., that it is only where as between the two parties to a suit the claim has been satisfied in such a way that a plea to that effect would be a bar to the action, that the statute of limitation ceases to run.

LAKHAN CHUNDER SEN v. MODHU SUDAN SEN.

In the present case there was, in my opinion, no such satisfaction. All, Mr. Justice Henderson did, was to make a declaration as to the nature of the Plaintiff's rights but no execution could have issued on such declaration and the Plaintiff was not in the position of a decree-holder within the provisions of sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He might have brought an action for partition as he has done now, and the fact, that he had obtained the declaration from Mr. Justice Henderson could not, in my opinion, have been pleaded in bar of such suit, and therefore it does not come within the principle of the cases relied upon by the Plaintiffs.

The second point raised by the Plaintiffs as to there being a period between the time of the decision of Mr. Justice Henderson and its reversal by the Court of Appeal, during which the statute did not run, depends upon the same principles and must fail on the same grounds.

I, therefore, hold that this action is barred by the Limitation Act and must fail. The Defendants who appear, will have costs on scale No. 2, including the reserved costs

From the above decision the Plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Mr. Garth (with him Messrs. S. R. Das and A. N. Chaudhuri) for the Appellants. If the period between the date of the judgment of Henderson, J., and that of the appellate Court reversing the judgment so far as we are concerned, be excluded, then we are in time. We were declared entitled to a ⅓rd share by the judgment of Henderson, J., and so long as that judgment stood our claim to a share in the property was satisfied,—the question before the Court being substantially the same as the question of our claim now: Mussamut Ranee Surnomoyee v. Soshee Mukhee Burmonia (1), Dindoyal Paramanick v. Radha Kissori Dabee (6), Bissu Kuar v Dhum Singh (5), Subbarau Nayudu v. Yagana Pantalu (7), Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (8) I was not sleeping upon my claim Can it be said that I was not prosecuting my claim bond fide? Pran Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Rookea Begum (2). As long as Henderson, J.'s judgment remained in force I was precluded from raising that question in another suit Gobind Ch. Koondoo v. Taruck Ch. Bose (9), Shadal Khan v. Aminullah Khan (10) Any attempt to do so would have been met with the answer that while that judgment stood every one was bound by it. It was not until I was freed by the appellate Court judgment that I could start a fresh litigation.

Mr. Sinha (with him Messrs. C. R Das and B. C. Mitter) for the Respondents.—To bring the case under sec 14 of the Limitation Act bond fide prosecution of the claim in a Court which is unable to entertain it has to be shown. In the present case the Court was competent to entertain it. Moreover the benefit of sec. 14 cannot be claimed unless it is expressly pleaded Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain Mitter (11). It must be shown that the result of the Appellate Court judgment was the creation of a new obligation or a new right. [Huro Pershad Roy v. Gopal Das Dutt (12), *W. That judgment was not a satisfaction to their claim since it did not give them all that they wanted. The plaint must contain demand of relief (secs. 48 and 50), and a Defendant cannot claim a relief. It is only in a set off that a Defendant can be said to prosecute a claim Hafizunessa Khatum v. Bhyrab Ch. Das (16), Issuree Dassee v. Abdool Khalak (17).

Mr. Garth in reply.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The only question we have to deal with on this appeal is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The facts of the case, so far as are material, are as follows : It appears that in the year 1896, the sons of one Chuni Lall Sen, instituted a suit in this Court, being Suit. No, 882 of 1896 against, amongst others, the present Appellants or their predecessors in-title and the present Respondents or their predecessors-in-title, and the object of that suit was to have their shares ascertained in certain property, for possession, an account and incidental relief. The present Appellants are the sons and heirs of one Moni Madhab Sen, who was an original Defendant in that suit, but died during its pendency, and the present Appellants were brought on the record as party Defendants in the place of their deceased father In that suit, an issue was raised as between themselves and the sons of Bani Madhub Sen, who were the really contesting Defendants in that suit and who are the Respondents on the present appeal, as to whether the sons and heirs of Moni Madhub Sen were entitled to a ⅓ share in the premises scheduled to the plaint in that suit ; and they supported the case of the Plaintiffs. It would appear from para. 17 of the written statement in the present suit that this issue was actually invited by and raised at the instance of the heirs and representatives of Bani Madhab Sen, the present Respondents. The position of the present Appellants in the previous suit was the same as that of the Plaintiffs in that suit In that suit the present Appellants and their mother, Sreemutty Munjuri Dasi, were declared entitled to a ⅓ share in the scheduled property and entitled to obtain possession of the share to which they were held to be so entitled. That suit was a long and expensive one, and was fought out with the result I have stated, the Plaintiffs in that suit being declared entitled to ⅙ of the scheduled properties. By the decree in that suit which is dated the 20th of April 1903, it was expressly declared that the present Appellants were jointly entitled to one-third part or share of the property in dispute and the present Respondents were to deliver to them "quiet possession of the shares of the said premises to which they have been declared entitled as aforesaid." No doubt, in strictness the present Appellants ought to have been transferred from the category of Defendants and joined as co-Plaintiffs. But, as now appears, the issue I have referred to, as to the rights of the present Appellants to a ⅓ share of the scheduled property, was at the invitation of the present Respondents decided in that suit. The present Respondents or their predecessors-in-title appealed against that judgment, and on the 22nd of February 1904 the Appellate Court confirmed the decree in the main but set aside the decree so far as it related to the present Appellants. Whether the appellate Court would have arrived at that conclusion if it had then known, as this Court now knows, that the question as to the right to the one third share was raised and decided in the previous suit at the instance of the present Respondents or their predecessors-in-title, is, to say the least, (I say so because I was a party to the judgment) probably open to doubt. But no doubt the decree was reversed and we must deal with the matter on the footing of that reversal. In this state of circumstances, the learned Judge in the Court of first instance held that the suit was barred: and the Plaintiffs in the present suit have appealed. Their case is that their rights must be taken to have been suspended between the 20th of April 1903, the date of the decree in the first suit, and the 22nd of February 1904, the date of the reversal of that decree, and it is conceded that if this period be excluded on the ground that their rights were so suspended, the present suit is within time. It is also contended that sec. 14 of the Limitation Act covers the present case. As to the latter point, we feel grave doubt whether the case falls within that section, but it is unnecessary to decide that point, as we think the present Appellants are entitled to succeed upon the other point.

It is clear that under the decree of the 20th of April 1903, the present Appellants with others were declared entitled to ⅓rd share in the property and that the present Respondents were ordered to deliver up quiet possession to them of this share. It is perfectly true that that decree was passed in a suit which quâ the position of parties may be said not to have been properly framed. No doubt if the attention of the Court, when it passed that decree, had been called to this, it would, in the circumstances, have transferred the present Appellants from the category of Defendants into that of co-Plaintiffs. It seems to us, however, that this was a decree which, so long as it stood undischarged, was susceptible of execution at the hands of the present Appellants, and whilst that decree existed, it was not open to them in the circumstances to institute a fresh suit for the attainment of the very object which had been successfully attained by them in the previous suit. We think therefore, in these circumstances that the right of the Plaintiffs to bring an action to recover the property was suspended between the 20th of April 1903 and the 22nd of February 1904, and that the case falls within the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the cases of Mus- samat Runee Sarnomoyee v. Soshee Mukhee Burmonia (1) and of Pran Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Rookea Begum (2). It is conceded that at the time of the institution of the first suit, the Plaintiffs' claim was not barred.

In this connection the language of Lord Eldon in Pulteney v. Warren (3), has some application: "If there be a principle, upon which Courts of Justice ought to act without scruple, it is this; to relieve parties against that injustice occasioned by its own acts or oversights at the instance of the party, against whom the relief is sought. That proposition is broadly laid down in some of the cases." This view was approved of by the House of Lords in the East Indian Company v. Campion (4).

For these reasons, we are unable to concur in the view taken by the learned Judge in the Court of first instance. The appeal must be allowed with costs both here and in the Court below and the case must be remitted to be tried out on the merits if, after the contest which took place in the previous suit, the present Respondents think that there are still any merits to be discussed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 382 OF 1905.

BRETT, J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1907. Heard, 7 and 8, January. Judgment, 16, January.	MATHURA NATH CHATTOPADHYA and anr., Defendants, Appellants, v. SIB CHANDRA BOSE, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Fishery—Independent julkar—Proof—Navigable river—Survey map—Map for private purposes—Comparative value.

Unless a person can establish his right to a fishery independent of his right to his estate he can have no title to any such right in a navigable river or any part thereof lying outside the boundaries of his estate.

What evidence is necessary to prove the grant of an independent right of fishery in a navigable river discussed.

Upon the documentary evidence it was held that the lower Appellate Court was in error in finding that Plaintiff had proved an independent julkur.

The presumption of law is that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, survey maps prepared for public purposes by responsible officers of Government are entitled to more reliance than maps prepared for private purposes in a private suit.

This was an appeal preferred on the 9th of March 1905, against the decree of L. Palit, Esq , District Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 13th of January 1905, modifying that of Babu Amrita Lal Mukerjee, Munsif, 2nd Court, at Chikandi, dated the 13th of May 1903.

The suit out of which the present appeal arose was brought by the Plaintiff to recover possession of his share (one anna) of fishery rights in a certain portion of a river. The Plaintiff obtained a decree and four sets of Defendants preferred four appeals to the lower Appellate Court. The Plaintiff's case was that the portion of the river which was the subject-matter of the suit was part of the river known as Nadi Narikora alias Shore Nadi Narikora, of the jalkar rights in which the Plaintiff and his co-sharer were the proprietors. The defence was that the jalkar in suit appertained to jalkar mehals Ariel Khan. The case which was for decision before the District Judge will appear from paras. 4, 5 and 6 of his judgment which were as follows:—

"The main contention on behalf of the Appellants is that the Plaintiff and his co-sharers have not a right of fishery, strictly so called, i.e., a profit a prendre in alieno solo, derived (this being a case of the right of fishery in a navigable river) by a grant from the State or by prescription; but that whatever right of fishery they had was one of predial or territorial fishery, dependant on their ownership of the subsoil and confined to the limits of such ownership. It is further contended that the right of the Defendant, on the other hand, is based on an absolute right of fishery in the whole river (which is a navigable one) created by a grant from the State, such right subsisting even if the river changes its course and flows over lands belonging to private individuals.

"I need not discuss in this case the question as to how far the grant by Government of the right of fishery in a navigable river (the bed of which belongs to the Government) continues to be operative when the river alters its course and flows over land which is the private property of others, because, in this case, it is ground common to all the parties in these appeals that such a grant is not affected by any such change in the course of the river. All the parties in these appeals are agreed that the right of fishery acquired in a navigable river, independently of the ownership of the bed of the river, by grant or by prescription, is a right which continues no matter whether the river has changed its course so as to flow over the private property of other people. That being so, it is not necessary to enter into a discussion of this question.

"The questions that have to be considered are (1) Is the Plaintiff's jalkar right in Nadi Narikora an independent right of fishery in a navigable river, or is it a merely predial or territorial right confined to that portion of the river, which flows over his land; and (2) what is the situation and extent of Narikora Nadi in which the Plaintiff has right of fishery?"

The other facts appear from the judgment.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Plaintiff Respondent as part proprietor in two zemindaries, Pergunnah Mahabatpur Bander Khala Mouzah Mohul

MATHURA NATH CHATTOPADHYA v. SIB CHANDRA BOSE.

Chur Haya Hissa 8 annas Mudafat Bhowani Churn Rai, bearing Touzi No. 21 of the Dacca Collectorate and No. 5577 of the Faridpur Collectorate, and Pergunnah Mahabatpur Bhander Khala Mouzah Mohal Chur Haya Hissa 8 annas Mudafat Raj Kumar Rai, bearing Touzi No. 17 of the Dacca Collectorate and 5574 of the Faridpur Collectorate, brought this suit to recover possession of a jalkar or right of fishery in a stretch of river which appears to be about 15 or 16 miles in length and which he described as jalkar Nari Kora Nadi otherwise known as Sore Nadi Nari Kora—alleging that it appertained to his zemindaries Nos 17 and 21, that he and his co-sharers had all along been in possession of it till the 30th December 1899, when they were dispossessed by an order of the Criminal Court under sec. 145, Cr. P. C, declaring the principal Defendants to be in possession and confirming them in possession. The other shares in the jalkar were alleged to belong to the pro formâ Defendants as part proprietors with the Plaintiff in the two zemindaries.

The Principal Defendants denied the title set up by the Plaintiff. They alleged that Nari Kora Nadi never formed a part of any main or navigable river but that it was a branch merely of the Puddabati, and that this branch had dried up. They contended that the jalkar in suit was included in their independent jalkar mehal, bearing Touzi No. 504 in the Dacca Collectorate and No 6301 in the Faridpur Collectorate, that its name was Ramkristo Jalkaria taluk, that it was entered as a separate estate in the Touzi Roll, bearing a sadar jama for Rs 319 13-10 2, and that it covered the Ariel Khan river and portions of the Padma and Bhubaneswar rivers. They stated that the jalkar claimed by the Plaintiff extend over 15 or 16 miles of the Ariel Khan river, and was not included within the boundaries of the Plaintiff's two zemindaries.

A large number of issues were framed but for the purpose of this appeal the 2nd and 3rd issues only are of importance. The findings on the other issues have not been contested. The decision of the 2nd issue depends on the decision of the 3rd issue. For the present therefore it is only necessary to discuss the 3rd issue. It is framed as follows: "whether the Plaintiff has his alleged title to the disputed jalkar." The Plaintiff's title to Nari Kora jalkar, if such a jalkar be in existence at present, is not denied by the principal Defendants. Nor is the right of the principal Defendants to the independent jalkar, Ram Kristo Jalkaria, denied by the Plaintiff. The main questions requiring determination for the decision of the issue were (1) what was the nature of the Plaintiff's jalkar? Was it merely a territorial right of fishery confined to the limits of the Plaintiff's zemindaries, and as such one which would be lost should the stream in which it existed have dried up or have been diverted to a bed outside the limits of the zemindaries? Or was it a franchise or incorporal right of fishery, the subject of an independent grant from Government, which gave them a right of fishery in a stream or river wherever the channel of the stream or river might shift to, and which right was independent of any title to the bed of the stream or the adjacent soil? (2) If the Plaintiff has a right of fishery in a portion of the river over which the right in suit is claimed, does his right extend over the whole of the portion of the river in which it is claimed in the suit, or if only over a portion, then over what portion?

In support of their claim the Plaintiff relied first on the result of certain resumption proceedings taken by the Collector of Faridpur in 1860—the result of which was that the jalkar which the Collector then proposed to resume was released by order of the Divisional Commissioner dated the 15th June 1861: also on certain judgments in suits in which the Plaintiff's father, the predecessor-in-title of the pro forma Defendants, and the predecessors in-title of some of the principal Defendants were parties (Ex. 25, 26, 10, 20 and 21 in the Court of the Munsif). They also examined 13 witnesses to prove that the reaches of the river in suit formed the Nari Kora jalkar.

The principal Defendants examined 23 witnesses to prove that the portion of the river in which the Plaintiff claims the right of fishery form a portion of the Ariel Khan river, that it was included in the fishery mehal which was settled with the ancestors of the principal Defendants, and that therefore the Plaintiff had no right to it. They also adduced documentary evidence and relied on the survey maps to support their case.

The Munsif found that the portion of the river in suit was the Nari Kora river and that the Plaintiff had made out his title to the right of fishery claimed in that portion of the river. He accordingly gave him a decree for khas possession against the principal Defendants with costs.

On appeal the judgment and decree of the Munsif were confirmed by the District Judge with this modification that it was to be stated in the decree that Plaintiff's right was confirmed to one anna share only and the case map was ordered to be made part of the decree in order to show distinctly the limits of the Plaintiff's jalkar and so to avoid future disputes.

Against the judgment and decree of the District Judge on appeal the principal Defendants have appealed to this Court. There are in all three appeals, No. 382 of 1905 by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, No. 891 of 1905 by Defendant No. 12 and No. 959 of 1905 by Defendant No. 22. They have been heard together and the same arguments apply to all.

In dealing with the appeal to his Court the District Judge has noticed in his judgment that the decision of the case must depend on the determination of the two points which we have already mentioned in this judgment as arising under the 3rd issue framed in the Court of first instance, and we think that in paras. 4, 5 and 6 of the judge's judgment as printed in the paper-book of the appeal he has set out clearly and correctly the case which was before him for decision.

In the first point he has come to the conclusion that the Plaintiff, has established his title to an independent jalkar right in the river Narikora, and on the second he states that it being admitted on behalf of the Appellants that an independent right of fishery in a navigable river is not effected by a change of the course of the river, the Plaintiff has succeeded in establishing his title to the jalkar in suit.

On behalf of the Appellants it has been urged that the evidence on which the District Judge has relied is not such as in law could support his finding that the Plaintiff had established his title to an independent jalkar, that he has not given proper consideration to the right set up by the Defendants or properly understood the evidence on which it is based, that in estimating the value as evidence of the maps which were filed by both parties in the suit he has erred in law in drawing a presumption favourable to the accuracy of a map prepared for private purposes in a private suit in preference to the survey maps prepared under the authority of the Government, that he has suggested reasons for distrusting the accuracy of the survey map of 1859 60 which it is impossible to support or justify, and that he has been misled in dealing with the evidence by the value which he has attached to that document.

Neither from the judgment of the Court of the first instance nor from that of the Court of the first appeal have we been able to ascertain whether the stretch of river in which the Plaintiff in his suit claimed rights of fishery lies within the limits of the two estates of which he is a part proprietor. That stretch of river seems to be 15 or 16 miles in length and the case for the Defendants as presented to us has been that a considerable portion of that stretch of river lies outside the territorial limits of the Plaintiff's estates Unless then the Plaintiff could establish that he had a right to the fishery independent of his right to his estates it is clear that under the law he could have no title to any such right in a navigable river or any part of a navigable river lying outside the boundaries of his estates. In the case of Prosunno Coomar Sircar v. Ram Coomar Paroey.(1) and in the Full Bench case of Hori Das Mal v. Mahomed Jaki (2) it is clearly laid down what evidence is necessary to prove the grant of an independent right of fishery in a navigable river.

Where fishery mehals, that is to say, rights of fishery in navigable rivers independent of the estates through which they pass, have been granted by Government, and where separate estates paying separate revenue to Government have been created it is usual to find some entry of such estate in the papers prepared at the time of the decennial settlement. So far as the independent right of fishery claimed by the contesting Defendants is concerned they have produced a copy of the entry relating to it in the Mahalwari Register of 1857-60 and this entry shows that for the jalkar the revenue payable to Government was Rs. 317-13-10½.

The Plaintiff however has produced no such document and in support of his title he has relied on the following evidence which the District Judge has accepted as sufficient to establish his title to an independent grant of fishery in a navigable river either inside or outside the territorial limits of his estates.

The first document is Ex. 25, a judgment in suit No. 15 of 1854 instituted by Ananda Mohun Pal and others against the father of the Plaintiff and others for recovery of possession of fishery rights in Narikora river on the allegation that it was a branch of the Padmabati river, and to have set aside an order passed under Act IV of 1840 declaring the Basu Defendants (predecessors of the present Plaintiff) to be in possession. The Basu Defendants claimed the jalkar as included in Pargana Mahabatpore Banderkola, the revenue for the jalkar being Rs 8-8. The suit was dismissed This judgment is relied on as establishing the title of the Plaintiffs to the jalkar and as proving that even then the jalkar was claimed as an independent jalkar. The District Judge has accepted it as proving these two facts.

(1) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 53 (1878).
(2) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 434 (1885).

MATHURA NATH CHATTOPADHYA v. SIB CHANDRA BOSE.

We are unable to agree with the District Judge that this document can be accepted as proving that the jalkar was claimed as an independent jalkar. Even from the statement of the case as given in the judgment of the District Judge it is clear that the Defendants pleaded that the jalkar was one held in connection with their zemindari, and in our opinion the only possible meaning of this expression is that it was one dependent on the zemindari and included within it. The fact that the revenue of the fishery was separately set out in the settlement of the estate made by Government with the predecessors in-title of the Plaintiffs, would be no indication that the jalkar was separate or independent from the estate. In determining the Government revenue to be fixed for an estate the officers of Government had to take into consideration the profits from all sources in each estate which the proprietor was then deriving and to assess the revenue on the basis of those profits: and in cases where profits were derived from fisheries or other such like sources of income within the estate it is not unusual to find that the Government revenue is calculated on all separately, the total making up the revenue for the whole estate. The mere separate specification of the amount of revenue calculated on the basis of the profits realised from fisheries within the estate could not be taken to be proof that there was a separate grant of a fishery independent of the estate. Nor is it reasonable to suppose that a person having independent rights to a fishery irrespective of his estate would consent to have his separate estate in that fishery and the revenue due in respect of it amalgamated with his rights and the revenue of his landed estate. Further, if any such amalgamation of two separate estates had been made we should expect that some official record of the same would have been prepared which the Plaintiff could have produced in support of the rights he claims in the present suit. We think then that the document relied on neither proves the assertion of an independent right by the Plaintiff's predecessors in-title nor that they had such a title.

It is also clear from the judgment of the District Judge that from that judgment the boundaries of the jalkar in dispute in that suit could not be clearly ascertained.

Further in that suit the predecessors of Defendant No. 42 put in an objection claiming that the jalkar was a portion of their jalkar Ariel Khan. The suit was dismissed, but that was no decision as between the Defendants in that suit and the predecessors-in-title of Defendant No. 42 with regard to the title set up by the latter. The decision in that suit cannot be held therefore to amount to a decision in favour of the title set up by the predecessors-in-interest of the Plaintiff as against the claim advanced by the predecessors of Defendant 42.

It can only be held to determine that the Plaintiffs in that suit failed to establish their title as against the Defendants in that suit.

The next documents on which the District Judge relies are the map Ex. 34 prepared for the purposes of that case and the survey map of 1859, and on these documents, which are on the face of them contradictory, he arrives at a conclusion which is not supported by the latter, viz., that with the exception of thak halka 1904 in the Revenue Survey Map the whole channel of the Ariel Khan river between the Ganges and the junction of that halka with the river Narikora had dried up. In fact he holds that in two years, i e, between 1857 and 1859, the bed of a large river like the Ariel Khan had entirely disappeared for a distance of some 10 or 15 miles. This is in our opinion a finding which is not supported by the survey map.

The next documents relied on by the Plaintiffs were exhibits 23 and 24, the orders passed by the Collector of Faridpur and the Divisional Commissioner in the proceedings taken under Reg. II of 1819 for the purpose of resuming the jalkars described as Narikora alias Ariel Khan and Nadi Moynakata alias Keskabpur Khal" and settling them with other parties. In those proceedings the predecessors of the Plaintiff who were Defendants put in objections claiming the jalkar as appertaining to their two estates Mudafat Raj Kumar and Mudafat Bhobani Churn Roy in Pargana Mahabatpur Bunder Kola, while the claimants Guru Prosad Roy and others claimed the jalkars as appertaining to their estate Pargana Vikrampur. The Collector in his robakari dated 2nd April 1861 directed the resumption of the jalkars, but on appeal the Divisional Commissioner on the 15th June 1861 set aside the order of the Collector and released the jalkars from the claim of Government.

These documents are relied on, and have been accepted by the District Judge as proving that the jalkar claimed in the present suit was then released as a jalkar belonging to the Defendants.

It is to be observed that in those proceedings the jalkars are described as in portions of the river extending from the west of the river Padma up to the east of Ariel Khan. This description is hardly consistent with the case of the Plaintiffs which the District Judge has accepted that the upper portion of the Ariel Khan river had dried up between 1857 and 1859, but rather favours the case of the contesting Defendants.

Nor is it consistent with the case of the Plaintiff that the jalkar was an independent jalkar. It "was claimed as appertaining to estates of the Defendants," i. e., the predecessors of the present Plaintiff, and the papers referred to in the robakari of the Commissioner show that the jalkar jama was mentioned in them in the schedules and kismuts ap pertaining to the estates and in the chowhaddi milani papers. This certainly goes to support the opposite conclusion, namely, that the jalkar was then released not as an independent jalkar but as a jalkar dependent and appertaining to the Defendants' estates.

The Plaintiffs next relied on the judgments of the original and appeal Courts in two suits, No. 221 of 1861 and No. 50 of 1862 (Ex. 19 and 21 in the Munsif's Court). The first was instituted by the predecessors of Defendants 1 and 2 against the predecessors of the Plaintiff and the latter by the proprietors of Bikrampur. Both were for recovery of possession of portions of a jalkar and for setting aside an order under Act IV of 1840. The predecessors of Defendants 1 and 2 claimed the jalkar as a portion of their jalkar Ariel Khan. Both suits were dismissed. The District Judge in accepting these documents as supporting the Plaintiff's title in the present suit, at the same time remarks that "the exact extent of the river in dispute in these suits cannot be accurately ascertained from the documents filed:" and, though he appears to hold that suit No. 50 of 1862 covered no portion of the land in dispute in the present suit, he adds that he thinks suit No. 221 of 1861 probably related to a portion of the river in dispute in this suit. This can hardly be accepted as a distinct finding in favour of the present Plaintiff.

Lastly the Plaintiff relied on the judgment in the suit No. 710 of 1867 instituted by the predecessors of the present Plaintiff and his co-sharers. This was apparently the outcome of the previous litigation and was also dismissed.

At most these judgments can be accepted as proving that the predecessors of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 failed to recover possession from the predecessors of the Plaintiff of certain jalkars which may or may not have formed portions of the jalkar now in dispute, and failed. There is nothing to show that the portion of the river in which the jalkars were then claimed lay outside the limits of the Plaintiff's estates or that their predecessors claimed them by virtue of any grant which gave them a right of fishery in a portion of a navigable river irrespective of whether it was included in their estates or not. In fact the only possible inference to be drawn from those papers is that the portions of water in which the fishery rights were claimed lay within the Plaintiff's estates and were claimed by them as appertaining to those estates.

The fact too that the jama for the jalkars was only Rs. 8-8 supports the inference that the right of fishery only extended over water within the estates of the present Plaintiff and was not an independent right of fishing in a navigable river extending, as it must have then extended if the Plaintiff's case were true, over some 10 miles or more, or, as now claimed, over 15 or 16 miles.

In 1899 proceedings were taken under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., in the Magistrate's Court regarding the jalkars in dispute in the present suit and an order in favour of the contesting Defendants was passed.

There can be no doubt that in the present suit the onus lay on the Plaintiff to prove his title. The title which he has essayed to prove is that the jalkar which he claims is the subject of an independent grant from Government. The documentary evidence on which he has relied entirely fails to support any such title and we are of opinion that the District Judge has erred in law in holding that they support such a title. The inference which he has drawn from the document is one of law and not one merely of fact and we are unable to accept the contention of the learned pleader for the Respondents that the present appeal is concluded by those findings.

In dealing with the documents relating to the resumption proceedings in 1861 the District Judge has misstated the findings of the Divisional Commissioner. There is no finding that the jalkar was an independent jalkar in a navigable river under which the predecessors-in-title of the Plaintiffs had a right of fishery in that river outside the limits of their estates and wherever the channel might shift to. The description of the jalkar given in those proceedings and the pleadings leaves in our minds no doubt that the jalkar which the Revenue authorities then sought to resume was included within the territorial limits of the present Plaintiff's estates, and was claimed by their predecessor as appertaining to those estates. It is in our opinion impossible to hold that in one estate paying revenue to Government two distinct estates were included, one involving a territorial right and the other a franchise or incorporal right of fishery wholly independent of the territorial right. The grounds on which the District Judge has held that there was such an amalgamation of rights are insufficient in law, and he has been misled by the opinion which he formed of the legal effect of those documents.

We also are of opinion that the Judge was in error in stating that in the different suits in which the Plaintiff's predecessors-in-title were concerned in 1857 and from 1861 to 1867 the title which they put forward was that the jalkar was independent of their estates and that that claim was upheld in every Court. The judgments in those suits which are relied on by the Plaintiff clearly prove that the right claimed throughout was one appertaining to the zemindaries and that it was regarded as such by the different Courts. There is no suggestion in any of them of an independent grant.

In dealing with the maps we are also of opinion that the District Judge has fallen into serious error. He relies entirely on the map prepared in Suit No. 15 of 1851. The map is a rough one prepared by an amin. In notes attached to it, there is a statement that the description of the different places cannot be relied on, and that it is to be used only for the purposes of that suit. Yet the District Judge has relied on that map and the description and names which are given in it of the different rivers and streams in preference to the survey map of 1859-1860. The learned pleader for the Respondents admits that he cannot support one at least of the District Judge's reasons for distrusting the survey map, which is that "Government was about that time trying to ignore the jalkar Narikora and Moynakata and resume it as the property of Government." It is impossible to believe that the officers of Government, responsible for the preparation of the survey maps, would intentionally have misstated facts and misnamed rivers to support proceedings which the Revenue officers were to institute two years afterwards. The presumption of law certainly is that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, survey maps prepared for public purposes by responsible officers of Government are entitled to more reliance, than maps prepared for private purposes in a private suit, and we are of opinion that the District Judge erred in law in placing greater weight as evidence on the map prepared in the Suit No. 15 of 1854. Further it is to be observed that the amin's map prepared in that suit was not drawn to scale and there is nothing to prove, even if the various rivers and streams are correctly named in it, that the map is any indication of the respective size and importance of each. It is admitted that Ariel Khan has all along been a large river running out of the ganges and it seems to us impossible to hold in the face of the evidence afforded by the survey map that the Ariel Khan river disappeared and dried up for 10 or 15 miles between 1857 and 1859 and that the river Narikora took its place for that distance.

The survey map corrected up to 1875 which seems to have been filed by the Defendants, but which is not noticed by either of the lower Courts, goes to support the inference to be drawn from the survey map of 1859-1860.

Whether the thak halka, 1902, as alleged by the Defendants covered the whole of the water in which the fishery rights of the Plaintiff were admitted by Government seems very doubtful, in view of the subsequent litigation, but we are of opinion that the only possible inference to draw from the survey maps is that the river Narikora was a branch stream, only running through the estates of the Plaintiff. If the fishery claimed in the present suit runs through the Plaintiff's estates and can be held to be identical with the fishery claimed in the previous suits the Plaintiff may be able to establish his right to it. But in determining this question the rights which the Defendants have under the independent fishery mehal, which admittedly they hold, will have to be taken into consideration. If that independent right of fishery be held by the Defendants to give them fishery rights in the Ariel Khan river from its junction with the ganges to the point noted in the Mehalwari register and if the Ariel Khan river has changed its course so as to pass through the estates of the Plaintiff, the question will then arise for determination whether the stretch of river in which fishery rights are claimed in the present suit forms a part of the Ariel Khan river and whether as such the Defendants are entitled to rights of fishery in it.

We hold therefore that the findings of the lower Courts that the Plaintiff has established that he had an independent right of fishery in the river Narikora, which would entitle him to the enjoyment of that right in a navigable river outside the territorial limits of his estate is not supported by the evidence and that the only legal inference which can be drawn from the documentary evidence filed in the case is that at most the Plaintiffs' predecessors had a jalkar in the waters of the Narikora so far a those waters lay within the ambit of their estate.

Under these circumstances it is in our opinion necessary that the appeal should be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for re-hearing subject to this finding.

It will be for the Judge to determine on the evidence what part, if any, of the reach of river in which fishery rights are claimed in this suit lies within the territorial limits of the Plaintiffs' estate and, having determined that point, to come to a conclusion whether the Plaintiff has a right of fishery in that portion of the river irrespective of the rights which the contesting Defendants have under the Ramkristo jalkar mehal which is admittedly an independent right of fishery in certain portions of the river including certainly a portion of the river Ariel Khan. It will be necessary in order to determine this question to decide what is the extent of the Defendants right of fishery and whether if the river or a portion of it, over which the Defendant has the right, has changed its course and now flows through the estates of the Plaintiff, the Defendant has under his grant a right to follow the river into its new course and to exercise rights of fishery in it to the exclusion of the Plaintiff.

We accordingly direct that the appeals be remanded to the lower Appellate Court in order that the Judge may arrive at distinct findings on these points, and then dispose of the appeals. Costs will abide the result.

No one for the Opposite Party.

The facts material to the report appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Midnapur to show cause why the conviction of and sentence passed on the Petitioners should not be set aside.

The charge against the Petitioners was that they had built a new embankment in a certain prohibited area, that is, on an area which a Government notification has declared must be left unoccupied for spill purposes and within which no embankments were to be erected. The

WE ARE GLAD TO NOTICE THAT SIR LAWRENCE Jenkins, the Chief Justice of Bombay, has been appointed to be a member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India in the place of Sir John Edge. Sir Lawrence Jenkins won the golden opinion of the profession during the period that he served as a puisne Judge of the Calcutta High Court and he has thoroughly maintained his reputation as a fair, conscientious and sound judge as the Chief Justice of Bombay. During his tenure of office on the bench of the Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts he was always anxious to be in touch with the Indian community. We believe that the experience of the Indian people that he has so gained he will turn to good account in the Council of the Secretary of State.

THE RESIGNATION OF MR. JUSTICE GEIDT, WHICH IS announced in last Saturday's issue of the Gazette of India and which is to take effect from the 12th of April next, will be greatly regretted. Mr. Justice Geidt was raised to the High Court Bench with a very good record of service as a District Judge behind him. Although he is retiring long before his full term of office yet for nearly five years that he has been on the Bench he has won the good opinion of the profession. His unfailing courtesy, his kindliness of manner, and his desire to do justice between the parties and spare himself no pains to come to a right decision made him a deservedly popular judge. We believe we are expressing the opinion of the profession that they are sorry to lose him and that he carries with him their good wishes.

THE CASE OF Nagendra v. Anandrao, REPORTED AT p. 561, I. L. R. 31 Bom. deserves more than passing notice. In that case a mother was appointed guardian of her minor son. On a subsequent application made to the successor in office of the learned Judge, this order was cancelled on the ground that the order was one which ought not to have been made. The questions arose before Mr. Justice Davar of the Bombay High Court whether after once an order has been made appointing a guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act, the judge has any power to vary, alter, modify or set aside his own orders, and whether, when such an order is cancelled, the age of minority of the minor in respect of whom the order was made should be extended to 21 years under sec. 3 of the Indian Majority Act. His Lordship held on a consideration of the English practice, that a judge sitting in Chambers has power to vary, alter, modify or set aside the order in question when he is satisfied that the order is one which ought not to have been made, and which should, in the interests of justice, be cancelled in that way. Further that such an order having been cancelled, the minor would be just in the same position in which he would have been if the guardian had not been appointed at all, that is to say he would attain the age of majority on the completion of the eighteenth year and not the twenty first.

THE CASES IN I. L. R. 3 ALL. 598, I. L. R. 12 Cal. 612, I. L. R. 21 Bom. 281, I. L. R. 31 Bom. 80 and 4 C. L. J. 412 which express a contrary view were all distinguished on the ground that in all these cases the removal of the guardian appointed or the cancellation of the order of appointment of guardian was made on other grounds than that the original order appointing the guardian was one which ought not to have been made. In other words his Lordship's decision proceeds on the principle that the minor should not be affected in any way by the appointment of a guardian when that appointment is set aside on the ground that it ought not to have been made at all.

IT IS ALWAYS TO THE INTEREST OF A MINOR THAT A guardian should be appointed of his person and property, as he is himself unable from immaturity of age and want of experience and sufficient understanding to take care of himself or his property. So in the majority of cases in which appointment of guardians is sought to be cancelled, the question as to the propriety of the original order appointing the guardian will resolve itself into a consideration of the question whether the guardian appointed was one who ought to have been appointed, and not that whether any guardian should have been appointed at all. Of course, it is conceivable that in some cases the question may arise whether any order of appointment of a guardian ought to have been made at all. For instance when an application is made for the appointment of the guardian of a minor who is of 19 years age and the application is granted and a guardian is appointed. In such a case it is reasonable to hold that on the cancellation of this appointment the minor should be in the same position just as if the appointment was never made. But in the case under notice when the order for the appointment of a guardian was made, the minor was under 18 years of age. So in this case the question as to the propriety of the appointment related to the personnel of the guardian appointed. If in such a case the subsequent cancellation of the appointment restores the minor to the position, as regards the attainment of majority, in which he was before the order appointing the guardian was made, it is difficult to see why the minor's position will be different when the appointment of a guardian is cancelled on account of unfitness or misconduct of the guardian or any other cause.

A EXECUTED AN USUFRUCTUARY MORTGAGE IN FAVOUR of B and placed him in possession of the property mortgaged. At the proper time A tendered the amount due under the mortgage and asked to be restored to possession B did not accept the tender, whereupon A after depositing the amount in court under sec. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act instituted a suit under sec 62 of the Act for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property. This suit was decreed in favour of A and it was decided in that suit that the tender was proper and that B had illegally refused to accept the tender and deliver up possession of the property to A. After A had got possession of the property in execution of this decree, he brought an action against B to recover mesne profits from him from the date of the deposit in court to the date of recovery of possession. The question arose whether A could maintain such a suit. The High Court of Bombay Chandavarkar and Heaton, JJ., held in Rukhmini Bai v. Venkatesh, 31 Bom 527, that the suit was barred either under sec. 13 or sec. 43, C. P C.

THIS DECISION PROCEEDS UPON THE GROUND THAT after the tender and deposit of the money due under the mortgage, the mortgage was not extinguished. The position of the mortgagee remained almost the same, with only this difference that he became liable from the date of the tender or deposit to account for profits received by him. After the tender or deposit, the mortgagee did not become a trespasser, so the mesne profits to which A was entitled did not fall outside the mortgage suit but were recoverable in the suit for redemption which the mortgagor brought. Their Lordships observed. "The profits derived by the mortgagee after a proper tender made or after the amount due has been deposited in court are profits for which he has to account to the mortgagor in virtue of a liability tacked on, so to say, by the statute to the mortgage contract, and as such a claim to them by the mortgagor is one arising from and connected with his right to redeem or recover possession of the property It is all one cause of action which might and ought to be alleged by the mortgagor in his suit to recover possession (Expl. II, sec 13, C. P. C) The Appellant having failed to ask for mesne profits in the previous suit, his present claim is barred either under that section or under sec. 43 of the same Code." A recent decision of their Lordships Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., in Satyabadi Behera v. Musst. Harabati reported at p 122, 5 C L J. affirms the same principle. There the mortgagor, on the refusal of an usufructuary mortgagee of a tender validly and properly made, brought a suit for redemption. In that suit the mortgagor stated that he would bring a separate action for recovery of the profits received by the mortgagee after refusal of his tender. When this action was subsequently brought it was held by their Lordships that the action was barred under sec. 13, Expl. II of the Civil Procedure Code.

THE MARRIAGE OF HINDU WIDOWS ACT OF 1856 was one of the earliest Acts of the Indian Legislature which recognised the principle that if certain Hindus believe that a "certain established custom is not in accordance with a true interpretation of the precepts of their religion and desire that the civil law administered by the Courts of Justice shall no longer prevent those Hindus who may be so minded from adopting a different custom in accordance with the dictates of their own consciences" they should be at liberty to do so and the Civil Courts and the legislature should safeguard their rights and interests when the departure from such customs is not opposed to "good morals" or "public welfare." Embodying this principle Act XV of 1856 was passed at the instance of the great Indian social reformer Pundit Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar. Every one who is familiar with his life and career, his early poverty and struggles for the acquisition of knowledge, his wide culture and liberal views, his services to the cause of modern Bengalee literature of which he has been rightly styled the father, his researches in Sanscrit learning, his simplicity of life and force of character, his wide charity and sympathy for suffering humanity and his self-denying work in the cause of education and social reform, will give him a place amongst the great men of the world. Vidyasagar was a title that was given him for his vast learning but it came to signify that great personality which by the virtues of the head and heart stood out in bold relief amongst the savants of India.

ALTHOUGH Vidyasagar WAS BROUGHT UP IN THE school of orthodoxy, he had the far sight to see that Hindu Society had long ceased to be a living and growing organism and that its life blood was being sapped by some parasitic customs which though running counter to the precepts of the ancient sages have in comparatively recent times acquired an overgrown importance in Hindu society which at times override the dictates of humanity and the primal moral laws which form the back bone of the Hindu, and, in fact, of all the later religions which may be traced to that one fountain head. If Hindus are to save themselves from decay they must relax in suitable cases the iron rigour of the customs when they militate against the moral laws or bar the progress of the community. It is a cruel wrong to force a life of celibacy and asceticism on a childless girl widow for the rest of her days. In the better class of Hindu homes it is possible to train them to a life of austerity. But amongst Hindus in the lower strata of society this is hardly possible. Every successive census goes to show the comparative numerical decline of the Hindu population in Bengal. It is known to every one who has a knowledge of rural Bengal that the chief cause of this decline is marriage difficulties amongst the common Hindu population due to scarcity of girls and the high caste fees demanded in consequense. The widows amongst these classes are lost to society, if not morally, surely, as mothers There is a growing feeling in Bengal that amongst the Hindu labouring classes widow marriage should be largely encouraged. But the real obstacle to the way is that Brahmins do not take the lead and show the way.

THE EXAMPLE SET BY MR JUSTICE MOOKERJEE, therefore, deserves the highest praise and will, we are sure, add a great impetus to the cause of social reform in Hindu society. No doubt the dictates of humanity and parental affection have induced Dr. Mookerjee to remarry his widowed daughter of tender years. But the moral courage that he has shown in this matter can only be realized and appreciated by those who have any idea of the amount of prejudice and blind unreasoned opposition that one has to overcome amongst one's own relations and in one's own society to perform even such an obvious act of paternal duty. Dr. Mookerjee is an orthodox Hindu and the event is bound to have far-reaching consequences. Hindu society cannot live and thrive discarding from its fold the best men of the community and sooner or later it is sure to get reconciled to the reforms that the enlightened and the thoughtful amongst them consider essential to its vitality.

A NEW GUIDE TO THE BAR. By LL. B., Bar-at-Law. Third Edition. Sweet and Maxwell, Ld. London. Price 5s.

The Inns of Court in London are a unique institution which enjoy the privilege of calling to the English Bar students after they have passed through certain formalities known as keeping terms and passed certain examinations intended for testing their general knowledge of the law. English Barristers-at-Law are the most privileged section of the legal profession within the limits of the British Empire and this handbook will show how easy it is for a man of some education to enter their rank. The fees for joining any of the Inns of Court and of getting called to the English Bar are undoubtedly heavy but the object of the high fees is justifiable on the ground of prevention of undue congestion in the profession. But all the same the profession is getting overcrowded. Although the standard of legal studies and general education required of a barrister is not very high yet it is a well known fact that it is only men gifted with natural intelligence, capacity for hard work and sound education who make any headway in the profession. The regulations and the question papers which are to be found in this Guide book will give an idea of the qualifications required of students to get called to the Bar. Those who have not the advantage of a university education will therefore do well to attend the lectures and classes which are held in the Inns of Courts and to study law on the lines prescribed by the Council of Legal Education. If the means of the student permit he should work in a barrister's chamber and in a solicitor's office for qualifying himself for the profession of a practising barrister. Information regarding the expenditure of time and money for obtaining such necessary training is to be found in the book. Some people join the Inns of Courts, even on the eve of their life, for acquiring the status of a titular barrister. To them also this guide-book will furnish useful information.

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT. By Trikamlal R. Desai, B A., LL.B., Vakil, High Court, Bombay. "Lawyer" Office, Girgaon. 1908. Price Rs. 1.

Mr. Desai has compiled several handbooks intended for law students. The present is an addition to their number. The various sections of the Transfer of Property Act naturally present great difficulties to students who are not already grounded on the principles of the law of transfer. The commentarie appended to the sections should be of assistance to students in understanding those principles. The forms of conveyance, and the appendices at the end of the book furnish information on a variety of matters which also should prove useful. Altogether this is a useful compilation.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI AND SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No 2 OF 1908. RAJENDRA CHANDRA SHAHA AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR at the prosecution of MAHABIR SINGH 5th Februray 1908.

Indian Penal Code, secs 147 and 353—Charge—Finding of the common object.

A constable named Mohabir Singh was patrolling a bazar in Backergunge on the 6th June last when he found certain persons walking about there carrying lathies of more than the length authorised by an order under sec. 114, Cr P. C. of the District Magistrate He seized the lathi of one of them Rajendra Chandra Shaha and then certain persons shouted Bandemataram and a number of people assembled They slapped the constable, pulled at his coat and pursued him in the direction of the zemindar's Kutchery The Deputy Magistrate found the Petitioners guilty under secs. 147 and 353 I P C. On appeal to the Sessions Judge the conviction was upheld but the sentences were modified with respect to some of the accused This rule was issued to set aside the conviction and sentences or to reduce the sentences.

Their Lordships observed :

"The learned pleader for the Petitioners contends that seeing that the Petitioners have been found not guilty under sec 353 I P. C., they should not have been found guilty of rioting and further that there is no finding in the judgments of the Lower Courts as to what was the common object of the accused persons We think however that it is very clear that the accused assembled for the purpose of committing an assault upon the constable and that they did commit such assault. . . .

We have examined the charge drawn up by the Magistrate against the accused and find that the object of the assembly is there stated to be to beat the constable. It does not say that the object of the accused was to beat the constable in the execution of his duty, but it says simpliciter that the object was to beat him. That being so, it appears to us that there is nothing wrong in the charge. . . .

The pleader for the Petitioners next asks us to consider the sentences and to judge as to whether they are not unduly severe. . . .

We admit the force of this contention, and while affirming the conviction of the accused, we reduce the sentences passed on each of them to one of rigorous imprisonment for the period already undergone. The rule is made absolute to this extent only.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MACLEAN, C. J. and DASS, J. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No 317 OF 1906. SRINATH GHOSE AND OTHERS, Appellants v MOKUND RAM CHAKRABARTI. 20th February 1908.

Revocation of probate by one of the executors—Locus standi.

One Bhagwan Uria of Baliaghatta died executing a Will by which he gave away his properties to charity and appointed eight gentlemen of the locality as executors. Probate was taken by all the executors proving the Will in common form. Two years after one of the executors applied for revocation of the probate alleging that the will was a forgery and that he did not apply for probate or sign the vakalatnama for filing application for probate and that his name was forged to the vakalatnama and application by the other executors. The District Judge allowed him to produce evidence to prove that the Will was a forgery and revoked the probate of the Will. The other executors appealed to High Court and it was contended on their behalf that the Petitioner for revocation had no locus standi. He was not a person "interested" in the estate of the deceased and not entitled to "citation" under sec. 69, Probate Act He being one of the executors only of the Will could only come in if the Will was genuine L R. 1 P and D 316. Williams on Executors 10 th Edition P 458 cited It was argued on behalf of the Respondent that he was entitled to "citation" under secs 16 and 17 of the Act if he had not joined in the application for probate and therefore could come in under sec. 50 of the Probate Act.

Held:—That the Petitioner had no locus standi to apply for revocation. He could only get his name, expunged from the category of executors :

Babus Harendra Narain Mitra and Khetra Mohan Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Ram Charan Mazumdar for the Respondent.

why the conviction of and sentences passed on the Petitioners should not be set aside.

The Petitioner No. 1 has been convicted under secs. 225 and $\frac{353}{114}$, the Petitioner No. 2 under secs. 225, and 353 and the Petitioners Nos. 3 and 4 under sec. 225 of the Indian Penal Code. The Petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 have each been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 and each of the Petitioners Nos. 3 and 4 a fine of Rs. 30.

The learned pleader who appears on their behalf states that his clients have committed no offence, because the persons whom they rescued had not been legally arrested by the daffadar who was the complainant in this case. The daffadar appears to have arrested one Radha Nath Dey, against whom a complaint of theft had been made by one Jadu Bagdi. But he was apparently not justified in arresting Radha Nath Dey, because, under sec. 39, cl. 2 of the Act VI of 1870, B. C., he was only entitled to arrest a person for theft committed in his presence. It is clear that the theft in the present case had been completed before he came up, and the offence is not a continuing one, as contended by the Deputy Magistrate. Therefore the daffadar had no right to arrest Radha Nath Dey. In these circumstances he was not engaged in the lawful execution of his duty when the Petitioners came and rescued Radha Nath Dey and threatened to beat the complainant.

We therefore set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

The rule is made absolute.

RAJA GOKULDAS and ors., Appellants,

SHETH GHASIRAM, Respondent.

Mortgage decree—Construction—Future interest—Interest to date of realisation.

A mortgage decree directed payment of mortgage money and cost of the suit with future interest to the date fixed for payment.

Held, on a construction of the decree—That the decree-holder was entitled to interest until realization.

MAHARAJA OF BHARATPUR v. RAM KANNO DEI (1), and RANI SUNDAR KOER v. RAI SHAM KRISHEN (2) followed.

Appeal from a decree of the above mentioned Court of 30th July 1904, reversing a decree of the Court of the Civil Judge of Narsingpur, dated 4th November 1903.

On 18th September 1896, the Appellants in their suit No. 57 of 1896, against the Respondent in the Court of the Civil Judge of Jubblepore obtained a conditional decree for sale of certain mortgaged properties under secs. 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882 in terms following:—"It is hereby ordered that the Defendant is indebted to the Plaintiffs in the sum of Rs. 20,457-4-0 for principal and interest on the mortgage mentioned in the plaint, and in the further sum of Rs. 1,106-10-0 for costs and that upon the Defendant paying to the Plaintiffs or into Court the amount so due with future interest at 0-7-0 per cent. per mensem, from the date of the suit, viz., 22nd July 1896, on or before 18th March 1897, the Plaintiffs shall deliver up to Defendant, or such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall transfer the property to the Defendant free from all incumbrances created by the Plaintiffs or any person claiming under him or under whom he claims, and shall if necessary put the Defendant in possession of the property ; but that if the payment is not made on or before the said 18th day of March 1897, the mortgaged property as detailed below or a sufficient part thereof shall be sold, and the proceeds of the sale (after paying thereout the expenses of the sale) paid into Court, and applied in payment of what is due to the Plaintiffs, and the balance, if any, paid to the Defendant or other person entitled to receive the same. If the decree is not satisfied from the sale proceeds the balance will be recoverable from the Defendant's person and other property."

The Respondent did not pay the amount under that conditional decree which was made absolute on 25th June 1898 in the following terms:—

"Whereas it appears to the Court that the Defendant in this suit has not paid into Court or to the Plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 20,457-4-0 and Rs. 1,106-10-0 and interest at 7 annas per cent. per mensem from 22nd July 1896, which by the conditional decree passed by this Court on 18th September 1896, he was required to pay on or before the 18th day of March 1897, it is hereby ordered that the mortgaged property as detailed below be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is due to the Plaintiffs and that the balance, if any, be paid to the Defendant or other persons entitled to receive the issue"

That decree was on 13th July 1898, transferred to the Narsingpur District for execution. The transfer order certified that on 12th July 1898 there was due to the Appellants, after deducting Rs. 5,000 paid, the sum of Rs. 18,322-7-6

On 21st September 1898 the Appellants took out execution and claimed Rs 18,484-1.

On 22nd December 1898, the then Civil Judge of Narsingpur ordered that form C be submitted to the Collector for sale of some of the mortgaged property, and the case was struck off. On 12th August 1899, the Appellants for a second time applied for execution and claimed Rs. 19,279 4 9. Form C was again ordered to be sent to the Collector and the case was again struck off the file.

On 6th April 1901, the Appellants made a further attempt to execute the decree, claiming Rs. 20,719-2-3. Form C was sent to the Collector, as the same did not appear to have been sent to him as ordered in 1898 and the case was struck off. On 24th August 1903, the Respondent made an application to the Court of the Civil Judge of Narsingpur complaining that the Appellants had wrongly calculated future interest on the decretal amount from the date of the suit to the date of the execution. It was urged that in the absolute decree there was no order to pay future interest; and that under the conditional decree the Appellants were entitled to future interest only up to the date which was fixed for payment by the Court viz 18th March 1897. An account of the amount due was given and it was contended that only Rs. 11,581-14 0 was due under the decree to the Appellants.

The Appellants in their reply, however, contended inter alia, that they were entitled to future interest at 7 annas per cent. per mensem up to realization of the debt. Among the points raised for the determination of the Court was: 1. (a) what is meant by the expression future interest? (b) Cannot Plaintiffs get interest beyond 18th March 1897. The Civil Judge delivered his judgment on 4th November 1903 and held that the Appellants, Decree-holders, were entitled to interest at 7 annas per cent. per mensem from the date of the suit to realization. The material part of the Civil Judge's judgment is as follows:—

"Future interest" clearly means interest payable after the decree. The decree passed under sec. 88 Transfer of Property is the real decree in this case. It clearly awards future interest from the date of the suit. It does not say that this future interest is to be paid up to the date fixed for payment of the decretal amount, i.e., 18-3-1887. (1897) or up to realization; but as laid down by the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Bakar Sajid v Udit Narain Singh (3) and by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rameswar Koer v. Mehdi Hossein Khan (4) and Maharaja of Bharatpur v. Ram Kanno Dei (1) there is nothing either in the decree or in law which would prevent the decree holders from getting interest at 0-7-0 per cent. per mensem, from the date of the suit to the date of realization.

"Upon principle and apart from authority, statutory or otherwise it is difficult to see why the mortgagee should not have interest on his money so long as the debt remains unpaid. The 18-3-1897 is only named in the decree as the date on which payment is to be made, and after which if payment is not made, the property is to be sold.

"It is not named with any special reference to interest.

"In the absence of any express direction as to date up to which interest is to be paid the decree is rather ambiguous on the point.

From that decree the Respondant appealed to the Court of the Divisional Judge, Nerbudda Division, but the appeal was transferred to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces. The Additional Judicial Commissioner who heard the appeal delivered his judgment on 30th July 1904, and allowed the appeal holding that upon a proper construction of the decree as framed, no interest after the 18th March 1897 ran on the decretal sum or any part thereof. The judgment after a lengthy review of decisions on secs,

RAJA GOKULDAS v SHETH GHASIRAM

86 and 88 of the Tranfer of Property Act, continues as follows :—

"I need not however pursue this discussion further, because even if I adopt the dictum of the Allahabad High Court in the Full Bench case of Bakar Sajjad v. Udit Narain Singh (3) it cannot affect the decision of the present case, because, as I read the decree before me, there is no ambiguity whatever.

"The decree was drawn up by the late Mr. Madhub Chander Banerji, one of the best, because one of the most careful of Civil Judges who have sat on the bench in the Central Provinces. In the record before me I find several instances of this Judge's minute attention to detail in the discharge of his judicial work, and I should find it impossible to believe, that in decreeing future interest he should have left the period for it ambiguous in his decree. But it seems to me clear from the position of the passage directing its payment that it was introduced as an item for making up the amount which was payable on or before the 18th March 1897, to secure redemption; and that its precise figure, with respect to the 18th March 1897, was not worked out to cover the case of payment being made before that date. But there is not one word in the decree to show that the Judge contemplated affairs beyond that date, and meant to give future interest after the 1st March 1897. It is quite possible—indeed probable, that he did not overlook the equities of the subsequent period; but it is even more probable that he left the matter to be dealt with when the almost certain claim for extension of period of grace should be made; for the view that extensions of time can be given only in the cases of foreclosure and not in the cases of sale decrees is a much more recent interpretation of the law which has not even yet been generally adopted.

"Assuming that the interpretation was ambiguous, the ambiguity seems to be swept away by Mr. Banerji's own interpretation as set out in the order absolute. (Here the material portion of the absolute decree is set out).

"It seems to me clear that had the future interest been intended to continue beyond 18th March 1897, it would have been made clear here. But sale is ordered to pay what is due to the Plaintiffs and not what on date of payment may have become due. What is due, is stated in the order absolute as already shown.

"I therefore hold that upon the proper construction of the decree as framed no interest after the 18th March 1897 runs on the decretal sum or any part thereof.

"It is immaterial that the Judge might have decreed otherwise had he foreseen the delay in realisation. It is equally immaterial that executing Courts and the Plaintiffs have hitherto misconstrued the decree. The decree must be construed according to its language and if the Plaintiffs' legal advisers did not detect the defect in it and foresee the loss it was likely to cause, that is no reason why some other and more equitable interpretation should be put on it. The order of the lower Court appealed against is reversed and execution of the decree must proceed upon the construction of it which is laid down in this judgment, viz., that no interest accrues on any part of the decretal sum after the 18th day of March 1897."

Appellants, thereupon, applied to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. On failing to obtain such leave they petitioned His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal and having obtained the same brought the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Appellants submitted that the Judicial Commissioner's judgment was wrong and that that of the Court of first instance was right. That the point under consideration was finally decided in the cases of Maharaja of Bharatpur v. Ram Kanno Die (1) and Rani Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (2). By the first of these decisions the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court Bakar Sajjad v. Udit Narain Singh (3), was upheld, whereas in this case the Judicial Commissioner had expressly dissented from it. That according to the above mentioned Privy Council rulings Appellant was entitled to interest to date of realization. He pointed out that the learned Judge who made the decree Mr. Madhub Chunder Banerji, had himself when he transferred the decree for execution to Narsingpur added interest to a date long after the 18th March 1897.

LORD ROBERTSON intimated that their Lordships were agreed that Appellants' contention was right.

LORD ROBERTSON.—Their Lordships have examined the decisions of this Board relied upon by the Appellants [Maharaja of Bharatpur v. Ram Kanno Dei (1)], Rani Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (2), and find that they fully sustain the contention of the Appellants. They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be allowed, the judgment of the Additional Judicial Commissioner reversed with costs and the order of the Civil Judge restored.

The Respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

SHAHEBZADAH MAHOMED KAZIM SHAH and ors., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
ROBERT SAVI HILLS, Plaintiff, Respondent,
and
SHAHEBZADAH FATTEH MAHOMED SHAH and ors, Defendants, Respondents.

Partition—Mortgage of undivided share—Allotment of property on partition—Charge for owelty money—Priority.

(1) 5 C. W. N. 137 : s. c. L. R. 28 I. A. 35 ; I. L. R. 23 All. 181 (1900)
(2) 11 C. W. N. 249 : s. c. L. R. 34 I. A. 9 (1906).

SHAHEBZADAH MAHOMED KAZIM SHAH v. ROBERT SAVI HILLS.

In the absence of any suggestion or evidence that the partition of a joint estate was unfairly or improperly made to defeat claims of creditors, the sharers thereof, who have to receive sums of money by way of owelty from a co-sharer under a partition decree creating a charge on the allotment made to him, have priority over the mortgagees of his undivided share in the joint estate.

The fact that the mortgagor co-sharer entered into possession of the allotment made to him, before paying the owelty-money for which there was a charge created, did not alter or affect the position.

This was an appeal by Defendants Shahebzadah Mahomed Kazim Shah, Shahebzadah Wally Mahomed Shah and Shahebzadah Mahomed Karim Shah against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Harington, dated the 12th December 1906, holding that the Plaintiff and the Defendants, Tarit Bhusan Roy, Nandalal Roy, and Jasodalal Roy, referred to in this report as the Roy Defendants, were entitled to priority in respect of their mortgage and further charges over the charges in favour of the Defendants, Appellants, created by the decree dated 8th August 1904 in suits Nos. 698 of 1907, 211 of 1903 and 825 of 1903 of this Court.

One Shahebzadah Mahomed Bahram Shah, descendent of the late Tipoo Sultan of Mysore, died in 1898 leaving a widow and five sons and among other immoveable properties, the premises Nos. 52, 52-1 and 52-2, Park Stret. The above premises were purported to be vested in the Official Trustee under certain trusts and conditions contained in certain deeds of trust and settlement dated 29th July 1899 and 7th September 1893; but after the death of the said Bahram Shah, three several suits (Nos. 698 of 1904, 211 of 1903 and 525 of 1903) were filed in the Original Side of the High Court by the heirs of Bahram Shah, for a declaration that the said deeds of trust and settlement were void and inoperative in law, for partition of the said premises 52, 52-1 & 52-2 Park Street and other reliefs. Those three suits were afterwards, by consent, consolidated and a consent decree passed on the 8th August 1904, by which the said deeds of trust and settlement were declared to be void and the heirs of Bahram Shah were declared to be entitled to their respective shares in the said premises Nos. 52, 52-1 and 52-2 Park Street and the Defendant Shahebzadah Fatteh Mahomed Shah, one of the heirs of Bahram Shah, was ordered to pay Rs. 37,000 to the Defendant Shahebzadah Mahomed Kazim Shah and Rs. 9,500 jointly to the Defendants Shahebzadah Walli Mahomed Shah and Shahebzadah Mahomed Karim Shah, other two heirs of Bahram Shah, and also to pay his costs in the said suits and the said sums of money and the said costs were made a charge on the said premises 52-2 Park Street, which were allotted to the said Shahebzadah Fatteh Mahomed Shah for his share of and in the said trust properties. The said Shahebzadah Fatteh Mahomed Shah, pursuant to the said decree, entered into possession of the said premises No. 52-2 Park Street but did not pay the said sums of Rs. 37,000 and Rs. 9,500 respectively nor the said costs, which amounted to about Rs. 4,000 and were due to the Defendant Radhicanath Ganguli who acted for him.

SHAHEBZADAH MAHOMED KAZIM SHAH v. ROBERT SAVI HILLS.

The Defendant Shahebzadah Fatteh Mahomed Shah, before the decree in the said three suits, raised large sums of money, from various parties, on the mortgage of his undivided $\frac{7}{40}$th share in the said premises Nos. 52, 52-1 and 52-2 Park Street, a list of such encumbrances is given below :—

(1) On the 29th January 1902 (Mortgage) from the Roy Defendants, Rs. 10,000 repayable on the 29th January 1903 with interest at 18 per cent. and costs as between attorney and client.

(2) On the 2nd June 1902 (Further charge) from the Roy Defendants, Rs. 3,000 repayable on the 29th January 1903 with same interest and costs as above.

(3) On the 22nd September 1902 (Further charge) from the Roy Defendants, Rs. 5,000 repayable on the 22nd September 1903 with same interest and costs.

(4) On the 30th December 1902 (Mortgage) from Munshi Abdul Jalil, for Rs. 5,000 repayable on the 30th November 1903 with interest at 15 per cent and costs as between attorney and client.

(5) On the 13th April 1904, (Mortgage) from Robert Savi Hills, Rs. 3,000 repayable on the 13th October 1904 with interest at 12 per cent. and costs (including the mortgage of another item of property, not material to this report).

On the 10th April 1905 the said Robert Savi Hills obtained an assignment in his favour of the mortgage dated 30th December 1902 from the said Munshi Abdul Jalil.

Robert Savi Hills filed this suit (No. 461 of 1906) on the said mortgages dated the 30th December 1902 and 13th April 1904, for an account and sale and other reliefs, making all persons having any interest in the said premises 52-2 Park Street (also those interested in another item of property, not material for this report) parties Defendants to his suit.

The Roy Defendants filed a written statement in which, among other things, they submitted that they were not bound by the terms of the said consent decree dated 8th August 1904 and that inasmuch as the Defendants Shahebzadah Mahomed Kazim Shah, Shahebzadah Walli Mahomed Shah and Shahebzadah Mahomed Karim Shah had full notice of the mortgage and the further charges in their favour, the said mortgage and charges were a first charge on the said premises No. 52-2 Park Street and that the said consent decree having been brought about subsequent to the said mortgage and further charge, the Shah Defendants abovenamed were estopped from asserting any claim in priority over the said mortgage and further charge.

The judgment of Harington, J., allowing the claim of the Roy Defendants is as follows :—

HARINGTON, J.—The Plaintiff in this suit claims as against the Defendant Shahebzadah Fatteh Shah an account of what is due to him on two deeds, one dated 13th April 1904 by which the Defendant mortgaged his undivided 7-40th share in 52, 52-1 and 52-2 Park Street and 1 Russa Road in favour of the Plaintiff and another dated 10th April 1905, under which there was assigned to the Plaintiff, a mortgage which had been created by the Defendant on his share of the Park Street property in favour of one Munshi Abdul Zalil.

SHAHEBZADAH MAHOMED KAZIM SHAH v. ROBERT SAVI HILLS.

The mortgagor Defendant does not dispute the Plaintiff's claim, but the second, third and fourth Defendants (the Shahs) claim priority over the Plaintiff's mortgage for two sums of Rs. 37,000 and Rs. 9,500 respectively payable as owelty money which, under a decree for the partition of the joint properties, had been declared a charge on the share allotted to the mortgagor. The fifth, sixth and seventh Defendants (the Roys) claim under a mortgage dated the 29th January 1902 on the Park Street properties.

The Defendant No. 8 claims priority in respect of his costs as attorney on the ground that the mortgaged property represents the fruit of his exertions in certain proceedings, and that he has therefore a prior claim in the nature of a salvage lien thereon.

The ninth Defendant entered appearance but filed no written statement and did not appear on the hearing.

The Roy Defendants (Nos. 5, 6 and 7) waive their right to call upon the Plaintiff to redeem them and ask for a decree on their mortgage. The Plaintiff concedes that they are entitled in priority to him. They have proved their mortgage and must have a decree, and be declared to be entitled to be paid in priority to the Plaintiff.

All the parties concede that the Defendant No. 8 is entitled to a first charge in respect of so much of his claim for costs as can be shown to have been incurred in preserving the mortgaged property, and in getting rid of certain deeds of trust, which stood as a barrier between the mortgagees and their security.

An account must, therefore, be taken and it must be ascertained what sum represents costs incurred by Defendant No. 8 in the proceedings necessary to set aside the trust deeds and the sum so found payable to Defendant No. 8 must be paid in priority to all the mortgages.

The real question which has been fought is whether the sums of Rs. 37,000 and Rs 9,500 which have been declared a charge on the house No. 52-2 Park Street allotted to the mortgagor on partition are to be postponed to the Plaintiff's mortgage or are to take priority over it.

The property comprised in the Plaintiff's mortgage was the Defendant's undivided 7 40th share in Nos. 52, 52-1, 52-2 Park Street and No. 1 Russa Road. On 8th August 1904, a decree in the partition suit was made by consent of parties under which No. 52-2 Park Street was allotted to the mortgagor. But the mortgagor was ordered to pay Rs. 37,000 as owelty money to the Defendant No. 4 and Rs. 9,500 to the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 jointly. These sums were, under this decree, declared to be a charge on No. 52 2 Park Street.

For the Shah Defendants, it is argued that the Plaintiff's mortgage attaches to the share is which allotted to the mortgagor, that that share is not 52-2 Park Street, but 52 2 Park Street burthened with the charges for owelty created by the decree, that to allow the Plaintiff to enforce his security against 52 2 Park Street in priority to the Shah Defendants will be to give him a much larger security, than he is entitled to under his mortgage, and that inasmuch as the share which is allotted to the Defendant is 52-2 Park Street subject to charges fo' owelty, charges for owelty must have priority over the mortgages.

For the mortgagee, it is contended that the owelty could only become a charge on 52-2 Park Street by virtue of the agreement between the parties to the partition suit, and that no arrangement between the parties can create a charge having priority over the encumbrances existing previous to the partition. If the parties in a partition suit could make such an arrangement, it would be always open to them to destroy a mortgagee's security by agreeing that an exaggerated value should be placed on the mortgagor's share, subject to a large sum for owelty, which they could call on the mortgagee to redeem, before enforcing his security against the partitioned share. But for the agreement, the owelty would rank as only a simple debt. It must, therefore, be postponed to the mortgage.

I agree with the proposition that no agreement between the parties to the partition suit, even though embodied in a decree of this Court, can affect the rights of the mortgagee who is no party to the proceedings. But I do not agree with the argument that the persons to whom the owelty is payable under a decree are in no better position than simple creditors. They are in a much stronger position: they are judgment-creditors in possession of property allotted to their debtor, and they are not bound to give him possession until they are paid. The decree, if made in the ordinary course, after contest, would direct the delivery of possession and the payment of owelty. Until payment, the Shahs could remain in possession subject, of course, to the mortgagee's right to enforce his mortgage against the mortgagor's 7-40th share of the whole property. Now in this case, the Shah Defendants have given possession without getting payment. They have chosen to surrender the security which they had for enforcing the payment of owelty and they have done so by making an arrangement by which they affect to create a charge on property, comprising the mortgagor's 7-40th share. But this they cannot do, so as to affect the incumbrances already existing on it. Having given up possession, they would be, but for the agreement, in the position of ordinary judgment creditors, entitled to execute their decree for owelty money against the mortgagor's property, whatever it was, by attachment and sale. But that sale would be subject to any incumbrances created by the mortgagor.

It is true that this gives the mortgagee a more ample security than he would otherwise have had, but if the mortgagor's co sharers choose to give the mortgagor a share greater than that to which he would be entitled on partition, and to give him credit for the money which they have agreed to accept, as consideration for allowing him to have that larger share, it is not open to them to complain, if they find that that share is called on to satisfy incumbrances before the debt to them is discharged.

If it had been possible to separate the portion of 52-2 Park Street which represents the 7-40th share, belonging to the mortgagor, from the excess portion which he gets on payment of owelty, and if the Shah Defendants claimed to charge the owelty on that excess portion only, there would have been more force in the ingenious argument presented by Mr. Buckland (for the Shah Defendants).

But this is not what the Shah Defendants seek to do; they claim to charge their owelty on the whole of 52-2 Park Street, that is to say, they claim, by their consent decree, to have created a charge over the property representing 7-40th share, in priority to the mortgages previously existing upon it. This they are not entitled to do.

In the result, therefore, the sum which is found due to Defendant No. 8 on the account I have directed to be taken, must have priority over all other charges The usual mortgage decree must be made in favour of the Roy Defendants who are entitled to priority over the Plaintiff in respect of their mortgage of 29th January 1902. Next an account must be taken of what is due to the Plaintiff under the two deeds of 13th April 1904 and 10th April 1905, and in default of payment, a sale must be directed.

The Shah Defendants are likewise entitled to a mortgage decree in respect of the sums they claim as owelty: but such sums must be paid after the other charges have been satisfied.

The Plaintiff must have his costs, and the Defendants who have proved their charges are entitled to add their costs to their mortgage claims. But if it be found on taxation, any extra costs have been occasioned by the trial of the issue between the mortgagees and the Shah Defendants as to the priority of the charges for owelty, those costs must be borne by the Shah Defendants.

Costs will be on scale No. 2.

Mr. S. R. Dass (for the Roy Defendants).—Each of us gets costs on scale No. 2 against the mortgagor.

HARINGTON, J.—Yes.

Mr. S. K. Mullick (for the Defendant, Radhicanath Ganguli).—The parties agreed that the solicitor was entitled to the costs of the three suits, asks that no account be taken.

HARINGTON, J.—Liberty to all parties to apply and if they all agree to the sums payable, these sums may be directed to be paid instead of the account being taken.

Mr. J. Camell.—I appear for the Plaintiff and ask that my costs be taxed as between attorney and client as provided for in the deed.

HARINGTON, J.—The usual order as to costs on taxation.

The Defendants, Shahebzada Mahomed Kazim Shah, Shahebzada Wallie Mahomed Shah and Shahebzada Mahomed Karim Shah appealed against the above judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT is as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The question in this appeal is whether or not, in the circumstances I am about to state, the present Appellants, to whom two sums of Rs. 37,000 and Rs. 9,500 have been awarded by way of owelty on partition, are entitled to priority over certain mortgagees whom I will refer to as the Roy mortgagees, on a portion of the property which was partitioned.

SHAHEBZADAH MAHOMED KAZIM SHAH v. ROBERT SAVI HILLS.

The facts lie within a very narrow compass and are as follows :—

A suit was instituted some time in 1901, to set aside a certain trust-deed. To that suit all the parties either interested under the trust or who would be interested if the trust-deed were set aside, were parties ; and some of them apparently were minors. The result of that suit was that the trust-deed was set aside and, upon that decree being passed, the minors ceased to have any further interest in the estate. By the decree in that suit, which is dated the 8th of August 1904, all the parties who, upon the trust-deed being set aside, become entitled to the property in certain shares, agreed amongst themselves to have it partitioned The estate at the time was vested in the official trustee ; and under the decree, the official trustee was ordered to convey to Fateh Mahomed Shah, the mortgagor to the Roy mortgagees, the house premises No. 52-2, Park Street in Calcutta. By the same decree it was ordered and decreed "with the like consent (i.e. of all the parties interested in the properties) that Fateh Mahomed Shah (the mortgagor) should pay to the present Appellants two several sums of 37,000 and 9,500 rupees, as in the decree directed, and it was declared with the like consent that the said two sums of Rs. 37,000 and Rs. 9,500 respectively formed a charge upon the premises No. 52-2 Park Street alloted to Fateh Mahomed Shah, and that the allotments made to the various parties (including the mortgagor) should stand charged with the respective incumbrances and charges created by them respectively over their respective shares and interests in the aforesaid properties."

The mortgages under which the Roys claim are dated (1st) the 29th of January 1902, (2nd) the 2nd of June 1902 and (3rd) the 2nd of Setember 1902 ; and, they were mortgages to secure an aggregate principal sum of Rs. 18,000 with the interest at 18 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests. The security was the share of the mortgagor in the various properties which had not then been partitioned. The result of the partition proceedings was to give the mortgagor the house, No. 52-2 Park Street, subject to the charge for the two sums of Rs. 37,000 and Rs. 9,500, and the question now is, as between the present Appellants and the Roy mortgagees, whether the Appellants are entitled, in respect of those sums, to priority over the Roy mortgagees. The learned Judge in the Court of first instance has held that they are not ; and consequently they have appealed.

It is quite clear that after the partition was effected, the mortgagee was entitled to regard his mortgages as attaching to the house No 52-2 Park Street, in substitution for the security on the mortgagor's undivided share in the property generally. The security was shifted, as the result of the partition, from the undivided share of the mortgagor on to the property directed to be conveyed to him under the decree.

This is not disputed.

Then arises the question of priority. To determine that question it becomes necessary to ascertain what was the substituted property which the mortgagor took under the partition. It is clear that all he took was the house No. 52-2 Park Street, subject to the charges of Rs. 37,000 and Rs. 9,500 in favour of the Appellants; and it can only be upon that, that the Roy mortgagees can rank as mortgagees, that is, upon No. 52-2 Park Street subject to the charges created by the decree. But it is said that this was a consent decree. That does not seem to me to make any real difference unless the Roys can shew that the partition effected was either the result of fraud, or unfair or improper as against the mortgagee who was not a party to the partition proceedings.

Undoubtedly a person who advances money upon a mortgage of property which the mortgagor holds in an undivided share must be taken to take it subject to the liability of the property to be subsequently partitioned. Now, what is the attitude of the Roy mortgagees in this suit? Do they approbate or do they reprobate the partition proceedings? If we look at pragraph 2 of their written statement they ask that their mortgage may be regarded as the first charge upon the premises, No. 52 2 Park Street, "if it is shown that the partition was fair and proper." There is absolutely nothing to shew, nor have we heard any argument that it was unfair or improper.

The Plaintiff then have come into Court upon the footing of adopting the partition proceedings; and if they adopt these proceedings, their mortgage can only be on the interest of their mortgagor under the partition.

That interest has been already stated This concludes the matter.

A point was made that the Appellants must be taken to have surrendered their security, because the possession of the house No. 52-2 Park Street, had, in accordance with the decree, been handed over to the mortgagor by the Official Trustee. I am unable to appreciate that argument; I can not see why, if the mortgagor were put into possession by the Official Trustee, and in accordance with the decree, the Appellants have lost their right to the charge which is specifically created by that decree in their favour.

There is one argument of Mr. Garth which I ought to notice. It is said that, if a transaction of this sort can stand, the result may be that co-sharers may on a partition, knowing that one of them has mortgaged his share, so arrange matters that he should get no portion of the immoveable property on the partition, but receive the whole of his share in cash, the effect of which would be to defeat the rights of his mortgagee. We are not dealing with that case now; there is no suggestion that this partition was unfair or improper; at any rate, there is no evidence of it. If such a case arise as Mr. Garth suggests, I dare say, the Court will be able to deal with it satisfactorily.

The appeal must succeed. The Appellants must have, as between themselves and the Roy mortgagees, who must pay them, the costs of this appeal and also the extra costs which have been occasioned by the raising of the present point in the Court of first instance and which they were ordered to pay.

Mr. Sinha's clients, the Defendant Appellants, must in the first instance pay the plaintiff's costs and may add them to their security.

STEPHEN, J.—I agree. I would add that it is quite plain that the Appellants' claim which is a charge upon the property, constitutes a deduction from the corpus of the property and is not affected by any dealings with the possession of the property on which the decision of the Judge of the Court of first instance is based.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree with the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

RULE NO. 3442 OF 1907.

MACLEAN, C. J.
COXE, J.
1908.
Heard,
14, February.
Judgment,
17, February.

In the matter of NABIN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA, Petitioner.

Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879), secs. 13 and 14—Pleader—Unprofessional conduct—Refusal of brief for political reasons—Right to refuse—Reasons for refusal if must be stated—Right to move High Court to quash proceedings when called upon to show cause.

A pleader is not bound to accept a brief offered to him, nor to state his reasons for refusing to accept it.

A pleader having refused a brief offered to him was subjected to stringent examination to disclose his reasons, and on its appearing that his reasons were political, proceedings were started against him under the Legal Practitioners' Act and he was called upon to show cause why he should not be reported to the High Court for unprofessional conduct. Without waiting to show cause the pleader at once moved the High Court to quash the proceedings,

Held—That he was entitled to do so.

That there was no rule of procedure to justify the examination to which he was subjected.

This was a rule granted on the 5th of December 1907, against the proceedings taken against the Petitioner under secs. 13 and 14 of the Legal Practitioners' Act.

Sometime before the Pujas one Doorga Charan Shaha went to the Petitioner, who is a first-grade pleader practising in the Courts of the Bhola Sub-division, and offered to engage him as a pleader in a certain suit which was proposed to be instituted in the second Munsif's Court against the Indian Rivers Steam Navigation Company. The Petitioner refused to accept the case but a suit was instituted and the Petitioner was again approached and offered to be engaged, but refused to do so. Thereafter in connection with an application made by the Plaintiff to the District Judge of Backergunj for transfer of the suit, the District Judge directed the Munsif to take the statements of some pleaders of Bhola, including the Petitioner, as to why they had refused to act in the case. In his statement the Petitioner stated that he refused to accept the Plaintiff's brief on the ground that he did not like to serve those men who acted against the cause of the country. On receipt of the statement the Judge again directed the Munsif to ascertain for what reasons the Petitioner thought that the Plaintiff had acted against the cause of the country. Another statement was taken from the Petitioner, who said he refused to accept the Plaintiff's brief because in the first place the latter was dealing in English cloths; and secondly, he had made coloured, and even false, reports to the authorities against those who were attempting to exercise social control over him for selling foreign cloths. Thereafter on the 24th November the District Judge, J. D. Cargill, Esq., directed the 2nd Munsif at Bhola to call on the Petitioner to show cause why his conduct should not be reported to the High Court and notice was accordingly served on him to show cause. The Petitioner thereupon moved the High Court and obtained this rule.

The District Judge in the course of his explanation stated: "The fact of the matter is that the Plaintiffs in the case dealt in English cloth, and, therefore, they were boycotted and 'controlled socially' as the pleader puts it. One result was that at Bhola no pleader would take up this case. This District is a hot-bed of Swadeshi enterprise of a questionable type, and this is not the first occasion on which trouble of a similar nature has arisen. If persons who do not deal exclusively in country goods cannot on that account obtain proper legal assistance which appears to be the case at present—this fact causes them great harassment and expense, even if it is not tantamount to a denial of justice. I am of opinion that a pleader acts improperly when he refuses to accept a brief from a man merely because their political views differ, such views not being relevant in the case. The facts as I have said are simple, but the principle at issue is one of considerable importance affecting as it does in a very intimate manner the administration of justice."

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose (with him Dr. Preonath Sen and Babu Gunada Charan Sen) for the Petitioner.—The only question is whether a pleader who refuses to accept a brief from a person who deals in bilatee cloth is guilty of professional misconduct.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Is there any rule of etiquette or law in this country compelling a pleader to take a brief?]

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose did not know of any. As regards barristers, Mr. Woodroffe when Advocate-General gave it as his opinion that a barrister "is not bound to accept a brief tendered to him with his fee if not specially retained on behalf of the person desiring his services. He is . . . . as free to refuse a brief sent to him as a solicitor is to decline a client." Vide correspondence published in 7 C. W. N. xcv, xcvi.

Further draws attention to the fact that the charge in this case was preferred not by the person who sought to engage the pleader but the District Judge of Backergunge himself. Reads his explanation.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—But do'nt you come too soon?]

Your Lordships have all the facts before you. Besides this Court has interfered before. See In re Siddeshwar Boral (1).

(1) 4 C. W. N. 36 (1899).

IN THE MATTER OF NABIN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter in showing cause said.—The Petitioner is crying before he is hurt.

He does not care to answer the charge, but comes up directly before a higher Court to have proceedings set aside. He ought to have answered the charge.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—It is an odd charge.]

Submits that if the right of a pleader to refuse a brief at his will and pleasure were established as a general rule, a serious miscarriage of justice may happen when as in this case the pleaders all refuse. A pleader or a doctor holds out to the public that he is open to engagement on receipt of a certain fee. If he is free and yet refuses to accept an engagement he is guilty of unprofessional conduct.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Can you compel a doctor to attend a patient?]

No; but pleaders are under your disciplinary jurisdiction.

Then, again, it would be a serious matter if those who dealt in foreign clothes were in circumstances like the present to be without professional assistance.

Dr. Ghose in reply cited the unreported judgment in The matter of Peari Lal Roy and others, Pleaders, decided by Petheram, C. J. and Tottenham, J. on the 26th April 1888. In that case also the High Court was moved directly the District Judge, Mr. Posford, instituted proceedings against the Petitioners under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners' Act and a similar objection was raised, viz., that instead of shewing cause, as they were called upon to do, they had come up directly to the High Court. The High Court quashed the proceedings as in the opinion of the learned Judges, "the setting of the machinery of the Court in motion in the way it was done in that case was absolutely without jurisdiction," and "there was no power in the District Judge to use the machinery of the Court and the forms of the Court, and the seal of the Court, and his own judicial signature in the way he did" and "all the proceedings that were taken in the matter were absolutely void."

THE CHIEF JUSTICE intimated that the rule would be made absolute and the reasons given on Monday.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is an application under sec. 15 of the Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict.; C. 104).

The Petitioner is a first-grade pleader practising in the Courts of Bhola, in the District of Bakergunge.

The Plaintiff in a certain suit which was proposed to be instituted in the Munsif's 2nd Court of Bhola wished to engage him as his pleader. The Petitioner, for reasons which he gave, declined to act as such The suit was instituted: the offer was renewed, and again declined by the Petitioner.

On an application to the District Judge of Backergunge to transfer the suit, the latter directed the Munsif to take a statement from the Petitioner as to the reasons for his refusal to act in the case. This was done: but the District Judge required fuller reasons to be given, and a further statement was taken from the Petitioner on the 25th September 1907. He gave his reasons, which were apparently based upon political grounds. The Petitioner was then called upon to show cause on the 10th December last why his conduct in refusing to accept the brief in the above case should not be reported to this Court as unprofessional conduct within the meaning of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners' Act (Act XVIII of 1879). He now applies to have those proceedings set aside. Sec. 13 authorises this Court to suspend or dismiss "any pleader or muktear who is guilty of fraudulent or grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty, or for any other reasonable cause."

The charge against the Petitioner is that he was guilty of professional misconduct within the meaning of the section. The proceedings appear to me to have been very irregular. The Petitioner was within his rights in declining to accept the brief, if he did not wish to do so. It is not suggested that there is any rule or professional etiquette amongst the vakil Bar which required the Petitioner to accept the brief. Nor do I understand under what procedure he was subjected to the somewhat stringent examination which he had to undergo. He was not bound to give his reasons. It is idle to say the case falls within sec. 13. The only objection taken against the rule is that it is premature, and that the Petitioner ought to have waited to see the result of the application against him. I do not take this view: I think he was entitled to come at once. The preceedings were entirely mistaken and the rule is made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL No. 904 OF 1907.

RAMPINI, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1908.
Heard, 6 and 10, January.
Judgment, 13, January.

KABIRUDDIN and others, Accused, Appellants,
v.
THE KING EMPEROR.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 99, 100, 147 and 148—Rioting—Right of private defence, where the parties of the complainant and accused engaged in a free fight, and when the accused knew that they would be resisted in their acts—Jury, misdirection in the charge to.

When a body of men go out armed to exercise a right or a supposed right, knowing that they will be resisted by another body of men, in their act, and when the former is engaged in the exercise of that right or supposed right, the latter resisting, a free fight ensues between the rival parties in defiance of the remonstrances of Police constables present on the spot with the result that a man is killed and others wounded, questions of right and who are the aggressors and who are the defending party do not arise for consideration.

In re KALI BAIPARI (18) followed.

No person has the right to take the law into his own hands for the protection of his person or property, if there is a reasonable opportunity of redress by recourse to the public authorities.

The right of self help when it causes or is likely to cause damage to the person or property of another person must be restricted and recourse to public authorities must be insisted on.

KABIRUDDIN v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1907, against the decision of H. W. C. Carnduff, Esq., Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 30th of September 1907, convicting and sentencing the Appellants under secs. 147 and 148, I. P. C.

Mr. Norton (with him Babu Monmotha Nath Mukherjee) for the Appellants.

Mr. P. L. Roy (with him Babu Joy Gopal Ghosha) for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RAMPINI, J.—This is an appeal by twelve persons who have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Patna of offences under secs. 147 and 148, I. P. C. and sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from 1 to 2 years. The trial was held with the assistance of a jury, who unanimously found the accused guilty. The verdict of a Jury can only be set aside on the ground of misdirection in the charge by the Judge to the Jury, which "has in fact occasioned a failure of justice." The alleged facts of this case are set out by the Judge as follows :— "On the morning of the 10th March Fakira Dhari, one of the Chowkidars of Iswa, saw a mob collected on the Pathari pyne, and learnt that they were Chero people come to throw up an alung on the western side, taking earth from the then dry channel in order to do so; also that the Iswa people intended to contest the others' right to do anything of the kind. He at once went to the Surmera out-post and gave information to the writer constable who was there alone, and could do no more than record a ancha on hearing what he and another chowkidar, Budhua, who had come almost simultaneously with similar information, had to say. Budhua was sent off to Shaikhpura in Monghyr to give formal information to the head constable, Narul Nabi, who had gone there to attend a Police co operation meeting while two constables, Rajkumar and Suraj Nath, were deputed to accompany Fakira back to the pyne and avert a riot, if possible. On reaching the place they found some 500 Chero people armed with lathies and swords, among them being about 200 labourers, excavating the earth, and most prominent of all, Kabiruddin directing operations (from horse back eventually), but himself unarmed. At the same time a slightly smaller Gahar—300 or 400 are the figures suggested—was seen coming from the Iswa side led by Sahdeo Singh of Iswa, also on horse back, armed and shouting "Jai Mahabir." The Police implored the Chero people first, and then the Iswa people, and then both together to desist and await the arrival of the sub inspectors: but remonstrances were in vain, the two armies ranged up, and free fight ensued and lasted for a short time, after which the rioters on both sides dispersed. It was then noticed that one of the Iswa men had been so severely wounded as to be unable to move from the spot where he had fallen. This man, Mahar Singh, the Chero people are said to have made an attempt to carry away, and the Iswa people, according to the Police, also tried to remove him altogether, but the constables very properly refused to let him be taken out of their sight, and they were present with him when he died in a hut hard-by about a quarter of an hour later.

The Judge has then discussed the evidence very carefully and left the jury to make up their minds as to the facts. He then goes on to say: "I now come to deal with the question of right, title and possession as to which a mass of evidence has been laid before you. First, there is the oral evidence. On the Iswa side a number of witnesses swear that the Pathari pyne lies entirely in Iswa, that it has always been repaired and maintained by the maliks of Iswa, and that the people of Chero have never had, nor exercised any right to interfere with it in any way. On the other hand, the Chero witnesses allege that the Chero people have regularly excavated earth from the pyne so as to erect alung along the western side, and it is argued, on the strength of certain admissions by Iswa witnesses as to the slope of the land, that, without such an alung, Chero could never grow a rice crop, as all the water would flow off their lands during the rainy season. Then Iswa produces a thakbust map of 1843, which seems to show that the northern branch at any rate of the pyne, 1, the so called Pathari pyne is in Iswa while Chero produces a similar map and khesra, and the counsel for the defence asks you to gather from it that in 1843 the pyne was in Chero. Next the prosecution rely upon certain partition proceedings in 1907 between Iswa and Kalyanpur; but to these Chero admittedly was no party. Chero again file a number of old rubakars or decrees regarding a pyne apparently in their locality: but these relate to a dispute between Chero and Iswa, and I can not myself see that the identity of the pyne referred to in them with the so-called Pathari pyne has been established. Next there are Treasury chalans showing that Musst. Fasiban, the Chero malika, has paid into the Treasury at Patna in the years 1884, 1889, 1892, 1894, 1896, 1897, and 1901, sums of money on account of "Bandheri" and the "Sakri Band," and lastly, each side has produced gilandazi papers and evidence in support thereof, while the defence have called a beldar who swears that he has repaired the pyne at the expense and on behalf of Chero.

"The task of deciding what, in the result, is established by this conflict of evidence would, I think, be a difficult one, and, in the view I take of the law, it is not necessary for you to attempt an adjudication. In a word, I am clearly and strongly of opinion that, if the case of a free fight deliberately engaged in by the parties is true, it is wholly immaterial what their rights were or are. This brings me to an exposition of the law of rioting.

"An assembly of five or more persons is an unlawful assembly if the common object of the persons composing it is, by means of criminal force or show of criminal force to any person, to enforce any right or supposed right. And an assembly, which was not unlawful when it assembled, may become an unlawful assembly. Whoever intentionally uses force to any person without that person's consent in order to the committing of any offence, or intending by the use of such force to cause injury, fear or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used, is said to use criminal force to that other. Whenever force or violence is used by an unlawful assembly, or by any member thereof, in prosecution of its common object, every member of it is guilty of rioting under sec. 147 of Indian Penal Code. And if any person so guilty is armed with a deadly weapon or any thing, which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, he is liable to severe punishment under sec. 148.

"In order, then, to convict any one of the accused under sec. 148, you must be satisfied:

"(1) That he was one of five or more persons assembled with a common object; (2) that the common object was forcibly to assert the supposed right of Chero to take earth from Pathari Pyne; (3) that in prosecution of that common object force or violence was actually used, and 4) that he was armed with a deadly weapon.

"As I have already told you, it is a question of fact whether a sword or a lathi is a deadly weapon, and that is for you to decide I have also told you in the case of Kabir and I repeat it now once for all, that even if you find point (4) above not proved, it will be open to you to convict under the minor sec. 147, should you find the other essentials proved.

"Now, apart from the alibi pleaded by some of the accused, the defence is that the Chero people were not asserting any right, but were merely maintaining undisturbed the exercise of a right, and taking the necessary precautions to protect themselves from aggressive interference; and the learned counsel has cited a number of rulings drawing the distinction referring, in particular, to one of 1875 and another of 1897: Shanker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (1) and Panch Kauri v. Queen-Empress (2). Now, even if the soundness of these decisions be accepted unquestioned, and I cannot help thinking that the case of 1897 goes dangerously far in the direction of allowing the subject to take the law into his own hands, the present case seems to me to be readily distinguishable. And here I ought to remind you that, where the right of private defence is set up, the onus shifts on to the accused, and it is for them to prove the plea.

'In laying down the law I rely, first, on the clear language of sec. 141 (4), which refers to an actual right as well as a supposed one; and, then, on a long series of rulings which begin with the Queen v. Jealall (3) and ends with Anant Pandit v. Madhusudan Mandol (4). There can, I tell you, be no right of private defence, either on one side or on the other, where both parties are evidently aware of what is likely to happen and turn out in force. The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who expecting to be attacked go out of their way to court an attack. When the parties of the complainant and accused are prepared to fight, it is immaterial who was the first to attack, unless it be shown that the accused were acting in the exercise of the right of private defence. If the accused—it was held by the Judges at Allahabad not many years ago, see Queen-Empress v. Peary Dutt (5)—were determined to vindicate their supposed rights and engaged in a fight with men equally determined to vindicate theirs, no question of private defence can arise. It comes to this simply, that our law does not permit rival claimants to enter in cold blood into battle to settle a dispute which can be settled in a lawful manner. Here you must remember that the occurrence took place on the 10th March, six months after the last rains had ceased and three months before the next rains were expected. There would, therefore, be no pressing necessity for the erection of an alung. On the contrary, not only was there plenty of time to seek the protection of the police at the out-post a mile distant but the police were on this spot—if you believe them—trying to prevent a breach of the peace: there was plenty of time to ask the Magistrate at Barh to issue an order under sec. 144 of the Code of Criminal Porcedure so as to enable the Chero people to put up the alung before the rains: there was time, indeed, to bring a suit to establish the right. And what was there to prevent them waiting until the settlement officer arrived and went into the matter on the spot with a view to the record of rights contemplated? If you find that the accused well knew that the right was disputed and would be forcibly contested by Iswa, that they nevertheless went in anything like the numbers asserted to exercise the right in the teeth of opposition, that there was no necessity or justification in the patent facts for their taking the earth and throwing up the alung at the time in question, and that they joined battle in the face even of police remonstrance on the spot, then you should, without hesitation, convict all who participated of rioting."

Mr. Norton for the Appellants contends that in this passage in the Judge's charge there is a flagrant misdirection on a point of law and that therefore the conviction of the Appellants cannot stand. He urges that the Judge should not have told the jury that when two bodies of armed men go out to fight a pitched battle, defying the representatives of the law that are present and urge them to desist from fighting, the questions of right and who are the aggressors are immaterial, but on the contrary that the Judge should have directed the jury to find (1) who were in the possession of the pyne about which the fight took place (2) by what right they were in possession and (3) who were the aggressors and the attacking party at the time of the occurrence. In support of his contention he has cited and relied on the following cases Queen v Sohun (6), Queen v. Mitto Singh (7), Queen v Sicher (8), Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (9), Shanker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (1), Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress (10), Mohu Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (11), Panch Kauri v. Queen-Empress (2), Anant Pandit v. Madhusudan Mandol (4), Poresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (12), Bepin Behari Guha v. Pranakul Majumdar (13), Queen-Empress

KABIRUDDIN v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

v. Narsang Pathabhai (14) and Queen-Empress v. Peelimutha Tevan (15).

Mr. Roy for the Crown on the other hand has replied that the Judge's charge contains no misdirection, that the Judge has correctly laid down the law, and that, as no failure of justice has in fact taken place in consequence of the alleged misdirection, the conviction of the Appellants according to sec. 537, C. P. C., should not be set aside. He relies on the cases of Queen v. Nowabdee (16), Queen v Jeolall (3), Queen v. Mana Sing (17), Re Kali Baipari (18), Queen-Empress v. Pray Dutt (5), King Emperor v. Kaliji (19), Emperor v. Kadhu Singh (20) and an unreported case Jairam Mohton v. Emperor (21).

There appears to me to be no necessity to discuss these cases at length. They lay down no general rule. Further, they have all been considered and commented on from time to time by the different Benches of this Court and the facts of each case distinguished. They undoubtedly appear to be conflicting; and Mr Norton has suggested that if we do not agree with the law as laid down in the cases he has cited, we should make a reference to a Full Bench. But we see no reason and consider it unnecessary to do so. The law of the Penal Code, however apparently variously interpreted in different sets of circumstances, remains the same and we are bound to apply it to the circumstances of the present case according to our lights. I have no doubt that according to the Penal Code no right of private defence arises in circumstances such as those of the present case, when both parties armed themselves for a fight, to enforce their right or supposed right and deliberately engaged in very large numbers in a pitched battle, killing one man and wounding others. In such a case, as said in the exactly similar case of Re Kali Baipari (18) where both parties are armed and prepared for battle, and it is not shown that they were acting within the legal limits of the right of private defence, it does not matter which is the first to attack. In the present case the Appellants, if they had any right of private defence which in the circumstances in my opinion they had not, did not act within the legal limits of such right. They did not restrict themselves merely to the use of such force as was necessary to resist trespass. On the contrary, they far exceeded their right, if they had any, for they killed a man and inflicted serious injuries on others. As has been said in the unreported case of Jairam Mohton v. Emperor (21):—"The right of private defence of property is a restricted right. Sec. 99 of the Indian Penal Code expressly lays down that there is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, and

KABIRUDDIN v. THE KING EMPEROR.

It, also, lays down that the right of private defence in no case extends to doing more harm than is necessary for the purpose of defence. Secs. 100 to 105 make the right depend on the circumstances of each case. No man has the right to take the law into his own hands for the protection of his person or property, if there is a reasonable opportunity of redress by recourse to the public authorities. Referring to Hyde v. Graham (22) Holloway, J., in Madras High Court proceedings, 8th January 1873, says:—'The natural tendency of the law of all civilized States is to restrict within constantly narrowing limits the right of self-help, and it is certain that no other principle can be safely applied to a country (like this). . . .' The right of self-help, when it causes, or is likely to cause, damage to the person or property of another person must be restricted, and recourse to public authorities must be insisted on. If a person prefers to use force in order to protect his property, when he could, for the protection of such property, easily have recourse to the public authorities, his use of force is made punishable by the Indian Penal Code. No matter what the intention of that person may be, the law says that he must not use force in such a case. To hold otherwise would be to encourage and put a premium on offences of rioting which are so frequent in this part of India. The country would, in the language of Holloway, J., "be deluged with blood," if an offender who could get relief by recourse to law were allowed to take the law into his own hands."

(22) 1 H. and C. 593 ; 8 Jur. N. S. 1229 (1863).

For these reasons, I am of opinion that there was no misdirection in the charge to the jury by the Sessions Judge, and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This is an appeal by the present Appellants who have been convicted and sentenced as mentioned by my learned brother in his judgment. The trial was held with the assistance of a jury whose unanimous verdict was that all the accused were guilty.

The facts of the case have been fully discussed by the learned Sessions Judge in the heads of his charge to the jury and also dealt with by my learned brother. I need not therefore repeat them.

It has been urged on behalf of the Appellants that there has been misdirection in the charge on a point of law namely, that "in the case of a free fight deliberately engaged in by the parties it is wholly immaterial what the rights were or are." And that the misdirection has been further amplified by the learned Sessions Judge by directing the jury "that there can be no right of private defence either on one side or the other, when both parties are evidently aware what is likely to happen and turn out in force. The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who expecting to be attacked go out of their way to court an attack. When the parties of the complainant and the accused are prepared to fight, it is immaterial who was the first to attack, unless it be shown that the accused were acting in the exercise of their right of private defence."

Mr. Norton, Counsel for the Appellants, contends that the above amounts to a misdirection inasmuch as the learned Sessions Judge was bound to place before the jury the evidence as to possession; and that this omission has caused a miscarriage of justice, for, if the jury had found possession of his clients even for a few hours before the occurrence, they had a right to defend their possession against any aggression by the other side.

The Indian Penal Code deals with the right of private defence in secs. 96 to 106 Under sec. 97 "every person has a right subject to the restrictions contained in sec. 99, to defend his property or that of any other person against any act which is an offence falling under the definition of offences mentioned in that section. One of the restrictions under sec. 99 is that "there is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities." By the above restriction an accused cannot set up this right with regard to properties in his possession, if he has time to invoke the protection of the authorities. In cases of sudden fights where there has not been any preparation by either side, a man, no doubt, is within the law, if in defending his property he causes such bodily injuries to the aggressive party as are allowed by the sections of the Penal Code which deal with the right of private defence.

If the facts of the present case disclose a state of things which clearly goes to show that the accused had full knowledge of the fact that they would be opposed by the other side, their duty, as required by law, would be to have recourse to the protection of the authorities, provided there was time enough to do so. If there was time, they had no right to go to the scene of occurrence and thus invite the other side to come and attack them. The occurrence is said to have taken place on the 10th March 1907, when, the Pathari pyne was quite dry. The accused had gone to the place to repair the embankment of the said pyne, which embankment is situated on the Chero side of the pyne. Chero is the village to which the accused belong. The opposing party belong to the village, Iswa. On the date of the occurrence, there was no pressing necessity to throw up any earth on the Chero side of this pyne—the next rainy season being some months after the occurrence.

From facts proved in the case and accepted by the Jury it is clear that the Chero people were fully aware that they would be attacked by the Iswa people. The Chero people numbered about 400 or 500 including about 200 labourers. They were armed with sword and lathies and were led by Kabiruddin on horse back, who had only a whip in his hand. On the appearance of such a large body of men, the Iswa people also began to collect their forces. In the meanwhile two Chowkidars started for the Thana, which is only 4 miles from the scene of occurrence and only a mile from Chero, to give information of a likelihood of a breach of the peace. On receipt of the information two Police constables arrived on the spot before the fighting had commenced. In spite of the remonstrances of these two constables, fighting began and there was a regular combat. This fighting commenced on the Iswa people trying to cross the pyne.

KABIRUDDIN v. THE KING EMPEROR.

On the above facts it is clear that the Chero people had full knowledge that they would be opposed by the Iswa people and this is evidenced by the fact of their having gone fully armed and in such large numbers. An assembly of such a large body of men indicates that they had not gone to the spot for any peaceful purpose. They knew quite well that they would be attacked and they went to the spot to meet force by force. The law does not delegate to any private individual the functions of those public servants who are specially charged with the protection of life and property, and the apprehension of offenders. In the present case there having been no pressing necessity for repairing the embankment and there being ample time to seek protection of the authorities, the Chero people had no right to assemble, as they did, and court an attack by the Iswa people.

It is contended on behalf of the Appellants that inasmuch as the Chero people had arrived on the spot admittedly a few hours before the Iswa people, the former had a right to defend the continuance of a state of things which, if altered, would have disturbed the status quo ante, and that the Chero people, having arrived there first, were maintaining their right of possession. The common object mentioned in the charge is to support a supposed right to take earth from the Pathari pyne. The question, therefore, is as to whether the Chero people had gone to the spot to defend a right or to assert it. It is clear that that they had gone to assert that right, or otherwise there would have been no necessity of going to the place in such a large body and so armed. It is contended on behalf of the Appellants that they having arrived on the spot first had the right to remain there and if disturbed in that right they were entitled to set up the plea of the right of private defence. I cannot accept the above proposition, as such an enunciation of law would be dangerous to the peace of the country. It would justify a regular race between two factions as to who should arrive first.

In the above circumstances I am of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge was right in telling the Jury, that if they found (a) that there had been a premeditated fight between the parties; (b) that the remonstrances of the two constables were ineffectual; (c) that there was no pressing necessity to repair the pyne; and (d) that there was ample time to seek the protection of the authorities—it was immaterial as to which of the parties was in possession.

One of the common objects mentioned in sec. 141, I. P. C. is—"by means of criminal force or show of criminal force to any person to take or obtain possession of any property or to deprive any person of the enjoyment of the right of way or of the use of water or other incorporal right of which he is in possession or enjoyment, or to enforce any right or supposed right." The expression "to enforce any right or supposed right" suggests an opposing party and hence I find that the accused have been charged with rioting with the common object, to wit, to assert by force or show of force a supposed right.

Our attention has been drawn by counsel on both sides to various authorities in support of their respective contentions.

NOTES.

MR. K. G. GUPTA IN HIS REPORT ON THE RESULTS OF his enquiry into the Fisheries of Bengal has proposed that legislation should be undertaken, and for the present, he says " it will be sufficient to establish short close seasons and to prevent the destruction of fry and young fish of a few specified varieties only. Something must also be done to put a stop to the practice of erecting dams and other obstructions right across water courses and river channels, which seriously interfere with the passage of brood fish and fry from the sprawning grounds and are great obstacle to navigation."

LEGISLATION IN THIS DIRECTION WE THINK WILL serve a very useful purpose and having regard to the rapid decrease in fish supply in recent years legislation is urgently required. But in undertaking legislation, unnecessary interference with private rights should be guarded against. In this country the right to fishery in large navigable rivers belongs to private individuals. Ghose and Gordon, JJ. in delivering their judgment in the case of Satcowri v. The Secretary of State for India in Council I. L. R, 22 Cal. 252, discussed the earlier cases on the point and observed as follows:—Upon the cases we have just referred to, it may be accepted as law on this side of India that the bed of a tidal navigable river is vested in the Crown; and that the right of julkur (fishery) in such river, as also the bed of the river itself may be granted by Government (whether it be in the exercise of their prerogative as the Crown or as representing the public) to private individuals to be held by them as private property, subject, of course, to the right of navigation and such other rights which the public has in such rivers."

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE DECISION OF THE Privy Council in Raja Rai Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu, at p. 393 of this number. Their Lordships have reversed the decision of the Calcutta High Court reported at p. 408 of Vol. VIII of this journal. The Calcutta High Court had held that although the English rule against champerty and maintenance does not apply in this country the agreement in that case could not be given effect to as being opposed to public policy and as promoting gambling in litigation. The stipulation in the agreement which was considered specially open to criticism was that out of the price of Rs 52,600 agreed upon only Rs. 600 was to be paid down and the balance was payable in the event of success in the suit and in proportion to the extent of such success. A very similar agree ment came up for consideration before the Privy Council shortly afterwards in the case of Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain, 9 C. W. N. 477. In that case the Judicial Committee held that there was "nothing extortionate or unreasonable in the terms of the bargain in the case," "no gambling in litigation" and "nothing contrary to public policy" and their Lordships were further of opinion that so long as the sale deed stood and was not, repudiated by the transferor, it could not be challenged by a stranger to the deed.

IN THE PRESENT CASE THE QUESTION HAS BEEN dealt with even more "squarely" by the Judicial Committee. Their Lordships hold that the agreement in this case was champertous. But that was not enough to avoid such a transaction in India. Lord Robertson gave the reason in the course of the argument that "society in India makes it inexpedient to apply the law of champerty there." This may be so But we venture to suggest an additional reason. Lawyers in England of the present day are themselves in doubt as to whether the law of champerty as established by a long course of decisions in that country is wholly justifiable in principle. Their Lordships were further of opinion that the stipulation which made the payment of the consideration money contingent on the success of the suit did not add any darker complexion to the transaction and it was not contrary to public policy and void as such. Lord Robertson very pertinently asked in the course of the argument, "can you show me any form of an agreement of this class which would not be a gamble in litigation." It was further laid down, as in Achal Ram's case, that the transaction could not be challenged by persons not parties to it.

A QUESTION WHICH VERY NATURALLY ARISES OUT of these cases and which by a coincidence forms the subject-matter of the next decision reported in this number (Munshi Basiruddin v. Mahomed Jalish at p. 409) is whether a benamdar stands in the same position as the transferee in the two cases mentioned above. In benami sales and mortgages also, the question may be said (in the language of the Judicial Committee) to be one between assignor and assignee. A benami sale, considering the nature of the transaction is, no doubt, no sale, when the question arises between the benamdar and the beneficial owner. But if to hold property benami be not altogther wrong and illegal, it is difficult to see why third parties should not respect the arrangement made between the owner and the benamdar by mutual agreement, so long as such agreement does not operate in fraud of the rights of such third parties. We think that the present law relating to benami transactions in so far as it treats such transactions as not merely voidable at the instance of the parties themselves, but as void to the whole world is unsatisfactory and stands in need of reconsideration. It would simplify matter much if benami transactions were looked at in the same light as any other transaction of a voidable character. At present the law holds out inducements to the raising of false pleas in defence in suits for possession or the like brought by a purchaser, where the plea that the Plaintiff is a benamdar is a good defence even when raised by the verlest trespasser.

THE CASE OF Howatson v. Webb REPORTED IN (1908) 1 Ch. p. 1 shows the risk that an educated man undergoes in signing a deed without reading it. In this case the Defendant, a Solicitor, was requested by H to execute certain deeds and on his asking what these deeds were he was told by H that they were deeds transferring a certain property. The Defendant on the faith of the representation, without himself examining the deeds signed them. One of the deeds so signed was a mortgage between the Defendant as the mortgagor and another person and contained the usual covenant by the Defendant (mortgagor) for payment of principal and interest. In an action by a transferee of the mortgage for payment of the mortgage debt, the Defendant pleaded that he executed the mortgage-deed on a misrepresentation as to its contents, and believing it to be a deed of transfer and he never intended to execute the personal covenant for the payment of the mortgage debt and so the covenant was not binding upon him. It was contended on behalf of the Defendant that the whole deed was inoperative as he never intended to execute such a deed or at any rate if the deed as a deed of mortgage stood good, the personal covenant contained in it must fail, as the Defendant never thought of undertaking any personal liability and he was never told nor had he any reasonable ground for thinking that the deed which he executed contained any personal covenant.

THE SECOND CONTENTION COULD NOT OF COURSE hold good. The deed, such as it was, was indivisible and if it was good at all it was good in all respects. As to the first contention the question was whether the Defendant who was an educated man could avail himself of the plea of non est factum in this particular case. The Court held that the Defendant could not avoid the deed on such a plea and that it was his duty to examine the deed before signing it and as he did not do so, he ought to suffer the consequence of his own negligence as against an innocent third party, the Plaintiff in this case being a transferee of the mortgage deed. Farwell L. J., asked :—"Whether the old cases on misrepresentation as to the contents of a deed were not based upon the illiterate character of the person to whom the deed was read over, and on the fact that an illiterate man was treated as being in the same position as a blind man. . . . and whether at the present time an educated person who is not blind is not estopped from availing himself of the plea of non est factum against a person who innocently acts upon the faith of the deed being valid."

A TESTATOR BEQUEATHED CERTAIN PROPERTIES TO A legatee. In describing the properties he stated to the following effect: "I give all the properties to C which have been granted to me by my father under a codicil to his Will, namely, the properties X, Y, Z." It appeared that another property, K., was also given to the testator by the codicil of the father's Will but there was no evidence in the case whether the testator knew at the time he executed his Will that under the codicil to the father's Will this property K also was granted to him. After the death of the testator the question arose what properties the legatee was to get—that is to say whether he should get only the properties which the testator obtained under the codicil or whether he should get only the properties that were enumerated, viz., the properties X, Y, Z.

THE SOLUTION OF THE QUESTION PRIMARILY DEPENDS upon the intention of the testator; and in the absence of reliable evidence as to the intention the Court must have to look to the contents of the Will and the surrounding circumstances. Now what was the leading description of the properties sought to be bequeathed? Did the testator intend to bequeath all the properties he obtained under his father's codicil, or did he intend to give the properties he enumerated. The principle for the guidance of Courts in arriving at the intention of the testator, in such cases may be stated thus—where there is a complete general description of the property comprised in a transfer, followed by an imperfect enumeration, the latter cannot be read as restricting the former. Traveds v. Bhendel (1877) 2 Ch. D. 436. But this rule also does not solve the difficulty. It assumes that of the two descriptions, one is complete and the other is imperfect. But the real question is which is the complete description and which the incomplete or imperfect description? Suppose A in a deed stated that he gave all the properties which he purchased from B viz., properties X, Y, Z, and it appeared that the property Z was not purchased by A from B. In this case without strong reasons the Court will not hold that the property Z was also comprised in the gift. Or suppose numerous properties were purchased by A but in the enumeration some of the properties so purchased were not included. Then in such a case it would probably be held that the general description should prevail over the enumeration, because where the general description is numerous it is reasonable to suppose that in enumerating them some of the properties may have been left out through mistake or oversight.

BUT IN THE RECENT CASE OF Brocket, in re Dawes v. Miller reported at (1908) 1 Ch. 185 it was held that the enumeration should prevail over the preceding general description. The learned Judge held that the enumeration of the properties was the leading and the complete description. The learned Judge observed "Now the present is not a case in which there has been a complete description of the thing intended to be given by name with a subsequent misdescription as to some particular connected with it, but in the present case we have two perfectly distinct descriptions of the subject matter of the gift, each complete in itself and they are connected by the advert "namely" which means "by name" or "that is to say," and there is no other connection between the two descriptions. The first description is a general collective description, and in this sense uncertain. An enquiry and investigation, with, I suppose, some possibility of error, are necessary to ascertain the particulars of the real estate referred to. The second description is more definite and specific." The learned Judge goes on to observe that the mere fact that a second description by enumeration and specification was added showed that the first description which preceded it was not considered by the executant of the deed to be complete and accurate; as otherwise why should he add it unless to make certain what was more or less observed before.

IT IS DIFFICULT TO LAY DOWN A HARD AND FAST rule for the construction of deeds containing more than one description of the properties dealt with, where the two descriptions conflict with each other in some respects. The decision in a particular case will be more or less influenced by the particular facts of the case and the language of the deed. In all these cases the Court's duty is to infer the real intention of the grantor, guided by certain general principles which though not infallible lead to correct results in the majority of cases.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE CASE OF Mohesh Chandra Saha v. The Emperor reported at p. 416 of this issue. In this case, their Lordships did not adopt the interpretation which was placed in Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghosh, 12 C. W. N. 140 upon sec. 350, Cr. P. C. In this connection we may refer our readers to an article which appeared at p. lxxiv of the current volume.

RECENT CASES UNDER THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

INSTALMENT DECREE.—An instalment decree cannot be made in a suit for rent under sec. 210, C. P. C., but the High Court refused to set aside such a decree upon an application for revision under sec. 622, C. P. C., as it was only an error of law: Sibh Narain v. Baikuntha Nath, 11 C. W. N. 857. The reason of the decision is that sec. 210, C. P. C., speaks of a suit for money and a suit for rent is not a suit for money. It may be pointed out here that sec. 546, C. P. C., has been held to be applicable to rent decrees although that section speaks of a decree for money and not a decree for rent; Bunku Behari v. Syama Charan, I. L. R. 25 Cal. 322. Further secs. 210 and 546, C. P. C., are not among the sections which have been made applicable to rent suits. However it seems that a Court has jurisdiction to pass an instalment decree when the order is passed upon consent.

RAIYAT.—A person who was originally a raiyat may afterwards convert himself into a tenure-holder so far as third persons are concerned. Mohesh v. Manbharan, 5 C. L. J. 522.

NON-OCCUPANCY RAIYAT.—It has now been definitely settled by a Full Bench that under the Bengal Tenancy Act the right of a non-occupancy raiyat is not heritable. Mohunt Lukhan v. Jainath, 11 C.

W. N. 626: S. C. I. L. R 34 Cal. 516; 5 C. L. J. 457. It may however be noted here that the Judges composing the Full Bench were not unanimous. Whatever may be the view of the majority as to the question of law, as a matter of fact, we seldom find a landlord anxious to eject the heir of a raiyat in this country

EJECTMENT.—Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have reversed the decision of the High Court in the case of Surendra v Hari Mohun, 9 C. W. N. 87: S. C. I. L. R. 31 Cal 174 and have held that the question whether the erection of an indigo factory within the limits of land let out for agricultural purposes generally will render the land unfit for the purposes of the tenancy is essentially a question of fact. Hari Mohun v. Surendra, 11 C. W. N. 794: S. C. I. L. R. 34 Cal. 718; 6 C. L J. 19.

ENHANCEMENT.—The fact that the tenant has been exonerated from certain liabilities under a previous contract cannot give validity to a stipulation to pay rent at an enhanced rate exceeding 2 annas in the rupee. Probol Chandra v. Cherag Ali, 11 C W. N. 62. One suit for enhancement of rent under sec. 30 and increase of rent under sec 52 is maintainable. Sarada v Iswar, 11 C. W. N. 1154.

UNDER-RAIYAT.—The case of Arip Mondul v. Ram Ratan, 8 C. W. N. 479 has been explained in the case of Jamini v. Rajendra, 11 C. W. N. 519 and it has been held that the heir of an under-raiyat has only the right to remain in possession of the land until the end of the agricultural year but has no right to inherit.

HOLDING OVER—In a suit for ejectment under sec. 49 of the Act it was held that mere delay in the institution of the suit is no reason for the dismissal of the suit on the ground that the Defendant was allowed to hold over. Ratan Lal v. Farshi, I. L. R. 34 Cal. 396 The expression "holding over" means that the relation of landlord and tenant continues with the assent of both parties, and the overt acts, by which the relation may be continued, are either the receipt of rent by the landlord or his assenting to the continuance of the tenancy by other acts or words. Ibid Per Mitra and Caspersz, JJ.

ADDITIONAL RENT.—A landlord is entitled to recover additional rent where the rent was settled having reference to the area and not a consolidated rent. Raj Kumar v Ram Lal, 5 C. L. J. 538.

INTEREST.—The distinction between sec. 59 of the Contract Act and sec 55 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been explained in the case of Mohim Chandra v. Kalitara, 11 C. W. N. 939; under sec. 59 of the Contract Act the Court may have regard not only to the debtor's express intimation but also to circumstances implying that the payment is to be applied to the discharge of some particular debt; but under the Bengal Tenancy Act the debtor must declare the year or the years and the instalment to which he wishes the payment to be credited. Where a landlord receives a certain sum of money as rent he cannot apply it to interest as the word "rent" does not necessarily include interest. Bhagabati v. Basanta Kumari, 11 C. W. N. 110.

A landlord is entitled to recover interest at a rate higher than 12 per cent. from a person who purchased it from the original tenant who had stipulated in his kabuliyat to pay such interest. Tiluk v. Jasada, 11 C W. N. 215.

To stop interest on rent running in a case governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act a tender of rent which is improperly refused need not be followed by a deposit of rent in Court under sec. 61 and such a tender, if kept good, is sufficient to stop interest running from the date of tender. Kripasindhu v. Annada Sundari, 11 C W. N 983, C. p. Jagattarini v. Nabagopal, I. L R 34 Cal 305: S. C. 6 C. L. J. 273.

"Rent" in cl. (c) of sec. 179 does not exclude interest. Bejoy Chand v. S. C. Mookerjea, 11 C. W. N. 1105.

SUBLEASE.—A sublease by a raiyat for a term exceeding nine years is invalid even against the raiyat Basaratulla v. Kusirunnessa, 11 C. W. N. 190. A raiyat who sold his holding and took an under-raiyati lease has been held to be not competent to maintain a suit for recovery of possession of the land against the landlord. Rajani Kant v. Ekkari, 11 C. W. N. 811.

COMMON MANAGER.—A regular suit lies to cancel an appointment of a common manager on the ground of its invalidity. Indu Bhusan v. Annapurna, 6 C. L. J. 216.

The case of Fajlal Ali Chowdry v. Abdul Majid Chowdry, I. L. R. 14 Cal. 659 laying down the procedure for the appointment of common manager for several estates has been followed in the case of Saradindu v. The Collector of Rangpur, 11 C. W. N. 1143 and it has also been held that a co-owner who has opened a separate account in the Collector's register or makes separate collection for his share is nevertheless liable to have his share taken over by a common manager, although the dispute may not have extended to his share. His remedy is to have his share demarcated by metes and bounds.

RECORD-OF-RIGHTS—By the operation of sec. 9 of Act III, B C. of 1898 the Civil Court is precluded from adjudicating on a question as to whether certain lands were rent free or not when such question was decided in a proceeding under Chap. X before the passing of Act III of 1898. Nabin Chandra v. Radha Kishore, 11 C. W. N. 859.

Art. 14 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act has no application to an order rejecting an objection under sec. 103A. Ram Gulam v. Bishnu, 11 C. W. N 48. An entry in a record-of-rights raises a rebuttable presumption Abdul v. Jogesh, 11 C. W. N 153; see also Kali v. Pratap, 5 C. L J. 92; and such entries should not be lightly discarded Kali v. Pratap, 5 C. L. J. 92.

The decision of a Settlement Officer before Act III, B. C. of 1898 in a settlement proceeding under sec. 104 (2) has the effect of a decree under sec. 107 although it will not operate as res judicata. Mohim v. Kalitara, 11 C. W. N. 1028.

A settlement holder is bound by the terms of his settlement to recognise intermediate tenure-holders mentioned in the settlement papers: Tapanidhi v. Pitambar, 5 C. L. J 67.

APPEAL.—Sec. 153 applies to a suit for rent brought by a co-sharer landlord who is a separate landlord Bhabotarini v. Ekabbar, 5 C. L J. 235.

A suit for Phulkur rent is a suit for rent and sec. 153 applies to it. 6 C. L. J. 668.

INCUMBRANCE.—Sec. 167 has no application to a sale in execution of a rent decree of a portion only of a tenure or holding; Ramkinkar v. Akhil Chander, 11 C. W. N. 350; nor does it apply to a sale in execution of a decree for rent of two or more tenures or holdings where one decree is obtained; but one suit for the rent of two or more holdings or tenures is maintainable. Hridoy v. Krishna, 11 C. W. N. 497: s. c. I. L. R. 34 Cal. 298.

SALE-PROCEEDS.—Under sec 169 the landlord is entitled to be paid out of the sale-proceeds the amount of rent due in respect of the tenure between the institution of the suit and the date of sale, in priority to the mortgagee of the tenure. Prabal v. Jadupati, I. L. R. 34 Cal. 724: s. c. 6 C. L. J 26.

POSSESSION.—The rule laid down in Umatul v. Nemai, 6 C. L. J. 592 that a person who has made a payment under sec. 171 is entitled to be placed in possession of the tenure upon application to the executing Court has been fully discussed in the case of Ram Narain v. Lal Das, 12 C W. N. 55: s. c. 6 C. L. J 595 where it has been held that an executing Court cannot order delivery of possession as against a stranger.

RECOGNITION.—The question as to whether the withdrawal of money deposited under sec. 171 has the effect of recognising the person making the deposit as a tenant is discussed fully in the case of Thomas Barclay v. Syed Hossein, 6 C. L J. 601. As to when a landlord is bound to recognise a transferee see Baishtab Charan v. Akhil Chandra, 11 C. W. N. 217.

SALE.—The High Court did not interfere with an order setting aside a sale under sec. 174 when the deposit fell short owing to a miscalculation of an officer of the Court. Sheikh Fakir v. Biraj, 11 C. W. N. 116.

SUIT FOR RENT AGIANIST SOME OF SEVERAL JOINT TENANTS.—Joint tenants are jointly and severally liable for rent, so a suit for rent against some of several joint tenants is maintainable. Jogendra v. Nogendra, 11 C. W. N. 1026.

LIMITATION.—Art. 2 (b) of Sch. III which applies to a suit by the sole landlord of an entire tenure or holding also applies to a suit for rent by a co-sharer landlord. Jogendra v. Nagendra, 11 C. W. N. 1026.

Art. 3 of Sch. III has no application to the case of dispossession by a landlord in the capacity of an auction-purchaser. Mahomed v. Hirendra, 5 C. L. J. 650.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

A right of privacy is more substatially and materially invaded in this country by apertures which would permit a person to look on without being observed than by the existence of an open surface where the presence of a looker-on would at once be conspicuous and could easily be guarded against.

NAJINUDDIN AHMAD v. ALBERT PUECH, I. L R. 29 All. 584 Civil Procedure Code, sec. 522—Appeal against a decree upon an award.

Where a Court passed a decree without allowing to the parties the time prescribed by law for filing objections to the award, held that an appeal lay.

EMPEROR v. TULA, I. L R. 29 All. 586. Indian Penal Code, sec. 211.

A person should be given an opportunity of proving the charge which he had brought before he is prosecuted under sec. 211, I P. C.

MOSHAN v. MAKBUB, I L. R. 29 All. 589. Court of Wards—Power of sale.

Case where it was held that the discretion of the Court of Wards in selling a property could not be questioned by a Civil Court.

RAM SUKH v. RAM SAHAI, I. L. R. 29 All. 591. Civil Procedure Code, secs. 314, 316.

Even though a sale has become absolute on being confirmed under sec. 314, C. P. C., the Court may hold its hand and refuse to grant a certificate if before the certificate is granted the decree under which the property was sold is no longer subsisting.

THAMMAN v. MAHARAJA OF VIZIANAGRAM, 29 I. L. R. All. 593. Adverse possession.

Pessession by a third person during the continuance of a lease will not ordinarily be adverse.

GHASITI v. ABDUL SAMAD, I. L. R. 29 All. 596. Civil Procedure Code, sec. 310A

An appeal does not lie from an order refusing to restore an application under sec. 310A, C. P. C. dismissed for default.

EMPEROR v. BUDH LAL, I. L. R. 29 All. 598. Indian Penal Code, sec. 411.

Circumstances under which a managing member of a joint family was convicted under sec. 411, I. P. C: The key of the room where the stolen property was found was found with the accused.

NIADAR MAL v. RAUNAK, I. L. R. 29 All. 608. Suit to set aside sale on the ground of fraud.

A suit to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud is not maintainable when the ground was decided against the Plaintiff in a proceeding under sec. 108, C. P. C.

UMED v. JAS RAM, I. L. R. 29 All. 614. Transferability of a holding.

A judgment-debtor cannot raise the question that the property sold is not saleable when he did not raise any objection in execution having had opportunity to do so or who did not appeal against the order of sale if he could have preferred an appeal.

RAM NARAIN v. UMRAO, I. L. R. 29 All. 615. Limitation Act, Sch. II, Art. 29.

Art. 29 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applies to a suit for damages on account of an unlawful attachment before judgment.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN. SIR ANDREW SCOBLE. SIR ARTHUR WILSON. 1908. 4, February.	MIRZA MAHOMED REZA BEG, Appellant, v. MIAN HAMIDUDIN SHAH and others, Respondents.

Special leave to appeal—Custom—Concurrent findings—Substantial question of law—Alleged insufficiency of evidence.

This was an application for special leave to appeal to his Majesty in Council under the circumstances following:—

On 19th May 1900 the Appellant and the Respondents purchased from one Wahid Ali certain immoveable properties situate in the town of Bahraich for Rs. 20,000 and were duly placed in possession thereof. Wahid Ali was the head of a Mahomedan foundation known as Takia Mansove Shah and died on 20th April 1904. On 22nd September 1904 the Respondent Mian Hamidudin Ali Shah instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich to recovor possession from the vendees of the said property sold to them. He alleged first that the said property was held by the vendor in trust for the said foundation; and secondly that on the death of the vendor the said property vested in the Plaintiff as trustee on his election as head of the foundation in place of the vendor deceased. In answer to that suit the vendees denied that the vendor held the property in trust or that it was ever dedicated to the use of the foundation, and also denied that the Plaintiff was validly appointed as head of the said foundation so as to give him a right to sue. On 30th January 1905 the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment in favour of the Plaintiff on both the matters raised in defence, and decreed delivery of possession of the property claimed. On appeal by the Appellant against that decree the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh on 16th January 1907 made a decree affirming the decree appealed from. On 15th February 1907 the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh dismissed the Appellant's application for leave to appeal to this Majesty in Council on the ground that the further appeal raised no substantial question of law.

Mr. De Gruyther for the Appellant:—Both Courts in India are in error in law first in presuming in the absence of evidence that properties purchased by the head of a foundation in his own name are purchased from trust funds or if purchased from private funds permanently dedicated to the use of the foundation; secondly, in finding that a grant of loan to a Fakir in his name is not personal to the grantee; and thirdly, in finding on the evidence, admitting it to be true, a valid succession by custom to the headship of the foundation, the election in the present instance only having been made by the Fakirs of the foundation, previous elections having been made by the principal residents of the town; and the evidence now adduced of the custom set up being insufficient in law in proof thereof.

Application refused.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1504 OF 1907. MAHADEV LAL, Petitioner v. DHOMRAJ MAISRI, Opposite Party. 24th January 1908.

Indian Penal Code, secs. 417 and 511—The offence of attempt at cheating—Whether committed.

The facts are shortly these:—

The accused arranged a contract for the delivery of goods to the complainant's firm by Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers for whom he had no authority to act. The contract was repudiated by the latter firm as invalid. The complainant's firm pressed their claim under the contract and instructed a pleader named Srish Babu to write to Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers and demand fulfilment. Then the accused finding that his fraud in connection with the contract was likely to be discovered went to the pleader Srish Babu, represented himself to be a member of the complainant's firm, which he was not, and instructed him to write a letter in the name of the complainant's firm to Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers stating that the contract which the complainant's firm had entered into had been cancelled. The pleader wrote the letter but before despatching it referred to the complainant's firm, and the accused's fraud was discovered. On these facts accused was convicted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate under sec. $\frac{417}{511}$, I. P. C., and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50.

This rule was issued for setting aside the conviction and sentence.

Their Lordships observed :—

"The grounds on which we have been asked to set aside the conviction are (1) that the accused have been convicted of attempting to cheat not the complainants' firm but the pleader Srish Babu (2) that the act of the accused did not amount to an attempt at cheating, as it was not likely to harm the pleader in any way.

The first of these grounds cannot prevail, because the prosecutor in all criminal cases is the Crown. . . . Then it would seem to us that his act does amount to an attempt to cheat the pleader. He made a very false representation to him. He caused him to write a letter to Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers which the pleader would not have written if it had not been for the false representation made to him by the accused. If this fraud had been successful it must necessarily have caused injury to the pleader in mind and reputation. The pleader would certainly have been likely to lose reputation, and perhaps business, if it appeared that he had been negligent and had been readily deceived by the accused. He might also have found himself involved in litigation."

The sentence was commuted to one of fine of Rs. 500 in all.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before GEIDT and CHITTY, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 431 OF 1906. DUKHARAN SING AND OTHERS, Defendants, Appellants v. MUSSAMAT BIBI SOGHRA, Plaintiff, Respondent. 10th February 1908.

Partition decree—Landlord and Tenant—Division of Tenancy—Sec. 88 Bengal Tenancy Act.

Plaintiff is zamindar of mouza Balour. Within his mouza there are 100 bighas of English lands held by the Plaintiff and the Defendants jointly as tenants at a uniform rate of annas three per bigha, the Plaintiff's share therein being 1 an. 15 dam. The Plaintiff brought a suit for partition of those lands and the different sets of Defendants also applied for partition of the lands according to their respective shares. The partition decree was made on the 20th August 1900 in which different plots of lands were allotted to the plaintiff and several sets of Defendants and the parties took delivery of possession according to their respective share of the lands alloted in the partition decree. The Plaintiff thereafter brought the present suit against the Defendants jointly for recovery of the arrears of rent in respect of the 14 an. 5 dam. share (i.e. excluding only his own share). The defence was that by the partition decree separate tenancies were created under the Plaintiff and they are bound only to pay rent for the lands held by them separately at the uniform rate of two annas per bigha and that the suit against them was not maintainable. The Munsiff upheld this contention and dismissed the suit In his judgment he said. "The entire tenure was put under partition at the instance of the Plaintiff and it was split up into several taktas in her own presence * *. It was perfectly known to the Plaintiff that division of land meant distribution of rent as well. It appears to me that allotment of the land was made according to the share of each party or sets of parties without any regard to the assets for the obvious reason that the rate of rent was uniform. If the Plaintiff consented to a division of the land it was quite easy affair for her to have known the jama payable for the land alloted to each Defendant or sets of Defendants. Then again it is not consistent with the principles of equity to make a Defendant or set of Defendants answerable for the whole jama when the Plaintiff is fully aware that under the partition he is in possession of only a portion of the land."

On appeal the learned District Judge set aside the decision of the Munsif and remanded the case for trial on the merits. The learned District Judge in his judgment observed. "The suit for partition was brought by the Plaintiff not as a proprietor but as a co-sharer in the English land and by the Plaintiff's action in bringing the suit, she has not consented to a division of the tenancy which the Defendant held under her as proprietor. It is true that the suit gave the Defendants an opportunity to get the remaining English lands which fell within their tenancy partitioned but that cannot amount to the Plaintiff acquiescing in or consenting to the division of their tenancy under her and serve the purpose of her consent in writing as required by sec. 88 Bengal Tenancy Act. The joint liability of the Defendants to pay rent to her continues in spite of the partition. The lower Court speaks of equity but as there is in sec. 88, B. T. Act an express provision law on the subject equitable considerations cannot arise."

Against this order the Defendants preferred the above appeal to the High Court and it was contended on their behalf that sec. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act is not conclusive on the point. Bengal Tenancy Act is not exhaustive but only embodies certain law on the subject, see preamble to the Act. There are other means except consent in writing as laid down in sec. 88, by which a tenure can be subdivided so as to bind the landlord. In Act X of 1859, sec. 27 and Act VIII of 1868 sec. 26, there were similar provisions but inspite of the strict wordings of those sections it was held that subdivision of tenancies was effected by act of landlord other than his consent in writing. See 15 W. R. p 225, 25 W. R. 19 In this case the effect of the partition decree was to create separate tenures.

Held—The partition decree did not effect a subdivision of the tenancy within the meaning of sec. 88, B. T. Act and cannot affect Plaintiff's right as landlord to sue for the entire rent.

Mortgagee purchasing share of equity of redemption —Splitting of security—Contribution.

This was a suit to enforce a mortgage. The original mortgagor died leaving three sons who became equally entitled to the equity of redemption. One of the sons sold his one-third share in the equity of redemption to the Plaintiff, the mortgagee. The Plaintiff after instituting his suit offered to allow one-third of the mortgage debt, as being the share of that debt which he was liable to pay as the purchaser of one-third share of the equity of redemption. The mortgagors, the owners of the other two-thirds of the equity of redemption, claimed to deduct from the mortgage debt the full value of the share purchased by the mortgagee. The lower Court accepted that view and dismissed the suit.

Held—That the mortgagee standing in the shoes of the mortgagor to the extent of the one-third share purchased by him, was only bound to give credit for that which his vendor would have been liable to pay, namely, one-third of the mortgage debt.

Civil Appellate Jurisdiction. Before Brett and Coxe, JJ. Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 977 of 1906. GANGA PORSAD SHA Plaintiff, Appellant v. RAMKHELWAN PASSI Defendant, Respondent. 27th February 1908.

Forfeiture of tenancy—Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit not necessary.

Plaintiff sued to eject the Defendant from a piece of land and house standing thereon on the allegation that he let out the house to Defendant at a monthly rent of annas eight; that during his absence Defendant commenced erecting a new building and though Plaintiff remonstrated the Defendant did not listen to him and have stopped payment of rent and by dispossessing the Plaintiff by his unlawful act the Defendant was in the position of a trespasser. The Plaintiff wanted khas possession of the land with mesne profits. The defence was that the land belonged to the Defendant and not to the Plaintiff and the suit was barred by limitation. Both the lower Courts found Plaintiff's title to the land was proved and the first Court gave the Plaintiff a decree directing the Defendant to vacate the land within one month but the lower Appellate Court dismissed the Plaintiff's suit on the ground, that as no notice to quit was given the suit was premature. The Plaintiff appealed and it was contended on his behalf (1) that no notice to quit was necessary as the Defendant repudiated the tenancy and never pleaded that he was Plaintiff's tenant. Notice to quit was necessary only when tenancy was admitted on both sides Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant 17th edition p 410. I. L R. 9 Bom. 517. The tenancy was determined under sec. 111 cl. (g) T. P. Act (2) question of notice was not raised in the written statement nor any issue raised on the point and the lower Appellate Court was wrong in making a new case for the Defendant. 9 C. W. N. 460 cited. The Respondent argued that the Plaintiff ought to have served notice to quit and based his cause of action on that, and that the tenancy has not been determined as the title of Plaintiff was denied in the written statement. I. L. R. 28 Cal. 125 cited, Held—No notice to quit was necessary, the tenancy of Defendant was determined by his action, and his subsequent possession was that of trespasser. The Sub Judge was wrong in going into question of notice when it was not raised in the pleadings.

Champerty—Assignment—Validity, if may be questioned by third parties—Consideration made payable upon success of suit—Gambling in litigation—Public policy—Purchase from limited owner—Hindu woman's estate—Onus on purchaser, extent of—Ratification—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 196—Sale without legal necessity—Recovery by reversioner—Mesne profits, claim for.

In India an agreement cannot be avoided on the ground of champerty.

(3) 9 C. W. N. 477: s. c. L. R. 32 I. A. 113; I. L. R. 27 All. 271 (1905).

The agreement in this case provided that out of the purchase money which was fixed at Rs. 52,600, Rs. 600 only was to be paid down and the balance when the property should be recovered,

Held—That the agreement was generally of a champertous character but was not void on that account, nor was it opposed to public policy and void as such by reason of the stipulation relating to the payment of consideration.

An assignment cannot be questioned as unfair and unconscionable by a person who was not a party to the assignment.

One who claims title under a conveyance from a Hindu woman with the usual limited interest which a Hindu woman takes, and who seeks to enforce that title against reversioners is always subject to the burden of proving not only the genuineness of his conveyance, but the full comprehension by the limited owner of the nature of the alienation she was making and also that that alienation was justified by necessity, or at least that the alienee did all that was reasonable to satisfy himself of the existence of such necessity. And this burden lies the more heavily on one who comes into Court with the case that he did not take from a limited owner, but from one whose title he alleges to have been adverse to that owner.

Ratification in the proper sense of the term, as used with reference to the law of agency, is applicable only to acts done on behalf of the ratifier; and this rule is recognised in sec. 196 of the Indian Contract Act.

Where the Defendant held possession of properties under deeds of sale from a limited owner, which were found to have been executed without legal necessity, the

RAJA RAI BHAGWAT DAYAL SINGH v. DEBI DAYAL SAHU.

Plaintiff's claim for mesne profits was allowed.

Two consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature, at Fort William in Bengal dated 20th July 1903, modifying two decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Ranchi dated 20th December 1899, and dismissing the Appellants' suits with costs.

The main questions raised in the appeal were whether the suits were maintainable on the ground of champerty and maintenance, and whether two deeds of sale executed by certain Hindu ladies were valid and binding on the male reversioners to the estate of the last male owner in possession.

The following pedigree will help to explain the facts of the case:—

Of the persons named in the above pedigree, Tilakdhari Singh was the owner of the villages Lalgara, Chiyanki and Ganka—the subject matter of the suits, and others. He died in 1868, and was succeeded by his son, Ram Saran Singh, his other son, Kali Charan Singh, having predeceased him. Ram Saran Singh died on 7th February 1879, and was succeeded by his infant son, Narayan Singh, who died while still an infant and unmarried, on 7th August 1879, leaving him surviving his step-mother, Mussammat Etraj Koer, the widow of Ram Saran Singh, as also his grandmother, Mussammat Jileb Koer, the widow of Tilakdhari Singh, and Mussammat Aprup Koer, the widow of Kali Charan Singh. The male members of the family then alive were Rai Bhagwat Dyal Singh, Bhan Pertab Singh, Kirpa Narayan Singh.

On 10th February 1877, Ram Saran Singh had granted to the Respondent Debi Dayal Sahu a zurpeshgi lease of certain lands in the village Lalgara for a term of five years at an annual rental of Company's Rs. 2, "in lieu of a loan of money under a bond and expenses amounting to Company's Rs. 600, which is fixed as zurpeshgi money."

On 9th March 1180, Mussammat Etraj Koer having borrowed Rs. 600 "for paying off the debts due to creditors" of her husbad, from Debi Dayal Sahu, fixed that sum as zurpeshgi money and granted to him a zurpeshgi lease of certain lands in the village of Lalgara for a term of 9 years, at an annual rent of Rs. 2 "in lieu of the aforesaid zurpeshgi money of Rs. 600."

On the same date Mussammat Etraj Koer granted to Debi Dayal Sahu a zur- peshgi ticca pattah in the entire 16 annas of Mouzahs Chiyanki and Ganka for a term of 9 years at an annual rental of Rs. 20. The deed recited that "Rs. 6,400 has justly been found due, according to account up to this day under 3 registered instalment bonds and simple bonds to Debi Dayal Sahu—by the late Thakurai Ram Saran Singh,—and . . . the said amount is daily increasing by interest, and it is impossible for me (Etraj Koer) to pay it off in one lump, for this reason, I (Etraj Koer) have executed a separate bond to the said Sahu for Rs. 200 out of that amount and there remained a balance of Rs. 6,200, and I (Etraj Koer) have fixed the said amount as zurpeshgi money" The whole of the sum of Rs. 6,200, the zurpeshgi money was set off in payment of the money formerly due to the Respondent, Debi Dayal Sahu.

On the same date Mussammat Etraj Koer gave the Respondent Debi Dayal Sahu a bond for the repayment of the balance of Rs. 200 referred to in the recital of the last mentioned deed and undertook to "repay the said amount principal with interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent per mensem in one lump sum on 30th Magh 1288 F." If the principal and interest remained unpaid on the promised date, the interest after that date was to run at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem up to the date of payment of the principal and interest.

On 24th July 1880, Mussammat Etraj Koer executed a simple bond in favour of Debi Dayal Sahu for Rs. 1,000. The rate of interest was Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem and the amount was made up as follows:—

1. Due under bond dated 9th March 1880	...	Rs. 200
2. Paid in Cash	...	„ 800
		Rs. 1,000

On 26th August 1880, the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, and the Subordinate Judge, Lohardaga, granted a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, to Mussammat Etraj Koer, whose application was opposed by Bhan Pertab Singh.

On 16th May 1881, Raja Rai Bhagwat Dayal Singh instituted a suit against Mussammats Etraj Koer, Jileb Koer and Aprup Koer to recover possession from them of all the villages which had been in the possession of Narayan Singh, basing his title on an alleged family custom by which maintenance grants reverted to the Raj on the death of the maintenance holder without direct male descendants. The suit was finally determined by a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, on 11th July 1883, which decided that the village of Nawa reverted to the Raj under the alleged custom, but that the remaining villages in suit were the self-acquired property of Tilakdhari Singh, and, as to those, the suit was dismissed. Bhan Pertab Singh and Kirpa Narayan Singh intervened in that suit.

On 12th July 1882, Mussammat Etraj Koer "borrowed Rs. 2,000 in cash for necessary expenses in the High Court" from Nandram Dubey at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem and gave him as security for the loan a mortgage on the village Sonehera.

On 19th October 1882, Mussammat Etraj Koer executed a bond for Rs. 600 in favour of Debi Dayal Sahu, of which

RAJA RAI BHAGWAT DAYAL SINGH v. DEBI DAYAL SAHU.

"Rs. 300 is due to him, on account of expenses, taken in cash" and Rs. 210 borrowed in cash "for purpose of meeting expenses." The rate of interest was 2 per cent. per mensem.

On 30th August 1883, Mussammat Etraj Koer gave Debi Dayal Sahu a mortgage bond of Rs. 3,500 on Chiyanki and Ganka at Rs. 1-12 per cent. interest per mensem. It recited that "according to account Rs. 2,613-14 has now been found due to Debi Dayal Sahu . . . under two former bonds (dated 24th July 1880, and 19th October 1882) and petty amounts borrowed at different times, and now I (Etraj Koer) have borrowed Rs. 886-2 for the purpose of making payment to Muktar Maksud Ali and meeting necessary expenses"

On 4th March 1884, Mussammats Etraj Koer, Jileb Koer, and Aprup Koer executed in favour of Debi Dayal Sahu a mortgage bond on Chiyanki and Ganka for Rs. 5,387 at Rs. 1-12 per cent. interest per mensem It recited that "money is due to Debi Dayal Sahu . . . under a registered zurpeshgi pattah, dated 9th March 1880, for Rs. 6,200 . . . another registered zurpeshgi pattah, dated 9th March 1880, for Rs. 600 . . . and a zurpeshgi pattah, dated 10th February 1877, . . . for Rs. 600. . . . And besides this, according to account, Rs. 3,887, principal and interest, has been found due by us (the three Mussammats) under a registered mortgage bond, dated 30th August 1883 . . . and we (Mussammats) now borrow Rs. 1,500 from the said Sahu in cash for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the marriage of the daughters of Thakurai Ram Saran Singh deceased."

On 2nd May 1884, Mussammats Jileb Koer, Aprup Koer and Etraj Koer, gave William Arthur Redford two mortgage bonds for Rs. 4,000 on the villages Lalgara and Hurilong. They were identically in the same terms and each contained the following recital:—"The marriages of the daughters of the late Thakurai Ram Saran Singh . . . are about to take place, and the bridegroom's party is expected to come here to-morrow from districts Balia and Ghazipur; therefore to meet the expenses of the marriages and to keep up the dignity and prestige of us, the declarants, and that of our family, we are in need of Rs. 4,000. For this reason, we, the declarants, out of our respective free will and accord, have borrowed Rs. 2,000— on interest at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per cent. per mensem."

On 26th May 1884, the three Mussammats borrowed Rs. 4,000 from N. A. Hodges at the same rate of interest and for the same object as stated in the mortgage bonds given to Redford.

On 22nd December 1884, the three Mussammats borrowed Rs. 600 from Akhouri Gokhulnand, who subsequently obtained a decree against them for Rs. 785-15-6.

On 20th August 1885, the three Mussammats executed a mortgage deed on Lalgara in favour of Debi Dayal Sahu for a consideration of Rs. 10,000 made up as follows:—

		Rs.	A.	P.
1. Due under deed, dated 4th March 1884	...	7,083	12	0
2. Paid in cash	...	2,916	4	0
	Rs.	10,000	0	0

The deed recited that the cash was borrowed "for the purpose of paying off the debts due to the other creditors and to meet necessary expenses." The interest was at the rate of Rs. 1-12 per cent. per mensem.

On 24th September 1885, the three Mussammats borrowed from Debi Dayal Sahu Rs. 300 at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem "for the purpose of paying interest to Hodges Sahib" and executed a simple bond in his favour.

On 27th January 1886, Mussammat Etraj Koer executed a mortgage deed in favour of Nandram Dubey for Rs. 4,000, made up as follows :—

	Rs.	A.	P.
1. Principal and interest due under bond, dated 12th July 1882 ...	3,754	11	0
2. Principal and interest due under bond, dated 18th January 1885	125	8	0
3. Paid in cash ...	119	13	0
Rs.	4,000	0	0

The interest was at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem, and the cash was borrowed "on account of necessary business."

On 19th January 1887, the three Mussammats sold the villages of Chiyanki and Ganka to Debi Dayal Sahu and executed a deed in his favour. The consideration was Rs. 20,916-5 made up as follows :—

	Rs.	A.	P.
1. Principal and interest due under deed, dated 9th March 1880 ...	6,200	0	0
2. Principal and interest due under deed, dated 20th August 1885 ...	13,068	5	0
3. On account of expenses ...	50	0	0
4. Principal and interest due under bond, dated 24th September 1885	398	0	0
5. Paid in cash ...	1,200	0	0
Rs.	20,916	5	0

It recited that "these debts were incurred for the purpose of meeting legal and shastri expenses and it is proper and necessary under every circumstance for us (the three ladies), the declarants, to pay it off; and the interest of the said money is daily increasing whereby it is apprehended that the properties held by us, the declarants, shall be ruined and destroyed. And besides this, money is also due to several other creditors. For this reason there is no other means whereby this heavy debt and debts due to the other creditors can be paid off by us, the declarants. Therefore, under these circumstances, except by transferring a portion of the properties held by us, it is impossible to pay off the aforesaid debts in any other way."

On 2nd August 1887, Redford obtained on his two registered mortgage bonds, dated 2nd May 1881, a decree for Rs. 5,977-5-11. And on same date Hodges obtained on his registered bond dated 26th May 1884, a decree for Rs. 5,098-13-6. In execution of these decrees Lalgara was put up for sale.

On 11th September 1888, the three Mussammats borrowed Rs. 8,000 at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from Hanuman Singh to pay off the decretal amounts due to Redford and Hodges and executed a deed of mortgage on Lalgara in his favour.

On 13th October 1890, the three Mussammats borrowed Rs. 500 "for the purpose of giving portion presents (rukhsut) to sons-in-law," from Ganput Sahu and Ram Ratan Sahu, sons of Debi Dayal Sahu, and gave them a simple bond.

On 16th October 1890, the three Mussammats executed a deed of mortgage on Lalgara in favour of Ganput Sahu and Ram Ratan Sahu for a consideration of Rs. 1,000 made up as follows :—

	Rs.	A.	P.
1. Due bond, dated 13th October 1890 ...	500	0	0
2. On account of petty expenses ...	156	0	0
3. Cash payment ...	344	0	0

Rs. 344 was borrowed "for the purpose of paying off the debts due to creditors." Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem was the rate of interest.

On 15th May 1891 the three Mussammats executed in favour of N. A. Hodges a deed whereby they sold the village of Lalgara to him for a consideration of Rs. 34,000 made up as follows :—

1. Paid to Hanuman Sing on account of principal and interest due to him under the mortgage deed, dated 11th September 1888	13,136	10	0
2. Paid to the Sahus on account of principal and interest due under three mortgage deeds, dated 10th February 1887; 9th March 1880; and 16th October 1890 ...	2,340	0	0
3. Paid to Akhouri Gokhulnand ...	801	4	6
4. Paid to Nandram Dubey on account of principal and interest due under the mortgage deed, dated 27th January 1886 ...	6,800	0	0
5. Paid in cash ...	10,922	1	6
Rs.	34,000	0	0

The deed recited inter alia that "Rs. 40,000 or 42,000 is due to the creditors by us, the declarants; but, we, the declarants, could not pay it off up to this moment; and if this debt be not paid off for a short time more, then all the properties held and possessed by us, the declarants, will be sold at auction sale and will be ruined, and it is impossible to pay off such a large debt by any means except by means of transfer of property." Of the consideration it set out that "Rs. 23,077-14-6 has been set off and deposited with the said Sahib and we have received now the balance Rs. 10,922-1-6 from the said vendee."

On 1st December 1893, N. A. Hodges executed a deed of sale and conveyed his interest in the village Lalgara to Debi Dayal Sahu, Ganpat Sahu, Ram Ratan Sahu and Ram Bilas Sahu for a consideration of Rs. 40,000.

Mussammat Jileb Koer died on 22nd November 1894. Mussammat Aprup Koer died on 7th February 1895. On 29th November 1895 Bhan Pertab Singh and Kirpa Narayan Singh sold the whole of their right, title and interest in the estate of Narayan Singh to Raja Rai Bhagwat Dayal Singh for a consideration of Rs. 52,600, of which the sum of Rs. 600 was paid in cash to the vendors and the balance was only payable to them in the event of the vendee's success in obtaining the property in suit "and in the event of recovery of a portion of the property sold a proportionate amount only was payable." Mussammat Etraj Koer died on 25th August 1897.

On 29th August 1898, Raja Rai Bhagwat Dayal Singh, Bhan Pertab Singh, and Kirpa Narayan Singh instituted two suits in the Court of Subordinate Judge of Ranchi. One of the suits (No. 8 of 1899) related to the village of Lalgara and the Defendants to that suit were Debi Dayal Sahu, Gunpat Sahu, Ram Ratan Sahu, Ram Bilas Sahu, and the executors of N. A. Hodges now represented by J. W. Sowton. The other suit (No. 9 of 1899) related to the villages Chiyanki and Ganka, and Debi Dayal Sahu was the sole Defendant thereto. The pleadings and issues in both suits were similar. The plaint alleged inter alia that large property consisting of land and moveables, which passed on the death of the last male owner to his heiress, produced an income of Rs. 10,000 a year. If the deeds of sale of the villages in suit were in fact executed, they were valid only for the life of the executant. The Defendants knew, or, on inquiry, might have known that the income revived by Mussammat Jileb Koer from the estate of the last male-holder, was more than amply sufficient to meet all her legitimate wants, and all legitimate charges thereon, and that there was no necessity, either in fact or law, for the alienation of the property in suit. The title of Bhan Pertab Singh and Kirpa Narayan Singh to succeed on the death of Mussammat Jileb Koer was acquired by Bhagwat Dayal Singh under the sale deed of 29th Novembe 1895. The prayers of the plaint were possession to be given to the first Appellant, and for mesne profits, a declaration and further and other reliefs.

The defence was inter alia that Etraj Koer was in adverse possession of the estate for 12 years and had thereby obtained on absolute title, and, ultimately, that if Jileb Koer took the estate by inheritance, she took an absolute estate as paternal grandmother under the Mitakshara law. That the Mussammats joined in the deeds fully understading the value and consequence of the transaction and for proper value. "The consideration money obtained by the purchase of the property in suit has been applied to the payment of lawful and necessary debts, and for lawful and necessary purpose." The conveyance to Bhagwat Dayal Singh was without consideration; collusive and fraudulent, immoral and opposed to public policy, being made for the purpose of gambling in litigation.

Of the issues fixed in suit No. 8 of 1899 it is necessary to mention here only the following:—

"5. Is the kobala executed by Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of Plaintiff No. 1, in November 1895, a bonâ fide and valid deed? Did any consideration pass thereunder?

"6. Were Mussammats Jileb Koer, Aprup Koer, and Etraj Koer, the absolute owners of property in dispute, or was their interest a qualified one?

"7. Is the kobala, dated the 19th January 1887, executed by the Mussammats in favour of the Defendants, a legal and valid document? Was it executed fo legal necessities. Did any consideration pass, and did such go to satisfy debts, which costitute legal necessities? Is it binding on the reversioners?"

On 20th December 1899, the Subordinate Judge delivered one judgment in both suits. He decided the fifth issue in favour of the Respondents, holding that the conveyance under which the first Appellant claimed was gambling in litigation, immoral, and not enforceable on grounds of public policy. He, however, added, the conveyance failing, the title of the vendors, the 2nd and 3rd Plaintiffs, remained, and that they were entitled to a decree, if the alienations made by the ladies be invalid in law. On the sixth issue he decided that Jileb Koer was solely entitled to the succession to the last full owner and that she took a qualified estate. On the seventh issue he was of opinion that the estate of the ladies had been mismanaged, and that advantage had been taken of their position. He found that legal necessity was proved in regard to the payment of ancestral debts, and for the expenses attendant on the marriage of Ram Saran Singh's daughters. In the result he passed decrees for possession in favour of the 2nd and 3rd Appellants conditional on the payment to the Respondents of the sum of Rs. 11,198-13 6, and Rs. 6,400 in suits Nos. 8 and 9, respectively, made up as under:

Both the Appellants and the Respondents appealed to the High Court of judicature at Fort William in Bengal. On 20th July 1903 that Court delivered its judgment dismissing the suits with costs. The finding of the Subordinate Judge that the suits were not maintainable by Bhagwat Dayal Singh was affirmed, and on that finding the High Court was of opinion that the suits ought to have been dismissed. It also held that there was legal necessity for the execution of each deed of sale and that they were made for adequate consideration. The material portion of the judgment of the High Court is as follows:—

"We agree with the Subordinate Judge that this deed is void for the reasons assigned by him. In the first place, the property conveyed is worth three lakhs. The consideration of the conveyance was Rs. 52,000, of which the sum of Rs. 600 only was said to have been paid. The balance was to be paid in proportion to the Plaintiff's success in recovering the property. Although the English rule against champerty and maintenance does not prevail in this country in its entirety, yet this would seem clearly an unconscionable and speculative agreement, and one opposed to public policy as fostering and promoting gambling in litigation, and hence void as found by the Subordinate Judge. See Ram Coomar v. Chunder Canto (1) and Fischer v. Kamala Naicker (4).

"The next question which arises is, whether the Plaintiff's suit should not have in these circumstances been entirely dismissed. It seems to us that they should. The Plaintiff No. 1 has been found by the Subordinate Judge to have no title to the property. He is the only person who claimed possession of it. When his suits are dismissed, it seems to us, the Subordinate Judge was not justified in giving the Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 a decree for relief, which they did not ask for and in respect of which in their plaints they made no claim. In the plaints they alleged that they had entirely transferred their interests to the Plaintiff No. 1. They asked for nothing for themselves. In paragraph 20, it is alleged that the Plaintiffs 2nd party are made parties to the suits merely in order that the suits may be decided in their presence,—so that they may be bound by the decisions. They might, therefore, have equally well been Defendants —if indeed they should not more properly have occupied that position.

"We, therefore, feel no doubt that the sales disputed in these suits were good sales, made for legal necessity, and after due enquiries had been made by the purchasers, which in the circumstances they were not required to make. The suits seems to belong to a class very common in the country, in which reversioners endeavour to recover property alienated by Hindu widows for legal and pressing necessities, and in which purchasers of property from such widows too often lose both their property and the money they have paid for it. It is unnecessary, we think, to discuss the last plea raised by the Defendant, viz., whether the Subordinate Judge was justified in giving the Plaintiffs decrees for the recovery of the property conditional on their payment to the Defendant of the sums of Rs. 11,198 and Rs. 6,409. We would only say that we do not think he was. The Plaintiffs made no offer to pay off any sums which might be found to have been borrowed for legal necessities The Plaintiffs deliberately chose to rest their cases upon allegations of wasteful, extravagant, and unnecessary borrowing, and they have failed to substantiate their allegations. They have never offered to repay any portion of the purchase money and we do not consider that the alienations were in excess of the legal requirements of the case, and that the purchasers in any way failed to make proper enquiries."

. For the full text of the judgment, see 8 C. W. N. 408.

The Appellants, thereupon, preferred the present appeals to His Majesty in Council.

veyance executed by the 2nd and 3rd Appellants in favour of the 1st Appellant was void. Reference was made to Bradlaugh v. Newdegate (5) and Alabaster v. Harness (6) for the English law of maintenance and champerty But the English law does not go so far as to upset an agreement of this kind. There is not a single English case to support the view taken by the Courts in India. But in India the English law of maintenance and champerty has never been introduced, and, therefore, the agreement in question is valid: Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mukerjee (1). Again in the case of Kunwar Ram Lal v Nil Kanth (2) it is laid down that the English law of champerty is not in force in India, and documents which set up agreements to share the subject of litigation if recovered, in consideration of supplying funds to carry it on, are not in themselves opposed to public policy. The lower Courts were wrong in holding that this agreement was against public policy as it was a gamble in litigation. The question of the validity of the agreement could arise only between the parties to it. The Respondents are not parties to it and they cannot question its validity on the ground of its being champertous: Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain Khan (3).

The Subordinate Judge was right in setting aside the alienations to the Respondents. There is a general prayer of relief in the plaint and that would cover the decree made by the Subordinate Judge.

A Hindu widow cannot of her own will alienate property except for special purposes, if there be collateral heirs of her deceased husband. To support an alienation for worldly purposes she must show necessity: The Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narrainapah (7). In order to sustain an alienation by a Hindu widow of the corpus of her husband's estate, it must be shown, in a case like this, that there was legal necessity for the alienation, or, at least, that the grantee was led on reasonable grounds to believe that there was. The obligation on the grantee is to inquire and satisfy himself that the widow from whom he is taking a charge upon her husband's inheritance had a proper justification for so charging. This onus is not discharged, if the grantee or mortgagee rests content as the Respondents here do, with the vague and misleading statements in the deed. Nor would it be discharged by thinking that he, the mortgagee, is taking title under an absolute owner: Lala Amarnath Sah v. Rani Achan Kuar (8). It is for the mortgagee or alienee to allege and prove the circumstances which alone will give validity to the mortgage: Sham Sunder Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (9). Reference was also made to Tacoordeen Tewary v. Nawab Syed Ali Hossein Khan (10), Baboo Kameshwar Pershad v. Run Bahadoor Singh (11), Tika Ram v. Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki (12) and Deputy Commissioner of Kheri v. Khanjan Singh (13). The Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the Respondents have not discharged the burden of proof that is incumbent upon them to validate the deeds of 19th January 1887, and 15th May 1891. Debi Dayal Sahu himself says "I cannot say how much did the Mussammats borrow for the suit. I did not inquire how much had the Mussammats borrowed for the suit before borrowing from Nand Ram, Rs. 10,900; Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 4,200 were given to the Mussammats to pay off their creditors. I heard of this. I made no inquiries about this. I do not know whether Mr. Hodges did not himself keep back the amounts to pay off such creditors. I do not know whether such creditors had bonds. I made no inquiry when I purchased whether such men had bonds." The High Court is wrong on this point. The deeds in question are not valid and binding against the Appellants and the Subordinate Judge has adopted the right mode of dealing with them.

Earlier bonds and mortgages were given by Etraj Koer, who had no interest in the property during the lifetime of Jileb Koer. They were not binding on the Appellants. The consideration stated in each of the sale deeds mainly went towards the discharge of debts incurred by Etraj Koer and interest on those debts. They were not, under the circumstances, binding on the Appellants.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C, and Mr. De Gruyther for the Respondents.—The other side submitted that whether the agreement was void on the ground of its being champertous was a matter between the parties to it. But that is not so. This is not a deed got out of a party in necessity; nor is it extortionate. If the validity of the deed were questioned on those grounds, it would be a matter between the parties. But in this case the payment of the bulk of the consideration money depends upon the success of the then contemplated suit. That is merely a gamble in litigation, and contrary to public policy, and the Courts were right in holding the agreement void on those grounds. The question of its validity need not be raised only by a party to it. The Respondents, who are not a party to it, could question its validity: Tara Soondree Chowdhrani v. The Court of Wards on behalf of Shama Soonduree (14), (N. B., Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1) was a sequel to this case).

Though the English Statute law and Common law are not introduced into India, there is something very similar to that in India, which will upset an agreement of this kind on the ground of public policy, and also on the ground of its being a gamble in litigation: Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Hussain Khan (3).

[LORD ROBERTSON.—Can you show me any form of an agreement of this class, which would not be a gamble in litigation?]

Sir Robert Finlay.—The agreement is against public policy and is legally immoral; and though the law of maintenance and champerty is not binding in India, it should be set aside on the ground of public policy.

[LORD ROBERTSON.—Society in India makes it inexpedient to apply the law of champerty there.]

The 1st Appellant (Plaintiff) claims possession and mesne profits on the ground of the alleged custom and assignment. The Subordinate Judge was wrong in giving the 2nd and 3rd Appellants the relief, which he did. Neither of them has claimed any relief in the plaint, which is not amended. No amendment, which is inconsistent with the original character of the suit, could now be made: Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 53. Relief given by the Subordinate Judge could not come under a prayer of general relief in the plaint. Such a prayer must always be limited by two things:—The facts which are alleged and the relief which is expressly asked: Cargill v. Bower (15). Any relief which might have negatived another suit under sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code ought to be included in the general prayer, but not a relief of this kind.

[LORD ROBERTSON—It breaks up the alliance, which is the theory of the plaint.]

Sir Robert Finlay.—Yes, my Lord. One claim is absolutely repugnant to the other. No amendment of the plaint was in fact made.

The evidence shows that debts were incurred for necessaries. Money was borrowed over and over again to pay previous debts. Money borrowed to pay the costs of litigation was reasonable. Again, money borrowed to meet the marriage expenses, which were not extravagant, was a necessity. It is not incumbent upon the persons advancing money, as mortgagees or otherwise, to tax the bill and tell the borrowers, the ladies in this case, that a certain less amount of money would be sufficient instead of the sum contemplated to be spent. A Hindu widow is under an obligation to discharge her husband's debts and she could either mortgage or alienate property for that purpose. A female heir is bound to maintain, and perform the marriages, and other ceremonies of those who are a burden on the estate, and she may mortgage or sell the property to procure the necessary funds: See Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, 7th Ed., secs. 633, 634, 635 and 346. Etraj Koer was the manager, and as such she gave the bonds, which were ratified by Jileb Koer and Aprup Koer by their joining Etraj Koer in the later documents, which recite the earlier bonds. Looking at the evidence there is no case whatever of misconduct with the management of the three ladies or on the part of the Respondents. The High Court was right in holding that the alienations here were for necessaries, and, therefore, binding on the Appellants, the next heirs.

If the agreements of sale are set aside, the Respondents are entitled to be put in their original position. The figure decreed by the Subordinate Judge is quite out of the question. He allows no interest, which should be allowed.

Mr. Cohen, K. C., in reply, contended that neither the French nor the Roman Law of champerty would apply to India. Even the English Law on the subject was not in force in India. Reference was made to Hutley v. Hutley (16); Tarachand v. Suklal (17), and The Laws of England, Vol. I, p. 52, and the cases there cited. There was not a single case either English or Indian, where the Defendant was a third party and a stranger to the champertous agreement, and such agreement was set aside. Only one case of Tara Soondaree Chowdhrani v. The Court of Wards on behalf of Shama Soonduree (14) was cited, but in that case the Defendant derived her title through a party to the champertous agreement. Reference was also made to the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 30; Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 18; and Principles of German Civil Law, by E. J. Schuster (Ed. 1907), Headings, Effects of Absence of Authority, Ratification, and Ratification of Agreements, pp. 119 and 120; and Raj Lukhee Dabea v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhury (18). Etraj Koer had no authority to act for and she was not acting as the Agent of Jileb Koer, who could not, therefore, ratify Etraj Koer's act. If the Appellants get a decree for mesne profits as well as for possession, the Respondents may have interest at the usual rate, i.e., 6 per cent. per annum.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR ARTHUR WILSON.—These consolidated appeals relate to three villages, Chiyanki, Ganka, and Lalgara, and the substantial conflict is between the first Appellant and the first Respondent.

The villages with others were formerly the property of Ram Saran Singh, who on his death was succeeded by his infant son Narayan. Narayan died, while still an infant and unmarried, on the 7th August 1879, and left surviving him his grandmother Jileb Koer, an aunt Aprup Koer, widow of Ram Saran's brother, and a stepmother Etraj Koer, widow of Ram Saran Of these, the grandmother was heir to the boy's property, with the limited interest of a Hindu female inheriting from a male. The three ladies appear to have lived together down to the death of the grandmother, which took place on the 22nd November 1894.

On the death of the grandmother, the inheritance again opened, and the second and third Appellants, Bhan Pertap Singh and Kirpa Narayan Singh, were then the nearest male heirs of the deceased boy. Those two persons, on the 29th November 1895, purported to sell the three villages in question to Rajah Bhagwat Dayal Singh, the first Appellant, and that is the title under which he claims.

The first Respondent, on the other hand, as the case is now put on his behalf, claims under two sale deeds executed, as it is now said, by or on behalf of the grandmother, Jileb Koer, the sales being, it is contended, justified by necessity so as to pass the whole inheritance. The first of these deeds bore date the 19th January 1887. It purported to be a conveyance by way of sale, by the three ladies who have been mentioned, of the two villages Chiyanki and Ganka to the first Respondent. The second deed was dated the 15th May 1891. It purported to be executed by the same three ladies in favour of one Hodges, and to convey to him by way of sale the village Lalgara. Hodges afterwards conveyed to the first Respondent.

The present suits were brought on the 29th August 1898, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Ranchi. The Plaintiffs were the first Appellant and the two persons from whom he purchased. The sole Defendant in one suit and the substantial Defendant in the other was the first Respondent. The first suit related to village Lalgara, the second suit to the villages Chiyanki and Ganka. The claim in each case was for possession and mesne profits.

The first question raised in the case and argued on the appeals was whether or not the sale by the second and third Appellants to the first Appellant was void in law, so as to pass no title on the ground that it was champertous, or contrary to public policy.

For the Respondents it was boldly argued that, although the English law as to maintenance and champerty is not, as such, applicable to India, yet on other grounds what is substantially the same law is there in force. Their Lordships are of opinion that that proposition cannot be supported. In three cases, Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1), Kunwar Ram Lal v. Nil Kanth (2), Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kasim Husain Khan (3), before this Board, a contrary doctrine has been laid down. In the last of those cases full effect was given, under circumstances closely analogous to those of the present case, to an agreement which would certainly have been void if champerty avoided transactions in India.

It was further argued that the transaction in question was contrary to public policy and void on that ground, by reason of the provision as to payment of the purchase money by the first Appellant to the second and third. The purchase money was fixed at Rs. 52,600, of which Rs. 600 was to be paid down, and the balance when the property should be recovered. Their Lordships are unable to agree to this argument. In their opinion the condition so introduced does not carry the case any further than does the champertous character of the transaction generally.

RAJA RAI BHAGWAT DAYAL SINGH v. DEBI DAYAL SAHU.

It was further said, and this was relied upon in the Courts in India, that the transaction was an unfair and unconscionable bargain for an inadequate price. But that is a question between assignor and assignee. It is unnecessary to consider what the decision ought to have been if this had been a litigation between the assignors and the assignee in which the former sought to repudiate the assignment. In the present case the assignors do nothing of the kind. They maintain the transaction and ask that effect be given to it, and for that purpose they join as Plaintiffs in the present actions. Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the attack upon the title of the first Appellant upon any such grounds as those indicated must fail.

The second question that has to be considered is whether the Respondent has shown a good title in himself by purchase from Jileb Koer, the grandmother, under the two sale deeds mentioned, and under such circumstances as to make that title effectual against the reversionary heirs.

The Subordinate Judge, who tried the cases held that the conveyances were not good but he allowed, in favour of the first Respondent, certain sums which he considered to have been advanced for purposes of legal necessity; and whilst giving a decree to the Appellants and Plaintiffs for possession of the property, he made that decree conditional upon the payment to that Respondent of the sums held to have been advanced for legitimate necessities. On the argument of these appeals, Mr. Cohen, for the Appellants, accepted the propriety of this mode of dealing with the case, and assented to the allowance so made by the Subordinate Judge.

The High Court, on appeal, differed from the first Court, and held that the necessity for the sales in question was established.

Before dealing further with this question, it must be noticed that the case now contended for is not the case raised on the pleadings and relied upon at the trial. The Respondent in his written statement alleged a title derived, not from Jileb Koer, but from Etraj Koer. He said, in paragraph 21, that "Etraj Koer was no heir to Narayan Saran Singh, and that she acquired an absolute right by adverse possession;" in paragraph 23 "that it is not true, as the Plaintiffs allege, . . . that on the death of Narayan Saran Singh, Jileb Koer succeeded as heir and was in possession up to her death; the fact is . . . . . that Etraj Koer alone was in such possession until her death," and in paragraph 25 that "Jileb Koer and Aprup Koer never took the estate of Narayan Saran Singh as heir, and the fact of their joining in the documents as persons executing the deeds of sale and the prior deeds was a matter of form of evidence of members dependent for maintenance on Etraj Koer, and was merely a surplusage;" and it was added in paragraph 26 that "even if Jileb Koer were to have taken the estate . . . by inheritance, she would take it in absolute state . . . under the provisions of Mitakshara law, and so also if she was made a co-sharer by Etraj Koer in Etraj Koer's right." In his evidence given at the trial the Respondent endeavoured to maintain the case that his title was derived from Etraj Koer and was good on that account.

One who claims title under a conveyance from a woman, with the usual limited interest which a woman takes, and who seeks to enforce that title against reversioners, is always subject to the burden of proving not only the genuineness of his conveyance, but the full comprehension by the limited owner of the nature of the alienation she was making, and also that that alienation was justified by necessity, or at least that the alienee did all that was reasonable to satisfy himself of the existence of such necessity. And this burden lies the more heavily on one who comes into Court with the case that he did not take from a limited owner, but from one whose title he alleges to have been adverse to that owner.

These considerations apply with special force to the present case. The earlier transactions of the first Respondent were with Etraj Koer, and there is no satisfactory evidence to show that Jileb Koer, the real owner, took part in them, or authorised them in any way.

It was argued however that, if Jileb Koer was not shown to have authorised the earlier transactions, she had ratified them by being a party to the later documents and particularly the two sale deeds. Ratification in the proper sense of the term, as used with reference to the law of agency, is applicable only to acts done on behalf of the ratifier. And this rule is recognised in sec. 196 of the Indian Contract Act. Looking to the substance of the matter, it would be a serious extension of the law, as hitherto applied, to hold that a woman with a limited interest could, by act ex post facto, charge upon the estate which she represents obligations not originally binding upon it.

With regard to the first of the sale deeds now in question, when the details which make up the consideration come to be examined, it appears that they include one sum of Rs. 1,500 which the Subordinate Judge credited to the first Respondent in the manner already explained. Apart from this sum the great bulk of the consideration for this sale deed consists of debts originally incurred by Etraj Koer with accretions interest and compound interest. Their Lordships are of opinion that this deed was correctly estimated by the Subordinate Judge.

The case as to the second sale deed is not quite so simple. With regard to it the Subordinate Judge gave credit to the first Respondent for considerable sums as having been advanced for real necessities. As to the rest of the consideration for that deed he held that necessity had not been established. In coming to this conclusion, he took into account not only the more general considerations already referred to, but also certain circumstances peculiar to the case—that the lady who alone had any power to convey was old, and had no independent advice to guide her, and that the first Respondent was in a position to exercise considerable influence over her affairs. Their Lordships think the Subordinate Judge was justified in taking all these matters into his consideration; and they see no sufficient ground for rejecting his conclusions.

There remains one other point for consideration. The Plaintiffs claimed not only possession but mesne profits. The Subordinate Judge rejected the latter claim. Their Lordships are of opinion that, as the deeds of sale are not good as such, the claim for mesne profits is well founded. In argument it was conceded that on the other side of the account interest at 6 per cent. should be allowed on the sums credited to the first Respondent. The amounts thus to be allowed on the one side and on the other can be adjusted in execution proceedings.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be allowed, that the decrees of the High Court should be discharged with costs to be paid as regards the first decree by the present Respondents other than Sowton and as regards the second decree by the first Respondent, that the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge should be discharged, and that instead thereof it should be ordered that upon the first Appellant paying to the first Respondent the sums found in favour of the latter by the Subordinate Judge with interest at 6 per cent. per annum the first Appellant do recover possession of the property in suit together with mesne profits to be ascertained in execution proceedings and costs to be paid by the first party Defendants in the first suit and by the sole Defendant in the second suit.

The Respondents other than Sowton will pay the costs of these appeals.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 611 OF 1906.

MITRA, J. CASPERSZ, J. 1908. Heard, 3 and 4, February. Judgment, 4, February.	MUNSHI BASIRUDDIN AHMED and anr., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. MAHOMED JALISH PATWARI and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Benamdar, right of suit by—Mortgage—Conveyance without consideration.

A benamdar cannot bring a suit for recovery of a mortgage debt.

A mortgagee assigned over his interest under the mortgage to the Plaintiffs who instituted the present suit against the mortgagors for recovery of the mortgage-debt. It was found that the assignment was a benami transaction and was intended to put the mortgagors into difficulty,

Held—That the Plaintiffs' suit was rightly dismissed.

LAL ACHAL RAM v. RAJA KAZIM HUSAIN (1) distinguished.

The mere non-passing of consideration is not sufficient to show that a transaction is benami.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of April 1906, against the decree of M. Yusuf Esq, District Judge of Zillah Noakhali, dated the 8th of March 1906, reversing that of Babu P. C. Ghose, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 29th of April 1905.

The facts found by the lower Appellate Court are as follows:—

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed a mortgage in favour of Defendant No. 3.

(1) 9 C. W. N. 477: s. c. L. R. 32 I. A. 113; I. L. R. 27 All. 271 (1905)

MUNSHI BASIRUDDIN AHMED v. MAHOMED JALISH PATWARI.

In Aghran 1310, the Defendant No. 3 executed a kobala in favour of Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 by which he purported to convey his interest under the mortgage to the Plaintiffs for a certain consideration. The lower Appellate Court found that "only 11 days previous to the execution of the kobala one Durlav, the maternal uncle of Defendant No. 1 had obtained sanction for the prosecution of Plaintiff No. 1 on charges of forgery and suppressing documents," and that "Defendant No. 1 had actively prosecuted on behalf of Durlav in the proceedings preliminary to the grant of sanction." There were besides various other causes of ill-feeling between the Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. And the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that "the kobala was obtained by the Plaintiffs from Defendant No. 3 fraudulently and collusively without any consideration money having passed, with a view to harass the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with whom they were on bad terms, the immediate cause of enmity being the sanction granted to Durlav to prosecute the Plaintiff No. 1 for forgery, &c."

As the kobala was not a bonâ fide one and was without consideration, the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the suit, although Defendant No. 3 appears to have admitted the execution of the kobala and the receipt of the consideration money, Rs. 600 in cash and the rest in the shape of a note of hand executed by the Plaintiffs in his favour. Against this decision the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda for the Appellants.

Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf and Dr. Preo Nath Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed a mortgage in favour of the Defendant No. 3. Years after the execution of the instrument, the Defendant No. 3 purported to assign over the interest created by the deed to the Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. The Plaintiffs have instituted the present suit for recovery of the money covered by the mortgage and for sale of the immoveable property covered by it.

The defence was that the transaction between the Defendant No. 3 and the Plaintiffs was colourable and intended to cause unnecessary harm to the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The lower Appellate Court has found that no consideration passed on the alleged transfer by the Defendant No. 3 to the Plaintiffs, that there was really no intention to transfer and that the Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 got a colourable document in order to do unnecessary harm to the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

There were various issues raised in the case all of which were not touched by the lower Appellate Court.

The Plaintiffs have appealed from the decree of the lower Appellate Court and it has been contended before us on their behalf that, on the findings of fact arrived at by that Court, the suit should not have been dismissed and reliance has been placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain (1).

MUNSHI BASIRUDDIN AHMED v. MAHOMED JALISH PATWARI.

That the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court amounts to a finding that the Plaintiffs were benamdars of the Defendant No. 3 cannot be denied. One of the principal elements for determination of the question whether a conveyance is benami or not is 'did consideration pass'? The finding is that no consideration passed. But mere non-passing of consideration is not sufficient to show that a transaction is benami. There might be a promise to pay not disclosed in the instrument itself. Sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act would lead us to conclude that there may be a transfer without present consideration passing. The present case is, therefore, distinguishable from a case in which there was an intention to transfer, though no consideration passed. Here the deed expressly stated that consideration did pass and that was a false allegation, as found by the lower Appellate Court. It was also been found that the intention of the vendees, the Plaintiffs, was not that they should recover any money but that they should put the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to difficulty. It is not in so many words found that the transaction was benami; but the whole tenor of the judgment would lead to the conclusion that the Court intended to find that there was no bonâ fide transfer to the Plaintiffs. That being so, the question really is whether a benamdar can sue for recovery of a mortgage debt.

The decisions of this Court are practically uniform, though some of the other High Courts in India have differed from this Court. That a benamdar cannot sue for recovery of immoveable property is, so far as Bengal is concerned, laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Gopee Krista Gosain v. Ganga Persad Gosain (2), (the remarks of the Judicial Committee will be found at p. 73 of the report). This decision has been followed consistently in this Court and we may refer to the cases of Hari Gobind Adhikari v. Akhoy Kumar Mozumdar (3), and Mohendra Nath v. Kali Proshad (4).

In Hari Gobind v. Akhoy Kumar (3), reliance was placed on the statement made by the vendor in the course of the suit admitting the execution of the document and receipt of consideration; but the learned Judge declined to place any reliance on such statement as the admission was made subsequent to the institution of the suit and reliance was properly placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Amrita Lal v. Rajani Kant (5).

In Mohendra Nath v. Kali Proshad (4), the Court observed that a suit by a benamdar is liable to dismissal on the ground that no specific performance of the contract could be enforced against the vendor and reliance was placed on sec. 20 cl. (b) of the Specific Relief Act. All the earlier decisions were collected in those two reports and it is not necessary for us to refer to any other case. In Lal Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain (1), the transaction was allowed to stand as between the Plaintiff and the Defendant inasmuch as, though no consideration passed, the terms were reasonable in themselves and the transaction was neither champertous nor contrary to public policy. That was the distinguishing element in the conveyance in favour of the Plaintiff in the case before the Judicial Committee In the present case, the contrary facts have been found and we do not see how it can be held that a transaction admittedly without consideration was valid, notwithstanding the facts found as to the intention of the vendor and the effect which it would have as regards the rights of the parties. We, therefore, see no reason to differ from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 33 OF 1906.

MACLEAN, C. J. COXE, J. 1908. 29, January.

S. M. HARA KUMARI DASI, Defendant, Appellant, v. MOHIM CHANDRA SARKAR, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Hindu Will—Construction—Bequest to widow—Power of appointment—Bequest for life with power of alienation—Gift over.

A Will, addressed by the testator to his wife, was to this effect: "You are my legally married wife and entitled to the property to be left by me. Should I on a sudden die . . . you shall under this Will become possessor of my properties, &c, and perform my sradh at a suitable cost; and for the benefit of my soul you shall purchase a house . . . and establish a Mohadev in it and perform its sheba and services, &c., and you shall fix a suitable allowance as pronami for my spiritual guide. You will have the right and power to alienate by gift or sale all the aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties. My daughter Sreemutty Hara Kumari shall become entitled to and possessor of whatever properties will remain after your death and she shall enjoy the same keeping up and maintaining the aforesaid shebas, &c. . . . The said daughter shall have the same rights in the aforesaid properties as you have, and he to whom my said daughter may willingly give away those properties shall possess the same and enjoy them keeping up and maintaining the sheba, &c.,"

Held—That giving effect to all the words of the Will, the widow took an estate for life with a power of alienation, and to the extent to which such power was not exercised, the daughter similarly took the property.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th of February 1906, against the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Deb, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 25th of September 1905.

The appeal arose out of a suit for the construction of a Will and for a declaration of the respective rights of the parties under the Will.

The Will purported to be that of one Anando Lal Sarkar, who died at Benares in Falgoon 1272 B. S., leaving him surviving his widow Ichhamoyi, and a daughter Hara Kumari, his brother Mohan Lal Sarkar, the father of the Plaintiff, and his step-brother Benodi Lal Sarkar now deceased.

The widow Ichhamoyi applied for and obtained probate of a certified copy of the Will (which was stated to have been ost), on 24th September 1885 from the Court of the District Judge of Pabna. The Plaintiff applied for revocation of the Will in July 1898 alleging that the Will was a forgery, but his application was dismissed on the 24th June 1904 by the Subordinate Judge of Pabna who held that the Will was a genuine document duly executed by the testator before his death. The Plaintiff preferred an appeal from that decision to the High Court. The present suit was at the same time instituted on the 19th July 1901 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipur for the construction of the Will. The case was heard by the Additional Subordinate Judge on the 25th September 1905. He held inter alia that the Will did not cover all the properties left by the testator and there was an intestacy with regard to the properties not mentioned therein; that it conferred an absolute interest to the widow Ichhamoyi in the properties mentioned in the Will subject to a trust for an idol with a power of appointment for the trust; that the trust and power of appointment failed not having been carried out by Ichhamoyi; that the daughter Hara Kumari took nothing under the Will and the gift over to her absolutely of "whatever may remain" was invalid for uncertainty.

Hara Kumari preferred this appeal. By the time this appeal came on for hearing, the Plaintiff appears to have withdrawn his appeal in the matter arising out of his application for revocation of probate.

The material portion of the Will i as follows:--

"We, seven brothers, ... were jointly in possession and enjoyment of whatever ancestral zemindaries we had in the district of Pabna. On the 11th assar of the present year, we executed a document determining our equal shares, and we are in possession of the same. And of Taraf Nischindipur, which I purchased from my own earnings from service, I have given a 2 annas share to my brother Mohan Lal Sircar, and a 6 annas share to the late Abhoy Churan Sircar's widow Drabamoyi Dasia, mother and guardian of Annada Churn Sircar, and I have kept the remaining 8 annas share for myself, and am in enjoyment and possession of the same. Secondly, from my own earnings from service, I have purchased two brick-built houses at Calcutta, Bhowanipur, and some property in the town of Murshidabad and some Government securities. My brother or brother's sons or brother's widows have no connection with these properties, and I am in possession thereof. Owing to ill health, I have given up service and am living with my family at Benares. My illness now, instead of being cured, is gradually increasing, and so I despair of life. I have no son, and I have only one daughter Sreemati Hara Kumari Dasi. Although I have given her in marriage, still it is my duty to maintain her. I therefore, of my own free will, and in sound health and in possession of my senses, execute this will in your favour. You are my legally married wife, and entitled to the property to be left by me, Should I, on a sudden, die at Benares, you shall, under this Will, become possessor of my properties &c., and perform my sradh, &c, at a suitable cost; and for the benefit of my soul, you shall purchase a house at this Benares, and establish a Mohadev in it, and perform its seba and service, &c., and you shall fix a suitable allowance as pronami for my spiritual guide. You will have the right and power to alienate by gift or sale all the aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties. My daughter Sreemati Hara Kumari Dasi shall become entitled to and possessor of whatever properties will remain after your death and she shall enjoy the same, keeping up and maintaining the aforesaid sebas &c. Should you happen to die before establishing the seba, &c., in that case, the said Sreemati shall establish the Mohadev and do all other things. The said daughter shall have the same rights in the aforesaid properties as you have and he, to whom my said daughter may willingly give away those properties, shall possess the same, and enjoy them, keeping up and maintaining the seba, &c. But no one shall ever be able to alienate any property, without keeping in hand property sufficient for the maintenance of the seva &c, of the Siva in the way you may fix for it. To the above effect I execute the Will. The 28th Falgun (year given above)."

Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Shama Churn Roy for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Debendra Nath Baychi for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a very curious suit. It is a suit asking to have the Will of one Ananda Lal Sarkar construed. But in his plaint the Plaintiff sets up very prominently that the Will is a forgery and an appeal was until recently pending in this Court to have the probate revoked. If the suit had come before me, I should have dismissed it summarily. But we are told that the appeal to this Court which was existing when the decision now appealed against was given, has since been withdrawn. So we will deal with the question of the construction upon the merits.

The question turns upon the construction of a very short Will dated the 10th of March 1866: and, we are told the testator died two or three day afterwards. After certain recitals as to his property, the material portion of the Will runs as follows: "I have no son, and I have only one daughter Sreemutty Hara Kumari Dassi," (who is the present Appellant). "Although I have given her in marriage, still it is my duty to maintain her." Pausing there for a moment, these words would appear to indicate that the testator proposed to make some provision by his Will for his daughter. Then he goes on, "I, therefore, of my own free will, and in sound health and in possession of my senses, execute this Will in your favour." The Will purports to be addressed to his wife. "You are my legally married wife, and entitled to the property to be left by me." Up to this point the contents of the Will are in the nature of recitals. I now come to that which may be regarded as the operative part of the Will. "Should I, on a sudden die at Benares, you shall under this Will, become possessor of my properties, &c., and perform my shradh &c., at a suitable cost, and for the benefit of my soul you shall purchase a house at this Benares, and establish a Mohadev in it, and perform its seba and service &c., and you shall fix a suitable allowance as pronami for my spiritual guide." Pausing there the expression "possessor of my properties" is not inconsistent with the view that the widow was only to have a life interest in the property. There is, so far as I have read, no clear and absolute gift to the widow. Then come the words upon which reliance has been placed by the Respondent, "you will have the right and power to alienate by gift or sale all the aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties." If the will had stopped there it might have been difficult to say that the widow did not take the property absolutely. But very important words follow, and we must give effect to all the words of the Will, so far as we can. "My daughter Sreemutty Hara Kumari Dassi shall become entitled to and possessor of whatever properties will remain after your death, and she shall enjoy the same, keeping up and maintaining the aforesaid sebas &c." Later on he says, "The said daughter shall have the same rights in the aforesaid properties as you have and he to whom my said daughter may willingly give away those properties, shall possess the same, and enjoy them, keeping up and maintaining the seba &c."

The question is what interest did the widow take. For the Appellant, it is contended that she only took a life interest with a power—one which in England would be regarded as a power of appointment to alienate by gift or sale the property passing by the Will. This is the view pleaded by the Plaintiff in paragraph 5 of the plaint. "According to the directions" he says "contained in the alleged Will, the widow Ichhamoyi had only a life estate in the properties mentioned in the Will." If the Will had stopped at the words "moveable and immoveable properties" as I have already pointed out, it might have been difficult to say that the widow did not take absolutely, but we cannot eliminate from the Will all the words which follow in favour of the daughter. It is clear the daughter was to be "entitled to and possessor of what properties will remain after your death" and she was to "enjoy" the same. Are these words to go for nothing? There is not, in so many words, any clear and absolute gift to the widow, and we can give effect to all the words in the Will by holding that the widow took for life, with a power of alienation, but to the extent to which such power was not exercised, the daughter similarly took the property. She was to have the "same rights in the properties" as the widow. If the Respondents' argument prevail she takes nothing. We think this is the true construction of the Will. It is only in this way that we can give proper effect to the words that the daughter "shall become entitled to and possessor of whatever properties will remain after her death and she shall enjoy the same." We cannot strike these words out of the Will. In my opinion the view of the lower Court that the widow took an absolute interest and the daughter took nothing is mistaken. The decree of the Court below must be discharged and in the circumstances the suit must be dismissed with costs including costs of the appeal.

REV. NO 27 OF 1908.

RAMPINI, J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1908 Heard, 30, January. Judgment, 4, February.	MOHESH CHANDRA SAHA and anr., Petitioners, v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 350—De novo trial—Change of trying Magistrate.

The provisions of sec. 350, Cr. P. C. apply to all cases in which cases are transferred for whatever reasons from the file of one Magistrate to that of another.

When a case is transferred under sec. 528, Cr. P. C. from the file of one Magistrate to that of another, the former ceases to exercise jurisdiction in the case and is succeeded by the latter in the exercise of the jurisdiction within the meaning of sec. 350, Cr. P. C.

DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCER v. UPENDRA KUMAR GHOSH (1) disapproved.

This was a rule granted on the 9th of January 1908, against an order of Babu Jogobundhu Ghosh, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Dacca, dated the 25th of November 1907, which order was on appeal affirmed by A. Bentinck, Esq., Joint Magistrate of Dacca, on the 23rd of December 1907.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Norton, Babus Dassarathi Sanyal and Sarat Chandra Basak for the Petitioners.

The Advocate-General for the Crown.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a rule to show cause why the conviction and sentences in this case should not be set aside on the ground that after the case was transferred to the file of Babu Jogobundhu Ghosh, that officer did not hold a de novo trial.

The Petitioners have been convicted under sec. 147, Cr. P.C. Kechu Pramanik has been sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment, and Mohesh Chandra Saha to pay a fine of Rs. 100.

The case was originally on the file of Mr. G. E. Oddie who recorded the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution. They were cross-examined before him and a charge was drawn up by him. He was then transferred. The District Magistrate took the case on his own file, under sec. 528, Cr. P. C., and transferred it to the file of Babu Jogobundhu Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate. The accused did not claim a new trial: so Babu Jogobundhu Ghosh completed the trial and convicted the accused. They appealed to the Joint Magistrate, who on the 7th December ordered the Deputy Magistrate to examine two more witnesses. On the case coming before the Joint Magistrate for the second time, the appeal of the accused was dismissed. The day after the arguments in the case had been heard, the Appellants pleader cited the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra

THE CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE BILL WAS PASSED INTO law, at the last sitting of the Legislative Council for India. The Hon'ble Mr. Earle Richards stated his belief that the Bill was generally accepted by the public and the legal profession. The paucity of criticism which the bill has met in its later stages is no doubt due largely to the confidence reposed in the Special Committee who recast the Code in its present form. It must also be admitted that the length of time that the Bill had been lying before the public necessarily weakened the interest taken in it even by professional lawyers.

THERE IS STILL ANOTHER REASON AND THAT IS THAT the principal innovation made in the Bill, viz., the conferring of power to the Rules Committees attached to the various High Courts to settle details of procedure, is experimental in character and has still to justify itself by actual working. As regards the work of amendment proper, the Simla Committee as well as the later Select Committee are to be congratulated for having proceeded in an eminently cautious manner. No part of the work of these Committees was characterised by the hustling with which we have learned to associate the ordinary working of the Supreme and the Local Legislatures.

THE SUGGESTION OF DR. RASH BEHARY GHOSE, THAT power should be given to persons interested in charities to apply summarily for an account of the receipts and expenditures of the funds of the charity has not for the present been adopted in view of the fact that in the opinion of Government the matter has not been fully discussed by the leaders of the communities concerned. The Government is however willing to have the matter considered as a separate bill to be introduced by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose.

A BILL TO AMEND THE WHIPPING ACT WAS INTRODUCED by Sir Harvey Adamson at a meeting of the Legislative Council of the Governor-General on Friday last. The Hon'ble member mentioned that an amendment in the Whipping Act (VI of 1864) had become necessary in view of the changes in public opinion regarding whipping as a form of punishment within recent years. We have noticed in these columns the progress of humane principles in criminal law in recent times and we are glad that they are finding recognition by the Indian Legislature. We cordially welcome Sir Harvey's enunciation of the principle that "whipping should be restricted to offences of a degrading nature and that it should never be administered when it is likely to outrage self-respect." A large number of offences for which the Whipping Act provided either an alternative penalty (sec. 2) or an additional punishment (secs. 3 and 4) have been excluded by this Bill. The object of the Bill evidently is to amend the provisions of the Indian law in conformity with the English law.

IN ENGLISH LAW ADULTS WHO MAY BE CONVICTED of robbery with violence may be punished with whipping. But ordinary theft is not so punishable. Sir Harvey however says that having regard to the different conditions of prison life here, it has been considered desirable to include casual theft amongst offences punishable with whipping. But we would have thought that cases of casual theft, for which a sentence of imprisonment may not be considered desirable, may very well be dealt with under the provisions of the law for first offenders. We all know how the magistrates in this country, whether they be of first class or of lower grade, are reluctant to give effect to the humane provisions of the law. Also having regard to the fact that the Bill leaves a large discretion in the hands of magistrates, who have already expressed their alarm at the proposed abolition of whipping as an additional punishment, it does not seem either wise or desirable to retain theft amongst offences punishable with whipping.

WHILE WE HAVE NOTHING TO SAY AGAINST THE retention of whipping as an alternative or additional punishment for dacoity and robbery with violence and rape, we must say it passes our comprehension why assaulting or using criminal force to women with intent to outrage their modesty or unnatural offences, especially in cases of second convictions, should be put outside the pale of such punishment. It seems exceedingly anomalous that while even technical theft should be retained amongst offences punishable with whipping, repetition of offences of such loathsome character should be excluded. Property is surely not more sacred than honour of women.

THE BILL WHILE RESTRICTING THE PUNISHMENT OF whipping to only a limited class of offences so far as adults are concerned, makes no alteration in this direction with regard to juvenile offenders. The only change in the law in respect of juveniles is that punishment in the case of persons below the age of sixteen is not to exceed fifteen stripes. This is no doubt a change for the better. But it may be questioned why every offence not punishable with death should in the case of a juvenile offender be punishable with whipping. Sir Harvey Adamson advances the analogy of English law under which offences other than homicide are in the case of juveniles so punishable. But the law and practice differ widely in this respect in England. Since the practical discontinuance of flogging in the army, navy and public schools there has been a considerable revulsion of feeling in England regarding flogging as a form of punishment under criminal law. Magistrates in England do not resort to this brutal form of punishment lightly. They treat juvenile offenders with almost parental consideration. They are always anxious to make over such offenders to parents, guardians, teachers or clergymen for correction.

BUT THE MAGISTRATES IN INDIA ARE FAR FROM considerate to juveniles. Cases of flogging are much more common here than in England. It is therefore very desirable that the Legislature should limit the class of offences for which a juvenile may be flogged and not leave it to the unlimited and undefined discretion of first class magistrates who are in this country not necessarily men of mature judgment or experience. It is no doubt contemplated in the Bill that the Government of India will have power to exempt by notification juveniles from flogging in respect of such offences as they please. But we do not believe in such legislation by notification. When the Government of India intend imposing such restrictions, it would be more [illegible] to embody them in the body of the

IT IS, HOWEVER, GRATIFYING, TO NOTE THAT SIR Harvey recognises the fact that the educated and respectable classes in India consider flogging as a most degrading form of punishment, and we need only add, that the sentiment is not confined to adults but also extends to juveniles. Magistrates in India have been known to subject boys of respectable parentage to public flogging in cases where a mere reprimand or warning or making over to parents or guardians for correction would have sufficed. Such punishment is not only resented by the boy and his family but in fact by the whole of the Indian community. Being conscious of this Sir Harvey repeats in concluding that "it should never be inflicted when it is likely to outrage self-respect." We do not share his confidence in the good sense of the magistracy in this country but we expect the High Court will issue well-considered instructions to the Magistrates, as suggested by Sir Harvey, as soon as the Bill is passed into law.

IN THE CASE OF Kishan Lal v. Umras Singh DECIDED by the Allahabad High Court a report of which appears at page 121 of 5 Allahabad Law Journal it has been held that a property subject to a mortgage, cannot be sold in execution of a simple money decree held by the mortgagee, even where he disclaims all his interests under the mortgage and obtains a simple money decree. In this case the mortgagee during the pendency of the mortgage suit abandoned his rights under the mortgage and obtained a simple money decree, and in execution of that decree attached and sold the mortgaged property. It was held that the sale was in contravention of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act and therefore bad. But that after the confirmation of the sale, the mortgagor lost his right to set aside the sale as "after the sale is confirmed as between the auction purchasers and the judgment-debtors (i.e., the mortgagors) the title of the former becomes complete."

A SIMILAR QUESTION AROSE IN THE CALCUTTA FULL Bench case of Ashu Tosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtunia (11 C. W. N. 1011) in which it was held by the Full Bench that if an application is made after the confirmation of sale for setting aside the sale on the ground that it was held in contravention of sec 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the applicant can set aside the sale only on his proving that owing to fraud or other reasons he had no notice of the sale or its confirmation. The decision of the Allahabad High Court does not say what would be the result if after the confirmation of sale an application is made for setting aside the sale and it is proved that the applicant was kept in ignorance of the sale proceedings by reason of fraud or otherwise. This question did not arise at all as in the case the mortgagors did know of the confirmation of sale.

AS REGARDS THE APPLICABILITY OF SEC. 99 OF THE Transfer of Property Act to the facts of this case, there may arise some questions. Here the mortgage claim was given up by the mortgagee and a simple money decree was obtained by him presumably in the presence of the judgment-debtors, the mortgagors. If the mortgagors at that time did not object to this course adopted by the mortgagee and expressly or impliedly consented to the mortgagee's obtaining a simple money-decree against them after having given up his rights as a mortgagee, could they afterwards turn round and say when the property had been sold in execution of the money-decree that the sale was bad because it contravened the provisions of sec. 99.

THE LANGUAGE OF SEC. 99 MAY LEAD TO THE CONclusion that that section does not apply to a case like this. In the first place when the property was attached and sold the property was not subject to the mortgage, for the mortgage claim had been given up long before the attachment, was neither the decree-holder (who was no doubt a mortgagee before he obtained his money-decree) a mortgagee when he attached and brought to sale the property in execution of the money-decree. Suppose A mortgages his property to B and is also indebted to B in other ways. B gives up his mortgage rights altogether, so that the mortgage is extinguished to all intents and purposes. He then gets money-decrees against A in respect of other debts. Would not B be allowed to attach and sell the properties of A including the property which was formerly mortgaged, without instituting a suit under sec. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act? As the mortgage was not subsisting at all, it would be impossible for B to bring a suit under sec. 67. The very fact that a suit is directed to be instituted under sec. 67 shows that the mortgage must be subsisting at the time the attachment is made or the sale is held in execution of the money-decree.

THE OBSERVATION OF HIS LORDSHIP MOOKHERJEE J, in the case of Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtunia lends support to this view. His lordship observes, "The substance of the sec. (i e. sec. 99) therefore is that when the mortgagee has, in execution of money decree against the mortgagor, effected an attachment of the mortgaged property, he cannot proceed to sell it, he must bring a suit upon the mortgage against all the parties interested in the equity of redemption, and the decree in such suit should be, not for the sale of the equity of redemption but for the sale of the property, free from the mortgage claim of the Plaintiff &c." This shows that the provisions of sec. 99 are only applicable when the mortgage is subsisting. The object of sec. 99 is to protect the right of redemption possessed by the mortgagor against any attempt on the part of the mortgagee to take away the right by the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of any decree for money. But when the mortgage has ceased to subsist and the property is free of the mortgage claim, the necessity for the protection does not exist.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before GEIDT and WOODROFFE, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 88 OF 1907. POSHI MAHOMED AND OTHERS v. THE KING-EMPEROR. 26th February 1908.

Bad livelihood—Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 110—Sureties for good behaviour—Refusal to accept, grounds for.

On a police report the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Kurigram instituted proceedings under sec. 110, Cr. P. C, against the Petitioners with the result that each of the Petitioners was ordered by the said Magistrate to execute a bond for Rs. 100 with two sureties of the same amount to be of good behaviour for one year or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for the same period. An appeal was preferred to the District Magistrate Rungpur which was dismissed with regard to these Petitioners. Within a fortnight of the order passed by the Sub-divisional Magistrate under sec. 118, Cr. P. C, the Petitioners presented their bail bonds duly executed by sureties to the Sub-divisional Magistrate who asked the Police to enquire into the fitness of the sureties. The Police reported that the sureties were fit and proper persons, but notwithstanding this the Sub-divisional Magistrate delayed in accepting the bail bonds and releasing the Petitioner. Several applications were made to the Magistrate for the release of the Petitioners who were in jail on accepting the bonds executed by the Petitioners and the sureties, but the Magistrate did not pass any order. The Petitioners then came up to the High Court and obtained the present rule. In his explanation to the High Court the Sub divisional Magistrate said "I have certainly no objection to let out the accused on good sureties. The delay is due to my desire to look into the sureties personally and as those people who filed petitions went to attend melas the matter could not be disposed of so long." The District Magistrate in forwarding the explanation of the Sub-divisional Magistrate added "In my opinion it is not possible to be too careful in the matter of accepting sureties for persons of the predatory classes for whom sec. 110 is mainly intended. The surety must be not only one who is in a position to pay the amount of the bond but also one who can exercise some effective control on the mode of the life of the person bound down. The desire of the Sub-divisional Magistrate to satisfy himself on this point is a very audable one and he has, I think, sufficiently explained the delay in carrying out his intentions."

Their Lordships observed :—" The Magistrate virtually admits that the sureties are in a position to pay the amount of the bond. It is, therefore, ordered that the rule be made absolute and the Magistrate directed to accept the sureties offered, to allow the Petitioners to execute recognizances required of them and on their doing so to release them from jail. The Magistrate's explanation of the delay is not satisfactory."

Mr. Khundkar, with Mr. Sowgat Ali for the Petitioners.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 340 OF 1906. MUSSAMMAT SRIBATI KUMRI, Defendant, Appellant v. RAJA SHIB CHUNDER BANERJI, Plaintiff, Respondent. 6th March 1908.

*Alienation by husband—Maintenance, claim by widow for—Charge—*Bonâ fide purchaser.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was brought for recovery of a sum of money due on a bond executed by two persons, now deceased, in favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendant No. 1 was the widow of one of the executants of the bond. The Court below passed a decree in favour of the Plaintiff.

Defendant No. 1 contended that she was entitled to a charge upon the estate of her husband for her maintenance. In support of this objection the cases of Jamna v. Mocha (I. L. R. 2 All. 315), Becha v. Mothina and others (I. L. R. 23 All 86), Sarola Dassee v. Bhoobun Mohun Neoghy (I. L. R. 15 Cal. 292) and Narbada Bai v. Mahadeo (I. L. R. 5 Bom. 99) were cited.

Held—The widow has no right to a charge upon her husband's property in case of alienation during the life-time of her husband for consideration, nor has she a right to follow the property in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser for value.

The maintenance of a Hindu widow is not a charge upon the estate of her deceased husband until it is fixed and charged upon the estate by a decree or by agreement; and the widow's right is liable to be defeated by a transfer of the husband's property to a bonâ fide purchaser for value, even with knowledge of the widow's claim for maintenance unless the transfer has been made with the intention of defeating the widow's claim.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MACLEAN, C. J., and DASS, J. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 83 OF 1907. KRISHNA PADA DUTT AND ANOTHER, Petitioners, Appellants v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND ANOTHER, Objectors, Respondents. Heard, 17th February 1908. Judgment, 28th February 1908.

Hindu Law—Dayabhaga—Sister's daughter's son, if heir—Succession certificate.

The appeal arose out of an application under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) for a certificate to collect the debts due to the estate of one Ishan Chandra Mitter. The Petitioners were (1) the daughter of the sister of the deceased and (2) the son of that daughter. The Secretary of State opposed the Petition on the ground that under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, by which the deceased Ishan Chandra Mitter was governed the Petitioners were not heirs at all. The brother of the wife of the deceased raised a similar objection.

The District Judge rejected the application on the ground that under the Dayabhaga law, the Petitioners were not heirs, as they offer no funeral oblations to the ancestors of the deceased. The Petititioners appealed to the High Court.

Held (without expressing any final opinion on the question), that primâ facie the claims of the daughter of the sister who offers no oblations cannot be placed upon a higher footing than that of the sister herself; and that a sister's daughter's son has been held to be an heir under the Mitakshara law on the ground of community of corporal particles between him and the propositus, but he is not an heir under the Dayabhaga law.

MOHESH CHANDRA SAHA v. THE EMPEROR.

Kumar Ghosh (1), to the Joint Magistrate, and contended that the proceedings of Babu Jogobundhu Ghosh in not holding a de novo trial were illegal. Before us Mr. Norton has supported the rule. The Advocate-General for the Crown has shown cause against it.

The contention of the Advocate-General is that the provisions of sec. 350, Cr. P. C. apply both to cases of transfer of a case under sec. 528 Cr. P. C. and to cases which after being begun by one Magistrate have to be completed by another, owing to the former Magistrate having left the district, when only, it is argued by Mr. Norton, he can be said to be succeeded by another Magistrate. The Advocate-General, however, replies that when a case is transferred under sec. 528 from the file of a Magistrate to that of another, the former ceases to have jurisdiction in the case, and is succeeded in the exercise of jurisdiction in the case by the other, just as if the former had been removed from the district and been succeeded in his office by the other.

In this case, Mr. Oddie was transferred from the district. The District Magistrate however passed an order under sec. 528, Cr. P. C. transferring the case, no doubt because Mr. Oddie was an Assistant Magistrate, and Babu Jogobundhu Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate, could not be said, strictly speaking, to succeed him in the office of Assistant Magistrate.

We consider the contention of the Advocate-General must prevail. We do not think that the provisions of sec. 350, Cr. P. C. apply only to cases in which Magistrates succeeded each other in their office. Magistrates subordinate to the District Magistrate rarely do so. Deputy Magistrates never succeed each other in their offices. But the terms of the section appear to us to apply to all cases in which cases are transferred for whatever reason from the file of one Magistrate to that of another. This is admitted in the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghosh (1), in which Mitra and Holmwood, JJ., say: "The section, it seems to us, is capable of the interpretation that it covers all cases of change of trying Magistrates, whether on account of the first trying Magistrate being transferred to another district or on account of a transfer of a case under Chap. XLIV of the Code."

Further on, they observe: "The words of sec. 350 of the present Code are slightly different from the words of similar sections of the Codes of 1872 and 1882. The alteration might have been made with a view to include cases of transfer." They then conclude with this order:—"Having regard to the general principle of interpretation that provisos and sub-clauses should be governed by the operative portion of the section and to the fact that the general rule laid down in the earlier rulings have been recognised and approved of on more than one occasion since the amendment was made, we hold that Moulvi Abdus Samad acted irregularly in convicting the accused on evidence partly recorded by Mr. Adie."

But the reasons for this order appear to us to be inconsistent, for the operative portion of sec. 350 expressly permits the conviction of an accused on evidence recorded, or partly recorded, by one Magistrate, who is succeeded by another;

(1) 12 C. W. N. 140 (1906).

(1) 12 C. W. N. 140 (1906).

MOHESH CHANDRA SAHA v. THE EMPEROR.

while the earlier rulings referred to are no doubt in favour of the opposite view.

We observe further that the conclusion of the learned Judges who decided the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghosh (1), is only that Moulvi Abdus Samad acted irregularly, and for this reason they set aside the conviction. We presume they were of opinion that the irregularity was one that had prejudiced the accused.

The earlier rulings referred to by Mitra and Holmwood, JJ., have been laid before us. They are Purmessur Singh v. Soroop Adhikaree (2), Kopil Nath Sahi v. Koneeram (3), Raghoo Parirah (4) and Queen v. Harnath Guho (5). But the first two of these rulings appear to us to be in favour of the view advocated by the learned Advocate-General. The case of Raghu Parirah (4) is not in point. The only case in favour of the view contended for by Mr. Norton is that reported in Queen v. Harnath Guho (5), alluded to in the judgment in the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghosh (1).

Then, as for the rulings in which the general rule laid down in this case has been recognised and approved of, since the alteration in the wording of the corresponding section of the Code of 1872, the only case exactly in point which Mr. Norton cites is that of Queen-Empress v. Angnu (6), which is the decision of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court, and accordingly is not binding on us.

He also calls attention to Queen-Empress v. Bashir Khan (7) and Damri Thakur v. Bhowani Sahoo (8). In the former of these the accused expressly prayed for a de novo trial, and as the Magistrate did not accede to their request, the conviction of the accused was rightly set aside. The latter case is not in point and need not be considered.

We are therefore of opinion that we are free to follow the interpretation which in our opinion should be put on the terms of sec. 350, Cr. P. C. and which Mitra and Holmwood, JJ., admit, the section is capable of having put on it, viz., that it applies to all instances of transfer of a case, for whatever reason the transfer may be made.

We have been pressed, if we take this view, to refer the question for the decision of a Full Bench. But looking at the terms of the order in the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghosh (1), viz., that Moulvi Abdus Samad acted irregularly in convicting the accused on evidence partly recorded by Mr. Adie, which lays down no general rule, and which must have proceeded on the principle that the irregularity had prejudiced the accused, which is not shown to have been the case in the present instance, we do not think we need or could do so.

We accordingly discharge the rule. The Petitioner who has been sentenced to imprisonment must be relegated to jail to undergo the remainder of his term.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[CONSOLIDATED APPEALS FROM BENGAL.]

LORD ROBERTSON.
LORD COLLINS.
SIR ARTHUR WILSON.
1908.
24, January.

BAIJNATH GAENKA, Appellant,
v.
RAMDHARI CHOWDHRY and others, Respondents.
and
DEO NANDAN PERSHAD, Appellant,
RAMDHARI CHOWDHRY and others, Respondents.

*Mahommedan Law—Pre-emption—*Talab-i-mowashibat and talab-i-istishad*—Unreasonable delay, a question of fact—Action for pre-emption—Claimants, co-sharers as well as mortgagees—Deposit of mortgage money in Court by purchaser—Withdrawal by claimants—Waiver of claim.*

The right of pre-emption must be exercised, and the claims necessary to give effect to it must be made with the utmost promptitude, and any unreasonable and unnecessary delay is to be construed as an election not to pre-empt. Whether there has been such delay is a question to be determined upon the facts of each particular case.

The Plaintiffs, in this case, claimed the right to pre-empt by reason of their having previously acquired a share in the property. They had also obtained the transfer of a zurpeshgi mortgage binding the share the sale of which was the occasion of the present suit. In the course of the suit the purchaser, Defendant, deposited the mortgage amount in Court and the same was withdrawn by the Plaintiff.

Held, that until a decree for pre-emption was made the purchaser owned the land, and had a right to redeem; and that the taking out of the money by the Plaintiffs, as mortgagees, was no recognition of anything more than that, and was quite consistent with their claim to pre-empt.

Two consolidated appeals from two decrees of the above-mentioned High Court, both dated 20th January 1904 reversing two decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr both dated 31st, March 1900 and dismissing the Appellants' suits.

The main question raised on the appeals was whether the Appellants were entitled to pre-empt a 4 anna share in certain properties sold on 17th December 1907, by Anupbati Koeri (Respondent No. 2) to Nirbhoy Chowdhry, (original Defendant No. 1), who died pendente lite and was represented by Respondent No. 1 and others.

The two suits were analogous and had been tried together at the instance of the parties. It was admitted that both suits would be governed by one judgment.

One Maharaj Singh was the original owner of Taluka Rasulpur Bhatowni consisting of two separate puttis. On 3rd March 1873 he divided that Taluka equally between his two sons, Jugal Pershad Singh and Kamla Pershad Singh, who became the owners in possession each of an 8 anna share.

In or about the year 1884 Jugal Pershad mortgaged his 8 anna share to Jowhuri Lal and Mangni Ram (original Plaintiffs and Appellants deceased). On his death his widow Rajbati acquired his estate by right of inheritance. Suits for sale of the mortgaged property were brought against her. On 2nd April 1889, decrees were made in favour of the mortgagees. In execution of those decrees the 8 anna share was on 18th January 1891 purchased by the Appellants who thus became owners each of a 4 anna share and obtained possession thereof.

Kamla Pershad died leaving him surviving two widows, Sundarbati and Anupbati (Respondent No. 2), who acquired their husband's 8 anna share in the Taluka. In order to pay their husband's debts they borrowed Rs. 63,000 from the Ulas Babus, and executed a Sudbharna pottah in their favour on 10th January 1883, mortgaging their 8 anna share. The usufructuary mortgagees remained in possession of that share. Sundarbati in order to liquidate the mortgage debt, sold her 4 anna share in the taluka to the Appellants, a 2 anna share to each, under two separate kobalas dated 9th July 1897, receiving for the two sales an aggregate consideration of Rs. 40,000. The Appellants deposited in Court the entire Sudbharna debt, Rs. 63,000, and redeemed the mortgage and obtained possession of the entire 8 anna share which belonged to the two widows with the exeeption of certain small share in a certain mouzah.

On 17th December 1897 Anupbati sold her 4 anna share (subject to certain minor reservations) to Nirbhoy Chowdhry.

On 30th June 1898 the Appellants instituted the present suits in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr. The plaints alleged that the Appellants, who were share-holders in the taluk, were willing to purchase Anupbati's share. But she sold the same as already stated without their knowledge and consent. The Appellant Jowhuri Lal, in the first suit came to know of the sale for the first time on 20th December 1897, and he at once performed the ceremony of talab i-mowashibat (immediate demand) on that day. The Appellant Mangni Ram in the second suit returned to Monghyr from Benares on 5th January 1898 and learnt for the first time about the sale in question on that day, and at once performed the ceremony ot talab-i-mowashibat on the same date. Both Appellants then caused the ceremony of talab-i-istishad to be performed by their respective agents at the residence of the purchaser, Defendant Nirbhoy Chowdhry, at Mahishpur, on 7th January 1898, and on the property sold, and at the residence of the vendor Anupbati at Bhat Khund on the 11th and 12th of that month The Appellants pleaded that Rs. 44,850, the amount entered in the sale deed as the consideration, was not actually paid. The relief sought was a decree for preemption on payment of the true consideration as determined by the Court.

The Defendant Nirbhoy Chowdhry in his written statement filed on 1st September 1898 denied that 20th December 1897 and 5th January 1898 were respectively the earliest dates on which the Appellants had obtained information of the sale. He pleaded inter alia that the Appellants had previously known and acquiesced in the negotiations and agreement and execution of the sale deed, that the formalities required by the Mahomedan Law were not carried out at the proper time and place; that the Appellants induced Anupbati's co-widow to sell to them her 4 anna share by promising to pay to her any excess price which Anupbati might obtain; that they refused to purchase Anupbati's share for a higher price than Rs. 36,000 and that they were never ready and desirous to purchase the same at a proper price. He also denied that the consideration set out in the deed of sale was not paid in fact.

The Respondent Anupbati also filed her written statement in both suits to a similar effect. She further alleged that the Appellants while refusing to raise their price said "that if any other person was willing to pay a higher price this Defendant should sell to him" and that on account of this refusal she sold to Nirbhoy Chowdhry for Rs. 11,850 the proper price, the Appellants all along declining to buy and endeavouring to prevent a purchase by Nirbhoy Chowdhry or any other person. The Defendant third party Mangni Ram in the first suit was the Plaintiff in the second suit and the Plaintiff in the last suit was the Defendant third party in the second suit.

After the institutions of the suits the Appellants on 13th September 1898 withdrew from Court the amount of the Sudbharna debt deposited by Nirbhoy Chowdhry, on 2nd July 1898, on account of the share of his vendor Anupbati, and gave up possession over the property in suit. The plaints were accordingly amended at the instance of the Appellants. Of the nine issues fixed by the Subordinate Judge it is necessary to mention here only the following :—

3. When was the Plaintiff aware of the purchase by Defendant first party?

4. Whether the ceremonies talab-i-mowashibat or talab-i-istishad were duly and legally performed and were bonâ fide?

5. Whether Plaintiff had notice of and gave consent to the Defendant second party's selling the property in suit, if she got a higher price than Rs. 36,000?

6. Whether Plaintiff's right of pre-emption has been lost by reason of his gross negligence and is he estopped from claiming the same?

7. For what price was the disputed property sold to the Defendant first party, and what consideration did he actually pay for the property?

On 31st March 1900, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. He found that the Appellant Jowhuri Lal was first informed of the sale in dispute on 20th December 1897 and that the Appellant Mangni Ram on 5th January 1898 and that both the Appellants immediately on receipt of the information declared their intention to claim pre-emption and thus duly carried out the formality of the talab-i-mowashibat. He also decided that the other formality of the talab-i-istishad had also been duly performed and without unreasonable delay. He also held that the actual consideration for the sale was Rs. 37,000 and that the Appellants were not estopped by their conduct from asserting their right to pre-emption. In the result he made a decree in favour of each of the Appellants for pre-emption of one-half of the property sold on payment of one-half of the sum of Rs. 37,000. The following passages from his judgment are material:—

"In both suits, I therefore find that mowashibat was duly performed by the Plaintiffs and that there is no legal defect in such performance.

BAIJNATH GAENKA v. RAMDHARI CHOWDHRY.

"I now come to the evidence bearing upon the performance of the next ceremony, talab-i-istishad by the Plaintiffs. There is no difference in dates regarding the performance of this ceremony between the two Plaintiffs. The main objection urged by the learned pleader for the Defendants on this subject is, that there was unreasonable delay in the performance of this ceremony by the Plaintiffs. He contends that the Plaintiffs became aware of the sale on the 19th December 1897, when the mortgage debt due to them by Anupbati was tendered to the Plaintiffs and they refused to accept the amount tendered. Now, I have already stated that the assertion of the tender of the debt to the Plaintiffs on the 19th December 1897 is not correct. That being so it remains to be seen whether there was any unreasonable delay and gross negligence on the part of the Plaintiffs in performing the talab-i-istishad. It appears from the evidence of the Plaintiff's side that the disputed kobala was executed on 17th December 1897 at Gogri, and registered there on the following day that on the 20th of that month, Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal received news of the sale, and immediately performed the ceremony Mowashibat; that on the 21st of that month, Jowhuri Lal sent a man to his tashildar Rambaran Lal, who resided at some place near Gogri, to take a copy of the kobala, but as the Sub-registry office at Gogri, was closed from 21st to 26th of that month, on account of the Christmas holidays an application for copy was made on 27th December and the copy was ready on the 29th and actually delivered on the 30th of the month. It further appears that Rambaran Lal sent the copy to Jowhuri Lal by post in a registered cover on the 31st, and the cover reached the Monghyr Post Office on 2nd January 1898. The post peon, to whom the cover was made over for delivery to the addressee, Jowhuri Lal, has been examined as a witness by the Defendants. He states that he went to deliver the cover to Jowhuri Lal on the 2nd January and could not find him at his house. But this statement seems to be incorrect, for the 2nd was Sunday and therefore under the postal rules, no registered cover could have been delivered to the addressee on that day. The peon must have therefore gone to Jowhuri Lal's house for delivering the cover on 3rd January, but he was not at home on that day and so it was delivered to him on the 4th. On the 5th January Plaintiff Mangni Ram returned to Monghyr from Benares, and on receipt of the news of the sale in question, at once performed the ceremony of talab-i-mowashibat. On the 5th Mangni Ram went to Mr. Scott a Barrister-at law practising in the local Courts, to take his advice for getting police escort for sending the purchase money, Rs. 44,850, to the residence of the Defendant Nirbhoy Chowdry at Mahishpur. He thought that the money was required to be tendered to Nirbhoy Chowdhry under the Mahomedan law, but although his impression was erroneous, yet the tender of the money was, as explained by the Plaintiff's pleader, necessary before the Defendant No. 1 could be called upon to execute a kobala of the property sold. Be that as it may, the conduct of the Plaintiffs in seeking legal advice for securing Police help in sending the purchase money on behalf of each of them to Mahishpur which is about 7 miles off from Monghyr is perfectly bonâ fide, and it cannot be construed to be an act of wilful negligence on their part. On 5th January Mr. Scott was said to be very busy when Mangni Ram called on him. On the night of that day, Mr. Scott advised Mangni Ram's servant Megh Raj to apply for police guard to escort the money to Mahishpur. On 6th January the application was made on behalf of both of the Plaintiffs to the District Superintendent of police at Monghyr and an order for police guard was made. On 7th January the agents of both Plaintiffs accompanied by other persons on their behalf and police guard, started for Mahishpur and performed the ceremony of istishad at the residence of Defendant Nirbhoy Chowdhry who, as appears from the evidence, fled inside his house on seeing the party coming there. On 10th January the agents of the Plaintiffs and other men on their behalf started from Monghyr for going to the villages of which the share had been sold, and to Bhat Khund where Anupbati used to reside. On 12th January the ceremony was performed by them at the residence and in the presence of Anupbati; on the 11th and 12th the same ceremony was performed by the party in question in the villages. Here I should add, that on the 8th January, the party had to arrange for conveyance and as the 9th was a Sunday there was no steamer service from Monghyr to Gogri on that day. This explains the delay for those two days On the whole, I am perfectly satisfied with the evidence adduced by the Plaintiffs that the ceremony of istishad was duly and properly performed by proxy Ganesh Lal, who performed the ceremony on behalf of Jowhuri Lal, being his Am-Mukhtar and agent, and Latafat Hassim, who performed the ceremony on behalf of Plaintiff, Mangni Ram, being his agent. There were also some certified mukhtars and pleaders amongst the party deputed by the Plaintiffs for performing the ceremony. I further find that there was no unreasonable delay, or any act of gross negligence on the part of the Plaintiffs in the performance of this ceremony. The evidence adduced by the Defendants on this point, is to my mind, not at all worthy of credit. This issue is therefore also decided in favour of the Plaintiffs.

"I now propose to deal with the 5th and 6th issues together. It is quite clear from the evidence on both sides that both Sundarbati and Anupbati first negotiated with the Plaintiffs for the sale of their shares, and that the Plaintiffs offered Rs. 36,000 for each of these shares. But I think there is no satisfactory evidence to show that they positively declined to make the purchase, or that they told Anupbati to sell her share to anyone she liked, for a higher price. Of course, the Plaintiffs were perfectly free to make the best bargain they could, and their attempt to reduce the price cannot amount to fraud. It appears that the negotiations with the Plaintiff fell through on account of there being a difference in the price claimed, and the price offered. The Mussammats then opened negotiations for sale with Rai Suraj Narayan Singh Bahadur, but during the period that was going on Sundarbati sold her share to the Plaintiffs, and thereupon

Rai Suraj Narayan who is a well-known pleader of the Bhagalpur District Court, and knew the Mahomedan law of pre-emption thoroughly declined to purchase Anupbati's share. After that, it is alleged by the Defendants, Anupbati again opened negotiations for sale with Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs deny this allegation and I think the allegation is not satisfactorily proved. There is some difference between the allegation in the written statement of the Defendants and the evidence adduced by them on this point. In the written statement, it is alleged that Anupbati herself came to Monghyr to re-open the negotiation with the Plaintiffs, but the evidence adduced is to the effect that she did not do it herself, but sent her relation Jadubir to do it. It also looks somewhat inconsistent why Anupbati should re-open the negotiation with the Plaintiffs when she had previously refused to sell her share to them for Rs. 36,000 which they offered. On the whole I think this allegation of the Defendants is not true, and that the evidence adduced in support of it is not reliable. There is also no satisfactory evidence of the assertion that the sale by Anupbati was effected with the knowledge and the consent of the Plaintiffs, tacit or express.

"Then as to the plea of estoppel by conduct, I find in the first place, that there is no reliable evidence to shew that the Defendant first party was induced by the Plaintiffs to buy the property in dispute, and that they waived their right of pre-emption by any act on their part.

"The Mahomedan law is that the waiver and relinquishment on the part of a pre-emptor must take place, after, and not before the sale. In these cases, no such thing is alleged or proved. The equitable doctrine of estoppel, embodied in sec. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act is not applicable here, because there is no proof of the facts that the Defendant first party was induced by the Plaintiffs to make the purchase, or that the Defendant second party was influenced by them to sell to Defendant No. 1. Both these issues are therefore found against the Defendant.

"7th issue.—The kobala of the 17th December 1897 purports to have been executed for a consideration of Rs 44,850. The Plaintiffs allege that Rs. 5,330, which is said to have been paid to Ganpat, Rs. 2,520 which is said to have been paid to Karman Mahton out of the consideration money, on account of debts due to them by Anupbati, were not actually paid. It is further asserted on the part of the Plaintiffs that the sum of Rs 1,000 out of Rs. 1,466-4-6, which is said to have been paid in cash to Anupbati out of the purchase money, was not actually paid. With the exception of these 3 items the rest of the consideration money was admittedly paid. I shall therefore examine the evidence bearing upon the 3 items in dispute. Now Ganpat and Karman appear to be relatives of Defendant first party. They have given their evidence in these cases and have produced their account books. Some of these books look very suspicious, specially those produced by Ganpat. They have evidently been made to look old, the paper being clearly soaked in water to give them an old appearance. The debts due to Ganpat and Karman are not secured by any registered deeds. The debts are no doubt heavy. Anupbati's share was mortgaged along with Sundarbati's share in the taluka to the Babus under a Sudbharna pottah (Ex. 4), the amount advanced was Rs 63,000. In that state of things no money lender would advance money to Anupbati upon mere Khata Bahis and Chittis, as is alleged to have been done by Ganpat and Karman. I also fail to understand why Ganpat kept with him the old Chittis, when they were renewed by new ones. I further find that at the time of the execution of the kobala in question, no account was made of the debts due to Ganpat and Karman. Considering therefore all these circumstances, and the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence adduced to prove these debts, I find that the debts were not actually due by Anupbati and are merely illusory, and that the payment of such debts is altogether false. These debts amount to Rs. 7,850. The payment of this amount out of the consideration is therefore not established. Then as to the remaining payment of Rs. 1,000, out of Rs. 1,466-4-6 paid in cash to Anupbati, I find that this was an actual payment. Anupbati admits the receipt of this amount in her evidence taken by commission. The other evidence bearing upon this point is unreliable, and I am not prepared to reject it altogether. There has been a good deal of discussion on both sides regarding the market value of the property sold, but I don't think it necessary to enter minutely into the evidence bearing upon it. All that I have to observe on the point is, that the price actually paid was Rs. 37,000 only and this amount represents also the market value of the property sold. So there is no improbability regarding the actual payment of this amount as price of the property sold."

Against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge Nubhoy Chowdhry appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The High Court delivered its judgment on 20th January 1904. It decided that the talab i-mowashibat and the talab-i-istishad were performed as alleged but was of opinion that the Appellants were precluded from claiming pre emption, because they had not made talab-i-istishad with the least practicable delay. The High Court was also of opinion that the full amount of consideration as stated in the deed of sale had been paid by the vendee to the vendor, and that the Appellants had waived their rights of pre-emption. In accordance with the above findings the High Court made decrees reversing the decrees of the Subordinate Judge and dismissing the suits with costs In so doing the High Court observed as follows.

"Subordinate Judge in his judgment has shown that there is ample evidence with regard to the performance of the talab-i-mowashibat by both Plaintiffs as soon as they heard of the actual sale to the Defendant No. 1 and we do not think we need say more on this point than that we agree with him as to the performance of all the necessary formalities, and that the talab-i-mowashibat is not vitiated by the Plaintiffs not having specified the names of all the villages they claimed the right to pre-empt. The Subordinate Judge has given in his judgment sufficient reasons for coming to the conclusion he has arrived at in respect of this part of the case. The formalities required for the talab-i istishad were also, we think, duly performed. But we are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge in his view that it was performed with the necessary promptitude It is clear that it is absolutely essential that this formal demand of the right of pre-emption should be made "with the least practicable delay." Mussammat Jumeelun v. Luteef Hassim (1): Wilson's Digest, Art. 375 (2) page 412 and in our opinion it was not so performed The Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal heard of the sale to the Defendant No. 1 on 20th December 1897 and the Plaintiff Mangni Ram heard of it on the 5th January 1898, but neither of them went to Defendant's house and performed the talab-i istishad until 7th January 1898. Now, the Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal explains that he was engaged during the time in getting a copy of the deed of sale and in making arragements for a police guard for the conveyance of the money which he tendered to the Defendant when he performed the talab-i istishad. The Plaintiff Mangni Ram excuses his delay by saying he was absent in Benares up to 5th January and that he could not go to Defendant No. 1's house on 6th January as he was afraid to go without the protection of the police and so his agent proceeded there, as soon as he got a police guard, which was when the agent of the Plaintiff Jowhuri went to the Defendant's house. But we do not consider these excuses satisfactory. The evidence discloses the fact that there was considerable and certainly sufficient delay to invalidate the talab-i istishad on the part of both Plaintiffs The Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal instructed his agent Ram Baran Lal to procure a copy of the deed of sale. Ram Baran Lal went to the Registry Office at Gogri, where the deed was registered, on 21st December at 4 P. M. The office was then closed, as it would naturally be, for 4 o'clock P. M. is after office hours. The witness states he went again on 27th December. The Subordidate Judge observes that this delay was due to the fact that the office at Gogri was closed from 21st to 26th December. But this was not so. There is no evidence to this effect. We have been referred to a list of the executive Christmas holidays published by this Court for the year 1897. From this list it appears that there were executive holidays on the 24th, 25th, 26th December only. There was therefore an unnecessary delay of at least 3 days in making the talab-i istishad, which is fatal. But that is not all. The postal peon Har Lal Mandar deposes that he took the envelope containing the copy of the deed of sale to the Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal on the 2nd January. The Subordinate Judge remarks that this cannot be correct, for 2nd January 1898 was a Sunday, when registered letters are not delivered. But this does not seem to be a sufficient reason for considering that the peon did not take the letter to the Plaintiff Jowhuri on the 2nd January. But, even if this conclusion be correct and that the postal peon did not go on the 2nd January but on the 3rd there was still delay on the part of the Plaintiff, for the peon says he went twice and tendered the letter to the Plaintiff and twice the

(1) 16 W. R. F. B. 13 (1871)

BAIJNATH GAENKA v. RAMDHARI CHOWDHRY.

Plaintiff refused to take it and told him to take it away and bring it back and he would take it "after thinking over for some time." The Plaintiff according to the peon only received the letter the third time it was tendered to him, that is at 4 o'clock P. M. on 4th January, so that there was clearly at least two days delay in the receipt by the Plaintiff Jowhuri of the registered copy of the deed of sale. The Plaintiff was evidently during these two days trying to gain time for reflection. Then the Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal was, according to his own showing, in possession of all the information he required for the talab-i-ishhad on 4th January by 4 o'clock P. M. But the talab-i-ishhad was not made on his behalf till the 7th January, though the purchaser's house was at a distance of only 7 miles. He explains that he was engaged during this time in consulting a Barrister named Mr. Scott as to how he should procure a police guard and in procuring a police guard and this is also the excuse given by the Plaintiff Mangni Ram for his delay from the 5th to 7th January. But it is unquestionable that this was an unnecessary delay. It is not necessary according to the Mahomedan Law to tender the money at the time of making talab-i-ishhad so there was no necessity for any police to guard the money. Besides, the agent of the Plaintiff Mangni Ram took his money in notes which he could carry on his person, so in this case the police guard was doubly unnecessary. The cases of both Plaintiffs must therefore fall to the ground. This being so, it is, strictly speaking, unnecessary for us to consider the other grounds for appeal.

"But we would wish to record that we are further unable to agree with the findings of the Subordinate Judge that there was no waiver on the Plaintiff's part of the right of pre-emption and that the price paid for the property was not Rs. 44,850 but only Rs. 37,000.

"In the first place the evidence adduced by the Defendant convinces us that the Plaintiffs were throughout endeavouring to purchase the property at as low a price as possible, that they offered Rs. 36,000 and would give no more, and that their agents told the Defendant Anupbati and her nephew Jadubir that they would give no more and that if Anupbati would not accept Rs. 36,000 she was at liberty to sell the property to whom she pleased, Anupbati failed in her negotiations with the pleader Surja Narayan and again tried to induce the Plaintiff to give more. She then sold to the Defendant Nirbhoy The Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal was well aware of these negotiations. It is in evidence that he was informed of Anupbati's overtures to Nirbhoy Chowdhry and that he engaged a pleader, also named Jowhuri Lal, to go to Ramdhari, the son of Nirbhoy Chowdhry, to pursuade him not to buy the property so as to force Anupbati to sell to the Plaintiffs at their own price. This leads us to believe the witnesses who depose that the Plaintiff's agents told Anupbati that she was at liberty to sell to another at a higher price, if she could get it. The Plaintiff Jowhuri Lal did not expect she would be able to do so. He endeavoured to frustrate her attempts to sell for a better price and certainly never after becoming aware of her negotiations to sell to Nirbhoy, came forward and offered to buy at the price that Nirbhoy was willing to give or warned her that he intended to exercise his rights of pre-emption, if she did succeed in selling to another (see Brojo Kishore Sarma v. Kirtee Chandra Sarma (2), Torul Komhar v. Achhee (3), Kooldeep Singh v. Ramdeen Singh (4), Bhairon Singh v. Lalman (5).

"Then we see no reason for supposing that the price paid was not Rs. 44,850 but only Rs. 37,000. The Subordinate Judge finds that 2 debts of Rs. 5,330 and Rs. 2,520 alleged to be due to persons named Ganpat and Karman were illusory and not real debts. We are not of this opinion. The debts have been proved to our satisfaction: Ganpat, Karman and other witnesses have deposed to them. They produce their books, both recent and of earlier date, in which these debts are entered. Some of these books have gone through several rainy seasons. One witness explains that the roof of the house in which they were kept fell in and so they got damp. We see no reason to disbelieve this story. At any rate they do not appear to have been soaked in water, as the Subordinate Judge is of opinion they have been, to give them an old appearance. On the contrary they appear to be genuine old books and we believe in the existence of the debts in proof of which they have been produced. But whether these debts were real or illusory we are convinced that the Defendant No. 1 paid Rs. 44,850, to Anupbati and that she received this sum from him. If she only received Rs. 37,000 which exceeds by but a trifling amount what the Plaintiffs had offered to her, it seems most probable that the Plaintiffs would have bought the property and that there would have been no occasion for these suits. It was because Anupbati would not sell for Rs. 36,000 or any sum approaching that amount, but wanted much more, so as to clear her of her liabilities that the negotiations with the Plaintiffs were broken off and that she sold to Defendant No. 1 for Rs. 44,850. Even this sum appears an inadequate price for the properties sold, as Ramdhari, the son of Nirbhoy, deposes that they are worth not less than Rs. 50,000.

"In these circumstances we do not think we need discuss any other of the grounds of appeal raised by the Appellants. We would only remark in conclusion there is in our opinion no force in the plea that the Plaintiffs ratified the sale to the Defendant. They may have accepted small sums out of the purchase money in payment of debts due to them but they never intended, we consider, to ratify the sale, nor can their act be regarded as amounting to ratification. Moreover this plea was not expressly taken in the written statement of the Defendants or pressed in the lower Court"

The Appellants thereupon preferred the present appeals, which were consolidated, to His Majesty in Council.

conscience: The Bengal, United Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887, B. C.), sec. 37. To assert a valid claim to pre-emption two formalities are requisite known as the talab-i-mowashibat and the talab-i-istishad. The former consists in declaring an intention to pre-empt immediately on hearing of the sale, the latter consists in a formal declaration made with the least practicable delay to the same effect, before witnesses, in the presence of either the vendor or vendee, or on the premises sold: For the explanations and definitions of these two terms reference was made to Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan law, Vol. I (2nd Ed. 1875), pp. 487 and 489; Hamilton's Hedaya (2nd Ed. 1870), pp. 550 and 551; Jarfan Khan v. Jabbar Meah (6); Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, Vol. I. (3rd Ed. 1904), Ch. 25, sec. 3 and Ram Mohan Das v. Lakhi Narayan Roy (7). The law seems to rest upon the Koran and then upon tradition and lastly upon the judicial decision and interpretation of the Koran and tradition. Both Courts in India have concurred in holding that talab-i-mowashibat was duly and properly performed by the Appellants immediately on hearing of the sale, they have also concurrently found that the talab-i-istishad was duly performed. But the Subordinate Judge held that there was no unnecessary delay in its performance, while the High Court held that there was delay. It is submitted that the Subordinate Judge was right and that the High Court erred. Talab-i istishad must be performed after the first demand without any unnecessary delay, which means that it must be performed in a reasonable time. The pre-emptor is entitled to be satisfied as to the truth of the sale. There was no delay after the facts were obtained. The official calender shows that the delay was due to holidays the Appellants are not responsible for that.

(6) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 383 at p. 387 (1884).

The High Court was wrong in holding that the Appellants waived their right to pre-empt, because when they could not come to terms, they said "you may sell to any one you like." The true consideration for the sale was Rs. 37,000 as found by the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Jardine, K. C. and Mr. Cowell for the Respondents.—The right of pre-emption owes its origin to motives of expediency and a desire to prevent the introduction of stranger among co-sharers and neighbours likely to cause inconvenience or vexation. It is a personal right and not a right incidental to ownership of property: Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, Vol. I, (3rd Ed. 1904), p, 596. Reference was also made to Sir R. K. Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Mahommedan Law (2nd Ed. 1903), Ch. 12, Arts. 375 and 379; and Baillie's Digest of Mahommedan Law, Bk. 7, Chs. 1 and 3. It is not necessary that the pre-emptor should tender the price at the time of making his formal claim. Here the delay is partly put down to getting escort of police for safety of the tender money. Talab-i-istishad should be made with the least practicable delay. Mussammat Jumeelun v. Luteef Hossein (1). The High Court is right in coming to the conclusion that there was unnecessary delay. There is ample evidence to show that the Appellants were perfectly aware of the negotiations, which brought about the sale in question. The ceremony of talab i stish-ad must be done "instantly," and it is not enough, as the Subordinate Judge says, that there should be no gross negligence in doing it.

(1) 16 W. R. F. B. 13 at p. 14 (1871).

BAIJNATH GAENKA v. RAMDHARI CHOWDHRY,

If the pre emptor takes any benefit from the purchaser or recognises his right under the purchase in any way, he (the pre emptor) waives his right of pre-emption. The purchaser paid money into Court on 2nd July 1898 to pay off the mortgage on the property. The Appellant-pre emptors, who were the mortgagees, took that money out of Court on 13th September 1898, and gave possession to the purchaser. The Appellants thus recognised the purchase and waived their right to pre-empt. The High Court says the point was not raised in the written statement, which was filed on 1st September. The money was taken out on 13th September. It was, therefore, not possible to raise this plea in the written statement. But it was raised at the earliest opportunity in the memorandum of appeal. The Appellants having once taken the money out of Court, could not question the purchase: Reference was made to the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 83 and 84; and Habib-un-nissa v. Barkat Ali (8).

Mr. DeGruyther replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR ARTHUR WILSON.—These two consolidated appeals arise out of two suits, one brought by Mangni Ram, the other by Jowhuri Lal, to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a share in certain properties comprised in taluka Rasulpur Bhatowni.

By conveyances, dated 28th January 1891 and 9th July 1897, Mangni and Jowhuri had become the owners in equal shares of 12 annas of the property. The remaining four annas belonged to the Respondent, Anupbati Koeri, who on the 17th December 1897 sold those four annas to Nirbhoy Chowdhry; and that is the sale against which the right of pre emption is claimed. It has been found that Jowhuri first heard of the sale on the 20th December 1897, and that thereupon he at once made the immediate claim to pre-empt which the law requires. Mangni first heard of the sale on the 5th of January 1898, and at once made his immediate claim. No question therefore arises with regard to the first claim by each of the two men. The principal controversy between the parties, and the point on which the Courts below have differed, is an alleged delay in making the second claim, the claim with witnesses, which also is required by law.

Jowhuri, on hearing of the sale, which he did at Monghyr, at once sent to his agent at or near Gogri to procure from the Registry Office a copy of the sale deed. The agent obtained that copy and sent it to Jowhuri, who actually received it on the 4th January. The High Court, differing from the Subordinate Judge, has found unreasonable delay at two points of these proceedings. It has held, first, that the copy from the Registry was not obtained and sent off as soon as it might have been. But an examination of the Official Calendar shows clearly that the learned Judges were led to this conclusion by a misapprehension as to the time during which the Registry Office was closed for the Christmas Vacation. The High Court held, secondly, that Jowhuri was guilty of wilful delay by his refusal to receive the packet containing the copy of the sale deed from the Post Office peon. This conclusion is based upon the evidence of the peon himself, which the learned Judges believed. But the Judge who had this witness before him disbelieved his story. That story is admittedly inconsistent with the rules of the Post Office; and it finds no support from the witness's own endorsement made at the time. Their Lordships think that the Subordinate Judge was right in rejecting that story, and therefore the second allegation of delay fails.

The more serious case of delay is said to have occurred subsequently, and with respect to it the position of Mangni and Jowhuri is identical. On the 5th January they knew everything which it was essential to know. On that day they took the advice of local barrister, and in accordance with his advice they on the next day, the 6th January, applied to the proper officer for a police guard to protect the messengers and the money, which it was proposed those messengers should tender. This guard they obtained on 7th, and the messengers started. On that day those messengers made the claim (and, as has been found, with due formalities) at the house of Nirbhoy, the purchaser. On subsequent days the claim was renewed at the house of the vendor, and upon the land. The question that arises is whether the interva that elapsed between the 5th January and the 7th January is a fatal delay. The Subordinate Judge held that it was not; the High Court held that it was.

There is no question of law in the case. It is clear that the right of pre-emption must be exercised, and the claims necessary to give effect to it must be made, with the utmost promptitude, and that any unreasonable or unnecessary delay is to be construed as an election not to pre-empt. And whether there has been such delay is a question to be determined upon the facts of each particular case. It is enough for their Lordships to say that, in their opinion, the grounds stated by the learned Judges of the High Court for overruling the decision of the first Court, on a pure question of fact, were insufficient.

Another point argued on behalf of the Respondents arises in this way:—The two Plaintiffs Mangni and Jowhuri had obtained a transfer of a zurpeshgi mortgage binding the four annas share sold by Anupbati to Nirbhoy After that sale Nirbhoy paid the mortgage money into Court, in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage: and after some hesitation the two Plaintiffs took out that money. It was contended that by so doing they had recognised the title of Nirbhoy under his purchase and could not claim pre-emption.

Their Lordships cannot agree with this contention Until a decree for pre-emption was made Nirbhoy owned the land as purchaser, and had a right to redeem. The taking out of the money by the Plaintiffs, as mortgagees, was no recognition of anything more than this, and was quite consistent with the claim to pre-empt.

There remains only one other point for consideration, as to which again the Courts in India have differed; and that is as to the amount actually paid by Nirbhoy to Anupbati, the difference being Rs. 7,850 As to this point their Lordships do not find a clear and positive finding by the Subordinate Judge that the full sum named in the deed of sale was not in fact paid; and they are not prepared to dissent upon this point from the judgment of the High Court.

Their Lordships will humbly advice His Majesty that these appeals should be allowed; that the decrees of the High Court should be discharged with costs; that the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge should be varied by directing the price of the pre-emption to be calculated on the sum of Rs. 44,850 (the price named in the deed of sale from Anupbati to Nirbhoy) and the amounts to be deposited in the Court of the Subordinate Judge within such times as the High Court or the Subordinate Judge may determine; that subject to these variations and the payment to the Appellants of additional costs (if any) the decrees of the Subordinate Judge should be restored; and that the cases should be remitted to the High Court in order that the necessary steps may be taken for the disposal thereof on the above footing.

The Respondents who have resisted the appeals will pay the costs thereof

ATARMONI DASSI and others, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 50—Land Acquisition proceeding—Apportionment of compensation between landlord and tenant—Presumption of permanency of holding.

Although sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply when the question of the permanency or otherwise of a tenure arises in a proceeding for the apportionment between landlord and tenant of money awarded for compulsory purchase of land, the principle involved in that section is a useful guide to the Courts in deciding it.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th of June 1906, against the decree of Moulvi Abdul Barry, Subordinate Judge, Zillah Hooghly, dated the 27th April 1906.

The facts are as follows:—

A plot of 25 bighas of land belonging to the Gossain family of Serampore was formerly held by one Bissumbar Sen as a tenant at a jama of Rs. 54 6 8. After his death his son Sreenath held the land. On 10th November 1873, Sreenath gave a mourasi mokurari pattah of the plot to the Champdani Jute Mills under a registered sub-lease at a rent of Rs. 102 per year. Sreenath was succeeded by his widow Atarmoni, one of the Respondents in this appeal.

NUNDA LAL GOSSAMI v. ATARMONI DASSI.

Out of this 25 bighas, the Government acquired 2 bighas, 5 cottahs at Rs. 4,246-3-6 p. and the Deputy Collector apportioned the compensation money awarding a sum to the zemindars and putnidars, equal to the capitalized value of 20 years rent and also at the same rate to Atarmoni, and giving the rest to the Champdani Jute Mills. The zemindars being dissatisfied with this caused a reference to be made to the Civil Court. The Judge found on the evidence that the rent was paid at a uniform rate for more than 20 years and therefore the presumption of law arose that the tenure was permanent. He held that under the circumstances the zemindars could not get more than what had been awarded by the Deputy Collector and dismissed the zemindar's claim with costs Against this judgment the zemindars appealed.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Sib Chandra Palit for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Upendra Lal Roy for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The question in this case arises as to the apportionment of certain money awarded for compulsory purchase of land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. It is the old struggle between the zemindar on the one hand, and the tenant on the other. The real question is this, whether the Court below was right in presuming, in the circumstances I am about to state, that the tenure of one Bissumbar Sen, who is long since dead, was of a permanent nature. The origin of the tenure is lost in obscurity, and we do not know what it was. But it appears that one Bissumbar Sen had been holding the land as a tenant at a rent of Rs. 54 odd. It appears from the evidence in the case that ever since the death of Bissumbar which apparently occurred some 55 years ago, his son Sreenath Sen, who then by inheritance held the property, had been paying the same rent, and after his death, his widow, a party to the present proceedings, Sreemati Atarmoni Dassi, has been paying the same rent. The result, therefore, is that for a period of some 55 years, the evidence shows, the same rent has been paid. It appears that on the 10th of November 1873, Sreenath Sen gave a mourasi mokurari pattah of the land to the Champdani Jute Mills Co., who are the Respondents on the present appeal, at an enhanced rent of Rs. 102 per annum It also appears that the value of the land has gone up very much and, upon the evidence of the Appellants' own witnesses, the value of the whole land included in the tenure is now seven-thousand rupees, instead of Rs 54, a year. It is equally clear that no steps have been taken by the landlord either to evict Bissumbar Sen or those holding under him, or to enhance the rent of the tenure. In these circumstances was not the Court right in holding that a presumption arose that the tenure was of a permanat nature? It is not disputed that sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to qestions which arise in proceedings of this nature: but it is said, and I think properly said, that the principle involved in that section is a useful guide to the Courts in matters of this nature. I do not put it higher than that. But this is clear that if the zemindar had brought an action, either to evict or to enhance, on the ground that the tenure was not a permanent one, the Defendants, the tenure-holders could then have claimed, and successfully, the benefit of sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it is probable that for that reason, notwithstanding the great rise in the value of the land, the zemindar has not brought any suit of that nature. In these circumstances, is not the Court justified in presuming that the tenure was permanent? There is nothing on the part of the landlord to show what was the nature of the tenure in its inception: and, I have stated all the facts which we have before us On these facts, I think the view taken by the Court below is right, and the presumption has not been rebutted that the tenure is permanent.

The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, two sets of hearing fee, for Respondents Finlay Muir & Co., four gold mohurs, and for Respondent Atarmoni two gold mohurs.

RULE NO. 2795 OF 1907.

MACLEAN, C. J.
COXE, J.
1908.
7, January.

ASIRUDDI MONDOL, Petitioner,

MUKHODAMOYEE DASSI, and ors, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 310A—Application to set aside rent sale—Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act (I B. C. of 1907), sec. 54—Bengal General Clauses Act (I B. C. of 1899), sec. 8, cl. (c)—Right accrued previous to, but application after, repeal.

A raiyati holding having been sold on the 7th May 1907 in execution of a rent-decree, an under-raiyat applied to have the sale set aside under sec. 310A, C. P. C., on the 23rd May following,

Held—That the application could not be entertained, the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act I of 1907 having come into operation on the 22nd May 1907.

Sec. 54 of the amending Act by enacting that sec. 310A, C. P. C., shall not apply to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon, does not repeal any portion of the Bengal Tenancy Act within the meaning of sub-sec. (c) of sec. 8 of the Bengal General Clauses Act.

This was a rule granted on the 26th of August 1907, against the order of Babu Basanta Kumar Pal, Munsif, 1st Court at Basirhat, dated the 16th of July 1907, passed in execution case No. 556 of 1907, rejecting the objections of the Petitioner taken to the application of the opposite party Mukhoda Dassi made under sec. 310A, C. P. C., and holding that the opposite party had a locus standi to apply under the said sec. 310A, C. P. C.

The facts of the case are as follows.

One Nabin Chandra Ghose obtained a decree for rent against his tenant Ahed Mollah.

In execution of that decree the decree-holder caused the tenancy held by the tenant to be sold on 7th May 1907 in execution case No. 556 of 1907 in the 1st Court of the Munsif of Basirhat.

ASIRUDDI MONDOL v. MUKHODAMOYEE DASSI.

The Petitioner purchased the same at the auction sale.

The opposite party Mukhodamoyee Dassi alleging herself to be an under-raiyat under Ahed Mollah, the judgment-debtor, applied under sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code to have the sale set aside after depositing the decretal amount, on the 23rd May 1907.

The Petitioner opposed the said application, but the learned Munsif by his judgment dated the 16th July 1907 held that the opposite party had a locus standi to apply under sec. 310A and disallowed the Petitioner's objection.

The Petitioner then moved the High Court and obtained this rule.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy for the Petitioner.

Babu Baikuntha Nath Das for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is an application under sec. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to discharge an order of the Munsif of Basirhat, dated the 16th of July 1907, by which he gave an under-raiyat liberty to pay in the purchase money under see. 310A, of the Code of Civil Procedure. the auction purchaser applied for a rule to discharge that order on the ground that the Judge had no jurisdiction to make it, and, a rule was granted.

It appears that the application upon which the order of the Judge was passed was made on the 23rd of May 1907. But on the previous day, the 22nd of May 1907, the amending Bengal Tenancy Act (Act I of 1907) came into operation, and by sec. 54, amending sec. 170 of the existing Bengal Tenancy Act, it was enacted that the words "310A" should be inserted in sec. 170. The effect of that amendment was to prevent any order being passed under sec. 310A of the Code: and, if the matter had rested there, the rule must have been made absolute. Whilst the opposite party concedes that, it is urged that he is protected under sec. 8, sub-section (c) of the Bengal General Clauses Act (Act I of 1899). That section runs as follows:—

"Where this Act or any Bengal Act made after the commencement of this Act, repeals any enactment hitherto made or hereafter to be made, then unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not affect any right privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under any enactment so repealed." It appears that the execution proceeding and the sale in this particular case had taken place before the amended Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation on the 22nd of May 1907 and the argument is that sec. 54 of the amending Act repealed some portion of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the opposite party had acquired a right, under sec. 310A, to come in and make the deposit, and that the repeal could not affect that right. That is in substance the argument submitted to us.

We must first consider whether there has been any repeal of the Bengal Tenancy Act upon this point. In no part of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885) is sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to, and for the best of all reasons that it was not then in existence, in as much as sec. 310A was not added to the Code of Civil Procedure until the 2nd of May 1894, that is nearly nine years after the Bengal Tenancy Act had been in operation. The argument of the opposite party is that sec. 170 does by implication, coupled with sec. 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, incorporate, if I may use the expression, all the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to suits, except those which are expressly excepted. Sec. 170 runs thus: "sec. 278 to 283 (both inclusive) of the Code of Civil Procedure shall not apply to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon." And, sec. 143, sub-sec. (2) runs as follows "subject to any rules so made, and subject also to the other provisions of this Act, the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all such suits." But those provisions can only apply to the Code of Civil Procedure as it then stood, and it could never have been intended that all the provisions of any subsequent amendment of the Code were to apply. In this view, there was no repeal of any portion of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and consequently sec. 8 of the Bengal General Clauses Act has no application. No doubt, this Court has held, although there is some difference of opinion upon the point, that applications under sec. 310A may properly be made when a tenure or holding has been attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon under the Bengal Tenancy Act. But for the reasons I have pointed out, there was no enactment to that effect under the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, nor could there have been any such, because, as I have said, the section was not then in existence.

For these reasons I think the point taken by the opposite party cannot prevail: and as it had been expressly enacted that sec. 310A was not to apply to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon before the application to deposit the purchase money was made, the rule must be made absolute with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 118 OF 1906.

STEPHEN, J. DASS, J. 1908 Heard, 28 and 29, January. Judgment, 29, January.	SYED KHALILUR RAHMAN and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. RUPAN MAHTON and others, Defendants, Respondents.

*Landlord and Tenant Act (VIII B. C. of 1869), sec. 6—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 116—*Kamat land—Right of occupancy—Tenant, holding over.

Where the rights of the parties were governed by Act VIII, B. C. of 1869, lands which were kamat did not cease to be so by virtue of a mokurari settlement of the same.

A tenant of kamat land does not acquire a right of occupancy by holding it over after the expiry of the lease.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of February 1906, against the decree of Babu Aswini Kumar Guha, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Bhagulpur, dated the 20th of November 1905, reversing that of Babu Surendra Nath Ghose

SYED KHALILUR RAHMAN v. RUPAN MAHTON.

Munsif of Monghyr, dated the 21st of February 1905.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Moulvis Syed Shamsul Huda and Syed Mahomed Tahir for the Appellants.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Harendra Krishna Mukerjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a suit for recovery of lands which the Plaintiffs claim as their kamat lands. This claim is resisted by the Defendants on the ground that they have acquired an occupancy-right in the lands, and that if they have not acquired the occupancy right they are at all events entitled to a notice with which they have not been served.

In considering the rights of the parties we have to consider the matter from a chronological point of view. In the first place we will assume that before 1869 these lands were kamat lands of the predecessor in title of the Plaintiffs. Before 1869 at a time which is not found the present Plaintiffs became mokuraridars of the lands in question and as such they granted a lease to the Defendants' predecessor in title.

Now the first question which we have to decide is whether on the Plaintiffs becoming mokuraridars the lands ceased to be kamat and we hold that they did not, because whatever may be the effect of sec. 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the rights of the parties at that time were governed by Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869, sec. 6, which excepts from the acquisition of occupancy-rights kamat lands belonging to the proprietors of the state or tenure and let by him on a lease for a term or year by year. Looking at the meaning of the words estate and tenure as shown by the contents of the Act of 1869 compared with the definition in the Bengal Tenancy Act, which, of course, did not then exist, we are of opinion that the lands did not cease to be kamat merely because the mokurari was created, and therefore we hold on the supposition we have mentioned that the lands were kamat lands as far as that lease is concerned.

The next matter we have to consider is the termination of that lease by efflux of time in 1876. According to the finding of the lower Appellate Court what happened then was that the tenant, the predecessor in title of the Defendants, remained in possession of those lands, and he and the Defendants remained in possession of those lands holding them on the terms provided in the lease for the space of 21 years. Now, if those lands were to be taken as kamat lands during all that time the tenants failed to acquire any occupancy by reason of sec. 6 of 1869 and sec. 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It has been argued before us that the Defendant became a trespasser on the termination of the lease in 1876, and that he accordingly acquired the right of occupancy without any reference to sec. 116. We cannot consider that this is so, for as he is found to have paid rent we must take it that at the end of the first year of his tenancy any trespass which he committed by holding over after his tenancy was completed was condoned and was in fact no trespass at all.

SYED KHALILUR RAHMAN v. RUPAN MAHTON.

Thus then we find that the Defendant had acquired no right of occupancy when the lease was granted to him by the Plaintiff in 1896. That lease was in terms granted by the Plaintiff as mokuraridar and there is a finding to the effect that he was a mokuraridar. This however does not affect the question of whether the lands remained kamat lands, as if they were kamat lands when the mokurari was instituted they would remain so. We must take it therefore that the land was kamat land during the currency of the second lease of 1896. Now that the lease terminated in 1903, and there is no finding that after its termination the Defendant held over or consequently acquired any right of occupancy, he is therefore since the termination of the lease of 1896 a trespasser, and on the supposition we have mentioned, namely, that the lands were kamat before 1869, he has no defence to the present action.

As regards the question as to whether the lands were kamat before 1869, there is a definite finding by the lower Appellate Court. But that is based on the contents of the second lease of 1896, and it has been held in the case of Masudan Singh v. Gooder Nath (1), that the contents of the lease cannot change a non-occupancy holding into kamat land. In this case it has not been suggested that the contents of the lease have any evidentiary value. We are accordingly left without any finding by the Appellate Court on which we can act as to whether these lands ever were kamat or not. If they were not kamat, the basis of the Plaintiffs' case fails because obviously the Defendants will have acquired occupancy title between the termination of the first lease and the commencement of the second.

The lower Court having come to no finding on this question, the case must be remanded to that Court for such finding to be arrived at. The Subordinate Judge will therefore come to a finding whether the lands in question were kamat lands before the mokurari was created. If they were, he will give judgment for the Plaintiffs, otherwise for the Defendants.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result in the discretion of the Court below.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act IV of 1898), secs. 190 (1) (c) and 191—Applicability to the Appellate Court—Appeal, part of a trial.

A Magistrate, passing orders for the issue of summons against the accused in a case placed before him by an order of the Collector to the effect that the case should be put up before the Magistrate for the issue of necessary orders, takes cognizance of the case under sec. 190 (1) (c).

A Subordinate Magistrate who took cognizance of a case under sec. 190 (1) (c), BANSI LAL v. THE EMPEROR.

Cr. P. C., could not after becoming District Magistrate hear an appeal from a conviction in the case which was tried by another Subordinate Magistrate, without following the procedure laid down by sec. 191, Cr. P. C., an appeal being part of the trial for an offence.

This was a rule granted on the 12th of December 1907, against an order of Babu Dhirakshan Singh, Deputy Magistrate of Gya, dated the 14th of September 1907, which order was, on appeal, modified by Mr. M. K. Deb, District Magistrate of Gya, on the 21st of September 1907.

The facts of the case briefly stated are as follows :—Under Collector's order dated the 6th May last, one Abdus Samad Amin—the complainant in the present case—was deputed to relay the boundaries of village Chandra belonging to one M. Abdullah. On the 17th the said Amin reported to the Collector, Mr. Foley, that he had erected eight boundary pillars on the western side of the village and when he had gone to take his dinner, the accused with 20 or 25 men went to the spot, destroyed the pillar and took away the materials with them. On this Mr. Foley passed the following order.

"See under what sections Bansi Lal, Dasrathi Lal and their servants can be prosecuted and prosecute them accordingly. Put up before Mr. Deb for the issue of necessary orders."

The case coming up before Mr. Deb, he made the following order. "Summon Bansi Lal under sec. 434 for 28-5."

The accused was then put on trial before a Deputy Magistrate and convicted under secs. 379 and 434, I. P. C. On appeal Mr. Deb as District Magistrate set aside the conviction and sentence under sec. 379 but upheld the conviction and sentence under sec. 434, I. P. C.

The rule was issued to set aside the conviction and sentence under sec. 434, I. P. C.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause against the Rule.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a rule to show cause why the conviction of the Petitioner under sec. 434, I. P. C., should not be set aside. He was charged with having destroyed and carried off the materials of certain boundary pillars erected by a survey Amin under the authority of the Collector. He was then convicted by the Deputy Magistrate under secs. 379 and 434, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo 1 month's rigorous imprisonment under the former, and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under the latter section.

On appeal the conviction and sentence under sec. 379, I. P. C., were set aside by Mr. Deb, District Magistrate and the conviction and sentence under sec. 434 were affirmed.

In support of this rule it has been argued (1) that the acts of the accused did not amount to mischief (2) that Mr. Deb as District Magistrate was incompetent to hear the appeal.

We do not think the first of the pleas can prevail. The Petitioner seems to have had good reason to know and to have known very well that the boundary pillars had been put up by a public servant under the authority of the Collector. His act in destroying the pillars and scattering and removing the materials in our opinion does amount to mischief.

BANSI LAL v. THE EMPEROR.

We consider, however, that the second plea is a good one. Mr. Deb as Joint Magistrate appears to have taken cognizance of the case under sec. 190 (1) (c), for the Deputy Magistrate says that the report made by the Amin to the then Collector, Mr. Foley, "was not the complaint made to the District Magistrate in the sense in which it is defined in the Criminal Procedure Code, but it was simply an information regarding the occurrence of an offence, which had taken place." Mr Foley's order on this report was "see under what sections Bansi Lal, Dasrathi Lal and their servants can be prosecuted and prosecute them accordingly. Put up before Mr. Deb for the issue of necessary orders" This is not the order which would be passed on a written complaint under sec. 202 made to a Magistrate. Mr. Deb's order was "summon Bansi Lal under sec. 434 for 28 5." Hence, it would seem to us that he took cognizance of the case under sec. 190 (1) (c). It is now argued by the District Magistrate, Mr. Foley in his letter showing cause that the Amin filed a written complaint to him. This is contrary to the view taken by the Deputy Magistrate in his judgment and it would not seem to us that the written report of the Amin was a complaint, nor was it treated by Mr. Foley as a complaint but rather dealt by him as Collector as the Deputy Magistrate says it was, and hence Mr. Deb must be regarded as taking cognizance of the case under sec. 190 (1) (c). So before hearing the appeal when he became District Magistrate he should have followed the procedure laid down by sec. 191, because an appeal is part of the trial of an offence. Mr. Deb should have accordingly given the accused his choice of having the appeal heard by another Magistrate but did not do so We therefore set aside the Appellate Court's order dated the 21st September 1907, and direct that the accused's appeal be heard and disposed of by any Magistrate other than Mr. Deb competent to hear it, whom the District Magistrate may select for the purpose, or by the District Magistrate himself Mr. Foley, if there is no other Magistrate at the station of Gya competent to hear the appeal

NOTES

In our last issue we had occasion to remark in connection with the Whipping Bill, that juvenile offenders are treated in England with parental care. We have noticed in these columns before, the movement in England for the establishment of separate courts for juveniles. There is already such a court in Birmingham. Although such courts have not come into existence all over the country, yet the principle and practice of keeping juvenile offenders separate from ordinary criminals and treating them as they would be treated at home or at school have found almost universal recognition in all the important magisterial courts in England. Remand homes have been established to prevent juveniles from being taken to the Police lock-up before or pending trial. Boys in India are ordinarily confined in Police cells with other criminals and brought up along with them to take their trial in open Court even for trivial offences.

In England juvenile or youthful offenders are not allowed to be mixed up with criminals. They are brought up before the magistrate in a separate room or in the Court room from which the public and adult offenders are excluded. They are not made to stand in the dock. The Magistrate gives them advice or administers reproof or warning, makes them over to parents or guardians or remands them to voluntary or public institutions or homes for reformation. In fact every effort is made and care taken to guard against the juveniles leaving the Magistrate's Courts with the impression that he is a criminal. If it is too much for us to expect at present that the same humane principles should be adopted in India in the treatment of juvenile offenders, it is certainly not too much to ask that strict limitations should be put on the powers of magistrates in the Whipping Bill to flog them publicly. It will be seen from an article we reproduce from the English Law Journal what special considerations are shown to youthful offenders in England and what special arrangements are in contemplation. A Bill recently introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. Herbert Samuel, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Home Office, some provisions of which we reproduce below, is also worthy of attention. Youthful offenders are not so very common in this country and that makes the duties of the Government in regard to them easier of performance.

The question how far a Presidency Magistrate is bound to take down evidence came up for decision before Chandavarkar and Knight, JJ. of the Bombay High Court in the case of Emperor v. Haris Chandra Talcherkar, a report of which appears at p. 20 of vol. X of the Bombay Law Reporter. One H a respectable person was placed on his trial before the Presidency Magistrate on a charge of insult and assault, convicted, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15. The Magistrate did not record any evidence and in his explanation submitted to the High Court he observed, "The case referred to was tried by me as a warrant case subject however to the special provisions of sec. 362 of the Code Criminal Procedure." The High Court while pronouncing judgment in the case observed. "The learned Magistrate observes in his report that he tried the case subject to the provision of sec. 362 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Code. No doubt the section lays down that except in certain cases the Magistrate shall take down evidence in the manner prescribed thereby, but that does not mean that in the cases excepted he can act arbitrarily and record nothing by way of evidence. The exception gives merely a discretion to take down the evidence or not. In other cases to which the exception does not apply he is bound to record the evidence. But the discretion, like all discretionary powers, should be exercised judicially in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily. For instance in petty offences such as "nuisances" or what are called in police parlance "morning cases" there may be no necessity to record any evidence. But in cases of this kind, where an educated man holding a comparatively respectable status in life is charged with an offence reflecting on his character and serious allegations are levelled against him, there ought to have been some record of evidence to enable him in a case of conviction to come up to this Court in revision and satisfy it that the conviction is wrong."

SOME OF THE PRESIDENCY MAGISTRATES IN CALCUTTA seem to be under the impression that they are not bound to record any evidence in any case unless it falls within the description of the cases mentioned in sec. 362 Criminal Procedure Code, that is to say, cases in which a Presidency Magistrate imposes a fine exceeding Rs. 200 or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months. But it should be remembered that the decisions of the Presidency Magistrates in cases not falling within the description are not declared by law to be final; their decision is subject to revision by the High Court But how is the High Court to judge of the correctness or otherwise of the decision unless some notes of the evidence in the case are on the record? No doubt the law gives a certain amount of discretion to the Presidency Magistrate in the matter of recording of evidence. But that discretion must be held to have been given in the interest of the administration of justice. Otherwise there could be no justification for allowing such a discretion. It may be, the Legislature thought that in many petty cases the decision of the Presidency Magistrate will be virtually final, as the persons convicted would not move the High Court against those convictions. In cases which are likely to come up to the High Court, the Calcutta High Court have made it a rule that the record of the Presidency Magistrate must be such as to enable the Court of revision to judge of the propriety of the order.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION AS TO THE LEGALITY OR otherwise of a condition subsequent in a Will was decided by the Chancery Division, on the 21st December 1907 a report of which appears at page 225 of the Times Law Reports vol. XXIV. The facts were briefly these:—A testator bequeathed certain properties to his nephew Herbert Beard and his assigns for his life without impeachment of waste "provided that he does not enter into the naval or military services of the country" with remainder to the use of his children in fee simple as tenants in common. The Will then continued: "But if my said nephew Herbert Beard shall enter into the naval or military services of the country . . . . then I give and devise my said freehold hereditaments . . . to my nephew Francis Beard another son of my said brother John Beard in fee simple." The assigns of Herbert Beard brought an action for a declaration that the estate bequeathed to Herbert Beard was absolute and the proviso in the Will relating to the divesting of the estate on Herbert Beard's entering into naval or military services of the country is void and inoperative being contrary to the public good and welfare of the community.

MR. JUSTICE SWINFEN EADY HELD THAT THE PROVISO was void being against the public good or public policy. But the learned Judge observed that great caution is necessary in considering whether a certain contract or stipulation is void on account of being contrary to public policy or public good. "At different times very different views have been entertained as to what is injurious to the public." Thus in the age of Queen Elizabeth all restraints of trade, whatever they were, general or partial, were thought to be contrary to public policy. "But since that time the rule has been relaxed so far as the exigencies of the trade for the time being required." If however it be clearly established that the condition is against public policy, it is certainly void. But if the question were a doubtful matter of policy, an agreement or condition should not be held to be void on the ground of public policy. As regards the provision in the Will in question the learned Judge held: "In my opinion, however, there can be few, if any, provision more against the public good and the welfare of the State than one tending to deter persons from entering the naval or military service of the country. Such a provision strikes at the very security of the State, which must depend for its protection against external enemies on the armed forces of the Crown, both naval and military; and the law looks not to the probability of public mischief occurring in the particular instance, but to the general tendency of the disposition." Following this line of reasoning we expect, that the law Courts in India might declare that in a bequest made by a testator to a person coupled with a condition that on the persons entering into Government service the property will pass from his hands to another person, the condition divesting the estate is void and inoperative as being opposed to public policy.

JUVENILE COURTS AND REMAND HOMES.

The history of the movement in favour of the separation of the young offender from the old or adult offender before and during trial, so far as England itself is concerned, extends over a recent period of little more than two years, whereas in some of the States of America and some of the English Colonies the matter has been under legislative consideration for a considerable number of years.

The first legislative attempt in the United States was in the city of Boston, Massachusetts, as far back as 1863. A long legislative gap then takes place until South Australia considered the question in 1890, when Children's Courts were established under a ministerial order, and subsequently legalised by enactment in 1895. Ontario passed in Act in 1893 preventing trials of children's cases in Police Court rooms ordinarily used as such. In 1894 the Dominion Parliament passed a Youthful Offenders Act for the whole of Canada, providing that the trials of young persons apparently under sixteen years of age should take place without publicity, apart from the trials of other accused persons, and special provision was made for the detention of youthful offenders awaiting trial. Twenty-two of the United States then framed Children's Court Laws, and six have done so more lately. South Africa, in 1904, passed an Act preventing women and young persons awaiting trial being subject to the contamination of gaols

The whole subject had for some time in England been under discussion in the many societies considering the welfare of children—the Children's Aid Society, the State Children's Association, and the Committee on Wage-earning Children. In 1893 the Inter-departmental Committee upon Physical Deterioration in issuing their report had recomended as follows: 'In all cases touching the young where the assistance of a Magistrate is invoked, he should, where possible, be a specially selected person sitting for the purpose.' This important recomendation was not the outcome of the evidence of any particular witness, but emanated as the opinion of the Departmental Committee itself. In 1903 the Employment of Children Act was passed, which gave local authorities considerable permissive powers to make by-laws relating to the employment of children, and if this Act had been made obligatory on the local authorities a larger number of children would be charged before the Courts for offences under the Act.

In January, 1905, a circular was recived by the Lord Mayor of Birmingham, signed by the Earl of Crewe, on behalf of the State Children's Association, recomending special Courts for cases against juvenile offenders This was referred to the Prison Visiting Committee, of which Mr. J. Courtenay Lord, J. P., was chairman. At the request of that Committee he made all possible enquiries as to procedure elsewhere, and specially in Canada and the United States of America, and he then drew up a series of recomendations which were approved by the Prison Committee with one exception—namely, the necessity for the appointment of probation officers in connection with Children's Courts. This recommendation, now considered to be the keynote of this system was left out; but the remaining recommendations were approved and submitted to the Magistrates in session assembled on April 6, 1905, in the form of a report, which was unanimously adopted and ordered to be carried out. By the co-operation of the Chief Constable, the clerk to the justices, etc., the Court was opened on April 13 For the first few months this probation work was left to the police and volunteer ladies and gentlemen; but it was soon found that the police had not time to properly follow up the cases, and by an arrangement with the Watch Committee and the Chief Constable three paid officers were appointed.

Within twelve months after the establishment of this special Court in Birmingham the visiting Magistrates of the prison there reported a remarkable decrease in the number of juvenile offenders, a reduction from eighty-four of the previous year to twenty-one, and this was entirely due, in the opinion of the governor of the prison in his report to the Prison Commissioners, to the opening of this Children's Court.

Instructions were issued to the stipendiary Magistrates of London from the Home Office in June 1905, which were, shortly, as follows: (1) Charges against children in custody to be taken first each morning, and against children brought afterwards during the day to be given precedence over other cases; (2) summonses against children as far as practicable to be taken apart from other business; (3) children awaiting trial or removal to Remand Homes, industrial or reformatory schools to be kept apart from other prisoners; (4) no child to be in Court until its case comes on; (5) during hearing of a child's case no adult prisoner to be in Court; (6) when tried, no child to be placed in the dock.

In Scotland in Glasgow and Greenock, in Ireland in Dublin separate Courts for juvenile delinquents have also been established.

The history of the establishment of the Remand Homes is interesting to refer to at this point Three Remand Homes are provided by the Metropolitan Asylums Board in London (1901) arising out of the provisions of the Youthful Offenders Act of that year, and under an order of the Local Government Board of 1897, for children who up till then had been remanded to the workhouses. These Homes have met a great want and are in every way desirable. All children now remanded by the Magistrates for London go at once to one of these three homes, two north of the Thames and one south, fed by the Metropolitan and City Police Courts, and they either appear again before the Magistrates or are sent to industrial schools or reformatories. There is, however, this difference, which will no doubt soon be changed—the Metropolitan Police Magistrates appear to have no power to order children previous to appearing before their Courts to be taken by the police over-night to the Remand Homes, whereas in the case of children arrested in the city, the city police take them direct to the Remand Homes before bringing them before the City Police Courts, and so in these cases the children never come to the police stations within the city area.

In 1901 the Youthful Offenders Act was passed, which enacted that 'a Court of summary jurisdiction, on remanding or committing for trial any child or young person, instead of committing him to prison, may remand or commit him into the custody of any fit person named in the commitment who is willing to receive him This act, therefore, is only optional, and not obligatory, as to sending juvenile offenders to Remand Homes, and another defect in the Act is, as has been stated, that the homes are only available after their first appearance before the Magistrates of the Metropolitan Police Courts thus during 1905 thirty-seven children under ten years of age, eighty-six between ten and thirteen years, and 293 between thirteen and sixteen years slept in police stations.

The following return made to an address of the House of Commons at the instigation of Mr. J. C. Wedgwood, M. P., for Newcastle-under-Tyne, shows, however, a remarkable record of the probable number of cases of juvenile-offenders before the Magistrates throughout England and Wales. During the last three months of 1906 (October, November, December), out of a population of some 32½ millions, 8,491 children and young persons were during those three months charged with offences, of these, 2,694 charges were dismissed and 551 were bound over. If these figures were the same for the remaining nine months of the year, we should have the startling total of nearly 34,000 charged annually before the criminal summary tribunals of the country These figures do not include the educational cases which come before the Magistrates; in London, only some 11,000 of these cases come before the Courts

The Juvenile Court has hitherto dealt with young persons under sixteen; the age has been raised in some of the American Court to eighteen and even twenty-one; in Detroit it is seventeen, in Portland it is eighteen, and it is said in an able pamphlet upon the whole of this important subject about to be issued by Miss N. Adler, of the Educational Committee of the London County Council, that in the celebrated Court at Denver, presided over by Judge Lindsey, the age is twenty-one. More recently (she says) Court clinics for the observation and treatment of children's ailments have been attached to the juvenile Court; and at Marion County Court, Indianapolis, there is a staff of three doctors, one a lady. The whole question of the relationship of juvenile delinquency to mental disease is receiving increased attention in America, and observations on cases are being constantly made.

Judge Julian Mack, of Chicago, recently delivered an address to the Bar Association of the State of Minnesota, dealing at much length on the change in the administration of the old common law, which knew no distinction between the child and the adult who had committed an offence against the state:—

"The purpose in bringing juvenile delinquents before some special Court is to lead them away from and to destroy their propensities to vice; to elevate, not to degrade; to reform, not necessarily to punish Their parents, likewise, must be met and dealt with in the same spirit. These are some positive needs that mean so much in the development of the child; through them may come the prevention of that delinquency for which the Juvenile Court offers merely a cure. No man could sit in a Juvenile Court week after week unless he were an optimist. More children come before the Courts than formerly; more agencies are at work to bring them, studying child life and attempting to help and better it The future demands the united and devoted efforts of the whole community, bent on keeping children at least from becoming criminals.

SOME PROVISIONS OF MR. HERBERT SAMUEL'S BILL.

"If any person sells or gives to a person apparently under the age of 16 years any cigarettes or cigarette papers, whether for his own use or not, or sells or gives to such a person any other tobacco which he knows or has reason to believe is for the use of that person, he shall be liable on summary conviction in the case of a first offence, to a fine not exceeding £2, and in the case of second offence to a fine not exceeding £5 and in the case of a third or consequent offence to a fine not exceeding £20.

"Exemption from the operation of this clause is, however, given to young people employed by a dealer in tobacco for the purpose of his business."

"A distinction is drawn between cigarettes and tobacco. No one under 16 may have cigarettes at all, but he may carry tobacco, if it is not for his own use."

. . . .

"A child shall not be sentenced to imprisonment or penal servitude for any offence."

"A young person shall not be sentenced to penal servitude for any offence."

The term "a child" embraces all young people up to the age of 14, when they become "young persons" until the 16th year is completed. A "young person" may be sentenced to imprisonment, though not to penal servitude, if he is so unruly that he cannot be detained in places of detention, to be provided under the Bill, and if no reformatory school will have him

The principle of "Children's Courts" is well understood The Magistrates are required to sit, when hearing juvenile cases either in a different room from that in which the police-court is held, or at a different time from the ordinary court hour. Members of the public will not be admitted to the children's court, though Press representatives will be allowed to attened, and all children will be excluded from the ordinary courts unless they are there as witnesses. With regard to London, the Bill says: "His Majesty may, by Order in Council, under the Metropolitan Police Courts Acts, 1839 and 1843, provide for the establishment of one or more separate juvenile Courts for the Metropolitan Police Court district and for assigning as a division to each such Courts such portion of that district as may be specified in the order."

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

WADID, GANDHY & CO. v. PURSHOTAM, I. L. R 32 Bom. 1. Attorney, application for costs by—Limitation Act, Sch. II, Art. 178.

Art. 178 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applies only to applications under the Civil Procedure Code and an application by an attorney for payment of his costs under the rules of the High Court is not barred by Art 178; there is no period of limitation for such an application.

LAXMANA v RAMAPPA, I. L. R. 32 Bom. 7. Limitation Act Sch II, Art. 119—Adoption.

Art. 119 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applied to suits in which either the factum or validity of an adoption was denied.

EMPEROR v. HAZI SHAIKH, I. L. R 32 Bom. 10. Emigration Act (XXI of 1883), sec. 107.

A Presidency Magistrate has jurisdiction to try an offence punishable under sec 111 of Act X of 1902.

A master is liable under the Indian Emigration Act X of 1902 for an agreement entered into by his servant, in the ordinary course of business, without the master's knowledge or consent.

A person engaged to drive an engine on board a steamer is an artizan within the meaning of the Emigration Act.

CHUNI LAL v. BAROT, I. L. R. 32 Bom. 14. Rule of the High Court, if ultra vires*—Appeal—Limitation.*

No rule of the High Court can add to or modify the conditions and limitations of the law laid down in the Limitation Act. An appeal is validly presented if the memorandum is accompanied by the copies required by the Civil Procedure Code.

VRIJ BHUKAN DAS v. BAI PARVATI, I. L. R. 32 Bom. 26. Hindu law—Inheritance—Funeral rites.

Under the Hindu law as prevailing in Bombay a mother succeeding as heir to her son takes an absolute estate.

The duty of performing the funeral ceremonies of a mother is a religious injunction binding on her son —so much so that even though the son is a minor, and as such is not entitled to read the Vedas, he is competent to recite the mantras prescribed in the shastras.

If a Hindu woman dies, leaving a son and a daughter, and also stridhan property of the kind which the daughter is entitled to inherit in preference to the son, the fact that the daughter takes the stridhan does not impose on her the obligation of performing the mother's funeral obsequies.

VRIJ BHUKAN DAS v. DAYARAM, I. L. R. 32 Bom. 32. Mortgage.

A reversioner who was allowed to recover property (which had been mortgaged without a legal necessity by a Hindu widow) was not made liable for the repairs made by the mortgagee.

The law of undue influence explained

RAGHAVAN v. ALAMELA, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 35. Contract Act secs. 69, 70—Income tax paid for another's income.

Secs. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act do not apply to a case where a party is bound to pay income tax for income which was received not by him but by another.

KOLINTA VITA v. KOLINTA VITA, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 7. Civil Procedure Code, sec. 244.

Sec. 244, C. P. C., has no application to a claim of an auction-purchaser for damages in respect of injury to the property committed (by the judgment-debtor and other persons not parties to the suit) before delivery of possession.

THE SESSIONS JUDGE OF MANGALORE v. MALINGA, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 40. Cr. P. C., secs. 287, 288, 436.

The words "order him to be committed" in sec. 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure do not, mean more than "pass an order for his committal" and enable the District Magistrate himself, to make a committal, or to direct a Subordinate Magistrate to make a committal.

No sanction under sec. 195, C. Cr. P., is necessary for a complaint when an agent of a decree-holder is obstructed and assaulted when endeavouring to obtain execution.

MAYAN v. PATHUKUTTI, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 1. Adjustment of suit on refusal to take oath.

An undertaking by a party to a suit that if he failed to make a special oath the suit should be dismissed can be regarded as an adjustment of the suit.

SARALA SUBBA v. KAMSALA, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 5. Limitation Act Sch II, Art 11—C. P. C., sec. 278.

Art. 11 of Sch. II has no application to an order passed for default in a claim under sec. 278, C. P. C.

The Civil Courts have jurisdiction to entertain suits in respect of grants made by Government as endowments for religious or pious purposes.

When an Appellate Court dismisses an appeal a party to whom a certain time was allowed by the 1st Court for a certain purpose does not get an extended period.

JIVARATHNAM v. SRINIVASA, I. L R. 31 Mad. 33. Civil Procedure Code, secs. 232, 233—Transfer of Property Act, sec. 99.

Where a decree-holder cannot put to sale a property on account of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the transferee of such decree cannot also do so.

Reviews.

THE CURRENT INDEX OF INDIAN CASES 1907. Final Part, Section I—Criminal; Section II—Civil. Compiled by T V Sanjiva Row, "Madhwa Vilas," Teppakulam, Trichinopoly.

The "Current Index" for 1907 appeared monthly instead of quarterly as in previous years, each monthly issue dealing with cases of the month only. In the sixth part, however, the cases appearing in the first five parts were incorporated and now the final part incorporates cases reported during the whole year. We notice that the issue under review covers a wider area than its predecessors. The cases decided by the four High Courts, the Chief Courts at Lahore and Rangoon and the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, Nagpur and Upper Burma would seem to cover a sufficiently wide area. But the indefatigable compiler has gone further afield and in this issue we find notes of cases reported in Vol. XXII of the Travancore Law Reports We cannot speak too highly of the industry and care displayed in the preparation of the present issue.

The Lawyer's Companion, by the same compiler, has also been appearing with commendable regularity. Part XVI completes the Contract Act, and then follow the Negotiable Instruments Act and the Easements Act, which latter takes up a considerable portion of Part XVIII and now the Land Acquisition Act has been taken on hand. The notes of cases are being compiled with great care and thoroughness. To show the spirit which animates the compiler it need only be mentioned that a supplement has been recently issued to the notes on the Specific Relief Act (which appeared in Part XII) to make up for omissions which have since been, brought to the compiler's notice.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT (I of 1872), with the Case law thereon Part IA. By Sanjiva Row, Madras. Indian Steam Printing Works, 1908.

This is being worked up on the same lines as the other Acts annotated in the Lawyer's Companion series. So far only eight sections have been annotated. But from what we know of the author's industry and resourcefulness, there is no reason why this work should not progress side by side with the Lawyer's Companion. If the work be carried on in the manner in which it has been begun we may well look forward before long to having an edition of the Evidence Act which will be at last as useful as the Limitation Act which appeared in the Lawyer's Companion series.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Anglo American Oil Company (Limited) v. Manning. Before CHANNEL, BRAY and SULTON, JJ. 19th December 1907.

Weights and Measures Act (1878) 41 and 42 Vict. C 49. sec. 25—False or unjust measure—Fraud of servant—Liability of master.

The Appellants used to send out tank wagons containing oil in charge of a driver who was in their employment, for the purpose of selling the oil to customers. Each driver of a tank wagon was supplied with two five-gallon measures. At each of their depots the Appellants employed an engineer, whose duty it was to examine all the measures used by the drivers, and, if any was found to be in any way faulty or unjust its use was at once discontinued, and it was put into a separate part of the premises so as to have the defect remedied, and a new measure was issued in its place. One of the drivers, to whom two correct five-gallon measures were issued fraudulently and for his own purposes substituted a defective measure, which had been discarded by the Appellants' engineer, for one of the correct ones and had it in his possession while going round to customers with the wagon. The Appellants were not cognizant of what the driver had done. An inspector of weights and measures seized the defective measures while the driver was going round with the wagon selling the oil. Upon an information charging the Appellants with having in their possession for use whilst hawking oil from the wagon a false or unjust measure contrary to sec. 25 of the Weight and Measures Act, the Magistrate convicted the Appellants and imposed a fine of 2s 6d and ordered the unjust measure to be forfeited. It was contended on behalf of the Appellants that they were not responsible under the Statute for the possession by the driver of the false and unjust measure, as he was not acting as the Appellants' servant or with their knowledge in the substitution of the false and unjust measure.

MR. JUSTICE CHANNEL in giving judgment observed —The case raised a very fine point, and one depending on very special circumstances. The Statute was one of those under which persons might be convicted of acts of their servants for which they were not in any real sense responsible. It was not a case where mens rea was an element in the offence, but it was one of those cases where the legislature had absolutely prohibited certain things being done. A nominal fine had been rightly imposed, because it was absolutely clear that the Appellants were not morally culpable. The problem the Court had to solve was whether in the circumstances the unjust measure was in the possession of the Appellants at the time when it was found in the actual physical possession of the driver. Employers were not civilly liable for their servants' frauds when committed, not in the interests of the employers, but for the profit of the fraudulent servant, and the Court considered they were at liberty to apply that principle to this case so far as to say that the servant's possession must be deemed to be his own possession, and not that of the employers. The other learned Judges agreed and the appeal was accordingly allowed.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA and HOLMWOOD, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 200 OF 1906. WITH RULE No. 3610 OF 1907. AJODHYA PROSAD SUKUL, Appellant v. NURSING DASS AND OTHERS, Respondents. 8th January 1908.

Hearing and judgment after death of the sole Appellant—Abatement—Judgment, vacating of.

The appeal was heard and decreed ex parte on the 26th November 1906 by the High Court. On the 22nd November 1906, the sole Appellant died, but this fact was not brought to the notice of the Court. On the 14th December 1907 the Respondents applied and obtained a rule upon the legal representatives of the deceased Appellant to show cause why the judgment and decree of the High Court dated the 26th November 1906 should not be vacated on the ground that the Appellant died four days before the hearing of the appeal and no order for substitution of the heirs of the Appellant was made before the date of judgment.

Held—That the judgment and decree should be vacated and the appeal must abate.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MITRA, J. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREE Nos. 617, 694 TO 741 AND 829 TO 832 OF 1906. PAHALWAN SINGH AND OTHERS, Appellants v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL Respondent. Heard, 28th February 1908. Judgment, 12th March 1908.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 104H and sub sec. (3) cls. (e) and (g), 111A—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) sec. 42.—Limitation—Certificate—Conclusive evidence—Publication of record.

Village Rampore Dumra is a Government khas mehal. In September 1902, a notification under sec. 101 sub-sec. (2) clause (d) of the Bengal Tenancy Act was published in the Local Official Gazette for its survey and record of rights with the object of the settlement of land revenue. The Cadastral Survey and the settlement proceedings were carried on up till the month of August 1903. The Settlement Officer was Mr. Coupland and Babu Hem Chunder Chatterji was the assistant Settlement Officer in the District The latter was actually in charge and the settlement record was prepared by him. The record incorporating the Settlement Rent Roll as prescribed by sec. 104F sub-sec. (3) was finally published by him on the 22nd and 23rd August 1903, according to the provisions contained in sec. 103A sub-sec. (2). There was no evidence on the record to prove final publication in the village.

The suit which gave rise to the appeals were instituted by the tenants in occupation of the lands of village Rampore Dumra. They contested the correctness of the entries in the record of rights as to their status and they denied their liability to pay enhanced rents. They also alleged a custom or local usage entitling them to the whole of the wood of trees when felled down. The suits were instituted on the 15th April 1904, and after the expiration of the period of two months from the services of notices on the Defendant under sec. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On the 27th August 1903, Bhupendra Nath Gupta, a Revenue Officer, signed a certificate of final publication which contained the following words: "Certified that the record of rights of the above village (Rampore Dumra) was finally published under sec. 103A, (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act III (B. C) of 1885 as amended by Act III (B. C.) of 1898, on the 22nd and 23rd August 1903. That record of rights is contained in this volume." Babu Bhupendra Nath, however, was not the Revenue Officer in charge of the Cadastral Survey and preparation and publication of the record of rights of the village Rampore Durma. He was an assistant Settlement Officer under Mr. Coupland but he was empowered to perform the functions of a Revenue Officer of a different district. The proper officer to sign the certificate was Babu Hem Chunder Chatterjee. On the 7th September 1903, Babu Hem Chunder directed that the records of the settlement should be filed in the record room of the Collector, and he signed this order for the Settlement Officer. On 28th September 1903, the tenants were summoned to attend on 15th October for the purpose of receiving the khatians of their respective holdings.

Held—That the suits come under sec. 104H, sub-sec. (3) clauses (e) and (g) and even if they come under the more general sec. 111A, which must be read with sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, they would be barred under sec. 104H, sub-sec (2) if they were laid after the expiration of six months from the date of the certificate of final publication. The general rule of limitation applicable to suits under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is not applicable.

Nasurulla Mia v Amoruddi (3 C. L. J. 133) referred to.

There was no certificate of final publication signed by the Revenue Officer from the date of which the period of limitation of 6 months could be calculated.

In applying the rules of limitation which forbid the trial of suits intended to discover the rights and liabilities of litigants, the facts and formalities which are the bases of the starting points for the calculation of time should be distinct and duly observed. The bar of limitation to be sucessful must rest on solid foundation. Casual acts which were not evidently intended to operate as a certificate of publication should not have the effect of such a certificate.

The existence of a certificate is a conclusive evidence of the publication of the record and the publication again is conclusive evidence that the record had been duly made.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before RAMPINI and SARFUDDIN, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 61 OF 1907. BHOLA NATH DAS AND ANOTHER, Appellants v. RAJA DURGA PROSAD SINGH, Respondent. 11th March 1908.

Permanent lease—Transfer of Property Act, (IV of 1882), sec. 108, cl. (j), applicability of—Limitation Act (XV of 1877) Sch. II Arts. 110, 116.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought to recover, with interest the minimum royalty due under a kabuliat, executed by the Defendant No. 1 in favour of the Plaintiff.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

The Plaintiff was a zemindar, who was the owner of certain lands in which coal was found. He leased by a deed dated the 19th July 1899, certain sub-soil rights in the lands owned by him. The lease conveyed a mokurari mourasi tenure It was stipulated in the kabuliat executed by the Defendant No. 1 that he was to pay a certain royalty for the raising of coal. Defendant No. 2 was assignee of the interest of the Defendant No. 1.

The Court below found in favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Held—Under sec. 108 cl. (j) of the Transfer of Property Act, the lessee is liable even if he transfers his right. The said clause of the said section applies to cases of permanent rights, in the absence of contract or local usage to the contrary.

Art. 116 and not 110 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applies to a suit brought for the recovery of royalty.

MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH, and anr, Respondents.

Land Registration Act (VII B. C. of 1876) — Co-trustee, application by, for registration —Refusal by the Revenue authorities—Civil Court's authority to direct registration—Suit, maintainability of—Declaration of right to possession.

Where Plaintiff's application for the registration of his name as a co-trustee, under the Land Registration Act was refused by the Revenue authorities, Held—That a Civil Court is not competent to direct the action of the Revenue authorities under the Land Registration Act, and a suit brought by the Plaintiff with the object of obtaining an order from the Court which would bring about a re-consideration of the order passed by the Revenue authorities so as to obtain the registration of the Plaintiff's name as a co-trustee is not maintainable.

Held, further, on the construction of a compromise decree on the basis of which the suit was brought, that the Plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration of his right to the possession of the trust property jointly with the Defendant—this order, however, not affecting the right of the Plaintiff or any one else to take action in the case of any malversation by the Defendant.

Appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated 1st February 1904, reversing a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur, dated 22nd December 1899, and dismissing the Appellant's suit.

On 17th December 1866, a lady called Mahatap Kumari Bibi, the paternal grandmother of the Appellant and the first Respondent, executed a Will. After making various devises and bequests of other portions of her property she devised the property in suit "an 8 anna share of lot Sankarpur, Mahal No. 76 on the rent roll of the Collectorate" to trustees in trust to "spend the amount of profit thereof annually at Sidhayachalji and for the purpose of entertaining our castemen, for reparation of temples, &c., and for other good acts." By that Will she appointed her two sons, Rai Lachmipat Singh Bahadur, and Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur, the fathers of the Appellant and of the first Respondent respectively, trustees, along with 5 others. Mahatap Kumari Bibi died in August 1894. In the Collector's Registers, on the death of Mahatap Kumari Bibi, the names of both her sons, Lachmipat and Dhanpat Singh, were entered in her place in regard to the said property with the following remark. "These two persons are interested (in the properties) as trustees in an 8 anna share under a Will of their mother to perform religious acts."

On 24th May 1886, Lachmipat Singh died. Thereafter his son Chhattrapat Singh Dugar, the Appellant, applied to have his name entered in the Revenue Registers in place of his deceased father. That application was granted by the Deputy Collector but was rejected on appeal by the then Collector of Dinajpur.

On 23rd May 1892, the Appellant instituted a suit (No. 445 of 1892), against his uncle Dhanpat Singh in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad for an account for administration of their mother's property and for a declaration in regard to the rights of the parties under her Will. That suit ended in a compromise effected on 24th March 1893 which provided inter alia as follows:—

"According to the Will of the late Mahatap Kumari Bibi, the paternal grandmother of the Plaintiffs and mother of the Defendant, an 8 anna share of lot No. 76 Sankarpur has been dedicated to religious purposes, and in respect of the same the names of both of us i.e., of the Plaintiff and Defendant shall be and shall continue to remain registered as trustees. The said property shall remain in possession of the Defendant; and the Defendant shall have the charge of collecting rents for the same, institute suits and do everything in respect thereof; and I, the Plaintiff, Chhattrapat Singh, will get from the Defendant the total amount of Rs. 1,200 (twelve hundred) a year out of the profits thereof; and with the same I shall continue to defray the expenses on account of the temple of the God Bimalnathji, and of the temple Dadaji of the Sadabrata (charitable establishment for entertainment of mendicants) at Baluchar and other purposes. After deduction of the said amount of Rs. 1,200, the remaining amount of profits shall be used by the Defendant in defraying expenses for dharamasalas and sadabratas, and at Sidhyachalji, Bhagulpur, Calcutta, Azimgunj, &c. Besides the lot 76 Sankarpur the name of the Defendant will remain registered as trustee in respect of other properties, and they shall remain under the supervision of the Defendant.

"In the absence of the Plaintiff, his heirs, and in the absence of the Defendant, his heirs, who will remain in commensality with him, will become trustees like them respectively. On getting the amounts of profits in the manner aforesaid, they and their heirs in succession shall continue to maintain the aforesaid religious acts, regularly, as aforesaid in due order. If any of the parties do not spend the money, that will have been obtained for the prescribed purposes and appropriate the said money, he will become personally liable for the said money and the other party on performing the said acts will realize the same; and except that, none of the two parties shall be able to advance any claim for account against the other in future."

On 24th March 1893 a decree was made in accordance with that compromise.

In April 1896, the Appellant filed a petition for registration of his name jointly with the name of Dhanpat Singh in the registration department of the Collectorate of Dinajpur under the provisions of the Land Registration Act (VII of 1876 B. C.) but on 26th June 1897, on objections taken by the first Respondent who had succeeded his father Dhanpat Singh as his heir, that petition was rejected, the Deputy Collector holding that phrase "registration of name" in the above mentioned compromise meant some registration "other than the registration under Act VII of 1876." On appeal the Collector confirmed that order on 24th July 1897. On 1st July 1898 the Appellant instituted a suit against the Respondents in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur to recover from them the sum of Rs. 4,100 alleged to be due as arrears of the amount payable under the compromise and decree in suit No. 445 of 1892. A decree was made in favour of the Appellant.

On 7th July 1898, the Appellant instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Dinajpur against the Respondents representing the estate of Dhanpat Singh. The plaint after reciting the facts above mentioned alleged that the five persons appointed as trustees by Mahatap Kumari Bibi with her two sons having relinquished their office as executors and trustees, Dhanpat Singh was managing the estate as a trustee; that according to the Will dated 17th December 1866 and to the decision in the terms of the compromise in suit No. 445 of 1892 the Appellant was entitled to possession of the Mahal Sankarpur as a trustee thereof jointly with Dhanpat Singh in his life time, and since his death, with his son the first Respondent; that it was improper for the Deputy Collector to reject the Appellant's petition for registration of the name of the Appellant, to hold that by the words "registration of name" contained in the compromise, the registration of name under Act VII of 1876 was not understood; and that thereby the Appellant's right and interest in the said trust property had been affected. The Appellant prayed for the following reliefs :—

"That the Court may be pleased to pass a decree, declaring the Plaintiff's right and possession in the 8 annas share of the said Mahal, lot Sankarpur, as trustee thereof with the Defendant after determining same.

"The Court may be pleased to hold the permission given for registration of name on the petition of the abovementioned solehnama, made in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad, and in the decree passed in terms thereof as [permission for] the registration of name according to the Registration Act VII of 1876 of the Bengal Council, and to pass a decree declaring the same.

The Respondents in their written statement pleaded inter alia that Lachmipat Singh, father of the Appellant, virtually renounced his trusteeship, and that the property in suit ever since then and for upwards of 12 years before the suit, had been in the sole possession of the father of the first Respondent, that the Appellant never having had possession of the mahal, could not have a declaration of his possession and title to the same, nor could he have a declaration as to the registration of his name under the Land Registration Act, as contended, with reference to the terms of the compromise; that the Respondents were not bound by the compromise, and that the father of the Appellant having renounced his trusteeship in his lifetime, the Appellant could not be held to be a trustee in his place. Of the 12 issues framed it is necessary to mention here only the following :—

6th. "With what object and intention was the 'Namjari' used in the petition of compromise and decree in suit No. 445 of 1892, of the Subordinate Judge's Court at Murshidabad, and what is the meaning of that word in the same?

7th. "Whether the Plaintiff had any right to have his name registered in the Dinajpur Collectorate as a trustee for the 8 annas share of lot Sankarpur bearing touzi No. 76?

8th. "Whether the Plaintiff is in possession of the property? If not, can his name be registered?

9th. "To what relief, if any, will the Plaintiff be entitled?" On 22nd December 1899 the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. He decided nearly all the issues in favour of the Appellant and made a decree in his favour in the terms following:—

"It is ordered that the suit be decreed with costs in the presence of both the parties; that the Plaintiff's right to the disputed property as co-trustee jointly with the Defendant be declared; that the Plaintiff has right to get from the Defendant Rs. 1,200 annually from the profits of the said property, and that it be declared that the Plaintiff should have possession only in that right; that it be further determined that the clause, 'The Plaintiff's name will be registered as a trustee in respect thereof and will continue to remain so' in the solehnama means that the Plaintiff's name will be registered in respect of the mahal in dispute under the provisions of Act VII of 1876 of the Bengal Council."

Against that decree the Respondents appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The High Court delivered its judgment on 1st February 1904 and decided that the Civil Court was not competent to direct the action of the revenue authorities under the Land Registration Act, and that the Appellant was not entitled in any way to bring the present suit. In the result the High Court set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the Appellant's suit with costs in both Courts. The High Court gave for its decision the following reasons, which were approved and adopted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in upholding the decree of the High Court.

"The present suit is really to obtain an order from this Court which would bring about a re-consideration of the order passed by the revenue authorities so as to obtain the registration of the name of Chhattrapat as a co-trustee with that of Dhanapat.

"We may first of all observe, and this is admitted by both the learned pleaders who have appeared in the present case, that even if we were inclined to hold in favour of the Plaintiffs we are not competent to direct the action of the revenue authorities under the Land Registration Act. The prayer in the suit is also for a declaratory order in respect of the Plaintiff's right of possession in this property as trustee together with the Defendant.

"The Subordinate Judge decreed the Plaintiff's suit. He declared the Plaintiff's right in the disputed property as a trustee jointly with the Defendant and also that the Plaintiff had a right to get from the Defendant Rs. 1,200, annually, from the profits of Sankarpur that the Plaintiff should have possession of that property only as co-trustee, and he further found, for the purposes of the solehnama, that the Plaintiff's claim should be registered in respect of the mahal in dispute under the Bengal Land Registration Act. Now, in regard to the terms of the solehnama, we have no doubt it was intended that the management of

CHHATTRAPAT SINGH DUGAR v. MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH.

Sankarpur should continue entirely in the hands of Dhanapat, for it is provided that he should have possession and management of the property, and it also provided, apparently on an estimate of the probable assets that Chhattrapat should receive payment of Rs. 1,200 annually. So far, therefore, there was no intention in either of the parties that there should be any interference with the rights that Dhanapat had hitherto exercised during the lifetime of Luchmipat up to the time of the compromise. The terms of the deed in regard to the registration of the Plaintiff's name as co-trustee have given rise to the dispute between the parties.

"It seems to us that what was really in contemplation was that the rights of co-trustee which were given by the Will to Luchmipat, the Plaintiff's father and descended to him by inheritance in the same way as the Defendant has inherited the rights of Dhanapat should be preserved by some recognition of the opposite party so as not to interfere with any right of Chhattrapat's heirs or of his own, should it be necessary at any time to assert the same. It is not for us to consider what the effect of the refusal of the revenue authorities to register Chhattrapat's name under the Land Registration Act would be, nor have we any authority, as has been already pointed out, to direct, if we were so inclined, that the revenue authorities should so register him on their records. It is sufficient for us to state in the present case that the deed contemplated that there should be no interference with any act of Dhanapat and, therefore, of Dhanapat's heirs in the management of the property. We do not, of course, mean to say that this should restrain the Plaintiff, or any one else from taking any action in the case of any malversation. But it clearly contemplated that there should be no interference with the legitimate exercise of duties as manager of Sankarpur. There was no necessity for the Subordinate Judge to declare the Plaintiff's right to receive an annual allowance of Rs. 1,200 out of the property, seeing, as we are informed, that the Plaintiff simultaneously with the present suit, has brought a suit also for the arrears of this allowance which accrued due for some years past and has obtained a decree.

"The result, therefore, is that, in our opinion, the Plaintiff is not entitled in any way to bring the present suit for which no sufficient grounds exist. The decree of the lower Court will, therefore, be set aside, and the suit dismissed with costs in both Courts."

The Appellant, thereupon, preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Ross for the Appellant.—The High Court misconceived the nature of the suit and failed to correctly interpret the terms of the compromise and the decree dated 24th March 1893 founded thereon. That Court erred in holding that no sufficient grounds existed for the suit and that the Appellant was not entitled to bring it. The Appellant was entitled to the relief claimed in the plaint. The decree of the Subordinate Judge granting the Appellant that relief was right. The High Court set aside that decree on insufficient grounds.

Mr. DeGruyther for the Respondents was not called.

CHHATTRAPAT SINGH DUGAR v. MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Their Lordships do not think it necessary to call upon the Respondents. They concur in the reasons stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal ought to be dismissed. The Appellant will pay the costs of it.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 373 OF 1907.

FLETCHER, J. 1907. 18, December.

KEDARNATH MONDAL v. GONESH CHANDRA ADAK.

Inventions and Designs Act (V of 1888)—Sec. 4, (9) and (10)—"District" and "District Court," meanings of—"District Court," if it includes High Court in its Original Jurisdiction—Sec. 29 (2), (3) and (4) bars certain defences to an action—Secs. 30 and 31—Application for a rule to a High Court—Procedure—Intention of legislature.

The expression "District Court," as used in sec. 29 (1) of the Inventions and Designs Act (Act V of 1888) includes High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, under sec. 4 (1) of that Act.

The legislature intended that objections indicated in sec. 29 (2), (3) and (4) should not be allowed to be raised in defence to an action for the infringement of an exclusive privilege acquired under Part. I of the Act but must be raised under the provisions of secs. 30 and 31 of the Act, by applying to a High Court for a rule to show cause why the Court should not declare that the exclusive privilege so acquired had not been so acquired, by reason of the objections mentioned in the two latter sections.

This was a suit instituted by the Plaintiff to restrain the Defendant from infringing the specification filed by the former on the 29th September 1906 under sec. 8 of the Inventions and Designs Act (V of 1888) regarding a hand-wheel Boomer Press, for pressing loose jute into bales. The Defendant filed a written statement in which he raised, amongst others, defences to the action of the nature mentioned in sub-secs. 3 and 4 of sec. 29 of the Act.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri (with him, Messrs. B. Chakravarti, L. P. E. Pugh, and B. K. Lahiri) for the Plaintiff, urged that both under the provisions of the old Act (Act XV of 1859) as also under sec. 29 (2), (3) and (4) of the new Act (V of 1888), the Defendant was not entitled to raise, in this action, the defence of the nature he purported to do.

Mr. Knight (with him, Mr. Stokes) for the Defendant, raised the point that sec. 29 of the Act applied only to suits filed in a "District Court," that the expression did not include High Court, and that, consequently, the restrictions to defence mentioned in that section did not apply to this case.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT allowing the Plaintiff's contention is as follows:—

FLETCHER, J.—This is a suit brought by the inventor against the Defendant to restrain the infringement of an exclusive right of invention under the Inventions and Designs Act.

KEDARNATH MONDAL v. GONESH CHANDRA ADAK.

The Defendant in his defence has raised several defences as follows:—

(1). That the alleged invention at the date of the specification was not a new invention.

(2). That the Plaintiffs are not the inventors thereof.

(3). That the specification does not fulfil the requirements of part I of the Act.

(4). That the parts and materials are not new and that the new parts are distinguished from the old.

(5). That the invention was publicly used in British India.

(6). That the invention has been publicly sold and used in British India.

In opening his case, Mr. Chaudhuri raised an extremely novel point. That is, in my opinion, well founded. It arises in this way.

Sec. 4 sub-sec. 9 of the Invention and Designs Act of 1888 says that a District Court has the meaning assigned to that expression by the Code of Civil Pocedure. Now let us look at the interpretation in clause 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It says:—"District" means the local limits of the jurisdiction of the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction (herein after called a District Court) and includes the local limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of a High Court and then it says that "every Court of a grade inferior to that of a District Court and every Court of Small Causes shall for the purposes of this Code be deemed to be Subordinate to the High Court and the District Court." Now, a High Court as used in the Code of Civil Procedure means the highest civil court of appeal. In my opinion, when a High Court exercises its ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, it comes within the definition of a District Court as contained in the Civil Procedure Code.

Then going back to the Inventions and Designs Act, sec. 4 sub-sec. 10 defines a High Court and gives it the same meaning as is assigned to it by the Criminal Procedure Code in reference to proceedings against European British subjects. That simply means the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in the present case.

Then, sec. 29 of the Act enacts that "an inventor may institute a suit in the District Court against any person who, during the continuance of an exclusive privilege acquired by him under this part in respect of an invention, makes, sells or uses the invention without his license, or counterfeits or imitates it." Then it goes on to limit the defence in such a suit. Sub-sec. 2 says: "The suit shall not be defended upon the grounds of any defect or insufficiency of the specification of the invention, or upon the grounds that the original or any subsequent application relating to the invention or the original or any amended specification, contains a wilful or fraudulent misstatement, or upon the ground that the invention is of no utility." Sub-sec. 3 provides that:—Nor shall it be defended upon the ground that the Plaintiff was not the inventor, unless the Defendant shows that he himself is the actual inventor or has obtained from the actual inventor a right to make, sell or use the invention, or to counterfeit or imitate it, as the case may be."

KEDARNATH MONDAL v. GONESH CHANDRA ADAK.

Sub-sec. 4 provides that "nor shall it be defended upon the ground that the invention was not new, unless the Defendant or some person through whom he claims, has, before the date of the delivery or receipt of the application for leave to file the specification, publicly or actually used in some parts of British India or of the United Kingdom the invention or that part of it with respect to which the exclusive privilege is alleged to have been infringed."

Then, under sec. 30, it is provided that "any person may apply to a High Court (that is as defined in sub-sec. 10 of sec. 4) for a rule to show cause why the Court should not declare that an exclusive privilege in respect of an invention to be specified in the rule has not been acquired under part I of the Act by reason of all or any of the defences that are shut out under sec. 29. The sections are not very skilfully or accurately drawn, but, I think, on the whole, that the legislature intended that these defences should not be raised in an action for infringement of an exclusive privilege but must be raised under secs. 30 and 31 when the various objections mentioned before fail. It follows that the Defendants cannot raise these defences in this suit. However Mr. Knight applies for a rule under sec. 30. He is entitled to a rule in the matter and to raise therein all the defences specified in his written statement.

I adjourn the case * to come on with the rule which will raise the defences contained in the written statement and the suit will stand over till a fortnight after the Christmas vacation.

I will reserve the costs of to day.

RULE No. 2353 OF 1907.

MACLEAN, C. J.
COXE, J.
1908.

S. M. SHILABATI DEBI, Petitioner,

MR. M. V. RODERIGUES, Opposite Party.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 153—Value of suit—Withdrawal of portion of claim—Transfer of officer specially empowered—Power, if ceases.

Where in a suit for rent the claim originally made exceeded Rs. 50 but when the suit came on for trial the claim was reduced to Rs. 7-8, a certain portion of the claim having been withdrawn, Held—That for the purpose of an appeal under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the amount claimed in the suit should be considered to be less than Rs. 50.

When a Munsif is empowered to exercise final jurisdiction under sec. 153, he does not cease to have the power by reason of his transfer from the station.

This was a rule granted on the 29th of July 1907, against an order of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah Hughli, dated the 25th of April 1907, allowing the rent appeal preferred against the decree of Babu Atul Chandra Ghosh, Munsif, 1st Court Hughli, dated the 20th of December 1906 (which dismissed the rent suit) and decreeing the said suit,

S. M. SHILABATI DEBI v. MR. M. V. RODERIGUES.

The facts of the case material to this report are stated in the judgment.

Babu Monmotha Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh and Babu Atulya Churn Bose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is an application under sec. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which a rule has been granted, and the object of the rule is to have the decree of the District Judge of Hughli dated the 10th of May 1907, set aside on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to pass such a decree.

The suit was one for rent, and originally it was for a sum amounting to Rs. 117-6; but when the matter came on for trial in the Munsif's Court, the Plaintiff put in a petition withdrawing his claim to certain increased rent on the ground of alteration of area and asking for leave to bring a first suit for that: and, that application apparently was granted, the result of which was to reduce his claim, in the present suit to sue for rent, amounting only to Rs. 7-8. The Munsif held that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist, and dismissed the suit. Then there was an appeal to the District Judge: and the District Judge took the view, notwithstanding the objection of the Defendant, that he could entertain the appeal, on the ground that the question in appeal involved a right to receive rent. The question really was whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed; but the District Judge dealt with the case, as I have said, upon another footing, which I think is not well founded.

It is now urged before us that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, having regard to the language of sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I think it is quite clear that the decree passed by the Munsif in this case did not "decide any question relating to title to land or to some interests in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, or a question of a right to enhance or vary the rent of a tenant, or a question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant." It only decided the question of whether or not the relationship of landlord and tenant existed. Primâ facie no appeal would lie. No attempt has been made by the opposite party on this application to support the view of the District Judge on the grounds stated by him. But two points have been taken; first, it is urged that the amount claimed in the suit exceeded Rs. 50. I have stated the facts. No doubt, the original claim was more than fifty-rupees, but when the suit came on for trial, the claim was reduced to Rs. 7 8. I think the consequence would be a little dangerous if we were to accept the Plaintiff's argument and say, in the circumstances such as these, that the claim exceeded fifty rupees.

Then, another point was taken, namely, whether the Munsif, who was a Munsif of Hughli when he tried this suit, was specially empowered by the local Government to exercise final jurisdiction under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. What happened is this. On the 31st of July 1896, this gentleman, who was then a Munsif of Baruipur, was specially empowered to exercise final jurisdiction under sec. 153 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but after that power had been conferred upon him he was transferred to Hughli. It is contended that he could not after his transfer to Hughli exercise the power which had been conferred upon him when he was a Munsif of Baruipur, and that fresh power ought to have been specially conferred upon him. I understand that for many years the practice has been in such and similar cases not to confer any fresh power and that it has always been regarded that the power having once been conferred, remains, vested in the Judicial Officer in question, notwithstanding he has been transferred from one district to another. It is very difficult for us, considering that many decisions have undoubtedly been passed upon this view which has been held for very many years, now to interfere. I am bound to say, speaking for myself, that looking at the language of sub-sec. (b) of sec. 153, there is nothing in it to suggest that, when a Judicial Officer has once been specially empowered by the Local Government to exercise final jurisdiction under the section, that power determines because he is transferred to another district, or that any necessity exists that he should again be specially empowered, by reason of such transfer.

For these reasons, I think the rule must be made absolute with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

COXE, J.—I agree.

S. C. S. Rule made absolute.

NADIR CHAND SHAHA v. MR. WOOD.

Babu Sarat Chandra Basak for the Petitioner.

Mr. Garth and Babu Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an application in a suit instituted in the Court of Small Causes at Chittagong by the Plaintiff for recovery of damages from the Assam Bengal Railway Company for short delivery, on different dates, of goods carried by the Railway Company under risk notes.

The plaint is extremely imperfect. It does not state the date or dates on which the notices of non-delivery were given to the defendant; it does not also state to whom the notices were given and when and how they were served. The plaint is also silent as to the dates when the delivery in each case was expected.

The Defendant who is the agent of the Assam Bengal Railway Company denied the receipt of proper notices and also denied the liability of the company even if the notices were duly served.

The learned Small Cause Court Judge came to the conclusion that the alleged notices of claim were insufficient, they admittedly having been served on the Traffic Manager and not on the agent of the Railway Company.

The main question argued before us in this rule is whether the notice to the Traffic Manager was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of secs. 77 and 140 of Act IX (I. C.) of 1890, the Indian Railways Act.

Sec. 77 of the act requires that before a person can sue for refund for loss or non-delivery of goods or for short delivery, he must prefer in writing a claim within six months from the due date of delivery by the Railway Company. Sec. 140 speaks of the mode of service of notices and the person to whom the notices are to be directed. It says "any notice or other document required or authorised by this act to be served on a Railway administration may be served, in the case of a Railway administered by the Government or a Native State, on the manager and, in the case of a Railway administered by a Railway Company, on the agent in India of the Railway Company." The present case is one of a Railway Company not administered by Government or any Native State; and the section requires that the notice shall be served on the agent in India. Admittedly the notice or notices in this case were served on the Traffic Manager.

The authorities in this Court as well as in the Bombay High Court are to the effect that the service of notice under sec. 77 of the Act must, in order to be effective, be served in the form and manner indicated in the act itself, i.e., sec. 140 of the act. In the case of The East Indian Railway Company v. Jethmull Ramanund (1), Mr. Justice Tyabji held that sec. 140 of the Act was merely an enabling section and that the service of notice on the Traffic Superintendent or a person of that character would be sufficient. The Court of appeal, however, consisting of Jenkins, C. J. and Crowe, J. held that the formalities acquired by the legislature could not be dispensed with and they came to the conclusion that a notice in strict accordance with the provisions of the Act must be served before an action could be brought. The learned Judges were of opinion that the fact that the East Indian Railway Company knew of the claim of the Plaintiff, and that intimation of the notice which in that case was served on the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company had been given to the East Indian Railway Company were not sufficient; and they followed the decision of that Court in Ganga Persad v. The Agent, Bengal North Western Railway Company (2).

In the case of The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Dipchand Poddar (3), this Court held that sec. 77 of the Railways Act required that the claim should be preferred to the Railway administration and that the words Railway administration mean, having regard to the provisions of sec. 3 of the Act, the manager in the case of a State Railway and that the service of notice to the Traffic Manager was not sufficient. The case of The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Dipchand (3) was one against a State Railway, but the principle of construction adopted by this Court was that the directions in sec. 140 must be strictly followed and the word "may" in that section must be construed as meaning "must" if a Plaintiff desire to make a claim.

Similar interpretation has been put on similar clauses in other enactments in which directions are given that notices should be served on a particular person in a particular manner. The case of notices under sec. 424 C. P. C. on the Secretary of State for India in Council may be cited as an illustration of this principle of construction.

We cannot agree with Tyabji, J., or the learned Judges of the Madras High Court who decided the case of Perianan Chetti v. The South Indian Railway Company (4), in the view they have taken as to the effect of the word "may" in sec. 140. In our opinion, the word "may" in this section means that, if a Plaintiff is desirous of serving an effective notice of claim the notice must be directed to the manager or agent as the case may be. This is also the view taken in Great Indian Peninsular Railway v. Chandra Bai (5), in which all the earlier cases have been cited and followed.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge is correct and that this rule must be discharged.

The learned Vakil for the Petitioner, has contended that the case should be sent back to the lower Court for a finding on the question whether the Traffic Manager was authorised by the agent of the Assam Bengal Railway Company to receive notices, but the question does not arise on the pleadings and there is no evidence in the record on the point.

The rule is accordingly discharged with costs, five gold mohurs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 83 OF 1907.

MACLEAN, C. J. DOSS, J. 1908. Heard, 17, February. Judgment, 28, February.	KRISHNA PADA DUTT, Petitioner, Appellant, v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL and another, Objectors, Respondents.

Hindu Law—Dayabhaga—Heirship—Sister's daughter—Sister's daughter's son—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889)—Primâ facie title.

When persons alleging to be the sister's daughter and sister's daughter's son of a deceased Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga law, applied for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to collect the debts due to the deceased, Held, without expressing a final opinion on the question, that primâ facie a sister's daughter and a sister's daughter's son are not heirs under the Dayabhaga law, and are therefore not entitled to the certificate.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th of March 1907, against an order of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 20th of December 1906, rejecting an application for a succession certificate, filed by the Petitioner and his mother on the 23rd of March 1906.

The petition for the certifiate averred that the deceased, Ishan Chandra Mitter, died in Falgoon 1312 B. S. at his own house in village North Bantra, thana Howrah, zillah Hooghly; that the deceased had no other nearer relatives than these Petitioners; that Petitioner No. 1 Kusum Kumari Dasi was the daughter of the sister of the deceased and Petitioner No. 2 Krishna Pada was the son of Petitioner No. 1. The Petitioners claimed to be the heirs of the deceased according to Hindu law, and as such entitled to obtain a succession certificate under Act VII of 1889.

A Petition of objection was thereupon preferred by Bhagabut Chandra Ghose alleging that the Petitioner No. 1 was not the daughter of the uterine sister of the deceased and Petitioner No. 2 was not his uterine sister's daughter's son and that neither of them was the heir of the deceased under the Hindu law, and consequently they could not obtain the certificate applied for; that the objector was the wife's brother of the deceased and it was with his money that deceased used to carry on a coal business. The money for the collection of which the certificate had been applied for was money due on account of that business and the objector was entitled to get the money. The Secretary of State for India in Council also objected to the grant of a certificate to the Petitioners stating that the claimants were not the heirs of the deceased under the Dayabhaga school of law, but that the Secretary of State was advised to claim the property in question.

The District Judge having rejected the application, the present appeal was preferred against his decision.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Appellant.

Babus Ram Churn Mitter and Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

DOSS, J.—This appeal arises out of an application under the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889 for a certificate to collect the debts due to the estate of one Ishan Chandra Mitter. The Petitioners are (1) the daughter of the sister of the deceased and (2) the son of that daughter. The Secretary of State opposed the petition on the ground that under the Dayabhaga school of Hindu law, by which the deceased Ishan Chandra Mitter was governed, the Petitioners are not heirs at all. The brother of the wife of the deceased raised a similar objection. He raised another objection also, to which, however, it is not necessary to refer.

The District Judge has rejected the application on the ground that under the Dayabhaga law, the Petitioners are not heirs, as they offer no funeral oblations to the ancestors of the deceased.

The Petitioners have appealed. We agree with the learned District Judge in his conclusion. It is unquestionable that under the Dayabhaga, sister is not an heir. The father's daughter's son, i.e., the sister's son is, by the author of the Dayabhaga, declared to be an heir on account of his competency to offer oblations to the father of the deceased, in which oblations the latter participates (see Dayabhaga, Chap. XI, sec. 6, para. 9). The claim of the daughter of the sister who offers no such oblations cannot be placed upon a higher footing than that of the sister herself and indeed such a claim has not been advanced before us at all.

But it has been contended that, as the sister's daughter's son has been held in the case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoy Chand (1) to be an heir under the Mitakshara, he ought similarly to be held to be an heir under the Dayabhaga law, because as has been further argued, wherever the Dayabhaga is silent the law is to be taken from the Mitakshara; and in support of this latter contention reliance has been placed upon some observations of the Privy Council in the case of The Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga (2) and that of Moniram Kolita v. Kerry Kolitani (3).

We do not think that the passages cited bear out the broad proposition formulated before us nor have they any reference to any question of inheritance.

A sister's daughter's son has been held to be an heir under the Mitakshara law on the ground of community of corporal particles between him and the propositus. But if, competency to offer funeral oblations is, as indeed it has been declared by the author of the Dayabhaga, the principal ground for the succession of the father's daughter's son, i.e., the sister's son, we fail to see how the son of the daughter of the sister can claim inclusion in the category of heirs upon any other ground. It is conceded that he does not offer any oblations to the ancestors of the propositus. Under the Dayabhaga law, a sister's son succeeds before the grandfather, and it is somewhat strange that her daughter's son should be postponed till after all the Samanodaks, that is, after all the ascendants and the descendants up to the fourteenth generation have been exhausted, and indeed no nearer position has been claimed on his behalf. No such anomaly arises under the Mitakshara, because under that law, both the sister's son and the sister's daughter's son come in after the Samanodaks.

(2) 12 M. I. A. 397 (1868).

We are of opinion therefore that primâ facie a sister's daughter's son is not an heir under the Dayabhaga law. Moreover, the entire absence of any decided case directly in point, affirming the right now set up on behalf of the sister's daughter and sister's daughter's son, despite the fact that they are such near relations, is very significant and tells strongly against the validity of such a claim.

Having regard to the summary character of the present proceedings we refrain from expressing a final opinion on the question. All that we need say at present is that we are not satisfied by the arguments that have been advanced before us that they are heirs under the Dayabhaga law. They are therefore not entitled to the certificate they have asked for.

For these reasons the appeal must be dismissed with costs, 4 gold mohurs payable to the Secretary of State and 1 gold mohur to Bhagabat Chunder Ghose.

N. G. Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 84 OF 1907.

RAMPINI, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1908.
Heard, 24 and 25, February.
Judgment, 28, February.

DWARKA DAS KARNANI and another, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
CHUNI LAL DAGA Plaintiff, Respondent.

Partnership—Expulsion of one member by others, if causes dissolution—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 253 (7)—Suit for account or dissolution by excluded partner—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II Arts. 106, 120.

Under the Indian law there is no dissolution of partnership when one partner expels the other.

A suit by the expelled partner for account or for dissolution of partnership and a share of the profits is not governed by Art. 106 but by Art. 120 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act, and is within time if brought within 6 years of the date of expulsion.

Under the Indian law a partner can be expelled only by an order of the Court.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of March 1907 against the decree of Mr. F. E. Piffard, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Darjeeling dated the 22nd of October 1906.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

The Plaintiff, Chunilal Daga and two other persons, Johuri Lal and Girdhari Lal, carried on, in partnership with the two Defendants who were father and son, a business at Sukia in the Darjeeling District. Johuri and Girdhari retired on 3rd November 1900. The Plaintiff and the Defendants then started business together and this went on till 28th March 1901 when, according to the Defendants' version, the Plaintiff also retired. The Plaintiff, however, instituted this suit on the 24th January 1906 treating the partnership as continuing up to the date of the suit and asking for an account of the business from 3rd November 1900, alleging that the accounts had been withheld from the Plaintiff. In the alternative, he prayed for dissolution of the partnership and for his half-share of the profits.

DWARKA DAS KARNANI v. CHUNI LAL DAGA.

The Defendants raised various objections, amongst others, that the suit was time-barred.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that the Plaintiff did not voluntarily retire as alleged by the Defendants, but had been illegally expelled by them from the 28th March 1901, that the Plaintiff did not thereby cease to be partner and was entitled to a half-share of the profits upon dissolution, and his suit was not time-barred.

The Defendants appealed to the High Court contending that the Plaintiff retired from business or at any rate tacitly abandoned it, that assuming that he was expelled, the suit had been barred by limitation and that in any event his share of the profits was $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas and not 8 as. as decreed.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ray Chowdhury, for the Appellants, argued that the finding of the Sub Judge that the Plaintiff was expelled from the partnership business by the Defendants on or about the 20th March 1901 is not supported by evidence on the record. The oral and documentary evidence would lead to the conclusion that the Plaintiff retired from the business after settlement of accounts about that time.

Assuming that the finding of the Subordinate Judge is correct, the present suit which has been brought more than 3 years after the expulsion is barred by limitation under Art. 106 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act. When a member is expelled or excluded from the partnership business by the other members the former "ceases to be a partner from any cause" and the partnership is dissolved within the meaning of cl. (7) of sec. 253 of the Indian Contract Act. The next three cls. (8), (9) and (10) clearly indicate, though not exhaustively, the several causes for which a partner may cease to be so and expulsion appears to be one of them. Cl. (4) also indicates that the expulsion has not the effect of cessation of the partnership except by order of Court where the partnership has been entered into for a fixed term. The case is governed by cl. (7) and therefore expulsion had the effect of cessation. The passage in Cunningham and Shepherd's Book quoted by the Judge is in reference to cl. (9) as would appear from the observations of the same authors under cl. (7) that a partnership is dissolved by one member being expelled from the business by the others. This is supported by Lindley on Partnership 7th Edition p. 553. See also Noyes v. Crawley (1), and Barton v. North Staff. Ry. Co. (2), but apart from these English authorities sec. 253 of the Contract Act clearly supports my argument.

Babu Sarat Chandra Basak, for the Respondents, submitted that "expulsion" by itself has not the effect of dissolution. See sec. 253 of the Contract Act and Cunningham and Shepherd's notes on that section. The word "ceasing" in the section does not include physical expulsion. It contemplates a juridical act. The expulsion must be either by the order of Court or by an express provision in the contract. When notice of expulsion is void, the Plaintiff does not cease to be a partner. Power of expulsion is construed strictly, Blisset v. Daniel (3).

(2) 38 Ch. D. 458 at p. 463 (1888).
(3) 10 Hare 493 at p. 538 (1853).

DWARKA DAS KARNANI v. CHUNI LAL DAGA.

Wood v. Woad (4). There is no provision in the Indian Contract Act which authorises one partner to expel another although there may be no express provision to that effect. The English law expressly denies such power. See Lindley on Partnership, p. 624 and 431, also English Partnership Acts.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chowdhury in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts of a partnership business carried on at Sukia in the Darjeeling District. The Plaintiff Chuni Lal claimed 8 annas share in the business, and sought for an account or in the alternative for a decree for dissolution of partnership and a share of the profits. The Defendants, Dwarka Das and Sheo Protap, who are father and son, denied that the Plaintiff was a partner with them and contended that if he were, he had only a 4½ annas share and that his suit was barred by limitation. The admitted facts are that the Plaintiff, the Defendant Dwarka Das, and two other persons Johuri Lal and Girdhari Lal formerly carried on business together. Johuri and Girdhari retired on the 3rd November 1900. The Plaintiff and the two Defendants then started business together. On the 28th March 1901, the Defendants say the Plaintiff voluntarily retired and they have carried on the business by themselves ever since. The Plaintiff, however, maintains that he never retired, and that he is entitled to an account and a share in the profits.

The Judge has found (1) that the suit is not barred by limitation (2) that the Plaintiff did not voluntarily retire but that the Defendants illegally expelled him from the partnership on the 28th March 1901 (3) that the Plaintiff did not thereby cease to be a partner and (4) that the Plaintiff is entitled to a decree for dissolution of the partnership, and for an account and that the profits of the business are to be divided equally between the Plaintiff and the Defendants.

The Defendants appeal and on their behalf it has been urged (1) that on the Judge's finding that the Plaintiff was expelled from the partnership business on the 28th March 1901, the suit is barred by limitation (2) that the Plaintiff voluntarily retired from the business, or if he did not, he tacitly abandoned it and (3) that in any case the Plaintiff had only a 1½ as. and not an 8 as. share in the new business.

The Appellants' pleader relies in support of his first plea on articles 106 of the Limitation Act which provides that a suit for an account and share of the profits of a dissolved partnership must be brought within 3 years of the date of the dissolution. He contends that the Plaintiff "ceased to be a partner" within the meaning of cl. 7 of sec. 253 of the Indian Contract Act when he was expelled, that according to a note in Cunningham and Shepherd's Contract Act "any member may cease to be so either by death, or by retirement or by expulsion" and that according to Lindley on Partnership, "as soon as a partnership is dissolved, or there is any exclusion of one partner by the others, the statute of limitation begins to run" (7th Ed. p. 553). We think, however, that the expulsion referred to in the note in Cunningham and Shepherd's Contract Act, must mean the expulsion referred to in cl. 9 of sec. 253, that is expulsion by order of the Court and the "exclusion" referred to in Lindley on Partnership must mean an exclusion in accordance with an express provision in the deed of partnership giving the majority of the partners power to expel a partner. There is no provision in the Indian Contract Act giving partners power to expel a partner without an order of the Court and it is clear from several passages in Lindley on Partnership (7th Ed. pp. 431, 461, 624) that no such power exists in England unless provided for by express agreement. Hence, an irregular expulsion, as the Judge finds took place in this case, cannot put an end the partnership, so, that there can be no limitation in such circumstances in a case like the present.

Even if according to Lindley limitation runs against an excluded partner from the date of his exclusion this is the result of the terms of the English statute of Limitation, which provides that an action such as this must be brought within 6 years of the date of the commencement of the action. The terms of Art. 106 of the Indian Limitation Act are different. They provide for a suit being brought within 3 years of the partnership. If, as the Judge has found, there was no dissolution of partnership, the article does not apply at all. The article applicable would be Art. 120, which allows 6 years for the suit and this suit has been brought within 6 years from the date of the Plaintiff's irregular expulsion by the Defendants.

The Appellant's next plea is that the Plaintiff voluntarily retired or tacitly abandoned his share in the business. This is entirely against the weight of evidence. The evidence oral and documentary satisfies us that the Plaintiff though called on to retire by the Defendants stoutly refused to do so. A letter marked Ex. M. shows that he relented and invited the principal Defendants to call on him and settle matters. He says the Defendants never did so. The Defendant maintains that he did settle matters and points to an entry in his books showing a settlement of accounts on the 28th March 1901. This entry is not signed by the Plaintiff. No receipt or writing was taken from him, as was taken on the retirement of Johuri Lal and Girdhari Lal on the 3rd November 1900, i.e., a few months previously. And we accordingly agree with the Judge in the Court below that the Plaintiff neither voluntarily retired from, nor tacitly abandoned, his share in the business. The pleader for the Appellants does not press his third plea. On the contrary, he admits that he cannot successfully impugn the Judge's finding that the Plaintiff had a half share and the Defendants the other half share in the new business started on the retirement of Johuri and Girdhari Lal.

We therefore confirm the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where chakran lands were included in the putni potta granted by the zemindars to the Plaintiffs before the resumption thereof under the Chowkidari Act.

Held—That upon resumption and transfer of the lands to the zemindars the remedy of the putnidars was to bring a suit for recovery of possession and not a suit for specific performance of a contract.

RANJIT SINGH v. RADHA CHARAN CHANDRA (1) not followed.

KAZI NAWAZ KHODA v. RAM JADU DEY (2), HARI NARAIN MOZUMDAR v. MUKUND LAL MUNDAL (3) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 3rd April 1906, against the decision of Babu Bepin Behari Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad, dated the 2nd December 1905, confirming the decision of Babu Ashutosh Banerjee, Munsif of Kandi, dated the 17th May 1904.

The facts of this case are shortly these:—The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the admitted zemindars of Mouza Kundala within Purgunnah Fatepur. Their predecessors let out in putni the entire village to the predecessors-in-title of both Plaintiffs and Defendant No. 3 under a potta dated the 2nd Bysakh 1230 B. S. The Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 8 had ⅓rd share and the Plaintiff No. 9 another ⅓rd share in the putni taluk and the remaining one-third belonging to the Defendant No. 3 was let out in durputni to the Plaintiff No. 10, who was no other than the Plaintiff No. 3. By a deed the Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 8 dedicated their one-third share to Thakur Giridhar Jeu and constituted themselves his shebaits. The lands in suit which are situated within the Mouza and were formerly held as Chowkidari Chakran lands were resumed by Government and settled with the zemindar Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at an annual jama of Rs. 37-4-0 pies. And the suit was to obtain settlement of the same at the same jama from them and to recover khas possession thereof.

The only defence raised by one of the zemindar Defendant, Defendant No. 2, material to this report, is that the suit being virtually a suit for specific performance was not maintainable as all those entitled to the relief claimed had not joined as co-Plaintiffs.

The putni potta was as follows:—

"We make a mufasali putni talukdari settlement in respect of Mouza Kundal appertaining to the said lat at an annual jama of Rs. 1,056-3-8 gandas, for a consideration of Rs. 851. We received the total amount of consideration money. You shall hold possession of the Mouza as per Schedule, as well as mal land, khamar land, chakran land, hasil (culturable) land, patit land, jungle, jalkar and gardens and falkar and bankar and tanks and bil and jhil with all interests whatever there are within the zemindari.

You shall not be able to get the putni taluk transferred from our zemindari on any account. If you or any of your heirs shall at any time apply for a transfer from our zemindari, the same will be invalid and be rejected. The jama at which the muffasali putni talukdari settlement is granted to you, will never be enhanced or abated on any account. Taking possession according to the terms of the kabuliyat and keeping the tenants satisfied, you as well as your sons and sons' sons, etc., in succession, shall continue to peacefully enjoy by paying the rent. The 2nd Baisakh 1230."

The suit was decreed in both the Courts below and the Defendant No. 2 preferred this second appeal.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Khetter Mohan Sen for the Appellant.

Babus Nil Madhub Bose and Harendra Nath Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The only point argued on this appeal is whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to recover judgment having regard to the frame of the suit. It appears that under a potta dated 1823, the then zemindar granted to the predecessors in tittle of the Plaintiffs a putni giving them possession of a certain Mouza including the chakran lands. It is clear upon the fact of the putni potta specially having regard to sec. 41 of Reg. VIII of 1793, that at the time of the putni the zemindar was the owner of the chakran lands and that these lands are included in and covered by the putni. The chakran lands were subsequently transferred to the zemindar who took the transfer, subject to the provisions of sec. 51 of the Village Chowkidari Act (Act VI of 1870 B. C.) and the Plaintiffs now bring the present suit to recover possession of these chakran lands. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 8 are entitled to an one-third share under the putni; Plaintiff No. 9 to another third; and Defendant No. 3 to the remaining third, and he, it appears, let out his interest in dur-putni to Plaintiff No. 10 who is the same person as Plaintiff No. 3 so that, we have before the Court all the persons who are interested in the putni and all the persons who are entitled to claim possession of the land in question, as against the zemindar: in other words, every body interested in the putni is before the Court, either as Plaintiff or as Defendant, the suit being one for possession of the chakran lands. Then it is said that this is not a suit for possession but is a suit for specific performance of a contract, and being a suit for specific performance of a contract, the suit cannot successfully prevail unless all the parties to the contract who seek to have it specifically performed are co-Plaintiffs. The answer to that appears to be two fold I do not think this is an action for specific performance of a contract. This is an action for possession of the chakran lands which were included in the putni to which I have referred. There is no agreement to grant a putni of these lands when they were transferred to the zemindar, of which it is necessary to obtain a decree for specific performance. The putni is a concluded contract, and there is no agreement of which specific performance can now properly be granted. There is no doubt authority for the opposite view in the case of Ranjit Singh v. Radha Charan Chandra (1). But with great respect I do not assent to the view expressed in that judgment which seems to me to be inconsistent with the previous judgments of one of the learned Judges who was a party to the later decision, namely in the case of Kazi Nawaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (2), and also in the case of Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (3). The two decisions I have last mentioned appear to me to be inconsistent with the view taken in the case of Ranjit Singh v. Radha Charan (1); I do not notice they were referred to in the judgment in that case. If then it is a suit merely for possession under the contract contained in the putni, I think the suit is properly framed and agreeing with both Courts, I think the Plaintiffs are entitled to judgment.

As regards the other two points, the point as to whether the idol ought to have been made a party and the question what rent should be paid for the resumed lands, as no argument has been addressed to us on those points and they have been abandoned, I need say nothing about them.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The servant who delivers ganja to purchasers at the bidding of his master who sells it and receives the price cannot be convicted of offences under secs. 53 and 61 of the Excise Act (VII, B. C., of 1898).

When a person having a license for the sale and possession of ganja at a certain place, sells it at a different place he commits an offence under sec. 59 and not under secs. 53 and 61 of the Excise Act.

This was a rule issued on the 12th November 1907 calling on the District Magistrate of Birbhoom to show cause why the order of Babu Bejoy Behari Mukherjee, Deputy Magistrate, Suri, dated 5th of June 1907, convicting the Petitioners under secs. 53 and 61 of the Excise Act (VII B. C. of 1878) and sentencing them each to pay a fine of Rs. 200 under each of the said sections (total Rs. 400 each) or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for two months each, which order was, on appeal, affirmed

5 weeks inspite of warrant of arrest issued. I therefore cannot accept further sureties before enquiry; the accused is committed to jail."

The Petitioner having been committed to jail, the Sub-divisional Magistrate made the reference under sec. 123, C Cr. P., to the Sessions Judge.

On the said reference being made to the Sessions Judge, the District Magistrate struck the appeal before him from off his file.

On the 12th March 1907, the Sessions Judge made the following order:—

"I have heard the arguments advanced on behalf of the accused. After a reference to the case RamPershad v. King Emperor (1) I think that the grounds given by the Magistrate for refusing to accept the sureties offered were not valid grounds for the refusal under sec. 123, cl. (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code. I therefore direct the sureties already offered by the Petitioner to be accepted. On any of the sureties ceasing to act the case must be again referred for orders."

The Petitioner then moved the High Court and obtained this rule.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Suresh Chandra Mukherjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Douglas White for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a rule on the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet to show cause why either the appeal presented to him by the Petitioner or the reference made to the Sessions Judge should not be heard on its merits and why such orders should not be passed as to this Court may seem fit and proper.

The Petitioner was directed to furnish security for good behaviour and the term for which such security was required being in excess of one year the matter was referred to the Sessions Judge under the provisions of sec. 123, C. Cr. P. Previous to the making of this it appears that the Petitioner appealed to the District Magistrate under sec. 406 of the Code. That appeal has been "struck off." But on the reference made to him, the Sessions Judge did not arrive at any conclusion as to the merits. He directed that the sureties offered by the Petitioner for his good behaviour should be accepted by the Deputy Commissioner, although the Deputy Commissioner had already found these sureties to be insufficient. The order of the Sessions Judge purports to be passed under cl. (3) to sec. 123, but the sub-section clearly contemplates a decision by the Court on the merits of the order demanding security for good behaviour. It does not, in our opinion, authorise the Sessions Judge to consider the sufficiency of the security offered.

Under all the circumstances of the case we think that the proper order to pass would be that the Sessions Judge should proceed to hear and dispose of the reference made to him and we order accordingly.

The rule is made absolute in these terms.
